I will pour it out upon the children abroad; &c.] The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them, as hath been observed i. 10. In the same sense, the prophet is here said to pour out the divine fury upon the children abroad, who take delight in playing in the streets (see Zech. viii. 5), and the young men who assemble in meetings for diversion or conversation (compare ix. 21). Full of days.] "Full of days" denotes one that hath lived to the full term and period of human life (compare Isa. lxv. 20).

Ver. 13. From the prophet—to the priest] Or, "both prophet and priest" (compare ix. 10). So in other places, where the Hebrew reads, "from email to great;" our translation renders it, "both small and great" (see 1 Sam. v. 9, xxx. 2).

ousness: and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealt falsely.

14 They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

15 Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore they shall fall among them that fall: at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith the Lord.

16 Thus said the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

18 ¶ Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

19 Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it.

20 To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me.

21 Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish.

22 Thus saith the Lord, Behold, a people cometh from the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth.

23 They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy; their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men of war against thee, O daughter of Zion.

24 We have heard the fame thereof: our hands wax feeble: anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

25 Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side.

26 ¶ O daughter of my people, gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes: make thee mourning, as for an only son, most bitter lamentation: for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us.

27 I have set thee for a tower and a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way.

Ver. 14.] Instead of making a deep search into the corruptions of the people, the true cause of all their misfortunes [compare Isa. i. 6], and applying corrosive medicines, i.e. sharp reproofs, which might give them a true sense of the danger of their condition, they have used only lenitives; as if a surgeon should slightly skin over a sore that festers underneath, by preaching such doctrines as might soothe them up in their sins, and their carnal security (see iv. 10, v. 12, xiv. 19, xxiii. 14, 17, xxvii. 2, 3, Lam. ii. 14).

Ver. 15.] Nothing is a greater sign of an incorrigible temper than being past shame (compare iii. 8, ix. 12).

Ver. 16.] Do like travellers, when they are at a loss which way they must go: in like manner do ye inquire what way the patriarchs of old, the judges, the kings, and prophets, of former times walked in: imitate their practices, wherein you will find true comfort and satisfaction, and not the late devices of your princes and prophets, whereby you have been seduced into error, and betrayed into many mischiefs (compare xviii. 13).

Ver. 17.] You had not fell into these dangers if you had hearkened to the prophets I sent to you: (see xxv. 4), as so many watchmen, to warn you of the evils that threatened you (compare Ezek. xxviii. 7). They faithfully discharged their duty, and gave you loud warnings of your sins, and the judgments they would bring upon you (see Isa. lviii. 1).

Ver. 18.] God appeals to all men and summons them to repent: Not had yourselves (compare Ps. vii. 11), and hear what he has to lay to the charge of his people (see Isa. i. 2).

Ver. 20.] Sheba was a part of Arabia Felix, and famous for its spices and perfumes (see Isa. lix. 6). The prophet reproves the hypocrisies of the Jews, whereby they sought to cover their inward corruption by the external shows of religion: which the prophets often declare to be of no value, when they do not proceed from a devout mind (see vii. 21, 22, Isa. i. 11).

We may apply to the same purpose a story which Plato relates in his second Alcibiades, where he treats of prayer, or the worship of God: "The Athenians (he tells us), in their wars with the Lacedemonians, having received many defeats, sent a messenger to the oracle of Jupiter Hannon, to ask the reason, why they, who had erected so many temples to the gods, and honoured them with so many oblations and sacrifices, should be less successful than the Lacedemonians, who fell much short of them in these particulars! The oracle returned this answer: "I am better pleased with the prayer of the Lacedemonians than with all the oblations of the Greeks." Now the prayer they made use of was a short petition, in which they begged the gods to give them all good things so long as they continued virtuous.

From a far country?] See the note upon Isa. xliii. 21. "A far country" seems equivalent with Sheba before mentioned, whose queen is said to have "come from the uttermost parts of the earth," Matt. xii. 42 (see the note upon Isa. v. 26).

Ver. 21.] Whatever attempts they make to deliver themselves from the evils which threaten them, they will cause their designs to miscarry, and they shall fall into those very snares which they sought to avoid.

Ver. 22. From the north country.] See i. 14, 15. From the sides of the earth.] Or, "from the coasts of the earth," as the phrase is translated, 1. 41. To the same sense the Chaldeans are said to come "from a far country," v. 15.

Ver. 23. Their voice roareth like the sea.] Compare Isa. xxvi. 20. The invasions are fitly compared to great inundations, that carry all before them, and lay a country waste (see Isa. xvii. 12, Dan. ix. 20).

They ride upon horses.] Of which there was a great scarcity in Judaea; which made the Jews enter into alliances with Egypt that they might be furnished with horses from thence (see Isa. xxxii. 16, xxxii. 1).

Ver. 26.] See iii. 25, iv. S. Mic. i. 10.

Ver. 27.] The sense would be clearer, if the words were translated thus, "I have set thee (in a watchtower, and (in) a fortress, &c. (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 171). God tells the prophet he hath placed him as a watchman in a high tower or fortress (see ver. 17), to take an account of the people's behaviour, and warn them accordingly.

Ver. 25. Grievous revolters.] See ix. 3, &c.

They are brass and iron, &c.] They are no better than dross in comparison of purer metals (see Ezek. xxvii. 18). Their impudence resembles brass, and their obstinacy may be compared to iron (compare Isa. xlvi. 4): and being hardened in wicked-ess themselves, they make it their busines to corrupt others.

Ver. 29. The belloes are burned, &c.] All the means that can be used to purge this people of their dross proves ineffectual; the wicked are not separed from the righteous. Therefore your city shall be as one common furnace, wherein you shall be melted down all together (see Ezek. xxii. 19, &c.).

The lead is consumed in the fire.] Before the use of quicksilver was known, they made use of lead for the refining of their metals.
Ver. 30.] As base money is refused by every one, because it cannot bear the touchstone, so shall these hypocrites and evil-doers be rejected both by God and man; for none of their actions will bear the test of God's laws, or abide his severe trial. The word adonis signifies a reprobate in the New Testament, in allusion to this place; and in pursuance of the same metaphor, God's laws and judgments are often compared to a refiner's fire (see Prov. xvii. 3, Isa. 1.
25, Zech. xiii. 9, Mal. iii. 2, 3, 1 Pet. i. 7).

1 The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, proclaim there this word, and say, Hear the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord.

3 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place.

4 Trust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, are these.

your doings; if ye thoroughly execute judgment and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in

CHAP. VII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet reproves the Jews' vain confidence in their temple, and the external observaances of religion, when, at the same time, they rejected God's messages by the prophets, and defiled themselves with the worst sorts of idolatry.
Ver. 2. Stand in the gate of the Lord's house.] This most commentators understand of the east gate of this temple, which led directly up to it (see xix. 2).

Ver. 4. The temple of the Lord, are these.] As much as to say, God hath placed his name here (ver.
10), and chose these stately buildings as the place of his peculiar residence, and what reason is there to believe that he will ever forsake it, and give it up to be destroyed by strangers and idolaters (compare xviii. 18, Mic. iii. 11).

Ver. 8. Ye trust in lying words.] Uttered by your false prophets, who foretell peace, and soothe you up in your impenitency (see lv. 10, xiv. 13, 14).

Ver. 9.] The prophet does not charge them with the transgression of the ritual ordinances of Moses, but with the breach of the weightier matters of the law. Thus the prophets showed men a more excel-

12 But go ye now unto my place which was external performances, and thereby prepared their minds for the reception of the gospel.

Ver. 10. And come and stand before me in this house.] THAT is, in the courts before this house (see the note on xxvi. 7). Their making no scruple to come into God's immediate presence, with the defilements of their sins upon them, implied, that they thought the greatest sins, and even the worship of idols, consist-tent with the worship and service of the true God (compare Ezek. xxiii. 37—39).

We are delivered to do all these abominations?] Will ye interpret the deliverances God hath formerly vouchsafed to you, as so many licenses to commit new abominations? or, do you think when you offer your prophylactic sacrifices, that they will wipe away the guilt of all your past offences, and ye may securely renew your former ill practices, having such a certain and easy method of obtaining pardon?

Ver. 11.] Thus you make my house a place of sanctuary and protection to malefactors, who perform an outward service to me there, that they may continue the more securely in their sins.

Ver. 12.] God's ark and tabernacle were placed in Shiloh, as soon as ever the Israelites had taken possession of the promised land (Josh. xviii. 1); and yet I suffered the ark itself to fall into the hands of the in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel.

And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the Lord, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I called you, but ye answered not;

Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh.

And I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim.

Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee.

Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem?

The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto other gods, that they may provoke me to anger.

Do they provoke me to anger? saith the Lord: do they not provoke themselves to the confusion of their own faces?

Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Be-

Philistines, and quite forsook that place of my residence (Ps. lxxxviii. 60).

Ver. 13.] The phrase "rising up early," signifies diligence and assiduity (see Isa. i. 4). The same sense is elsewhere expressed in the Hebrew, by doing anything "in the morning," which our translators render early, Ps. xvi. 3, xx. 14 (see likewise Ps. cxiii. 8, Isa. xxxiv. 2).

Ver. 15.] That is, all the ten tribes, who are often called by the name of Ephraim, that being the principal tribe among them: their first king Jeroboam being of that tribe (see the note upon Isa. viii. 2).

Ver. 16.] Nothing but an universal reformation, which God foresaw would not be effected, could deliver the Jews from that captivity and desolation which he had threatened to bring upon them. In some cases the intercessions of good men have been so far prevalent as to rescue sinners from the punishments they deserved: but here God declares nothing but a general amendment shall avert the judgments threatened. The divine decree being without repentance, irrevocable (see iv. 28, xiv. 11, 12), he forbid Jeremiah to interpose by his prayers for the reversing of it. But still the prophet might pray to God not to proceed to an utter destruction of his people; and accordingly we find he did pray to that effect (see xiv. 7-9, and the notes on xviii. 23).

Ver. 18. To make cakes to the queen of heaven.] As the gentlest offered to the moon, at the first appearance thereof, the new moon, which custom Dr. Spencer proves out of Herodotus and Lucian, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 3. The word meteketh may signify all the host of heaven (compare xix. 13).

To pour out drink-offerings unto other gods.] They offered their meat-offerings and drink-offerings to other gods, in imitation of those which were offered to the queen of heaven (see Numb. xxviii. 5, 7).

Ver. 19.] Do they think to show their spite against me, as if they could hurt me by their wickedness? hold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground; and it shall burn, and shall not be quenched.

Ver. 21.] Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.

For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices:

But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.

But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward.

Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them:

Yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers.

Therefore thou shalt speak all these words Will not their sins turn at last to their own utter confusion? Ver. 20.] See iv. 25, 26, ix. 10, xii. 4. It shall burn, and shall not be quenched.] It shall make a total destruction (compare xv. 14, Lam. ii. 3, iv. 11, Deut. xxxii. 32, Isa. xiii. 20, Ps. lxxviii. 63, lxxix. 40).

Ver. 21.] The burnt-offerings after they were flayed were to be consumed wholly upon the altar (Lev. i. 9); whereas in the sacrifices of the peace-offerings only the fat was burnt upon the altar, the remainder belonged partly to the priest, and the rest was spent in a religious entertainment (see Lev. ii. 29, 34, Deut. xii. 11, 12). Here the prophet tells the Jews, if they please they may eat the flesh of their burnt-offerings, as well as of their peace-offerings, for God will accept neither of them from their hands (see vi. 20), and looks upon them only as common meats (compare Hos. viii. 13).

Ver. 22, 23. Obey my voice, &c.] It is a way of speaking usual in scripture, to express the preference that is due to one thing above another, in terms which express the rejecting of that which is less worthy: and thus I conceive we are to understand the text here, in correspondence with the parallel place of Hosea (vi. 6), "I will have mercy and not sacrifice." The words in both places implying, that God always laid a greater stress upon sincere obedience, than on external observances, and designed the latter, as so many mounds and fences, to guard and preserve the former. And thus much Maimonides himself grants, More Novoeh. par. iii. cap. 32. But several of the fathers infer from this text, that God never gave any command to the Jews about sacrifices, till after they had defiled themselves with idolatry, by offering sacrifices to the golden calf (see Justin Martyr, Dialog. cum Tryph. p. 397, and Iren. lib. iv. cap. 29).

Ver. 24. And went backward, and not forward.] The expression is taken from headstrong oxen, that draw unto them; but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee.

28 But thou shalt say unto them, This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiveth correction: truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

29 Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his highness.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord: they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom; and refuse to put their necks under the yoke (see here, ver. 26, Neh. ix. 29, Hos. iv. 16). In the same sense the word backsliding is often applied to the Jews in this prophecy (see iii. 6, 10, 14, 32, xiv. 5).

Ver. 26. They did worse than their fathers.] By setting up idols in the temple itself (see ver. 30, 2 Kings xxii. 7, and the notes upon iii. 11).

Ver. 29. Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem.] This was commonly practised in the time of great sorrow and mourning (see xlvii. 5, xlviii. 37, and the notes upon Isa. xv. 2).

1. Take up a lamentation on high places.] See iii. 21. Lud. De Dien observes, that the word sephajim sometimes signifies plains, or open places; which sense agrees very well with other texts where the word is used (see iv. 11, xii. 12). So the sense will be —make the most public and solemn lamentation.

The Lord hath rejected—the generation of his seraph.] This sinful generation, who have so highly provoked his anger. As God is said to reject or cast off his people, when he gives them up into the hands of their enemies, so he is said to choose them again at the restoration of their captivity (see Isa. xiv. 1, Zech. i. 17, ii. 12).

Ver. 30. They have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name.] Meaning the image and altar for idolatrous worship, which Manasseh had set up in the temple and the courts near it (see xxii. 11, xxxii. 34, 2 Kings xxii. 4, 7, xxiii. 4). Which gave occasion to other profanations of the temple in aftertimes (see Ezek. viii. 5, 6, &c.).

Ver. 31. They have built the high places of Tophet, &c.] This unnatural custom of burning their children by way of sacrifice to Moloch, was derived from the Canaanites (see Ps. cxvi. 38). The place where they performed this inhuman rite was called Tophet, from the tabrets which sounded there, to drown the cries of the children thus cruelly murdered; it is called here the "high place of Tophet," because probably there was a temple or an altar built there to Moloch (see the note on ii. 30). And "the valley of the son of Hinnom," or "the valley of Hinnom," in the Hebrew, Gey Hinnom, from whence the word Gehenna is derived, to signify hell. The sacrifice here offered being a lively picture of hell torments.

Which I commanded them not.] On the contrary, I expressed the greatest detestation against this practice, and forbade it under the severest penalties (compare xxxii. 35, and Lev. xx. 1—5). The words are spoken by the figure, called meiosis, by which a great deal more is implied than is expressed; a way of speaking frequent in scripture. See Dent. xvii. 5, where the text, speaking of the worship of the host of heaven, adds, "which I have not commanded," the meaning is, I expressly forbade it. So God, reproving the idolatry of the Jews, saith, "they chose things wherein I delighted not," that is, which I utterly abhorred (Isa. lxxv. 12), and Jeremiah (ii. 8), calls idols "things that do not profit," that is, whose worship is not only insignificant, but likewise extremely hurtful and dangerous. By the same figure we are to expound these expressions: "a false balance is not good" (Prov. xx. 23), and "to have respect of persons is not good" (xxviii. 21), that is, is very wicked. St. Paul expresses the vilest sins, by calling them "things which are not convenient" (Rom. i. 28), therefore they put a very false gloss upon this text, that would infer from it that nothing is to be used in God's worship, but what is expressly commanded in his word.

Ver. 32.] King Josiah first of all defiled this place, as the text speaks, 2 Kings xxiii. 10, that is, polluted it, or unconsecrated it, by burying dead bodies in it (compare ver. 16 of that chapter). And afterward, when great numbers died in the siege of Jerusalem, and the famine that followed upon it, it became a common burying-place of the Jews (see xix. 6), whereby was fulfilled that prophecy of Ezekiel (vi. 5), I will lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel before their idols (compare Lev. xxvi. 30, Ezek. vi. 4, 5, 13).

Ver. 34. Voice of mirth.] See the note on xvi. 9. The voice of the bridegroom.] Men will have no encouragement to marry, when they see nothing but ruin and desolation before their eyes (see xvi. 1—4).
bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts.

4 ¶ Moreover thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?

5 Why then is this people of Jerusalem slid- den back by a perpetual backsliding? they hold fast deceit, they refuse to return.

6 I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repeated him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle.

of a high degree, as well as such as are of a meaner condition.

Ver. 1.] When the city shall be taken, and exposed to the rage of the Chaldean army, they shall break open the monuments of Kings, princes, and great men, hoping to find some treasure there; as Josephus tells us, that immense riches were deposited in David's sepulchre by his son Solomon, which were never taken away till Hircanus's time (see Antiq. lib. vii. cap. ult.).

Ver. 2.] The bones which shall be thus scattered about, shall not be gathered or laid up in their sepulchres. The word asaph is commonly used of men's being laid in the sepulchres of their ancestors, which is elsewhere expressed, by "being gathered unto their people." In this sense it is joined with being buried here, and xxx. 33, see likewise Job xxvii. 19. Not to enjoy the common rights of burial, is spoken of as an aggravation of men's calamities (see xxii. 19, xxxvi. 30. Eccles. vi. 3, Isa. xiv. 19, 20).

Ver. 3 Death shall be chosen rather than life.] This denotes the extremity of misery: when men have no comfort left wherewith to alleviate their misfortunes, or make their life tolerable (see Rev. ix. 6).

Of this evil family.] See i. 15.

Ver. 4. Shall he turn away (compare iii. 19), and not return, &c.] An expostulation implying that men are seldom so far gone in wickedness, as not to be touched with some remorse for their evil doings, and make some general resolutions of amendment. When this people are guilty of one perpetual spectacle, as if they could deceive God by their hypocritical pretences, without making any steps towards a reformation. Some explain the fourth verse to this sense: are they so far plunged in sins and the miseries consequent thereto, that there is no hope of their recovery out of their present ill state? If they will turn to God, will not he immediately be pacified, and return to them? According to which exposition, the word shall, which is repeated, is taken in the same sense in both parts of the latter sentence: otherwise it must be taken in two contrary senses. Taking the words in this sense, God's answer follows in the next verse, "But why then is this people," &c., and so the particle maduawm is to be rendered, ver. 19.

Ver. 5.] See the note upon vii. 24.

7 Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle and the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord.

Ver. 6. I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: ] God is represented as "waiting that he may be gracious" to his people (Isa. xxx. 18), and by his "long suffering" giving men time and space for repentance (2 Pet. iii. 9). As the horse rusheth into the battle.] Without any consideration or fear of approaching danger.

Ver. 7.] These birds know, by natural instinct, the seasons when to return to places of their former abode: whereas this people never think of returning to God. The holy writers send men to brute creatures for instruction, thereby to upbraid their stupidity (see Isa. i. 5, Prov. vi. 6).

Ver. 8. We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us, &c.] It is to no purpose to boast of your wisdom and skill in the knowledge of God's law, if you do not govern your lives by its directions; otherwise it was written and delivered to you in vain (compare Rom. ii. 17, &c.).

The pen of the scribes is in vain.] The title of scribe, as applied to the skill of transcribing or interpreting the law, is first given to Ezra (Ezra vi. 9), who was not merely a copier of the law, but likewise an expounder of the difficulties of it (see Neh. viii. 9, 13). As it is likely none made it their business to write copies of the law, but those who were well versed in the study of it, which would best secure them from committing mistakes in their copies; from hence the word signifies, in the New Testament, those who were learned in explaining the law, and answering the difficulties arising, concerning the sense of it. The Greek word saphar, signifies a "learned man," Eccles. x. 5, xxxviii. 24, and is so translated by our interpreters in the latter of these two places. And the Chaldee paraphrase often interprets the Hebrew word nabi, prophet, by the Chaldee saphar, a scribe.

The expression in the text may relate to the answers which those who were skilled in expounding the law gave in writing, when they were consulted in any difficult case (compare xviii. 15).

Ver. 9.] The politicians are disappointment in every enterprise they undertake; and their ill success is an evident proof, that the fear of God, and governing ourselves by his word, is the truest wisdom.

Ver. 10—12.] See vi. 12—15.

Ver. 10. Inherit them:] Or, possess them; for the matted abomination? may, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore shall they fall among them that fall: in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the Lord.

13 ¶ I will surely consume them, saith the Lord: there shall be no grapes on the vine, nor figs on the fig-tree, and the leaf shall fade; and the things that I have given them shall pass away from them.

14 Why do we sit still? assemble yourselves, and let us be silent there: for the Lord our God hath put us to silence, and given us water of gall to drink, because we have sinned against the Lord.

15 We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble!

16 The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan; the whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones; for they are come, and have devoured the land, and all that is in it; the city, and those that dwell therein.

17 For, behold, I will send serpents, cockatoes, among you, which will not be charmed, and they shall bite you, saith the Lord.

18 ¶ When I would comfort myself against sorrow, my heart is faint in me.

19 Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people because of them that dwell in a far country: Is not the Lord in Zion? is not her king in her? Why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities!

20 The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved.

21 For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me.

22 Is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

Ver. 19. The voice of the cry of the daughter of my people because of them that dwell in a far country.

If we follow this translation, the words must be understood of the Jews lamenting their condition, because of the Chaldeans that were coming from a far country, to invade and destroy them. But I think the words may be rendered more agreeably to the Hebrew thus, "The voice of the cry of the daughter of my people from a land afar off." [Compare Isa. xxxiii. 17, where the phrase in the original is the same.] So that the prophet represents the doleful complaints of the Jews, under a state of captivity, as if God had quite forsaken and disowned them. To which he makes this reply, in the following words. Why then, or "But why, have you provoked me," &c. (compare ver. 5 of this chapter).

Ver. 20. Another complaint of the people, that the summer, the season for marching an army, is past, and yet there is no prospect of assistance from Egypt, or any other of our allies.

Ver. 21. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt. See iv. 19, ix. 1. The words in the original run thus: "For the breach of the daughter of my people, I am broken." [see xiv. 17]. I am black! I look ghastly, as those who are dying (compare xiv. 2, Joel ii. 6, Nah. ii. 10).

Ver. 22. Gilead was famous for balm or turpentine [for that is the proper meaning of the Hebrew turt], and such like healing gums (see xliii. 11, Gen. xxviii. 25). This made a great many physicians and surgeons resort thither. The prophet applies this metaphorically to the state of the Jews, which was all over corrupted (compare Isa. i. 6, and asks whether there have been no methods used to heal these mortal wounds and distempers; or, if there have, how comes it to pass they should have so little success? implying, that God had sent his prophets as so many spiritual physicians, and they had given the best advice, but the fault lay wholly in the patients themselves, who refused to submit to their prescriptions; so we may apply the words spoken concerning Babylon (li. 9) to the present case: "We would have healed Babylon, but she is not," or rather, "she would not be healed." The words may likewise be understood of temporal deliverance, to this purpose: Is this people forsaken both of God and men, that there is no remedy left for their deliverance! (compare xxx. 12-14).
CHAPTER IX.

1 On that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!
2 Or that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men; that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.
3 And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies: but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the LORD.
4 Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with flanders.
5 And they will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity.
6 Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the LORD.
7 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?
8 Their tongue is as an arrow shot out; it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart he layeth his wait.
9 ¶ Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this;
10 For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are burned up, so that none can pass through them: neither can men hear the voice of the cattle; both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone.
11 And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant.
12 ¶ Who is the wise man, that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the LORD hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?
13 And the LORD said, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;
14 But have walked after the imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them:
15 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the For how shall I do for the daughter of my people? What can I do else for my people, but by all means try to save some out of the common destruction?

V. 9.] See v. 9, 29.
V. 10. For the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, &c.] The prophet laments that general desolation which he sees coming upon the whole land, which will involve all the parts of it, both high and low, in one common destruction (compare iv. 24—26).
V. 11. A den of dragons.] The word tannin, translated here dragons, among several other significations, is taken for a serpent, such as are usually found in ruins and desolate places (compare li. 37, Ps. xlv. 19, Isa. xiii. 22, xxxiv. 13).
V. 12.] Is there none of you so well acquainted with the will of God, and the methods of his providence, as to be able to declare the reasons why he has given such severe instances of his anger against this land? namely, for the sins of those who inhabit it (compare ver. 10, and the following verses).
V. 13. 14.] God himself declares the reasons of his judgments by the mouth of his prophet, viz. because they have forsaken his law, and followed the devices of their own hearts, and the idolatrous customs which they learned from their fathers.
V. 14. After Baalim.] See the note on ii. 23.
V. 15.] I will turn their plenty into scarcity of
CHAPTER IX.

God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink.

16 I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them.

17 ¶ Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for cunning women, that they may come:

18 And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids with water: for our portion is turned into our back; because we have forsaken the land, because our dwellings have cast us out.

20 Yet hear the word of the Lord, O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his all things. Compare this expression with that of Ps. lixxv. 5, "Thou feastest with them by the bread of tears, and givest them plenteousness of tears to drink;" and I Kings xxii. 27, "feed him with the bread of affliction, and with water of affliction," that is, use him with the most severe and rigorous treatment. The Hebrew word, which we here translate goll, properly signifies an herb, growing among corn, which is as bitter as gall: it is translated heu lock, Hos. x. 4, and both here and elsewhere joined with wormwood (see Deut. xxviii. 16, Lam. iii. 19, Amos vi. 12). In this last text, the word tannath, commonly rendered wormwood, is translated heu lock.

Ver. 19. "I will send a sword." A judgment mentioned by Moses (Lev. xvii. 30), and fulfilled upon several of the Jewish captives in Egypt, and elsewhere (see xxvii. 37, Ezek v. 2, 12).

Ver. 17, 18. Consider ye.] Consider the evil circumstances you are in, which call for mourning and lamentation: and since you yourselves are not sufficiently affected with the dangers that threaten you, send for these women whose profession it is to make public lamentations at funerals, and upon other sorrowful occasions, and let their mournful duties excite and stir up true sorrow in you. The prophet elsewhere allude to this practice (see xxiii. 17, Ezek. xxviii. 31). Particularly the custom of hiring public mourners to attend the funerals of their friends, is mentioned, xxii. 18, 2 Sam. i. 24, 2 Chron. xxv. 23, Eccles. xii. 5, Matt. x. 23, compared with Mark v. 43. Such were the prophet among the Romans.

Ver. 18. Send for cunning women.] Such as were "skilful in lamentation," as Amos calls the common mourners that were hired upon solemn occasions (Amos v. 16).

Ver. 19. For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion.] The prophet instructs them to bewail their state of captivity, in these and such like expressions.

Because we have forsaken the land:] We are forced to leave our native country: our land hath "spewed us out," according to the expression of Moses (Lev. xviii. 29), and would no longer bear with our abominations.

Ver. 20. O ye women.] God now speaks to the women in general, as being of more tender hearts than men, and calls them all seriously to mourning, and bids them instruct their daughters to join with them in a general lamentation; not only to act a part as those who are mourners by profession.

Vol. III.—51 mouth, and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbour lamentation.

21 For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets.

22 Speak, Thus saith the Lord, Even the cases of men shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handful after the harvestman, and none shall gather them.

23 ¶ Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches.

24 But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord, which exercise loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: 'tis these things I delight, saith the Lord.

25 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, Ver. 21. For death is come up into our windows, and—palaces.] Neither our houses, nor our palaces or fortifications can defend us against our enemies; but though we barricade our doors, the soldiers or their murdering instruments will find a way to enter by our windows, and assault us (Compare Joel ii. 9).

To cut off the children from without.] See note on vi. 11. The expression is elliptical, and may be thus supplied, [it proceeded] "to cut off the children," &c.

Ver. 22. As the hand of the harvestman, and none shall gather them.] We read, Dunt. xxiv. 19, that if a sheaf was forgotten and left behind in the field, the owner should not go back to fetch it, but leave it to be gathered up by the poor: this law made the harvestmen not so exact in gathering up the sheaves which they happened to drop, that they might give occasion for this sort of prophecy. The prophet makes use of this comparison to illustrate the number of slain that should lie about the fields; only with this difference, that whereas the poor used to gather up the sheaves left behind in the fields, these human bodies should remain in the ground, without any one to take care of their burial (see the note on vii. 2).

Ver. 23, 24.] Let not men value themselves for their wisdom, strength, or riches, which are things in themselves of a very uncertain continuance, and such calamities are coming (see ver. 25, 26) in which they will stand the owners of them in very little stead. The only true valuable endowment is the knowledge of God, not as he is in himself, which is too high an attainment for poor mortals to pretend to, but with respect to his dealings with men; to have a serious sense of his mercies to the penitent, of his judgments to the obstinate, and of his truth and integrity in making good his promises and threatenings to both. It is in the exercise of these attributes God chiefly delights: and it is by these he desires to make himself known to the world; and he that forms an apprehension of God, chiefly with regard to these his perfections, will always demean himself suitably towards him. Judgment and righteousness are often equivalent terms: but if we distinguish them here, judgment denotes God's severity against the wicked, and righteousness his truth or holiness.

Ver. 25. With the uncircumcised.] Or, "with the ununcircumcised," as it is in the Hebrew: so the Greek ἄνθρωπος is used by St. Paul for the persons who are uncircumcised (see Rom. ii. 26, 27, iii. 30, Gal. ii. 17, Col. iii. 11). Because the Jews valued them—that I will punish all them which are circumcised with the uncircumcised;

26 Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and the children of Ammon, and Moab, and all that are in selves so much upon their circumcision, God tells them, when he sends his judgments abroad in the world, they shall find no more favour than those who are not circumcised.

Ver. 26. Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, &c.] See these judgments denounced more at large, xxv. 18, &c. The prophet places Judah among the heathen nations, because they were in effect uncircumcised as well as they; contenting themselves with the outward sign of circumcision, without endeavouring after the inward purity signified by it.

All that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness:] The marginal reading is to be preferred before that of the text, "they that have the corners of their hair polled" (compare xxv. 23, 24, xlix. 32). The expression denotes those Arabinians who cut their hair upon the fore part of the head round, and let the hair behind grow long; which custom of theirs Herodotus mentions in his Thalicia, ch. 8, and tells us they did it in imitation of Bacchus. Others take notice that the Saracens used the same fashion in wearing their hair, dedicating it to Saturn. Pharaoh saith, in the life of Thesues, that he cut his hair after the same manner, when he consecrated it to Apollo. In allusion to the same custom, the Solymae, a colony of Phoenicians, are called Τερεκκοςκίδες, roundheads, in Choricius, ap. Joseph. lib. 1, contr. App. and the Abantes in Homer, IIllad, &c. Επετειαθην " wearing their hair growing behind."

And it is probable, that that precept in Lev. xix. 27, "ye shall not round the corners of your heads," hath reference to this custom, which was a rite in several countries near Judea, whereby they devoted themselves to the worship of some false god.

The house of Israel are uncircumcised] The Israelites, by breaking God's law, have made their "circumcision become uncircumcision," as St. Paul speaks (Rom. ii. 25), while they retain only the outward sign, and neglect the inward purity signified by it (Rom. ii. 29, see iv. 4 of this prophecy).

CHAPTER X.

1 Hear ye the word which the Lord speaketh unto you, O house of Israel:

2 Thus saith the Lord. Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them.

3 For the customs of the people are vain; for one cuteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman, with the ax.

4 They deck it with silver and with gold: they fasten it with nails and with hammers, that it move not.

5 They are upright as the palm tree, but speak not: they must needs be borne, because they cannot go. Be not afraid of them; for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good.

6 Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, O Lord: thou art great, and thy name is great in might.

7 Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain; forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee.

8 But they are altogether brutish and foolish: the stock is a doctrine of vanities.

9 Silver spread into plates is brought from which are made use of by Isaiah, xlv. 10, 11, and have been explained in the notes upon that place.

Ver. 5. They are upright as the palm tree, but speak not.] The Hebrew may more properly be rendered thus, "They are made with due proportion, like a pillar;" the word tomor is rendered pillar by our translators, Cant. iii. 6, Joel ii. 30. They make a pretty figure, when they are set up, as being put together by the rules of art, but cannot speak, or show any signs of sense. Images are elsewhere called "dumb idols" (see Hab. ii. 19, I Cor. xii. 23). They cannot do evil.] See the note upon Isa. xlii. 28.

Ver. 7. For to thee doth it appertain: Or, "to thee doth honour belong." The Hebrew word yaasha, is rather a noun than a verb, and signifies honour and excellency. To the same sense the Chaldee translates the words, "For thine is the kingdom." Some critics suppose the word Yah, the name of God, not to be a contraction of Jehovah; but to be derived from the same root yaah, and to import the superlative excellency of the divine majesty.

Among all the wise men—there is none like unto thee.] The princes and great men among the heathens, who were remarkable for their wisdom, and understanding the arts of government, were commonly defined after their death, and had divine ho-

Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder: blue and purple is their clothing: they are all the work of cunning men.

10 But the Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king: at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation.

11 Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens.

12 He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion.

13 When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

14 Every man is brutish in his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

15 They are vanity, and the word of errors in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 The portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is the former of all things; and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: The Lord of hosts is his name.

17 Gather up thy wares out of the land, O inhabitant of the fortress.

God giveth the word of command, and signifies his will and pleasure (compare Job xxxviii. 34): or when he sends his thunder, called in scripture the "voice of God," the clouds immediately fall down in abundance of rain, and that moisture coming upon the ground that was scorched with heat before, does not only cool and refresh it, but makes all vegetables grow and flourish in it: and as God causes the vapours to ascend up in clouds from every quarter of the earth, so he joins two contrary things together, ordaining great flashes of lightning to break forth with the rain: the moisture of the rain preventing the ill effects that might otherwise proceed from the scorching heat of the lightning.

Bringing forth the wind out of his treasurers.] He causeth great and mighty winds to come from unknown places and causes, if he brought them out of a hidden treasure or repository, where they had been laid up till he had occasion for them.

Ver. 14. Every founder is confounded by the graven image.] The founders or makers of idols may be convinced of their sottishness, by their own art or skill, who must needs know, what material idols are made of, and that they are perfectly without life or sense (compare Isa. xlv. 9, 11, 18—20). The former part of the verse may be thus rendered, "Every man is brutish for want of knowledge," thus the particle min is taken, xlvii. 16, Ps. cxiv. 24, Lam. iv. 9, where the margin rightly renders the words, "My strength is dried up want of fatness."

There is no breath in them.] They pretend to life and understanding, when they have none (see ver. 8).

Ver. 15. They are vanity (see Isa. xlii. 24, 29) and the work of errors.] The making of them is owing to men's wrong notions concerning the nature of God (see ver. 5).

In the time of their visitation they shall perish.] The time will come when God shall execute his vengeance upon them, and destroy them utterly (see ver. 11).

Ver. 16. There is no comparison between senseless idols and the great creator of all things, who has chosen the posterity of Jacob for his peculiar people (compare Deut. xxxiii. 9, Ps. lxxiv. 2) and has promised to be their God (see xi. 4): and that they should always have an interest in his favour, if they continued steadfast in their obedience to him (see Ps. xvi. 5, lxxiii. 20, cxiv. 57, Lam. iii. 24). "The rod of his inheritance," is an expression taken from the first division of the land of Canaan, when the inheritance of each tribe and family was meted out with a line or a rod.

Ver. 17.] The prophet here returns to his former nours paid to them, as heroes, or Balaam (see note on ii. 23): but none of these can be compared with the supreme God (see Ps. lxxxix. 6).

Ver. 8.] They that make images are like unto them;" saith the heathenist (Ps. cxv. 8), equally stupid and insignificant. The use and worship of them is grounded upon a false and foolish opinion, and tends to confirm the ignorant in that absurd fancy, that God is like the work of men's hands, and that images have some divine power lodged within them. For the same reason an image is called a "teacher of lies." Hab. ii. 18.

Ver. 9. Tarshish.] Ships of Tarshish sometimes signify any trading or merchant ships. But Tarshish may probably here denote some port in Spain, whither the merchants of Tyre and Zidon trafficked (see the note on Is. ii. 16, xxviii. 1). Gold from Uphaz.] Bochart supposes Uphaz to be the same with Ophir in India, near Zebah; a place famous for gold (see the note on Is. xxi. 12). Uphaz is probably the same place which is called Paz in Job xxviii. 17, where our translation reads, "jewels of fine gold," but it is in the Hebrew, "jewels of Paz." Blue and purple.] See Baruch vi. 12, 72.

Ver. 10. He is the living God.] Images are dead and senseless things (see ver. 14). Whereas God is the author and fountain of life and understanding, and death and sense and by him. The present copies of the Septuagint are defective here; but the learned Dr. Graae conjectures, that the Septuagint anciently read here, &c. $\gamma\lambda\tau\nu\nu\tau\nu$, "the God of the living," which is still read in Thedotion's translation, and followed by the Syrac and Arabic versions; and that our Saviour alludes to this place, when he saith (Matt. xxii. 32), "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." (see his Dissert. de Vitiis LXX. Interpretum, p. 14).

Ver. 11.] This verse is written in Chaldee, as if the prophet designed to put these words in the mouths of the Jews, whereby they might make a public profession of their own faith in the true God, and be able to answer the heathens that would entice them to idolatry. This prophet foretells, that there shall be a final period put to idolatry (see ver. 15, Is. ii. 18, xlvi. 16, Zech. xiii. 2). God hath already blotted out the names of many of the heathen idols, as an earnest of the utter destruction of the remainders of idolatry in his due time.

Ver. 12, 13.] Here follows a noble and lofty description of God's power and providence, whereby he establisheth his pre-eminence above dead and senseless idols.

Ver. 13. When he uttereth his voice, &c.] When 18 For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so.
19 ¶ Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it.
20 My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken: my children are gone forth of me, and they are not: there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains.
21 For the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the Lord; therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered.

denunciations against Jerusalem, and warns her to move her effects, and prepare for her going into captivity (compare Ezek. xii. 3); for though she thought herself secure, as dwelling in a place of great strength, and well fortified, yet her enemies should prevail and take it.

Ver. 18. I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, I will at one stroke remove the whole body of this people out of their native country (compare 1 Sam. xxv. 29).
That they may find it so.] Or, that they may find my threatenings to be true.

Ver. 19. Woe is me for my hurt!] The prophet sympathizes with the calamities of his people; as lv. 19, vii. 24, ix. 1.
I must hear it.] But then I endeavoured to compose myself, and patiently submit to God's afflictive hand.

Ver. 20. My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken.] The prophet personates his country, as bewailing herself in the following words. My cities and houses are riddled and destroyed, as if they were so many shepherds' tents (see the note on lv. 20).

My children are gone forth of me, &c.] My inhabitants are gone into captivity, and will never return hither any more: so that they are the same to me as if they were dead: nor will they ever be able to contribute to the restoration of my former state.

Ver. 21.] The prophet pursues the foregoing metaphor, and saith, that the reason why the tents are destroyed is, because the shepherds, meaning the governors, both civil and ecclesiastical [see the note on ii. 8], have, like so many brute beasts, forgotten God, and their duty to him [compare Ps. xxiv. 2]; and thereby engaged the people committed to their charge in idolatry, and all manner of wickedness, which hath ended in ruin to themselves and their flocks.

Ver. 22.] See vi. 22, ix. 11.

Ver. 23.] Success does not depend upon human endeavours, but upon God's good pleasure [compare Ps. xxxvii. 23, Prov. xx. 24]; and therefore thou canst easily disappoint all the designs of our enemies.

Ver. 24.] If thou art determined to punish us, let it be with moderation (see xxx. 11): not with such a degree of severity, as utterly to destroy and consume us (see Ps. vi. 1, xxxviii. 1).

Ver. 25.] Let thy justice be made known, by bringing an exemplary punishment upon the Chaldeans and their allies (see i. 45), who do not acknowledge thy providence, but ascribe all their successes to their idols.

They have eaten up Jacob.] See vi. 3.

CHAP. XI.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet proclaims the tenor of God's covenant with the Jews, and then denounces a curse against those who break it: at the end of the chapter, he threatens evil to his neighbours at Anathoth, who had conspired his destruction.

Ver. 2.] That is, Hear ye men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, the words of the covenant I made with your fathers: and do thou, Jeremiah, lay the tenor of it before them (compare ver. 6).
Dr. Lightfoot, in his Harmony of the Old Testament, is of opinion, that the prophet puts the people in mind of the renewal of this covenant lately made in the time of Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 3).

Ver. 3. Cursed be the man] It is a way of speakmand you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God;

5 That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, So be it, O Lord.
6 Then the Lord said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.
7 For I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.
8 Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.
9 And the Lord said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.
10 They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they have gone after other gods to serve them. And the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.
11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.
12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem go, and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their trouble.
13 For according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal.
14 Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble.
15 What hath my beloved to do in mine house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many, and the holy flesh is passed from thee? when thou dost evil, then thou rejoicest.
16 The Lord called thy name, A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit: with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.
17 For the Lord of hosts, that planted thee, hath pronounced thee evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves to provoke me to anger in offering incense unto Baal.
18 ¶ And the Lord hath given me knowledge the sake of the covenant he had made with their progenitors (see xii. 7, Hos. iii. 1).

The holy flesh is passed from thee? The flesh of thy sacrifices which thou offerest up to me, as an atonement for thy sins, doth not at all profit thee, being polluted and rendered unacceptable to me, through those many and great sins, in which thou continuest without remorse, and even takest a pride in committing them (see above, vi. 20, and compare Hag. ii. 11—14).

The LXX. and Vulgar Latin give a more easy sense of this verse, "Why hath my beloved committed lewdness? would he have made itself walls or have the holy flesh take away thine iniquities from thee?" It is probable that the Hebrew copy they made use of, instead of "haraabim [with many] read hanedubim, or hanedarim; free-will-offerings, or vows."

Ver. 16. A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit.] St. Paul plainly alludes to this verse, Rom. xi. 17, where, speaking of the gentiles being made members of the church in the room of the Jews, who were rejected, he saith, "If some of the branches are broken off, and thou [gentile], being a wild olive-tree, are grafted in among them, and with them partaketh of the root and fatness of the olive-tree." The Jewish nation, in its flourishing state, is sometimes compared to a vine, sometimes to an olive tree, chiefly because of the fruits of good works which God might justly expect from them, after all the care and pains he had bestowed upon them, to make them thrive and fructify (see Ps. lii. 8).

He hath kindled fire upon it.] In pursuance of the same metaphor, the words express the desolation which the Chaldeans should bring upon Judah by fire and sword (Exek. xix. 14, Isa. xvi. 8).

Ver. 17.] See the note on ii. 21.

Ver. 18.] This relates to the ill designs the men of Anathoth had contrived against the prophet, which of it, and I know it: then thou shewest me their doings.

19 But I was like a lamb or an ox that is brought to the slaughter; and I knew not that they had devised devices against me, saying, Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered.

20 But, O Lord of hosts, that judgest righteously, that triest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I revealed my cause.

he saith God had revealed to him (see the following verses).

Ver. 19. I was like a lamb or an ox that is brought to the slaughter.] A proverbial speech, expressing a false security or insensibility of danger (see Prov. vii. 22). So Agamemnon's ghost in Homer describes his own death treacherously contrived by Egistheus at a feast.

"He died as an ox at the stake."—Odys., i. ver. 410.

That phrase, "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter," Isa. lii. 7, is of a different importance (see the note there). Bochart supposed the word allyph to be an adjective, and renders the former part of the sentence thus, "I was brought as a tame sheep to the slaughter." But we may very well admit of the common translation; the disjunctive particle being elsewhere understood, as Ps. lxx. 21.

4 Better than... bullock."—Isa. xxxvii. 14.

"Like a crane or swallow." Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof; The letter of the Hebrew runs thus, "Let us destroy the tree (or the stalk) with the bread thereof" (bread is sometimes used for the corn, of which it is made, v. 17); i. e. Let us destroy the prophet and his doctrine (see ver. 21). Laud, de Dieu renders it, "Let us destroy the wood in his flesh;" i. e. Let us scourge him with rods, till they are broke, and the ends of them stick in his flesh. I take this to be a forced interpretation: for the Hebrew lechem, bread, is never put for flesh, but when it is spoken of the sacrifices offered up to God. The Septuagint render the words, "Let us put wood into his bread," i. e. Let us give him wood instead of bread; which the fathers generally apply to the crucifixion of Christ, whose sufferings were typified in the afflictions of all the saints and prophets of former times.

Ver. 20. I have laid my cause before thee, and recommended myself to thy protection, who knowest the sincerity and intentions of my thoughts (see xii. 3, 9). When men continue implacable in their malice, we may lawfully expect and desire that God will plead our cause, and judge us according to our righteousness. For the bringing wicked men to condign punishment, tends both to the manifestation of God's glory, and the good government of the world. To pray against our enemies in this sense, viz. not for the satisfying our private resentments, but the settling forth of God's justice, is not disagreeable to the spirit of Christianity. So St. Paul prays against Alexander, "The Lord reward him according to his works" (2 Tim. iv. 14).

Ver. 21. This was the usage the prophets commonly met with from those who became their enemies because they told them those truths" they had no mind to hear (see xx. 1, xxxviii. 4, 6, Amos vii. 10). And this treatment they found at the hands of their neighbours, their friends, and relations (see xii. 6, xx. 10): as our Saviour Christ did afterward (see Matt. xiii. 67; John vii. 15).

Ver. 23. The year of their visitation.] When I will visit their sins upon them (see xxiii. 12, xlvi. 21, xlviii. 41, 4, 27). The words year and day often signify a set or determined time (see Isa. lxi. 2).

CHAP. XII.

1 Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee; yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously?

2 Thou hast planted them, yes, they have taken root: they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.

3 But thou, O Lord, knowest me: thou hast of the righteons: a dispensation which hath in all ages been made an objection against providence, and upon that account been a stumbling-block even to good men (see Job xii. 6, xxi. 7, &c. Ps. xxxviii. lxxiii.).

Ver. 2. Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.] The true character of hypocrites, who according to the prophet Isaiah's description of them, "honour God with their mouth, but their heart is far from him" (Isa. xxix. 13; Mark vii. 6). The relax in scripture signify the thoughts and inward dispositions (see Prov. xxii. 16, Ps. xvi. 7, Ixxiii. 21). In which sense God is said to "try the reins and the heart," xi. 20 of this prophecy.

Ver. 3. Pull them out like sheep for the slaughter.]
How and yea, the land mourned, and the herbs of every field withered, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? the beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, He shall not see our last end.

If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied thee, then how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?

If even thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yet, they have called a multitude after thee: believe them not, though they speak fair words unto thee.

As sheep are taken out of the flock, in order to be slain (see the note on xi. 20). The Vulgar Latin reads, “Gather them as sheep!” It is probable that the verb natak might be used in this sense, though the lexicons take notice of it; for attik, a noun derived from them, signifies a chamber (Ezek. xii. 15); and natak a spot of leprosy (Lev. xiii. 30), from the gathering of her humours.

Prepare them for the day of slaughter.] The Hebrew reads, “Sanctify them;” i.e. set them apart for destruction (see xxii. 7).

The herbs of every field wither.] The famine hath already consumed the fruits of the earth, together with the birds and beasts of the field; for the indolence, and atheism of these wretches, which thus prosper in their wickedness (compare xiv. 2, xxiii. 10, ix. 10).

He shall not see our last end.] The words of those who made a mock of Jeremiah and his prophecies, as if he should never see those evils come to pass which he had threatened against them (xi. 23). Some understand the words to this sense, God will never bring this destruction upon us, with which Jeremiah threatens us.

If thou hast run with footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses?] Here God answers the complaints of the prophet, and applies a proverbial expression to his case; the import of which is, that if men find themselves unable to contend with a less power, it is in vain for them to strive with a greater. This sentence being applied to the prophet’s case, implies, that if he could not bear with the ill usage of his acquaintance and neighbours at Anathoth, how would he be able to undergo the hardships he must expect to meet with from the great men at Jerusalem, who would unanimously set themselves against him (see xxii. 26, xxviii. 4, 6).

How wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?] The same sense differently expressed; q.d. If thou endurest such hardships in thy own country, and amongst thy own kindred and acquaintance, what must thou expect when those in power shall combine against thee! whose rage shall be like that of the lions who are driven out of their coverts, when Jordan overflows the neighbouring fields, and set upon every one that travels the public road (see the note on xlix. 19).

Or, “against thee,” as Noldius observes the particle aharere sometimes signifies (see xliii. 37, Isa. xxxvii. 22). They have not been content to vent their own malice against thee, but have also raised the multitude upon thee, and endeavoured to bring thee under a popular odium; the words may perhaps be more properly translated, “They pursue thee with a great [cry],” as a common malefactor.

The place of my especial residence, where I have placed my name (see 2 Kings xxii. 27). The words are spoken of the desolation of the temple by the Chaldeans, as if it were already brought to pass; a way of speaking usual in the prophets (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9).

The hand of her enemies.] See xi. 15.

My people have used me and my prophets with despite and contempt. They have blasphemed me and my laws, just like a wild beast, that opens his mouth against every one that withsticks it. These are just causes of my hatred to them.

My people are become wild and savage (see ver. s), and not to be taught better manners, and like a speckled or tailed bird, are only fit for prey and deeds of violence. And as all the rest of the birds flock about such a one, and are ready to pull it to pieces, so I have stirred up all the enemies of Israel to come against my people, to annoy them on every side, just as there is done here to so many beasts of prey (see ii. 15, Isr. i. 9, Hab. ii. 17). The word tsabahang, rendered here speckled, is of an uncertain signification, being found but in this one place of the bible, unless perhaps 1 Sam. xiii. 12, where some look upon it as a proper name. The Septuagint understand it of the hyena, which sense is followed by Bochart. But if we take it in either signification, the sense is much the same.

By “many pastors” are meant the generals of the Chaldaean army; so the Chaldaean paraphrase rightly explains it (see ver. 12, and compare vi. 3). God calls Judea his “vineyard,” and “pleasant portion,” because of the care he took to cultivate and improve it, and the fruit he might justly have expected from it (see the note on xlii. 16).

Being desolate, it went whither unto me?] It lies in a neglected and doleful condition (see ver. 4, and xxii. 10), and makes a sort of a silent complaint, and begs to be restored to its former prosperity.

No man layeth it to heart.] No man acknowledgeth God’s hand in the calamities he feels, or humbles himself under it (see viii. 6, Isr. xlii. 25).

The spoilers are come upon all high places through [or in] the wilderness:] The Chaldaean army, described by the metaphor of a “full wind of the high places in the wilderness,” iv. 11 (see the note there).

The sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land to the other.] When God delivers through the wilderness: for the sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace.

13 They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns: they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they shall be ashamed of your revenues because of the fierce anger of the Lord.

14 ¶ Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit: Behold, I will pluck them out of their land, and up a people to be slain by their enemies, he is said to give commission to a sword to pass through a land (see xlvi. 6, 7, Ezek. xiv. 17).

Ver. 13. They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns.] A proverbial expression, signifying men's loss of time and labour. It is here applied to the Jew's fruitless endeavours to save themselves from the evils that threatened them, by courting the assistance and alliance of idolaters. They shall be ashamed of your revenues.] Or, "be ye ashamed of your increase," &c. God's displeasure shall make all your designs abortive; they shall not bring forth their expected fruit, and you shall be seized with shame and confusion to see yourselves disappointed (compare ii. 36, 37). The word revenues, or increase, alludes to the reaping of thorns, mentioned in the foregoing part of the verse.

Ver. 14. Thus saith the Lord, against all mine evil neighbours.] This prophecy threatens chiefly the Idumeans, Moabites, Ammonites, and Philistines, against whom Jeremiah prophesies, ch. xlvii.—xliv. and Ezekiel, ch. xxv. These the text calls evil neighbours, because of the spite and ill-will which they showed towards the Jews upon all occasions, at this time especially, when most of them joined with the Chaldeans and Syrians in oppressing them (see 2 Kings xxiv. 2). This sin is particularly laid to their charge by the prophets, and they are threatened with captivity chiefly upon that account (see xlix. 1, 2, Ezek. xxv. 3, 6, 8, 12, 15, Amos i. 11, Obad. ver. 10, Zeph. ii. 8).

Pluck out the house of Judah from among them.] Several Jews were carried captive, or turned voluntary exiles, into those neighbouring countries, before the general captivity by the Chaldeans (see xv. 4, xi. 11). Of these Jews some were translated together with the natives of those countries by the Chaldeans afterward: others went down into Egypt (see ch. xlii. xliiv.). Here is foretold the restoration of the Jews from their several dispersions (compare xxviil.

37, Ezek. xxviii. 25, 26). This promise was partly made good in the times succeeding the Babylonian captivity (see Ps. cxlviii. 2); but will more fully be accomplished at the final restoration of that nation, concerning which see xxx. 3, &c. when the fulness of the gentiles will likewise be brought into the church, which the words of the next verse point at.

Ver. 15. And have compassion on them. &c.] Or, "I will again have compassion on them:" the verb shub being often taken adversively (see the note on Isa. vi. 13). The captivity threatened to the Jews and their neighbours seems to be confined to the space of seventy years (see xxv. 11, xxvii. 7, Isa. xxiii. 15). We may observe likewise, that after Jeremiah hath threatened severe judgments upon several countries, he concludes with a general promise of returning from their captivity in the latter days (see xlviii. 47, xliv. 6, 39): which promise probably relates to their conversion under the gospel, called in scripture, "the latter days."

Ver. 16. If they will diligently learn the ways of my people.] If they will learn of my people, who lived among them, to be worshippers of the true God.

To swear by my name.] See the note on lv. 2.

As they taught my people to swear by Baal.] See Zeph. i. 5. As all vice is contagious, it is no wonder to find the Jews particularly fond of the idolatrous practices of their neighbours. For which cause they are often cautioned not to follow their customs; and it is probable several of the ceremonial laws were made in opposition to the usages received among those nations.

They shall be built in the midst of my people.] They shall be joined to them as one church, which is called God's house or building (see Numb. xii. 7, 1 Cor. iii. 9, 1 Tim. iii. 15, 1 Pet. ii. 5).

Ver. 17.] Those that will not have God and Christ to reign over them shall in the end be punished with everlasting destruction (see Is. lx. 12, Luke xix. 27, compared with Rev. xix. 21).

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Thus saith the Lord unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water.

2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the Lord, and put it on my loins.

3 And the word of the Lord came unto me the second time, saying,

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.
5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the Lord commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, that the Lord said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it; and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing.

8 Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the Lord, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith the Lord; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear.

12 ¶ Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word; Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Every Ver. 4. Go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.] God commanded the prophet to hide the girdle by the bank of Euphrates, to signify the Jews being delivered captive over that river, called the water of Babylon,"Ps. cxxxvii. 1. Most commentators are of opinion, that this was performed by the prophet only in a vision: it not being probable that God should send him two such long journeys as are mentioned here and ver. 6, merely upon this errand (see a like instance, xxv. 17). Several things are related in scripture as actually done, which yet were only transacted in a vision; a remarkable instance of which we read, Gen. xv. 5, where the text saith, that God brought "Abraham forth abroad," and bid him "tell the stars:" and yet it appears by ver. 13, that the sun was not gone down. See this question at large discussed by the learned Dr. Pocock, in his commentary upon the beginning of Hosea.

Ver. 9. After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah.] I will bring down their pride and stubbornness (see ver. 15, 17), by making them slaves and vassals to strangers (see Lam. v. 5, 8, 13).

Ver. 11. So have I caused to cleave unto me] The covenant between God and his people is e'therealised and represented by a marriage contract (see the note on ii. 2); whereby the man is said to "cleave to his wife" (Gen. ii. 24).

That they might be unto me for a name, and for a praise.] That they might have the honour of being called by my name, and I might be glorified by their showing forth my truth and praises to the world (see xxxviii. 9).

Ver. 12. Every bottle shall be filled with wine.] God's judgments are often represented under the figure of a cup full of intoxicating liquor (see this metaphor at large purged, xxv. 13, &c.). To the same purpose God tells them here, that as they have all sinned, so shall every one have his share in the punishment.

They shall say unto thee, &c.] God, that knew the profaneness of their hearts, foretells the reply they away captive all of it, it shall be wholly carried away captive.

20 Lift up your eyes, and behold them that come from the north: where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock?

21 What wilt thou say when he shall punish thee? for thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee: shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

22 ¶ And if thou say in thine heart, Wherefore come these things upon me? For the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare.

23 Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the from their high estate and sit down upon the ground, or in the dust: i. e. in a posture of mourning and lamentation (see Lam. ii. 20, Isa. iii. 26, xivii. 1).

Ver. 19.] Shutting up signifies a state of bondage, and opening a state of liberty (see Ps. xxxxi. 8, Job xii. 14). The verb sager, here rendered shut up, is sometimes taken for delivering or giving up into the power of another; and is rendered in the Septuagint, by σαράνδεος (see Deut. xxiii. 15, xxxii. 30, 1 Sam. xxiii. 12, Job xvi. 11, Ps. lxxviii. 48). Taking the words in either sense, they denote that the cities of Judah shall be given up into the enemies' hand, and none shall be able to rescue them. Judah is called the south, in opposition to Chaldea, expressed by the north in the next verse (see i. 14).

Ver. 20.] The verbs and pronouns in the Hebrew here, and in the following verse, are of the feminine gender; which supposes the words to be directed to the Jewish state or government, represented under the figure of a woman (see iv. 31, vi. 2). The prophet demands, in a sarcastical manner, into what a miserable condition she hath brought the people committed to her charge; called the Lord's flock, ver. 17, which were formerly in a prosperous and flourishing condition (compare x. 21).

Ver. 21.] What wilt thou say when he shall punish thee? What wilt thou plead for thyself, either for the excusing or mitigating thy punishment!

For thou hast taught them to be captains.] When Ahaz called in the assistance of Tiglath-pileser against Rezin king of Syria, and made himself tributary to the king of Assyria, he taught the Assyrians how they might become masters and conquerors over his own country whenever they pleased (see 2 Kings xvi. 7, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20).

Ver. 22.] Wherefore come these things? See v. 19.

For the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered.] Thine enormous crimes deserve no less a punishment than that of captivity: when thou shalt be carried away into a strange country, stripped and bare, without any covering to thy nakedness; for such was the barbarous cruelty of conquerors towards their captives (see Isa. iii. 17, xx. 4, xlvi. 3, Lam. i. 8, iv. 21, Nahum iii. 3). The words likewise allude to the punishment that used to be inflicted upon common harlots and adulteresses, which was to strip them naked and expose them to the eyes of the world; and thus God threateneth he will deal with Jerusalem, upon account of her spiritual fornication (see Ezek. xvi. 37—38, Hos. ii. 10).

Ver. 23.] Can the Ethiopian change his skin, The Hebrew word Chush, which our translators render by "leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil.

24 Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness.

25 This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood.

26 Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear.

27 I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?

Ethiopia, does often signify Arabia in scripture: Ethiopia being by the ancient writers distinguished into the eastern, the same with Arabia, and western Ethiopia (see Ludolphus's Comment. in lib. i. Histor. Ethiop. n. 19). Bochart, indeed, maintains, that the word is never used for Ethiopia, properly so called (see his Philae. lib. iv. cap. 2, n. 238). But this text is a good proof to the contrary, which may most probably be understood of the Africans, or black-moors, as they are commonly called. The word Cush is likewise joined with the Lubians or Lybians, in other places, as 2 Chron. xii. 3, xvi. 8, Dan. xi. 43, and with Phut, another people of Africa (see Jer. xlv. 9, Ezek. xxx. 5, xxxviii. 5, Nahum iii. 9).

In the same sense Cush must be understood, Esther i. 1, where Ahasuerus is said to "reign from India to Cush," or Ethiopia; because the words relate to the conquest of Egypt and Ethiopia by Cambyses: by whose victories, and the successful arms of Darius Hystaspes, the Persian empire was enlarged from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and twenty-seven provinces (compare that text with Dan. vi. 1).

Then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil.] The words import, how extremely difficult it is to overcome ill habits, custom being a second nature. For we are not to explain the words in a strict literal sense (because then it would have been to no purpose for the prophet to have exhorted the people to amendment), but only extend their meaning so far as to denote that a moral change in habitual sinners is almost as impossible as a natural one. Thus our Saviour compares the difficulty of a rich man's entering into the kingdom of God, to a natural impossibility, viz. "to a camel's passing through the eye of a needle" (Matt. xix. 24); but yet qualifies the comparison, by adding "What is impossible with men, is possible with God," i. e. God's grace can surmount such difficulties as are impossible for nature to overcome: and thus we are to understand the text before us.

Ver. 25.] The portion of thy measures] Or "of thine inheritance," as the Chaldee paraphrase explains it; the expression is taken from the division of the land of Canaan, by line or measure.

Trusted in falsehood.] In false gods, who cannot help men in their troubles (see x. 14).

Ver. 26.] Will I discover thy skirts] See ver. 22.

Ver. 27.] I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings] Compare v. 8. He resembles their violent inclination to idolatry to the rage of lust (compare ii. 20, 23, 24, iii. 2, 6).
CHAPTER XIV.

1 The word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah concerning the dearth.

2 Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.

3 And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads.

4 Because the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth, the plowmen were ashamed, they covered their heads.

5 Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass.

6 And the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their eyes did fail, because there was no grass.

7 ¶ O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake: for our backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee.

8 O the hope of Israel, the saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?

9 Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name; leave us not.

10 ¶ Thus saith the Lord unto this people, Thus have they loved to wander, they have not restrained their feet, therefore the Lord doth not accept them; he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins.

11 Then said the Lord unto me, Pray not for this people for their good.

12 When they fast, I will not hear their cry; in hot and dry seasons. But the word tannim likewise signifies any great fish (see the note on Isa. xxvii. 1): and particularly a crocodile, as it is plainly taken Ezek. xxix. 3, xxvii. 2, in which sense Ludolphus understands the word here, and tells us, that the crocodile's put their heads above water, to refresh themselves by breathing in the cool air (see his commentary in Histor.ETH. LB. I. n. 57).

Ver. 7. Though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake. Our sins bear witness against us, and condemn us to the severest judgments, thy wrath can inflict: but we beseech thee to consider, that we are thy people, and have that regard for thine own honour, as not to cast us off utterly (see ver. 9).

For our backslidings are many. Or, although our backslidings are many (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 399).

Ver. 8. O the hope of Israel. Thou who hast given us so many gracious promises, to encourage us to put our trust in thee (see Ps. xxii. 4), Why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land? Thou hast promised to dwell among us (see ver. 9, Lev. xxvi. 12): why then shouldst thou Behave thyself towards us, as if thou wert a mere stranger to us? and as one no more concerned for our welfare than a traveller is for the place where he lodges but one night, and never expects to see it again?

Ver. 9. Thou canst not want power to save us; but by thy disregard of us, seemst like a mighty man, that through fear or surprise, is not able to make use of his strength.

Ver. 10. Thus have they loved to wander. God returns an answer to the complaints and expostulations of the prophet, and tells the people, that their miseries are owing to themselves, who took pleasure in going astray from the true God, and following the idolatries and corrupt customs of the heathens about them (see ii. 29—30): which sins he now visits so severely upon them, The Lord doth not accept them. He will not accept their own prayers or humiliations, nor those intercessions in their behalf, but will punish them according to their deserts (see ver. 11, 12).

Ver. 11. Pray not for this people. See vii. 10. and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them: but I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence.

13 ¶ Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you assured peace in this place.

14 Then the Lord said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name: I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart.

15 Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spoke unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart.

16 And the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem because of the famine and the sword; and they shall have none to bury them, them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters: for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

17 ¶ Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them; Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

18. If I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both the prophet and the priest go about into a land that they know not.

19 Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us! we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble!

20 We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers: for we have sinned against thee.

21 Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake, do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: remember, break not thy covenant with us.

Ver. 12. When they fast, I will not hear their cry] It is likely there was a public fast appointed upon occasion of this dearth, as there was in a like case, in the prophet Joel's time (see Joel ii. 15).

And at such times they used to make their prayers with great noise and vehemence (Isa. lviii. 4, Joel i. 14).

When they offer burnt-offering and an oblation] See vii. 20. The word mincha, rendered oblation, was the offering of fine flour, mentioned Lev. ii. 1, &c., which always accompanied their sacrifices; and is not so properly translated meat-offering by our interpreters; whereas it should rather be rendered a bread-offering; for it answers to the καρπὸς, and the μόλις or fartum of the Greeks and Romans.

I will consume them] See ver. 18, and xv. 2.

Ver. 13.] See note on iv. 10.

Ver. 14.] See xxii. 21.

Ver. 16.] The people contributed to their own de- lusions, and readily hearkened to such false prophets as confirmed them in their evil ways: so God justly threatens to punish them, because they had not a love for the truth (See 2 Thess. ii. 10—12, and iv. 10 of this prophecy).

Ver. 17.] Let mine eyes run down with tears] However insensible you are of your own condition, yet God commands me to bewail those calamities which I foresee are coming upon you.

The virgin daughter] Those cities are called virgins which never came into a conqueror's hands, as hath been observed upon Isa. xxii. 12. In the same sense the prophet here calls Jerusalem a virgin, because she had been hitherto under God's immediate protection, and preserved by him from all the attempts of her enemies (compare Amos v. 2; see another sense of this phrase in the notes upon xviii. 13, xxxii. 4).

The dissolution of a government or body politic is called a breach, by way of allusion to the break- ing or disjoining the limbs of a human body (see viii. 21, Lam. ii. 13).

Ver. 18. Both the prophet and the priest go about to wander] The priests and prophets confirmed the people in their corruptions and impenitence, thereby seeking to advance their own interest and authority (see ii. 8, v. 31). To which sense the marginal reading renders the former part of the sentence thus, nor their sons, nor their daughters: for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

17 ¶ Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them; Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

18. If I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both the prophet and the priest go about into a land that they know not.

19 Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us! we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble!

20 We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers: for we have sinned against thee.

21 Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake, do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: remember, break not thy covenant with us.

"The prophet and the priest make merchandise against the land." And now they receive the due reward of their prevarications, by going into captivity with those whom they have misled (see ver. 15).

Ver. 19. Hast thy soul loathed Zion?] Which was formerly thy delight, and the place thou didst choose for thine especial residence (see Ps. lxxiii. 68, lxxxvi. 2, cxxxii. 14).

Ver. 20. The iniquity of our fathers: Which thou mayest justly visit upon us, as thou hast threatened (Exod. xx. 5), especially since we have not only imitated, but also exceeded them in wickedness (see vii. 26, xvi. 12).

Ver. 21. Throne of thy glory:] Jerusalem is called the "city of God," Ps. lxxviii. 1, lxxxvii. 3, as he was in a peculiar manner king of the Jews, and this was his royal city, or chief seat of his kingdom (see iii. 17). But the words are chiefly to be understood of the temple, and the prophet beseeches God not to give that up to be profaned by infidels, the place which he had chosen for his peculiar residence, where he sat between the cherubims as upon a throne (see the notes upon Isa. lxi. 1).

Remember [and] break not thy covenant with us.] Thou hast promised "to be our God," and that "we should be thy people" (xi. 4); i.e. that thou wouldest take us under thy protection. We have indeed forfeited all our title to thy promises by our sins; yet we beseech thee still to remember the relation we bear to thee (compare Ps. lxxxiv. 20).

Ver. 22. Vani ties of the Gentiles] Idols are often styled vanities (see x. 15, xvi. 19, Deut. xxxii. 21, Acts xiv. 15). The giving rain in its season, is an argument for God's providence, often insisted upon in the scriptures (see the note on v. 24).

Can the heavens give showers?] Are they purely owing to natural causes? on the contrary, God directs them when and when they should fall (see the note on x. 13).

Art not thou he, O Lord our God [that giveth them?] For rain, and the supply of all other our wants. The Hebrew word kuy, he, is often equivalent to the true or eternal God: see Deut. xxxiii. 29, Isa. xlviii. 10, 13, xivii. 12, and especially Ps. cit. 27, where the expression is the same with that of the text, ato ky, thou art he: our English reads thou art the same. The
CHAPTER XV.

1 Then said the Lord unto me, Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be towards this people: cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth.

2 And it shall come to pass, if they say unto thee, Whither shall we go forth? then shalt thou tell them. Thus saith the Lord; Such as are for death, to death; and such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the famine, to the famine; and such as are for the captivity to the captivity.

3 And I will appoint over them four kinds, saith the Lord: the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy.

CHAPTER XV.

Argument.—God declares his irrevocable purpose of bringing desolations and captivity upon the Jews, and comforts his chosen remnant under those discouragements, which he met with in his discharge of his prophetic office.

Ver. 1.] As God had forbade Jeremiah before to intercede for them, because it would be to no purpose (see the note on xvi. 16), so here he declares, that he would not admit the prayers of any others, though eminent favourites of God, in their behalf. Moses obtained pardon for the people after their sin in making the golden calf (Exod. xxxiii. 34), and again, after their despising the promised land (Num. xiv. 20). Samuel's intercession prevailed for their deliverance out of the hands of the Philistines (1 Sam. vii. 9). And these two persons are mentioned together, as remarkably prevalent by their prayers, Ps. xcviii. 8. "Thou answerest them, O Lord our God: thou wast a God that forgavest them, even when thou wast just taking vengeance upon their inventions;" for so the words should be translated. But here God saith, that if these very persons were alive, and in that near attendance to him which they formerly enjoyed (for that is the import of the phrase, "to stand before him:" see ver. 19, xviii. 20, Deut. x. 8, 1 Kings xvii. 1), yet even their prayers should not avert his judgments from this people (compare Ezek. xiv. 14).

Ver. 2.] Death here signifies the pestilence, which, together with the sword and the famine, should consume the greatest part of the people (compare xiv. 12, Ezek. xi. 16, xxvi. 21). This is the import of the phrase, "to stand before him;" compare xix. xviii. 20, Deut. x. 8, 1 Kings xvii. 1), yet even their prayers should not avert his judgments from this people (compare Ezek. xiv. 14).

Ver. 3.] These four judgments shall be the executors of my vengeance upon this people (compare Lev. xxvi. 16). Those whom the sword destroys shall not enjoy the common rites of burial, but their carcasses shall be left a prey to the dogs, the birds, and the beasts. This is mentioned as an aggravation of the divine judgments (compare vii. 2). Several Jews were carried captive into other countries, beside Chaldea (see the note on xii. 14), others turned voluntary exiles, to avoid the miseries they saw coming upon their country (see xli. 11). The words here are taken out of Deut. xviii. 25, where Moses threatens them with a general dispersion over the world, which re- ceived the utmost completion after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romes. Because of Manasseh, &c.] His idolatry and other abominations exceeded the wickedness of all the kings that went before him (see 2 Kings xxii. 7, 9, 11). In his time the public worship of God was wholly suppressed, and idolatry introduced into the very temple; the law of God was likewise quite laid aside, and in a manner forgotten, as appears by the surprise Hilkiah was in, when he found the original of the law in the house of the Lord (2 Kings xxii. 8). So it was Manasseh's sins that filled up the measure of the Jews' iniquities (see 2 Kings xxiii. 36, xxiv. 3, 4).

Ver. 5. For who shall [or rather, who will] have pity upon thee?] Thy sins render thee unworthy of pity, and every body that sees the calamities brought upon thee will own them to be just (see xii. 8, 9). Those who shall go aside to ask how thou dost?] Who will be so much concerned for thee, as to step a little out of his way to inquire after thee, a common instance of respect between persons never so little acquainted. Rather they that pass by will insult over thy calamities (see Lam. ii. 15).

Ver. 6. Thou art gone backward.] See vii. 24. I am weary with repenting.] When God suspends the execution of his judgments, he is said to repent of the evil that is come to his people (see xvi. 12). This he had done so often, that he is represented like a man whose patience is at last quite tired out, it being to no purpose to withhold his hand any longer from striking (compare Isa. lxxiii. 24, Hos. xiii. 14, Mal. ii. 17).

Ver. 7. I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the land;] "I will scatter them to all the winds," as Ezekiel expresses it, Ezek. v. 12 (see likewise lii. 2 of his prophecy, Isa. xlii. 16). By the "gates of the land" are meant the cities (see xiv. 2).

8 Their widows are increased to me above the sand of the seas: I have brought upon them against the mother of the young men a spoiler at noon-day: I have caused him to fall upon it suddenly, and terrors upon the city.

9 She that hath borne seven languisheth: she hath given up the ghost; her sun is gone down while it was yet day: she hath been ashamed and confounded: and the residue of them will I deliver to the sword before their enemies, saith the Lord.

10 ¶ Woe is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me a man of strife and a man of contention to the whole earth! I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me on usury; yet every one of them doth curse me.

11 The Lord said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant; verily I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil and in the time of affliction.

12 Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?

13 Thy substance and thy treasures will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.

14 And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not: for a fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you.

15 ¶ O Lord, thou knowest; remember me, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors; take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke.

16 Thy words were found, and I did eat them as meat; and grew and was satiated thereof.

Jeremiah.

Ver. 8. The mother of the young men.] Compare vi. 4. By the "mother of young men," is meant Jerusalem (see ii. 1, (p. 12.)

Terrors upon the city.] The Hebrew word nir is of a double significance: the Septuagint render the words, "illum and terrors." This translation of the word nir, Abr. a Schultens defends from the sense it still retains in the Arabic, (see his Animadver. in Job, p. 53.) Some suppose that word to signify a watchman here, from the Chaldee sense of it, and translate the latter part of the verse thus, "I have caused (or will cause) a watchman and terrors to fall upon it suddenly."

Ver. 9. She that hath borne seven languisheth.] The prophet purport the metaphor of the former verse, and describeth the mother-city under the figure of a fruitful woman (compare I Sam. ii. 5), but fainting away, and ready to die with grief for the loss of her children.

Her sun has gone down while it was yet day.] She is as a young man that dies in the midst of his strength: of a sudden she is overwhelmed with misery, when she might have expected a long continuance of happiness (compare Amos viii. 9, and see the note upon iv. 23).

The residue of them] i. e. Those that escape out of the city (see ver. 8, Ezek. v. 12).

Ver. 10. Thou hast borne me a man—of contention to the earth! Or, land. I am an object of the common hatred, every body takes occasion to quarrel with me, because I speak such truths as they do not care to hear (see xi. 19, &c. xx. 7, 8).

I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me] The Jews were forbid to take usury of their brethren (Dent. xxiiil. 19), especially of the poor (Exod. xxii. 25), which was thought so great an oppression, that it made the man who was guilty of it hated and cursed by every one. The prophet saith, this was just his own case, every body was his enemy for delivering those messages he had received from God.

Ver. 11.] If we follow this translation, the sense is, that the prophet himself, his family, and relations, should escape the evils coming upon the Jewish nation, when the remnant or residue of them should be delivered to the sword (ver. 9). But others translate the sentence thus, "I will give thee a happy deliverance" [from those evils]; or, "thy habitation shall be happy," or secure; and thine enemies shall use thee well, when they exercise all manner of cruelty towards the rest of the Jews (see xxxix. 11, 12, xl. 4).

Ver. 12.] The northern iron was the hardest in its kind of any, viz. such as the people called Chal-
CHAPTER XVI.

1 The word of the Lord came also unto me, saying,
2 Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place.
3 For thus saith the Lord concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land;
4 They shall die of grievous deaths; they of such a restoration, as shall be more wonderful then their deliverance out of Egypt.

Ver. 2.] Fruitfulness was promised as a blessing under the law (Deut. xxviii. 4), but ceased to be so in such difficult times as were coming upon the Jewish nation: for parents could not promise to their children any comfort in their children, who must be exposed to the many miseries that attend a hostile invasion, and a conquering army.

CHAPTER XVI.

The word of the Lord came also unto me, saying, Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place. For thus saith the Lord concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land; They shall die of grievous deaths; they of such a restoration, as shall be more wonderful than their deliverance out of Egypt.
shall not be lamented: neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcasses shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus saith the Lord, Enter not into the house of mourning, neither go to lament nor mourn them: for I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the Lord, even loving-kindness and mercies.

6 Both the great and the small shall die in this land: they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them:

7 Neither shall men mourn for them in mourning, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them:

8 Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink.

9 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

10 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, Wherefore hath the Lord pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our sin, that we have committed against the Lord our God?

11 Then shalt thou say unto them, Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the Lord, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law;

12 And ye have done worse than your fathers; for, behold, ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:

13 Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night; where I will not show you favour.

14 ¶ Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall be no more said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt:

15 But, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

16 ¶ Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and

Ver. 4. They shall die of grievous deaths, By sword and by famine, as it follows (compare viii. 2, xx. 2, 3).

Ver. 5. Enter not into the house of mourning, Or, of a mourning-feast, as the margin reads; such as were the mysteries among the Greeks, and parentalia among the Romans (see ver. 7).

I have taken away my peace from this people, As they are not the object of my compensations; so neither ought they to be of the pity of others. They are to be esteemed as so many criminals or malefactors, at whose funerals men do not use to pay the common respects which are due to the deceased.

Ver. 6. Neither shall men lament for them, Men's thoughts shall be wholly taken up with bewailing themselves: their own calamities shall be so great, it shall make them not concerned for the misfortunes of others.

Nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald, See the note upon xiii. 5. The law did expressly forbid making any "cuttings in the flesh" at funeral obsequies (see Lev. xix. 25, Deut. xiv. 1). Notwithstanding which prohibition, this practice seems to have been taken up by the Jews, among other heathen customs. Shaving of the head was a usual expression of mourning (see vii. 29).

Ver. 7. According to this translation, the phrase alludes to another expression of inordinate grief, which consisted in tearing the flesh with their nails: "Unguis eos soror fodens," as Virgil describes it. But, according to the marginal reading, the sense is, "nor shall men break bread for them;" alluding to the mourning-feast mentioned ver. 5. (see likewise Ezek. xxiv. 17, Hos. ix. 4, Tovit iv. 17, 18, 19, 20.)

Ver. 9. In the time of a general desolation all the solemn seasons of mirth and gladness shall cease, as well public as private. The solemn feasts, which were always observed with great expressions of joy (see Deut. xvi. 11, 14, Isa. xxx. 29), as well as nuptial solemnities, and other private occasions of rejoicing (compare vii. 34, xv. 10, Hos. ii. 11),

Ver. 10. See v. 19.

Ver. 13. There shall ye serve other gods day and night, The opportunities of frequenting the public worship of the true God shall be taken from you, as a just judgment upon you for your neglect of his service in your own country; and you shall be exposed to the power of corrupting idolatry; and being seduced by the Chaldeans to the worship of their idols (compare Deut. iv. 28, xxviii. 36, 1 Sam. xxvii. 19).

Mr. Mede expounds the words of their "serving other gods," in a political sense; i.e. serving those nations who worshipped other gods (see his Apology of the Latter Times, par. i. ii. iii. ch. 16). The Chaldee paraphrase explains the phrase to the same purpose, "Ye shall serve those people that worship idols day and night."

Ver. 14. Therefore, The particle taken, translated therefore, sometimes signifies nevertheless, or yet surely; see the note on Isa. xxx. 18, and so it is translated v. 2 of this prophecy; which sense agrees best with the scope of this place, and connects this verse with the words foregoing. So it should be rendered likewise, xxx. 16, xxvii. 26.

Concerning the import of the promise made here and in the following verse, see the notes upon xxiii. 7, 8.

Ver. 16. I will send for many fishers,—many hunters, Enemies and oppressors are elsewhere represented under the metaphors of fishers and hunters (see Gen. x. 9, Amos iv. 2, Hab. i. 14, 15); because they use all the methods of open force and secret wiles (frequently compared to nets) in order to make men their prey (see Ezek. xii. 13, Hos. v. 1).

These two similitudes imply, that the Chaldeans shall after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks.

17 For mine eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes.

18 And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the cares of their detestable and abominable things.

19 O Lorp, my strength, and my fortress, make an entire conquest and booty of the whole land, of its inhabitants and their riches; and what shall escape one party, shall fall into the hands of another.

From every mountain.] They shall find them out in all the places whither they flee for refuge, be they never so secret or inaccessible (see xiii. 16).

Ver. 18. I will recompense their iniquity and their sins double; i. e. Double in proportion to God's usual severity in punishing men's sins (compare xvii. 18, Isa. xl. 2, with the note upon that place).

Because they have defiled my land.] See ii. 7.

With their carcases.] With their idols, which are elsewhere called carcases, not only because they are without life, but also because of their filthiness and hatefulness in the sight of God (see Lev. xxvi. 30, Ezek. xiii. 7, 9). Some explain the words of the human sacrifices which were offered to idols (see xix. 5).

Ver. 19.] The more emphatically to demonstrate the absurdity of forsaking the true God, and apostatizing to idolatry; the prophet foretells, that the time will come when the gentiles shall be ashamed of the idolatry they and their forefathers have been so long guilty of; shall humbly confess this their sin, and address themselves to the true God in all their wants, as their only refuge and protection.

Ver. 20.] The absurdity of supposing that the work of men's hands can resemble or represent the infinite majesty of God, is often insisted upon by the holy writers (see x. 3, 6c., Isa. xiv. 10, 11, &c.).

Ver. 21.] The phrase which our English renders "this once," may be translated, "at this time," as it is 2 Sam. xvii. 7. If we understand the verse of the gentiles, mentioned in the foregoing verse, the sense is, that God will at the time foretold (ver. 19) exert his power in an extraordinary manner for their conversion (compare Isa. iii. 10). If we apply the words to the Jews, they import, that he will manifest his power in bringing upon them all the evils already threatened against them, and they should know that he is the Lord, a fulfiller of his threatenings, as well as a performer of his promises (compare Ezek. vi. 7, xii. 29, xxvii. 24, 27). This sense the Chaldee paraphrase expresses.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars;

2 Whilst their children remember their altars and their groves by the green trees upon the high hills.

3 O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance and all thy treasures to the spoil, and thy high places for sin, throughout all thy borders.

4 And thou, even thyself, shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not: for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

CHAPTER XVIII.

ARGUMENT.—After having renewed his threatenings against the Jews for their sins, the prophet encourages himself, and other well-disposed persons, to put their trust in God alone. The latter part of the chapter contains a charge to the king and people for the strict observance of the sabbath.

Ver. 1.) It is written in indelible characters, as when things are engraved in tables of stone, to preserve the memory of them to posterity (compare Job xix. 24). In like manner the Jewish altars and other monuments of their idolatry, are undeniable tokens of the corrupt inclinations of their hearts, which are altogether estranged from God and his true worship.

Ver. 2.) They train up their children in the same idolatrous practices (compare vii. 18, ii. 20).

Ver. 3.) O my mountain in the field.] A periphrasis of the temple, called elsewhere the "mountain of the Lord's house," and the "holy mountain" (see Vol. III.—S) and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.

20 Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods?

21 Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is The Lord.
5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord.
6 For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.

7 Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is.
8 For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit.

9 ¶ The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?
10 I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, against the arms of the Babylonians, which he tells them will deceive their expectation, and make them forfeit the divine protection (see the notes on iv. 30, xxii. 20, 22).

And maketh flesh his arm.] By flesh is meant a frail mortal man (see Isa. xxxi. 3).

Ver. 6. He shall be like the heath in the desert.] Whereas the righteous, and he that trusteth in God, shall be like a fair flourishing tree (see ver. 8).

In a salt land and not inhabited.] Saltiness in Hebrew expresses barren ground (see Deut. xxix. 23, Ps. cvii. 34, Zeph. ii. 9).

Ver. 8. And shall not see when heat cometh.] Or, "shall not fear when heat cometh:" so the Septuagint render the words, following the reading of the Hebrew text, which is to be preferred before that of the margin.

Shall not be careful in the year of drought.] Shall not be solicitous for fear it should lack moisture (see xiv. 1).

Ver. 9.] An entire confidence in God is one of the chief trials of men's sincerity; and they that pretend to depend wholly upon him, yet in cases of apparent danger, are too apt to mistrust his promises, and have recourse to human succours. Or else the prophet here assigns a reason why we ought to put our trust in God, and not in man, whose heart we cannot look into, and who very often, under great pretences of sincerity, cover over mischievous designs.

Ver. 10.] Since there are so many corrupt inclinations that lurk in the heart, it is very hard for men, without examining themselves very narrowly, to know the sincerity of their own hearts; it being the property of God alone, perfectly to discover the whole bent and frame of men's dispositions (see Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24).

Ver. 11. As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not.] It is very uncertain what kind of bird the Hebrew word kore denotes. Bochart thinks the description given of it in the Arabic writers, doth by no means agree to a partridge: so that it is needless to inquire whether the quality here mentioned belong to that bird. The sentence may best be rendered thus, "As the bird kore hatcheth eggs which she did not lay; so be that getteh riches," &c. As when eggs are hatcht by a bird of a different species, when once the young ones are fledged, they never stay with the dam that hatcht and nourished them; so he that increases an estate which he did not come honestly by at first, shall never prosper long with it. Critics observe, that the Hebrew word yadalat, translated here hatcheth, properly signifies laying eggs; the hatchung them being expressed by the verbs lakwaw and dagar, the word used in the text, which our translators render "sitteth on eggs," but doth properly signify hatchung them.

And at his end shall be a fox.] So God calls the rich man, Luke xii. 20, who was cut off in the midst of his life, when he promised himself the enjoyment of many years.

Ver. 12.] God's kingdom is from everlasting: his throne is in heaven, the place of his peculiar residence, of which his temple at Jerusalem is but an imperfect resemblance; heaven is sometimes called God's temple, or sanctuary (see Ps. xi. 4, xviii. 6, cii. 19, Isa. lxvii. 15, Jonah ii. 7). The words instruct the Jews to look up to God in the heavens, and not fancy the temple the only place from whence they may address themselves to him, which made them think he would never forsake that seat of his residence, nor the city where he had placed his name (see vii. 4).

Ver. 13. All that forsake thee shall be ashamed.] Thou hast given many gracious promises to thy people to encourage them to trust in thee; and they that forsake their interest in thy goodness will find all other expectations fail and disappoint them.

Shall be written in the earth.] They that forsake my laws, saith God, and their reliance upon me, shall not be regarded among my people, nor shall their names be written in heaven, or in the book of life (compare Ezek. xiii. 9, Ps. lxix. 28, Luke x. 20, Phil. iv. 3). The expression alludes to the registers that are kept of the members of every city or corporation, the privileges of which society none can pretend to, but they that have their names entered in such registers (see Ezra ii. 59).

Fountain of living waters.] See ii. 13.

Ver. 14.] It is from thee only that I expect comfort and relief in all my troubles and afflictions (see ver. 15—17). And as I acknowledge that all the blessings I enjoy come from thee, so it is to thee I return all thanks and praise (compare Ps. cix. 1, cxviii. 14, Deut. x. 21). The expression, "Save me, and I shall be saved," is much the same with that we read in 18. 17, 18, "And I shall be turned," and both of them import, that it is the divine assistance and blessing only that can crown human endeavours with success (see the note there).

Ver. 15.] This is an objection common in the mouths of infidels and libertines, that God doth not specially fulfil his promises or threatenings, so as to give them occult demonstration of their certainty (see Isa. v. 10, Amos v. 12; 2 Pet. iii. 4). This was
CHAPTER XVII.

16 As for me, I have not hastened from bringing a pastor to follow thee: neither have I desired the woeful day; thou knowest: that which came out of my lips was right before thee.

17 Be not a terror unto me: thou art my hope in the day of evil.

18 Let them be confounded that persecute me, but let not me be confounded: let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction.

19 ¶ Thus said the Lord unto me: Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by the which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem;

20 And say unto them, Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates:

21 Thus saith the Lord; Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath-day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem;

22 Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath-day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath-day, as I commanded your fathers.

23 But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction.

24 And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath-day, but hallow the sabbath-day, to do no work therein;

25 Then shall there enter into the gates of this city, kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: and this city shall remain for ever.

26 And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, and meat-offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the Lord.

27 But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath-day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath-day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

nouncing their share in God's covenant (see Ezek. xx. 13, 21).

Ver. 23. Make their neck stiff.] A metaphor taken from oxen that draw back, and refuse to put their neck under the yoke (see vii. 20, xix. 15).

Ver. 25. Compare xxii. 4. From hence it appears, that the judgments denounced against Jerusalem, at least as far as they threatened the city with utter destruction, were not irreversible. And from Jeremy's advice to Zechariah (xxxviii. 17), it may be concluded that if the king had hearkened to that counsel, the city would not have been destroyed, and he himself might have continued a tributary king under Nebuchadnezzar. It is true, that in several other chapters of this prophecy, God, upon foresight of the Jews' impenitence, pronounces a peremptory sentence upon them (see iv. 29).

Ver. 26. Land of Benjamin.] See i. 1, vi. 1.

The plain.] The country of Judah, properly so called, i.e. the country allotted to the tribe of Judah, was divided into the hill country (see Josh. xxii. 1, Luke i. 39), and the plain or champagne country; the same word is rendered valley, xxxii. 44. This lower part reached down to the lake Asphaltites, called the 'sea of the plain,' or the 'Salt sea,' Deut. iii. 17.

The south.] That part of Judah which is called the 'wilderness of Judah,' Matt. iii. 1, Josh. xv. 61. By reason of this situation of the wilderness, the word itself sometimes is put for the south (see Ps. lxxvi. 6).

Meat-offerings, and incense.] See the notes upon vii. 21, xiv. 12. Incense was always laid upon the meat-offerings (see Lev. ii. 1, 2).

Bringing sacrifices of praise.] The peace-offerings were of three sorts; either vows, voluntary or tree-will-offerings, and offerings of praise or thanksgiving (see Lev. vii. 15, 16). These were offered as grateful acknowledgments for deliverances in time of danger, or for other mercies received (see Ps. cxvi. 14).

Ver. 27. Compare Lam. iv. 11.
CHAPTER XVIII.

ARGUMENT.—Under the figure of a potter, the prophet shows God's absolute power in disposing of kingdoms, and thenceupon exhorts the Jews to repentance: he then bewails their obstinacy, and threatens destruction to those that devised evil against him.

Ver. 6.] God's absolute power over his creatures, both by virtue of his creating them, and having dominion over them, is justly represented by this metaphor (see Isa. xlv. 8, Rom. ix. 20).

Ver. 5. I will repent of the evil.] If we take repentance in a strict and proper sense, for a change of the inward purposes and resolutions, it cannot be applied to God, according to that saying of Isaiah's, "God is not a man that he should repent" (Numb. xxviii. 19). Therefore, whenever repentance is ascribed to God, it must be meant only of a change with respect to the outward administrations of his providence, and his dealing with men otherwise than he did before: and this doth not imply a change in God, but only in ourselves: he still acts by the same rules, but we, according to our different behaviour, become the objects either of his favour, or his displeasure.

Ver. 10. I will repent of the good.] If this and the foregoing verse we may infer, that God's promises in scripture, however uttered in general terms, are yet, for the most part, to be understood conditionally, according to men's behaviour, especially when applied to particular persons (see Numb. xiv. 34), and as God did justly reject those Jews, who refused to embrace the gospel, notwithstanding the general promises he had made to that people; so neither can particular Christians nor churches lay any claim to God's general promise of preserving his church, any farther than they keep close to that rule of faith and manners, which he hath prescribed to them in the New Testament.

The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words.

Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.

And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter: so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it.

Then the word of the Lord came to me, saying,

Or house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it;

If that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

And at what instant I shall speak concerning... of scribes or learned men to unfold the difficulties that may arise concerning the more obscure parts of it; and of prophets to instruct the people in the knowledge of what is to come (compare viii. 7, Matt. xxiii. 31).

They probably grounded their confidence of a succession of priests, to explain the law, and guide men's consciences, upon that passage of Moses, Deut. xvii. 9, where they are commanded to "consult the priests upon any emergent difficulty," and follow their determinations (compare vii. 4). Basnage, in his History of the Jews, book iii. ch. 29, by wise men, understands those who were appointed judges of controversies in their synagogues, whose business it was to give counsel or determination in such cases as were brought before them; in which sense he understands the wise men mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Cor. vi. 5.

"Come, and let us smite him with the tongue (or for the tongue, that is, for his bold speeches against the government)." Let us accuse him of crimes against the state, and by that means take away his life, and then all his prophecies will die with him. This expression is parallel to that of Joseph's brethren (Gen. xxxvii. 20). "Come now, and let us slay him—and we shall see what will become of his dreams." Ver. 20. They have dug a pit for my soul.] They have laid a direct scheme against my life, ver. 18, (compare Ps. xxxv. 7, lvi. 6)." I stood before thee to speak good for them."

In the execution of my prophetic office, I always interposed with my prayers in their behalf, to avert those judgments which by thy command I denounced against them (see the note on xv. 1).

Ver. 21.] Since they are thus incorrigible, I shall not any more intercede for them, but let those calamities of famine and sword, with which thou hast threatened them, overtake them (see xvi. 4, and the note upon xv. 22). Ver. 22.] When they are unexpectedly assaulted by a troop of their enemies, that come to plunder and destroy them (see xx. 6).

Ver. 23. Yet, Lord, thou knowest, &c.] Or rather, "For, Lord, thou knowest," &c. Forgive not their iniquity.] Compare xi. 20, xv. 15, Ps. lix. 6. It redounds to the glory of God's justice, that incorrigible sinners should meet with exemplary punishment.
1 Thus saith the Lord, Go and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests;
2 And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee,
3 And say, Hear ye the word of the Lord, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle.
4 Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents;
5 They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burn-offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind:
6 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but The valley of slaughter.
7 And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives: and their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.
8 And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss because of all the plagues thereof.
9 And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons with fire for burn-offerings unto Baal, and their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend in the siege and straitness, wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.
10 Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee, 11 And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, that the place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the sons of Hinnom, but The valley of slaughter.

CHAPTER XIX.

ARGUMENT.—Under the type of breaking a potter's vessel, is forebode the desolation of the Jews for their sins.

Ver. 1. Get thee a potter's earthen bottle; An earthen pitcher with a narrow neck, made to drink out of; in the Hebrew bakbuk, called so from the noise that the draught of liquor made; so the Greek word βηχαρία, and the old Latin verb bilbire, are derived from the like sound (see Casaubon's Comment on Athenæus's sixth book, ch. 8). By this example the prophet signified, that the city and people might as easily be destroyed, if God so pleased, as an earthen vessel could be broken (see xviii. 5).

Ancients of the priests; The heads of the four-and-twenty courses (see 1 Chron. xxiv. 4).

Ver. 2. Valley of the son of Hinnom. See vii. 31. Which is by the entry of the east gate; By which men entered into the temple, from whence they have a prospect of the valley of Hinnom, which lay south-east of the temple (see Josh. xv. 8, and Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple). The Hebrew reads, "the gate Harshith," which some interpret the dung gate, mentioned Neh. ii. 13. Others the potter's gate; the potter's field being near the temple (see Zech. xi. 13, Matt. xxvii. 10).

Ver. 3. O kings of Judah. See xviii. 20.

The which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle; The very report of it shall astonish the hearers (see 1 Sam. iii. 11, 2 Kings xxi. 19).

Ver. 4. Have estranged this place; Jerusalem was the "city of God" (Ps. xlviii. 1, 2), and the place of his peculiar residence; therefore called the "holy city," Matt. xxvii. 53, but the Jews in a sacreligious manner have defiled it, by the practice of the worst and most inhuman idolatry.

Nor the kings of Judah; The good kings of for-
CHAPTER XX.

1 Now Pashur the son of Immer the priest, who was also chief governor in the house of the Lord, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things:

2 Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the Lord.

3 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The Lord hath not called thy name Pashur, but Magor-missabib.

CHAP. XX.

ARGUMENT.—Upon Pashur's ill-treatment of Jeremy, he falls into a grievous complaint of the hardships that attended the discharge of his prophetic office, which made him weary of his life.

Ver. 1.] The family of Immer was the sixteenth in order of the four-and-twenty courses of the priests (see 1 Chron. xxiv. 14). And this Pashur, by being head of his family, had a principal authority in ordering matters relating to the temple, and keeping good orders there; and therefore is called the house of the Lord (see there, ver. 5). So Hilkiah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, are called "chief rulers of the house of God," 2 Chron. xxxvi. 8, because the first of them was chief priest, and the two other probably heads of their courses. To the same sense we may understand the "priests of the second order," mentioned 2 Kings xxiii. 4. If we suppose Pashur to have been, in a strict sense, chief or supreme "governor in the house of God," he seems to be the same officer that is called "captain of the temple," Acts iv. 1, he that was set over the several watches or guards of the priests and all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink-offerings unto other gods.

4 For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends: and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword.

5 Moreover I will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon.

Levites: for they kept watch and ward in the temple, both day and night (see Ps. cxxiv. 2, and Lightfoot upon Luke xxii. 4).

Ver. 2.] The Septuagint understand the word translated "the stocks," of a dungeon, or house of correction, which was in one of the outer courts of the temple. This, the text says, was placed in the "high gate of Benjamin," which Dr. Lightfoot explains of the upper gate in the tribe of Benjamin, that led to the temple; the mountain upon which the temple stood, being partly in the tribe of Benjamin, and partly in that of Judah (see his Description of the Temple, ch. 25).

Ver. 5.] All its wealth, and all that the inhabitants have gotten by their industry, shall be a prey to their enemies (compare iii. 24, Ezek. xxvii. 29). The word which we render strength, is elsewhere translated treasures (see Prov. xiv. 6, Ezek. xxii. 25).
And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house, shall go into captivity; and thou shalt come to Babylon; and thou shalt be borne thither; and there shalt be thy death, and thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

7 "O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived: thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed: I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me.

8 For since I spoke, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because the word of the Lord was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily.

9 Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

10 ¶ For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and 11 But the Lord is with me as a mighty terrible one: therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

12 But O Lord of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I opened my cause.

13 Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord: for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evildoers.

14 ¶ Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

15 Cursed be the man who brought tidings to my father, saying, A man child is born unto thee; making him very glad.

16 And let that man be as the cities which

Ver. 6. To whom thou hast prophesied lies.] False prophecies of peace and deliverance (see xiv. 14, xvii. 15, xxiv. 31).

Ver. 7. The following verses are Jeremy's doleful reflections upon the ill success of his prophecies, which had little good effect upon others, and brought a great deal of harm to himself. The sense is, Thou hast promised to be my safeguard against mine enemies; but yet I find myself disappointed, and left exposed to their malice (compare xv. 15). Some render the words, "Thou hast persuaded me, and I was persuaded;" that is, I was over-persuaded to undertake the office of a prophet. The following words favour this sense.

Thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailèd.] It was sore against my will, that I undertook the pro-thetical office, which I would gladly have declined (I. 6.); but thy commands and inspirations did, in a manner, constrain me to it. I had no temptation to run upon this errand without being sent, since it procures me nothing but ill usage.

Ver. 8.] Or, "I cried out of violence, and complained aloud of spoil." Since I began to prophesy, I have reason to complain of the hardships I have undergone upon that account (see xi. 19, &c., xv. 15, xviii. 15). This verse may likewise be thus explained: Since I began to prophesy as God commanded me, I have freely expostulated with my countrymen, of the violence and oppression they have been guilty of (see vi. 7): and therefore (so the particle ki often signifies) all the requital I have had for the faithful discharge of my office, has been contempt and ill usage.

Ver. 9.] This made me resolve not to prophesy any more, but I found myself "pressed in spirit" (see Acts xviii. 5), and unable to resist the impulses of God's Spirit, urging me to execute his commands (compare Job xxxix. 19, Ps. xxxix. 3).

Ver. 10. For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side.] Or, Merger-missabib. Many upbraided me with the ill usage I received from Pashur, and with my prophecy against him, by the name of Merer-missabib. If we follow the received translation, as the expression is the same with Ps. xxxii. 18, so the sense seems to be much the same in both places: viz. From the slanderous reports raised upon me, I had reason to apprehend some evil design against my we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him.

Ver. 11. But the Lord is with me as a mighty terrible one: therefore my persecutors shall stumbble, and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

Ver. 12. But O Lord of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I opened my cause.

Ver. 13. Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord: for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evildoers.

Ver. 14. ¶ Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

life, as well from treacherous friends as from open enemies.

"All my familiars watched for my halting." My pretended friends encourage one another in spreading false reports of me; or desire to hear from my mouth more prophecies, in hopes to find some matter of accusation against me, whereby they might take away my life, and so fulfil their revenge on me.

Ver. 11.] After having given free vent to his melanely, he begins to recollect himself, and cheer up his spirits by the comfortable remembrance of God's promises to him, by which he was assured that his enemies should be disappointed in all their ill designs they had contrived against him (see xi. 22, 23, xv. 20, xviii. 15).

Ver. 12. That triest the righteous.] Who makest trial of his faith and patience by afflictions (see Ps. xi. 5). Let me see thy vengeance on them.] See xi. 20.

Ver. 13.] In confidence of his deliverance, the prophet gives thanks beforehand, as we may observe many of the Psalms that beg deliverance end in thanksgiving, as if they were already obtained (see Ps. liv. 16, livii. 1-5, &c.).

Ver. 14. Cursed be the day wherein I was born.] This and the following verses, represent the melocholy thoughts which oppressed the mind of the prophet, while he was struggling with the reproach and malice of his enemies; and they are written in a poetical strain, as Job's lamentation is, ch. iii. like a lessus, or mournful diry; such as the profeccr, or mourning women, used to sing. See ix. 17, wherein he expresses his wishes that he had never been born (ver. 10).

Let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.] Let it not be celebrated with those good wishes and expressions of joy, which are wont to be used on birth-days. The heathens in like manner had their bona verba, good wishes, proper for their birth-days: so Tibullus (lib. ii. eleg. 2), Dicamus bona verba, venit natalis: which they abstained from using, when they were under great calamities, as Ovid speaks, Trist. lib. iii. eleg. 13. In tantis subuent nec bona verba malis.

Ver. 15.] I observed that this lamentation is written in poetical figures, like the ancient nenia, or funeral songs, wherein all the circumstances are brought

CHAPTER XXI.

1 The word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, when king Zedekiah sent unto him Pashur the son of Mecheleth, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying, 2 Enquire, I pray thee, of the Lord for us: for Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us: if so be that the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

3 ¶ Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah:

4 Thus saith the Lord God of Israel; Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city.

5 And I myself will fight against you with an army, and will render you for a spoil and a prey, to the Chaldeans, as I have determined in the mouth of the Lord.

6 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; I will smite the army with the sword, the pestilence, and with none else, but with none else.

7 Of a truth, as yet she hath not been inhabited; she was not dwellers in the land of the Chaldeans; and hearken ye now to my words, O house of Israel.

8 Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will raise up against thee Chaldeans out of the east, and they shall be come, and shall set themselves in all the Analogies, and shall cast thee into a bond of iron and of brass.

9 For ten years have I watched over thee, and have smitten thee, and thou hast not returned; therefore shall I smite thee again in this year, and I will remove thee out of thy land: and I will cast thee out of this city.

10 For ten years have I watched over thee; because thou sayest, It is no profit that the Lord hath brought upon the children of Jacob: therefore will I also deal iniquity upon thee, because thou hast said, It is a profit to me.

11 Behold, I will raise up against thee a nation, from far off, which shall possess thy land in judgment, and shalt destroy thee; and thou shalt disappear from mine eyes, and I will bring thee unto your fathers.

12 Nevertheless I will not utterly destroy thee, neither will I utterly cut thee off, neither will I break thee off wholly, but I will smite thee so that thou shalt not be an approved city; but I will make thee an astonishment, and a hissing amongst all the earth, and an everlasting reproach among all nations.

13 Behold, I am against thee, O inhabitant of the valley of the son of Hinnom, which sayest, The wooden and the iron is good.

14 And the Lord said, As the wood is good which is in the fire, and is not consumed;

15 So will I also deal with Zedekiah king of Judah, and with his princes, who have left me, saith the Lord; and they shall be for wood, and for fire, and for smoke, and for dust.

16 And they shall not build houses, nor dwell therein; neither shall they plant vineyards, nor eat the fruit of them; neither shall there be any man therein, nor inhabitant, in all the cities of Judah and in all the streets thereof.

17 Then will I make thee like unto Nitai, that dwelt before me, and she shall not be inhabited; and again I will make thee desolate a perpetual desolation.

18 And I will make thee a heap, as a city no more inhabited, a housetop, and an oracle; and all the daughters of Judah shall howl over thee; and I will make thee desolate.

19 As thou hast seen all this, O Lord our God, so shall we lie down in ashes; and we will speak no more in thy sight: for thou art a God: do good and redound to us, and we will dwell in the city which thou hast made us to dwell in.
JEREMIAH.

outstretched hand and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath.
6 And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence.
7 And afterward, saith the LORD, I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.
8 ¶ And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.
9 He that abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans, who besiege you, he shall live, and his life shall be unto him for a prey.
10 For I have set my face against this city for evil, and not for good, saith the LORD: it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.
11 ¶ And touching the house of the king of Judah, say, Hear ye the word of the LORD;
12 O house of David, thus saith the LORD; Execute judgment in the morning, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.
13 Behold, I am against thee, O inhabitants of the valley, and rock of the plain, saith the LORD; which say, Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations?
14 But I will punish you according to the fruit of your doings, saith the LORD: and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof, and it shall devour all things round about it.

Sanhedrin, and might be punished by them, is said without any precedant in holy scripture, and is confuted by Casaub. Exercit. xiii. in Baronium, Numb. 5, and Salmassini, in his Defensio Regia, cap. 2 (see likewise Selden, De Synedr. lib. iii. cap. 9). The courts of judicature usually sat in the morning. See Ps. cl. 8, where the Hebrew reads, "in the morning," or, "every morning, I will destroy all the wicked of the land" (compare Job xxxviii. 13, 14). Last my fary go out like fire, &c.] These words are an argument, that this prophecy was antecedent to that at the beginning of the chapter, and before that peremptory decree was published against the king's house, mentioned ver. 7 of this chapter (see the note on iv. 28).

Ver. 13. O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain.] A description of Jerusalem: the former expression denoting the lower part of the city, which was surrounded with hills (see Ps. cxxv. 2); the latter describing mount Zion (compare xviii. 5).

Who shall come down against us?] They confided in the strength of their situation, as the Jebusites, the ancient inhabitants of the place, had formerly done (see 2 Sam. v. 6, 7).

Ver. 14. In the forest] The word forest is often metaphorically taken for a city, in the prophethical writings; because its stately buildings, or its principal inhabitants, resemble tall cedars standing in their several ranks (see xxii. 7, Isa. xxvii. 24, Ezek. xx. 46, Zech. xi. 1).

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Thus saith the LORD, Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word, 2 And say, Hear the word of the LORD, O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates:

CHAP. XXII.

ARGUMENT.—This discourse, or section, which begins from the eleventh verse of the twenty-first chapter, is a collection of prophecies, wherein Jeremiah foretold the fate of several kings of Judah. The words to the twentieth verse are directed to the king Jehoiakim, and from thence to the end of the chapter to Jeconiah.
CHAPTER XXII.

3 Thus saith the Lord; Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor to the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place.

4 For if ye do this thing indeed, then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people.

5 But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the Lord, that this house shall become a desolation.

6 For thus saith the Lord unto the king's house of Judah; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

7 And I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons: and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire.

8 And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city?

9 Thus they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

10 ¶ Weep ye not for the dead, neither mourn him; but weep sore for him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country.

11 For thus saith the Lord touching Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father, which went forth out of this place; He shall not return thither any more:

12 But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and shall see this land no more.

13 ¶ Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work;

14 That saith, I will build me a wide house and large chambers, and cutteth him out winters and chronologers who this Shallum was, there being no person of that name mentioned in the succession of the Jewish kings in sacred history; and the Shallum mentioned as Josiah's son, 1 Chron. iii. 15, is expressly called his fourth son, who could not probably succeed his father immediately, as it is said expressly of Shallum here in the text. Without entering far into this dispute, I shall lay this down as most probable, that the Shallum mentioned in the text, is the same with Jehoahaz; for the characters here set down can agree to none else. It was he that reigned instead of his father Josiah: he likewise went out of Jerusalem, or was carried away captive, and never returned any more (see ver. 11). The same may be proved from the order of the prophecies set down in this chapter: the eleventh and twelfth verses are concerning Jehoahaz: from the thirteenth to the twentieth relate to Jehoiakim, and the remaining part of the chapter regards the reign of Jeconiah. Why he is called Shallum, is not easy at this distance to conjecture; some suppose that name given him by way of reproach, because of the shortness of his reign, in which he resembled that king Shallum mentioned 2 Kings xv. 13. So Jeconiah is called Coniah, by way of contempt, ver. 24. It is farther certain, that this Shallum cannot be the same with him mentioned 1 Chron. iii. 15 (as Archbishop Usher supposed; see his Annal. V. T. ad An. M. 3571), because that person is spoken of as younger than Zedekiah, whereas this Shallum being the same with Jehoahaz, was without question older (compare 2 Kings xxii. 13, with xxiv. 15).

15 ¶ The prophet proceeds to denounced God's judgments against Jehoiakim (see ver. 18): who it seems built himself a stately palace in those calamitous times, and took no care to defray the wages of his workmen; but maintained his own luxury by the oppression of those who were to live by their labour: a crying sin, and too common among the great men of the world, severely prohibited both in the Old and New Testament (see Deut. xxiv. 14, 15, James v. 4).

16 ¶ Cutteth him out windows;] The word halloynai signifies literally my windows; and so our margin reads, but the aorix is elsewhere redundant (see Zech. xiv. 5). Mr. Gregory, in his Observations upon the Scripture (chap. 18) allows the marginal reading

Ver. 3.] Compare ver. 17, where we find Jehoiakim taxed with those sins.

Ver. 4.] See the note on xvii. 23. Instead of the "gates of this house," the text reads there, "the gates of this city:" and the context here shows, that the prophecy is directed not only to the king's court in particular, but likewise to the whole city of Jerusalem and part of which was called the city of David: and the whole looked upon as a royal city, and the place of their king's residence (compare ver. 2, 5).

Ver. 5.] God's confirming his threatenings by an oath, is a sign that the sentence was inimicable, and that nothing could reverse it but the people's sincere repentance; which condition is expressed in the foregoing part of the verse (see Heb. vi. 17).

Ver. 6.] Though thou wert never so precious in my sight, were valuable for riches and plenty as the fat pastures of Gilead, and thy buildings as beautiful for their staiteliness as the tall cedars of Lebanon (see the notes on xxii. 14): yet, unless thy princes and people reform, thou shalt become nothing but ruin and desolation.

Ver. 7. I will prepare destroyers against thee.] The Hebrew reads, "I will sanctify destroyers:" so xii. 3, where our translation reads, "Prepare them for the day of slaughter:" it is in the Hebrew, "Sanctify them:" (see the note on Isa. xiii. 3).

They shall cut down thy choice cedars.] The prophet compared the king's palace, or the city of Jerusalem, to Lebanon, ver. 6, and here, pursuing the metaphor, he threatens to destroy both houses and inhabitants by the Chaldean army (see the note on xxi. 14).

Ver. 8.] They that had heard that this city had been called the city of God, and the place of his especial residence, would be astonished to find it a scene of his judgments and vengeance. Thus was fulfilled that threatening of Moses (Deut. xxviii. 37), that God would make the Jews an astonishment to other nations (see likewise 1 Kings ix. 8).

Ver. 10.] Weep not for Josiah, for he is buried in peace, and "taken away from the enemies to come" (see 2 Kings xxii. 20); but rather lament Jehoahaz his successor, whom Pharaoh-nechoh hath carried captive into Egypt, from thence never to return (see 2 Kings xxiii. 34).

Ver. 11.] It is a great dispute among commentadows; and it is ceiled with cedar, and painted with vermiculation.

15 Shall thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar? did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him?

16 He judged the cause of the poor and needy: then it was well with him: was not this to know me? saith the Lord.

17 But thine eyes and thine heart are not but for thy covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence, to do it.

18 Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah; They shall not lament for him, saying, Alas my brother!

and understands the word of a private oratory, or chapel, which Jehoiakim ordered to be made in his palace; and that God reproves him for a vain ostentation of piety, when at the same time he had no regard to common justice, in making an offering to God out of other men's labours.

Ver. 15. Shall thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar? Will a house, finely adorned and furnished, be a fortress and defence to thee against thy enemies, that come to deprive thee of thy kingdom? This is the sense of the words, if we follow the English translation; but the verb richarch, properly signifies to vie, or contend with; and so it is translated, Jer. xii. 5, and then the sense will be, is this a proper method to secure thy kingdom, only to vie with other princes, who shall have the most stately palace?

Did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then [or therefore, see Noldius's Concordance, p. 7] it was well with him? Thy father Josiah lived in sufficient plenty, and in a state suitable to his character, and yet was a strict observer of justice both in his public and private capacity, and did not betake himself to such sordid methods of injustice, and oppression for the support of his grandeur: the reason was, because the blessing of God was upon him, as a reward of his justice and integrity.

Ver. 16. Is not this to know me? Such a strict regard to justice was the genuine effect of his piety and true knowledge of God.

Ver. 17. For this cause Jehoiakim is compared to a lion by the prophet Ezekiel, xix. 6.

Ver. 18. Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! &c. The prophet repeals part of the lessons, or funeral diry, which the public mourners used to sing at funerals (see the note on ix. 17, xx. 14, and compare 1 Kings xiii. 30); signifying that Jehoiakim should not be buried with those solemn laments, with which the memory of his predecessors, particularly that of his father, had been honoured (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 25).

Ah Lord! or, Ah his glory! That is, how is his glory departed and vanished! Another burden, or chorus, of the funeral song.

Ver. 19. Compare xxvi. 39. Jehoiakim was advanced to the kingdom by Pharaoh-nechos king of Egypt (2 Kings xxxvii. 34). He followed the fortune of the king that set him up, and upon the conquest of Egypt by the Chaldeans (see Jer. xvi. 2), after three years' reign, he was taken prisoner by Nebuchadnezzar, and put into iron (see Dan. i. 2, 2 Kings xxiv. 36, 1 Chron. xxxvii. 1), but after that he released him, and made him a tributary king. After three years' obedience, Jehoiakim rebelled in confidence of assistance from Egypt: in the tenth year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar's army overran Judea (see 2 Kings xxiv. 2); and in the following year they besieged Jerusalem, and probably took Jehoiakim prisoner in some sally that he made upon them; whereupon they killed him, and then cast out his dead body into the highway, like the carcasses of an ass, denying him the common rites of burial (see Joseph. Antiq. lib. x. cap. 7, 8). Accordingly, he is said to have "slept with his fathers" (2 Kings xxiv. 6), but not to have been buried with his fathers.

Ver. 20. Go up to Lebanon, and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages: for all thy lovers are destroyed.

21 I spoke unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear. This hath been thy name from thy youth, that thou obeyedst not my voice.

22 The wind shall eat up all thy pastors, and thy lovers shall go into captivity; surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness.
CHAPTER XXIII.

23 O inhabitant of Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the cedars, how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail!

24 As I live, saith the Lord, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence;

25 And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 And I will cast thee out, and thy mother solvents, much less to give any assistance to thee (see xxv. 9).

Ver. 23. That makest thy nest in the cedars.] A metaphorical description of Jerusalem, whose stately buildings are elsewhere compared to the tall cedars of a forest (see the note on xxi. 14).

27 How gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, &c.] Or rather, "How humble," or "suppliant, wilt thou be " in those pangs of affliction that shall suddenly come upon thee (see vi. 21, xxxi. 6); whereas before thou wast too proud to hearken to any advice that was offered (see ver. 21).

The verb hannah both commonly signify to implore mercy or favour, and the noun tahannahim is used in the same sense, iii. 21, xxxi. 9. Some render the words, "What grace or favour wilt thou find, when pangs," &c.

Ver. 24.] Though he were never so near and dear to me, such a one as was always under my eye and care (compare Cant. viii. 6, Hag. ii. 23), yet his wickedness should make him forfeit all my favour towards him (see 2 Kings xxiv. 9). Jehoiachin, or Jechoniah, as his name is writ, 1 Chron. iii. 16, is called Coniah here and ver. 25, by way of contempt.

Ver. 26.] See 2 Kings xxiv. 15. This implies that he had no children when he was carried away captive (see ver. 25).

Ver. 27. But to the land, &c.] See xlv. 14.

Ver. 28. Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? An interrogation by way of admiration; q. d. Would any one have thought that this man, that was invested with royal dignity, should come to be no better than a broken image of royalty, digested of all power and authority, and an object of scorn and reproach? Nothing can be more contemptible than a broken idol, which can be put to no farther use, and is no longer an object of worship, but of derision.

Wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, &c.] The children which he probably had after he was carried to Babylon, where he lived many years a that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die.

27 But to the hand whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28 Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherewith are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not?

29 O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord.

30 Thus saith the Lord, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah, captive (see 2 Kings xxv. 27), though none of them lived to succeed in the royal authority (see the note on ver. 30).

Ver. 29.] The prophets often bespeak men's attention, by appealing to heaven and earth; that is, to all creatures, and particularly to the inhabitants of this world, to hearken to God's words (see Deut. xxxiii. 1, Isa. i. 2, xxxiv. 1, Mic. i. 2, vi. 1, 2). The word ezetz may be rendered land, as it often is, and applied to Judea.

Ver. 30. Write ye this man childless.] Or, "Let this man be written childless:" the personal being used for the impersonal (see xx. 17). When God commands a thing to be written, it signifies that such a truth is of great importance, and deserves to be recorded (see the note on xxx. 2, and on Isa. xxx. 9). Quum scribantur, certa sunt; "The committing things to writing denotes their certainty," as Castalius observes upon the place. So God would have it taken notice of as a remarkable judgment upon Jeconiah, that in him the direct line of the Jewish kings, derived from Solomon downward, should fail; and the next heir to the crown should be of a collateral branch; viz. Salathiel, who was the son of Ner, and derived his pedigree from Nathan the son of David (Luke iii. 27, 31). Salathiel is indeed called the son of Jeconiah, 1 Chron. iii. 17, and Matt. i. 12, but in both these places he is called so, not with respect to his natural extraction, but to his political succession, as being next heir to the crown: just as, at the sixteenth verse of the same chapter of the Chronicles, Zedekiah is called the "son of Jeconiah," though he was not so, in reality his uncle, because he succeeded him in the kingdom. And it is plain that St. Matthew did not intend to set down an exact genealogy from father to son, but only to prove, in general, that Christ was the son, both of David and Abraham, as he tells us, ver. 1. In order to which end, he divides the whole series of time, from Abraham to David, into three parts, and then subdivides each portion of time into fourteen generations; to comply with which method, he omits three kings, Abaziah, Joash, and Amaziah (ver. 8).

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the Lord.

CHAP. XXIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet having foretold in the former chapter the utter destruction of the Jewish kingdom and government; in this he foretells the restoration of both under the Messias, and then proceeds to reprove at large the evil arts of the false prophets, and other pretenders to inspiration.

Ver. 1.] Pastors comprehended both civil and ecclesiastical governors (see the note on ii. 8). This acceptance of the word agrees with the prophet's Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them: behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the Lord.

3 And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase.

4 And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them: and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord.

5 But, therefore, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

6 In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

7 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

8 But, The Lord lived, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.

9 Mine heart within me is broken because of the prophets; all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, because of the Lord, and because of the words of his holiness.

10 For the land is full of adulterers; for there is no man among the priests, that knoweth me, saith the Lord.

The words Zecharias seems to allude in his hymn (Luke i. 74, 75), "That we be safely, or securely, delivered from the hands of our enemies (for so the sense of the original runes), might serve him in holiness and righteousness."

He shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. He shall really be so by the title imports (see the note on Isa. vii. 14), he shall be Jehovah, or the true God, and our righteousness, or the means of our justification (compare Isa. xxiv. 23, 25; 1 Cor. i. 60). The title of Jehovah is elsewhere given to the Messias by the prophets (see Isa. xi. 10, xlviii. 17, Hos. i. 7, Zech. ii. 10, 11, Mal. iii. 1).

Ver. 7, 8.) This wonderful work of God's in restoring the Jewish nation after their dispersions all the world over (together with the bringing in the fulness of the gentiles, which will be likewise brought to pass by this means, see the note on Isa. lviii. 13), will so far exceed the miracles which he wrought in their deliverance out of Egypt, that this latter will not deserve to be compared or mentioned with the former. St. Paul calls this restoration of the Jews, "life from the dead" (Rom. xi. 15), that is, as surprising a wonder, as if a dead body were restored to life again.

Ver. 9.) The prophet describes the terror and concern which was upon him, when he considered the horridness of the faith of the prophets, in counterfeiting a divine mission, and the dreadful consequences of such a practice, which increases the sins of the people, and aggravates their punishments. The prophets were sometimes struck with a terrible apprehension of those judgments which they denounced against others (see the note on xv. 18, Isa. xv. 5, Hab. ii. 16). The Vulgar Latin interprets the first word of this verse, "leuzbym," "ad prophetas," to the prophets; as if it were the title of the following prophecy.

Ver. 10. Because of swearing the land mourneth;) By swearing is chiefly here meant perjury (compare this verse with Hos. iv. 2). The Hebrew word signifies indifferently swearing or cursing; the Jewish forms of adjuration used in their courts of justice for the discovery of the truth, had usually an impetration joined to them. So the words import, that men vented to forswear themselves, and incur the imprecation implied in an oath, rather than discover the truth in the case of theft, and such-like crimes, wherein they were called upon to be witnesses (compare Prov. xxix. 24). This the prophet saith is one of those crying sins for which God hath visited the nation with severe judgments. And the sins here men-
CHAPTER XXIII.

The pleasant places] See note on xii. 4.

And their course is evil.] Or, "And their violence is evil," as the margin reads, and so the word is translated xxii. 17. Men abuse their power, to the wrongdoing and oppressing their brethren, and add violence to the power they are possessed of, for the compassing their wicked designs. If this be understood of the prophets and priests, to whom this discourse is chiefly directed (see ver. 9, 11), it implies, that they make use of ill arts to establish the authority they have gained over the people, which they do not employ for the bettering, but rather for the corrupting their manners (compare v. 13).

Ver. 11.] See the note on vii. 30.

Ver. 12.] Their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness.] They shall fall and miscarry in all their designs, like men that stumble and fall in the dark and slippery ways (see Ps. xxxv. 6).

I will bring evil upon them.] See xii. 23.

Ver. 13, 14.] He compares the sins of the prophets of Samaria and Jerusalem together, and pronounces those of the latter to be more enormous; because they pronounced their false prophecies in the name of the true God, and entitled him to all their impositions; the wickedness of their lives also reflected a dishonour upon his name and religion (compare iii. 11).

And walk in lies.] Vitier their own imaginations, and call them divine visions (see ver. 16).

They strengthen also the hands of evil-doers.] They confirm men in their evil doings, both by their own ill example, and by promising them peace and security (see ver. 17, Ezek. xiii. 22).

They are all of them unto me as Sodom.] See Deut. xxxii. 32, Is. i. 10, Ezek. xvi. 46, 47.

Ver. 15.] I will feed them with wormwood.] See the note on viii. 14, ix. 15.

Ver. 16.] Thus saith the Lord of hosts. Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: they make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord.

They said unto them that despise me. The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagining of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you.

Ver. 18. They make you vain.] Or rather, "They deceive you," so Ps. lxxii. 10. Our translation renders the word, "Become not vain in robbery or oppression," but the sense is, "Deceive not yourselves in robbery, or oppression, as if that would be any real advantage to you.

They speak a vision.] See ver. 21.

Ver. 17.] See the note on vi. 14.

Ver. 18.] Who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord.] The word sed signifies both a secret, and the assembly to which the secret is committed, or where it is debated: the expression here alludes to the privy-counsellors of princes, as if the prophet had said, Who among these false prophets can pretend to have the secret counsels of the Almighty communicated to him? So when the apostle, alluding to Is. xli. 13, saith "Who hath known the mind of the Lord?" (1 Cor. ii. 10) the context shows, that he designeth by that question to exclude only the carnal or natural man from being enlightened from above, or being a competent judge of divine truths.

Ver. 19, 20.] If these prophets had really known God's purposes and intentions, they would not have said, "Peace, peace" to the wicked (ver. 17), but have prophesied a grievous destruction just coming upon them; for that is what will certainly come to pass, and the event will convince you of the truth of what I say. The sudden strokes of God's vengeance are often compared to a whirlwind (see xxv. 32, Ps. livii. 9, Is. xxii. 1, Amos i. 4, Zech. vii. 14, ix. 14).

Ver. 20.] The anger of the Lord shall not return.] "It shall not return to me void," as we read, Is. iv. 15. The expression is taken from a messenger that comes back without doing his business.

In the latter days ye shall consider [for understand] it perfectly.] When this judgment hath overtaken you, and ye have felt the evils threatened come upon you in your several capricities, then ye shall more fully understand the meaning of this prophecy. These two verses are repeated, xxx. 20, 24 (see the note upon that place).

Ver. 21.] See xiv. 1, xxvii. 15, xxix. 9.

Ver. 22.] Then they should have turned them from their evil way.] This was the design of all God's messages by had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and I would not have dealt with the evil of their doings.

30 Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the Lord, and do tell them and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness. Therefore I will send them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord.

35 § And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the Lord? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even forsake, saith the Lord.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the Lord, I will even punish that man and his house.

35 Thus shall ye say, every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the Lord answered? and, What hath the Lord spoken?

30 Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, and say, He saith.

Ver. 31. That use their tongues.] Like those that said, "Our lips are our own," Ps. xii. 4, and we may use them as we please. Some suppose the Hebrew lakechim to signify the same as cholekim, the letters being only transposed; and then the phrase repeats speaking "smooth things" (see Isa. xxx. 10).

Ver. 32. By their lightness.] By their folly, their rashness, and inconsistency, with themselves (compare Zeph. iii. 4, Judg. ix. 4). Schultens explains the word pahazuth to signify vain boasting, that is, a pretence to divine inspiration, which they had not (see his Anim. in Job, p. 145).

Ver. 33. What is the burden of the Lord? The word massa, or burden, signifies a burdensome prophecy, big with ruin and destruction) see Isa. xiii. i., xvi. 3, and elsewhere). The false prophets said, "Peace, peace" (see ver. 17), deriding the true ones whose predictions were full of threatenings, as if God's messages were a burden they were weary of bearing; and made a jest of these words, "the burden of the Lord," with which they professed their prophecies. Upon this account God forbade the use of that expression; see the following verses.

Ver. 34. Every man's word shall be his burden.] You shall be severely accountable for your loose and profane speeches, wherewith you deride and pervert the words and messages of God himself.

Ver. 35. I will utterly forget you.] Tollam vos portantes, as St. Jerome renders it; and the Septuagint to the same purpose, "I will carry you away," or "remove you" [as a burden]. Taking the verb nasah in the sense of the verb nasa, as words of a like sound.
CHAPTER XXIV.

39 Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence:

are often of a promiscuous signification. This makes the sense more acute, and pertinent to the foregoing verses.

I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, &c.] The Hebrew reads thus, "I will cast you and the city which I gave you and your fathers out of my presence." For the verb nātash writ with a tet, is equivalent to the verb nātash with a taw; according to the observation made just now, concerning words of a like sound.

40 And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 The Lord shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the Lord, after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jecochiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

2 One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe: and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad.

3 Then said the Lord unto me, What seest thou, Jeremia? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

4 ¶ Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

5 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good.

CHAP. XXIV.

ARGUMENT.—Under the emblem of two baskets of figs, the prophet shows the different fates of those Jews who were carried captive with Jecochiah, and those that remained still in their own country with Zedekiah.

Ver. 1.] The vision represented two such baskets of figs, as used to be offered up for first-fruits at the temple (see Dent. xxvii. 3). See an account of Jecochiah's captivity, 2 Kings xxiv. 12-14. This captivity was in the eighth year of Nebuchadrezzar's reign (ibid. ver. 12).

Ver. 2.] Such as were offered for the first-fruits; these were most valued for their goodness and rarity (see Hos. ix. 10).

Ver. 5.] The Jews who were left in their own country thought themselves better beloved of God, than their brethren who were carried away captive: to check this vain confidence, God promises to show the latter particular signs of his favour in a strange land, and to show distinguishing marks of his displeasure upon the former.

Ver. 6. To this land.] See xix. 2, 10. I will build them, and not pull them down.] This may be understood both of the prosperous estate God would give them in the land of their captivity, where they should both build houses and propagate their families (see xxix. 5, 6), and likewise contains a promise of restoring them and their posterity to their own country (ibid. ver. 10).

Vol. III.—65

6 For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

7 And I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the Lord: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart.

8 ¶ And as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the Lord, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and them that dwell in the land of Egypt:—

9 And I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whithersoever I shall drive them.

10 And I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers.

Ver. 7.] Compare xxix. 12, 13. To these first captives chiefly those blessings belong, which are promised to the Jews upon their return from captivity; such as were the knowledge and fear of God, and grace to live in obedience to his commandments (compare xxx. 22, xxxi. 33, xxxii. 38, 39). These were in some degree accomplished in the times after the captivity, when the Jews adhered constantly to their religion, and were very careful of falling into idolatry: but I conceive the eminent completion of this prophecy will be at the time of the general restoration of that nation, so often mentioned in the prophets (see xxx. 3).

Ver. 8.] See chap. xliii., xlv.

Ver. 9.] All those judgments denounced against the obstinate and incorrigible shall be fulfilled in them (see Dent. xxviii. 25, 37, 1 Kings ix. 7).

And a curse.] Men shall use this phrase as a form of execration, "God made thee like Zedekiah" (compare xxix. 22). On the contrary, to make a man a blessing implies, that his name should be mentioned as a signal instance of God's favour (see Gen. xlviii. 20, Zech. vili. 18).

Ver. 10. Till they be consumed from off the land.] My judgments shall follow them so close, both here and when they are carried into captivity, that neither they nor any of their posterity shall ever enjoy any share of their own country (compare Ezek. v. 12).
CHAPTER XXV.

1 The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that was the first year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon;

2 The which Jeremiah the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying,

3 From the thirteenth year of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, even unto this day, that is the three and twentieth year, the word of the Lord hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye have not hearkened.

4 And the Lord hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear.

5 They said, Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the Lord hath given unto you and to your fathers for ever and ever:

6 And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt.

7 Yet ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the Lord; that ye might provoke me to anger with the works of your hands to your own hurt.

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts; Because ye have not hearkened to my words, 9 Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations.

CHAP. XXV.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a summary of Jeremiah’s commission to prophesy the destruction of Judea, and all the neighbouring countries, which should be reduced under the power of the kings of Babylon for seventy years: and then an end should be put to that monarchy by Cyrus, who set up the Persian monarchy. This age is called by Sir John Marsham the age of the destruction of cities, by reason of the devastations made by the Babylonian conquests (see his Chron. Canon. Scebalum. 18).

Ver. 1.] The first year of Nebuchadrezzar’s reign, according to the scripture account, is coincident with the end of the third, and the beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim (compare Dan. i. 1). This reckoning anticipates the computation of Ptolemy’s canon by two years, which two years Nebuchadrezzar reigned with his father. According to this account, the scripture reckons his reign to continue five-and-forty years (see the notes on li. 31); which, according to the common computation, lasted but forty-three. But Daniel, ii. 1, writing in Chaldæa, follows the computation in use among the Chaldæans.

Ver. 3.] For Jeremiah prophesied nineteen years under Josiah, who reigned thirty-one years, and this was the beginning of Jehoiakim’s fourth year.

Ver. 4.] The Lord hath sent unto you—the prophets.] There were several prophets contemporary with Jeremiah, two of which are mentioned in scripture; the prophet Zephaniah, and Urjih the son of Shenniah, concerning whom see xxvi. 20. From the time of Samuel, when God’s answers by Urim began to cease, there were appointed schools or seminaries for training men up, and fitting them for the prophethécal office (see 1 Sam. x. 3, xix. 20, compared with Acts iii. 24). And God usually made choice of such persons of this education to exercise this function, as appears by the words of Amos (vii. 14). “I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet’s son.” And consequently not qualified for that office by my education: but I was a herdman, and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel. From the time of the schools of the prophets being thus settled, there was a succession of prophets continued till the captivity; and then the office began by degrees to fall, which is the reason of that complaint, “that the prophets see no visions;” which we find mentioned Lam. ii. 9, Ezek. vii. 26, Ps. lxiv. 9.

Ver. 6. Go not after other gods.] Though the Jews were guilty of many other sins, yet their crying sin was idolatry, as being a plain renouncing God’s authority, who had by so many miracles of mercy set them apart to himself and his own service.

Ver. 9. The Jews’ education, &c.] For Jeremiah prophesied nineteen years under Josiah, who reigned thirty-one years, and this was the beginning of Jehoiakim’s fourth year.

Ver. 4. The Lord hath sent unto you—the prophets.] There were several prophets contemporary with Jeremiah, two of which are mentioned in scripture; the prophet Zephaniah, and Urjih the son of Shenniah, concerning whom see xxvi. 20. From the time of Samuel, when God’s answers by Urim began to cease, there were appointed schools or seminaries for training men up, and fitting them for the prophethécal office (see 1 Sam. x. 3, xix. 20, compared with Acts iii. 24). And God usually made choice of such persons of this education to exercise this function, as appears by the words of Amos (vii. 14). “I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet’s son.” And consequently not qualified for that office by my education: but I was a herdman, and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel. From the time of the schools of the prophets being thus settled, there was a succession of prophets continued till the captivity; and then the office began by degrees to fall, which is the reason of that complaint, “that the prophets see no visions;” which we find mentioned Lam. ii. 9, Ezek. vii. 26, Ps. lxiv. 9.

Ver. 6. Go not after other gods.] Though the Jews were guilty of many other sins, yet their crying sin was idolatry, as being a plain renouncing God’s authority, who had by so many miracles of mercy set them apart to himself and his own service.

Ver. 9. The Jews’ education, &c.] For Jeremiah prophesied nineteen years under Josiah, who reigned thirty-one years, and this was the beginning of Jehoiakim’s fourth year.

Ver. 4. The Lord hath sent unto you—the prophets.] There were several prophets contemporary with Jeremiah, two of which are mentioned in scripture; the prophet Zephaniah, and Urjih the son of Shenniah, concerning whom see xxvi. 20. From the time of Samuel, when God’s answers by Urim began to cease, there were appointed schools or seminaries for training men up, andfitting them for the prophethécal office (see 1 Sam. x. 3, xix. 20, compared with Acts iii. 24). And God usually made choice of such persons of this education to exercise this function, as appears by the words of Amos (vii. 14). “I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet’s son.” And consequently not qualified for that office by my education: but I was a herdman, and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel. From the time of the schools of the prophets being thus settled, there was a succession of prophets continued till the captivity; and then the office began by degrees to fall, which is the reason of that complaint, “that the prophets see no visions;” which we find mentioned Lam. ii. 9, Ezek. vii. 26, Ps. lxiv. 9.
10 Moreover I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle.

11 And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations.

13 And I will bring upon that land all the words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations.

14 For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also: and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

15 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me: Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I, send thee, to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them.

17 Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me:

18 To wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse; as it is this day;

19 Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people;

20 And all the mingled people, and all the lands early in the fiftieth and fifty-first chapters. The book here mentioned, is that collection of prophecies against the countries round about Judaea, which in the Greek copies follows immediately after this verse; but in the Hebrew copies are placed by themselves at the latter end of the book, from the forty-sixth chapter to the end of the fifty-first. This verse seems to justify the order in which the Septuagint have placed these prophecies.

Ver. 14.] He means those kings and nations who were Cyrus's confederates [see i. 9, 41, li. 27].

Ver. 15.] God's judgments are metaphorically represented by a cup of intoxicating liquors; because they fill men with astonishment, and bereave them of their common judgment and discretion. See the note on Isa. li. 17, and compare Ps. lxxv. 8, Jer. xviii. 26, xlix. 12, li. 31, Hab. ii. 16, Rev. xiv. 10, xvi. 19. In both which places, St. John plainly alludes to this place, and expresses the sense of the original more fully and exactly than the Septuagint do (see the note upon ver. 10).

Ver. 16.] That astonishment, and those unsettled counsels and resolutions, which are here the effects of God's judgments, are elsewhere compared to drunkenness (see li. 57, Lam. iv. 21, Isa. xix. 14, Nahum iii. 11, Hab. ii. 16).

Ver. 17.] The words, in pursuance of the same metaphor, import the prophet's obeying God's command, and denouncing his judgments upon all the several nations hereafter mentioned [compare ver. 28]. The prophets are said to do that which they declare is God's purpose to do (see the note on i. 10). If we explain the words more straitly to the letter, we may suppose the cup of God's wrath represented to the prophet in a vision (as mystical Babylon was represented to St. John, with a golden cup in her hand, Rev. xvii. 4), which he was commanded to hand round to the nations here specified.

Ver. 18.] To wit, Jerusalem, &c.] The Jews are mentioned first, because Jeremiah, as well as the rest of the prophets, was in the first place sent to them (see ver. 3, 4); and they were to have the greatest share in the judgments denounced [see Dan. ix. 12, Amos iii. 2].

Ver. 19.] As it is this day.] This relates to the desolation of Judea and Jerusalem, when all that Jeremy had foretold against them was fulfilled: and therefore must have been added, either by Baruch's amanuensis, or else by Ezra; or whoever it was that collected Jeremy's prophecies into one volume, who, it is likely, added the fifty-second chapter.

Ver. 10. Voice of mirth, &c.] See vii. 34, xvi. 9. The sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle. There shall be no marks of trade for the carrying on the common necessities of life; such as is the grinding of bread-corn there will be no use of candle where the inhabitants are dispersed and destroyed; nor will there be occasion for such illuminations as are usual upon festival solemnities, in the time of general desolation (ver. 11). Compare Rev. xviii. 22, 23, where we may observe, that St. John explicitly follows the Hebrew text, whereas the LXX. in this place, instead of "the sound of the millstones," read ἡ ἀριθμός τῆς ἀγάλματος, "the smell of ointment."] From which, and several other places of the New Testament, it appears that the apostles and evangelists did not implicitly follow the Greek translation, but only when they thought it agreeable to the original text [see St. Jerome's preface to the 10th book of his Commentaries upon Isaiah, and his commentary upon Jer. xxxiv. 31, and Zech. xii. 10].

Ver. 11. The king of Babylon.] That is Nebuchadnezzar and his successors. The word king is elsewhere used collectively, for a succession of kings in the same family or kingdom (see the note on Isa. xxiii. 13).

Seventy years.] This computation of seventy years' captivity, is to be reckoned from the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, which is coincident with the third ending, and the fourth beginning of Jehoiakim (see ver. 1); when the king of Babylon made his first attempt upon Judea [see Dan. i. 3]. From which time to the first year of Cyrus's reign over the Assyrian monarchy is just seventy years. Whereas the prophet Zechariah, who reckons the seventy years' captivity completed in the second year of Darius (see Zech. i. 12), commences his computation from the besieging him of the city, and when he prolongs his computation to the fourth year of Darius (vii. 5), he dates it from the destruction of the city and temple.

Ver. 12. I will punish the king of Babylon.] God often punishes the persons whom he makes instruments of his vengeance upon others, for those very things which they did by his appointment; because their intent was purely to carry on their own ambitious and cruel purposes, and not at all to fulfill God's will, or advance his glory. So that the evil they did was altogether their own, and the good that was produced out of it was to be ascribed to God. See a remarkable passage to this purpose, relating to Sennacherib, Isa. x. 5, 16.

Perpetual desolations.] See the note on i. 40.

Ver. 13. All that is written in this book.] Particukings of the land of Uz, and all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod, 21 Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon,
22 And all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea,
23 Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners, 24 And all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert.

25 And all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, 26 And all the kings of the north, and far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth: and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them.
27 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; A mixture of people in that part of Arabia, properly called the Desert, consisting of the Nabateans, Amalekites, Midianites, and other nations, called in scripture by the general name of the "children of the east" (see Judges vi. 3, viii. 12, vii. 10). So Dio- dor, Sic. lib. de Arabia Nativit., καὶ εἰς τὸν μήτρα Σιο- νς ἡ ἐπετύχως οἰκισμός καὶ παραπλεύς ἦς ἤπιεννυνίαν, "That part of Arabia is divided among several nations." The learned Dr. Pocock is of opinion, that the word Arabia is derived from the Hebrew Arav, signifying mixture: because the country was inhabited by a medley of several nations (see his notes upon Specim. Histor. Arab. p. 29).
28 Ver. 25. These people of Arabia, descended from Zimram, Abraham's son by Keturah (Gen. xxv. 2).
29 Elm, and—Medes.] See the note on xliii. 24. The Medes and Persians were commonly confederates, and partakers of the same good or ill fortune.
30 Ver. 26. The kings of the north.] The kings of Syria, and the neighbouring parts (see xliii. 27). "All the kingdoms of the world." This may only denote the kingdoms within the extent of the Babylonish empire; which called itself empress of the world. So Ossip. in the New Testament, is put for the Roman empires. See Luke ii. 1.
31 The king of Sheshach shall drink after them.] By Sheshach is meant Babylon, as appears by comparing li. 41. Some think Sacc was the name of an idol worshipped there, from whence the Hebrew name Asshur was changed by the Chaldeans into Mecash. This idol gave the name of Saccar to a public festival celebrated at Babylon, and mentioned by Athens., lib. xiv. cap. 10. St. Jerome mentions upon the place a sort of cypher commonly used, which consisted in putting the last letter of the alphabet first, and so writing on; by which inverted order of the Hebrew letters Sheshckk is equivalent to Babel. The prophets sometimes express the places they prophesy against by dark circumlocutions: so Babylon is called "the desert of the sea," Isa. xxv. 1; Jerusalem, "the valley of vision," Isa. xxv. 1; the Roman empire is expressed by "that which withholdeth," 2 Thess. ii. 6. And some commentators suppose the names mentioned Meash h 10, to be a number of places in Judea, disguised and altered from their true sound. Mr. Bannage, in his History of the Jews, b. iii. ch. 25, thinks that Sheshchak, the victorious king of Egypt (the same who is called Sesostris by Herodotus), was afterward worshipped as a God over all the eastern countries which he subdued; and that Babylon is here represented by the name of this idol that was worshipped there. But it is not at all probable, that the Chaldeans should call their city or country by the name of a foreign conqueror, whose yoke they had long ago shooed off.

32 Ver. 27.] See ver. 16. The imperative is here put for the future (see the like figure, Isa. ii. 9, vi. 9, xxvii. 16).
33 Ver. 28.] If they either do not believe thy threat-Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you.

28 And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Ye shall certainly drink.

29 For, lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts.

30 Therefore prophesy thou against them all these words, and say unto them, The Lord shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation; he shall give a shout, as that they tread the grapes, against all the inhabitants of the earth.

31 A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; he will give enings, or else disregard them, as thinking themselves sufficiently provided against any hostile invasion, you shall let them know, that the judgments denounced against them are God's irreversible decree.

Ver. 29. I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name.] Judgment often "begins at the house of God," for the correction of God's people, and to be a warning to others; but the heaviest strokes of it are reserved for the ungodly (compare xlix. 12, 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18, Luke xxiii. 31).

Utterly unpunished?] Concerning the import of the Hebrew phrase in this place, see the note on xxx. 11.

Ver. 30. The Lord shall roar from on high. God speaks by his judgments; and those, when they are very terrible, may be fitted compared to the roaring of a lion, which strikes a consternation into those that hear it (compare Amos i. 2, lli. 8, Joel ii. 11, iii. 16).

He shall mightily roar upon his habitation.] He shall pronounce and execute a terrible judgment upon his temple, the place on earth which he hath chosen for his residence (see 1 Kings viii. 29). Upon which account, the same expressions are indifferently applied to heaven and the temple, as in this verse; and heaven itself is called God's temple or sanctuary (see xvii. 12, Ps. xi. 4, cl. 1). Some translate the latter part of this sentence to the same sense with the former: "from his habitation," the preposition nat being sometimes the same with menal, from (see Ps. lxxix. 5, Dan. ii. 1, vi. 18).

He shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes.] Or, "he shall utter his voice before his army," as Joel expresses it, it. 11, that is, like a leader or general, he shall encourage them to give the onset upon their enemies, which is usually performed with a shout, as great as that which the treaders of grapes use at the time of the vintage (see xviii. 33, Isa. xvi. 9).

Ver. 31. A noise [of God's voice or judgment] shall come even to the ends of the earth.] God enters into judgment with men for their impieties, as being so many injuries to his honour, and for which he demands satisfaction by his judgments (compare Hos. iv. 1, Mic. vi. 2).

He will plead with all flesh:] He will plead with them "with fire and sword," as Isaiah expresses it, lxvi. 16.

Ver. 32. A great whirlwind?] God's vengeance is often compared to a whirlwind (see the note on xxiii. 19). This the text says shall come from a far distant country, as Chaldean was esteemed (see v. 15).

Ver. 33. From one end of the earth even unto the other?] See the note on ver. 20. Or the words may be rendered, "from one end of the land to the other end of the land," meaning Judaea, the following words chiefly regarding that country.

They shall not be lamented.] See note on xvi. 6. [Neither gathered, nor buried.] See note on viii. 2.

Ver. 34. Howl, ye shepherds, and cry:] The imperative is put for the future (see ver. 27). Shepherds are here the same with princes or generals (see the note on ii. 8, vi. 3). In pursuance of the same metaphor, by the "principal of the flock," are meant the great and rich men of each nation, which is here prophesied against. Of them it is foretold, that they "shall wallow themselves in the ashes," as a token of their great mourning and lamenting over their misfortunes (see vi. 30).

The days of your slaughter and of your dispersions are accomplished.] The time is come when you shall be either slaughtered or dispersed, and carried captive into foreign countries.

Ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel.] Ye shall be utterly destroyed as a crystal glass, when it is dashed against the ground.

Ver. 36.] See notes on vi. 2, 3.

Ver. 37. The penanceable habitations are cut down.] Or destroyed: in the Hebrew it is, neoth shalem, adding to Salem, the same with Jerusalem.

Ver. 38. He hath forsook his covert, as the lion.] As a lion forsakes his covert to go in quest of his prey, so God hath forsoaken his habitation, from whence he used formerly to utter his voice like a lion, and exert his power for the defence of his people (see Isa. xxxxi. 4); but now he hath made both city and country the object of his anger and judgments. [Because of the fearlessness of the oppressor.] The word jonah, rendered oppressor, signifies likewise a dove: so some understand the word as denoting the Assyrians or Chaldeans, who succeeded in that monarchy, who had that bird for a symbol of their nation given to them by Semiramis (compare xlii. 16; see Selden, De Dis Syr., lib. ii. cap. 9). Though it must be granted, the word is used where JEREMIAH.

37 And the peaceable habitations are cut down because of the fierce anger of the Lord.
38 He hath forsaken his covert, as the lion; it cannot be understood of the Chaldeans. See 1.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word from the Lord, saying;
2 Thus saith the Lord; Stand in the court of the Lord's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the Lord's house, upon whom the Lord hath sent me to speak unto them; diminish not a word:
3 If so be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings.
4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law, which I have set before you,
5 To hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened;
6 Then will I make this house like Shiloh, and will make this city a curse to all the nations of the earth.

7 So the priests and the prophets and all the people heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the Lord.

8 ¶ Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the Lord had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests and the prophets and all the people took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die.

9 Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the Lord, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the Lord.

10 ¶ When the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the Lord, and sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house.

Ver. 8. Thou shalt surely die.] As a disturber of the government, and a discourager of the people, from defending their country against the enemy (compare xxxviii. 4, and see the note on ver. 14 of this chapter).

Ver. 10. The princes of Judah] These are the same who are called the "princes of the land," ver. 17. The king's counsellors, or chief officers of state, who were likewise members of the great Sanhedrin.

It is uncertain when the great council, called the Sanhedrin, was instituted. Selden, and most other writers from the Jewish authors, date the rise of it from Moses's appointing the seventy elders, Numb. xi. 16 (see Selden, lib. ii. De Synodis, cap. 4. 16, Grotius in Matt. v. 22). After several intermissions of this authority, which was sometimes laid aside by the calamities or corruptions of the times, or else superseded by that sovereign power which was invested in the judges and kings, Josiah, when he set about a general reformation, restored this ancient tribunal (see 2 Chron. xix. 8). This being the supreme court of the nation, the persons who sat in it are called here the "princes of Judah" (compare xlix. 2, xxxiv. 19); and the "elders of the land," ver. 17 of this chapter; and the "elders of the people," xix. 1, and in the evangelists (see Matt. xxvii. 1, Luke xxii. 66); and the "senate of the children of Israel," Acts v. 21 (compare 1 Mac. xii. 6, Judith xi. 14). The same are probably meant by the "seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel," mentioned Ezek. viii. 11. The word Sanhedrin is, without doubt, of Greek original, derived from συνεδρίαν, which often signifies this great council in the New Testament; and from thence it is adopted into the Jewish language by the rabbinical writers, as many other Greek words are; but the council may still have been of much more ancient date, and expressed in the 11 Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears.

12 ¶ Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes and to all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to prophesy against this house and against this city all the words that ye have heard.

13 Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God; and the Lord will repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you.

14 As for me, behold, I am in your hand: do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you.

15 But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you to speak all these words in your ears.

16 ¶ Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets; This man is not worthy to die: for he hath spoken to us in the name of the Lord our God.

17 Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying, 18 Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the Old Testament by rulers, princes, or elders, or senate of the people.

The new gate of the Lord's house.] The Chaldee calls it the "east gate of the sanctuary of the Lord." It was called the new gate, because it was repaired by Jotham (see 2 Kings xv. 35).

Ver. 14.] Compare xxxviii. 5. It was the proper business of the Sanhedrin to pass sentence upon prophets. And if they found them guilty of making false pretences to prophecy, to put them to death, the punishment which the law had provided in that case (Deut. xviii. 20). To this sense those words of Christ are to be understood, Luke xiii. 33, "It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem," where the Sanhedrin sat, whose office it was first to try, and to condemn him.

Ver. 16. The princes] The Sanhedrin (see ver. 17); or at least some considerable men among them (compare ver. 21, xxxvi. 12, xxxvii. 15, xxxviii. 4).

And all the people] They who before were forward to condemn him (ver. 8), now, upon hearing his apology, were as ready to acquit him.

Ver. 17.] See ver. 10, 16. From ver. 17, to the end of the chapter, are rehearsed the debates that passed in the Sanhedrin upon this subject, and the arguments offered on both sides; as St. Luke gives an account of a like conference with relation to the apostles. Acts v. 33, 34.

Ver. 18. Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah, &c.] They allege this precedent, taken from the practice of a good king, in favour of Jeremiah. Zion shall be plowed like a field.] The Jews suppose this prophecy to be fulfilled in the utter destruction of the second temple by Titus: when Tertullian, or, as some of the modern Jews call him, Turnus Rufus, razed the very foundations of the city and temple, and so fulfilled the prediction of our Saviour, "that there should not be left one stone days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus said the Lord of hosts; Zion shall be plowed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest.

19 Did Hezekiah king of Judah and all Judah put him at all to death? did he not fear the Lord, and besought the Lord, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? Thus might we procure great evil against our souls.

20 And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the Lord, Urijah the son of Shechina of Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city and against this land according to all the words of Jeremiah:

21 And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death: but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt;

22 And Jehoiakim the king sent men into Egypt, namely, Elhanan the son of Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt.

23 And they fetched forth Urijah out of Egypt, and brought him unto Jehoiakim the king; who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the common people.

upon another] (see Joseph. Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 7). When conquerors would signify their purpose, that a city should never be rebuilt, they used to break up the ground where it stood (see Jüd. ix. 45). Horace alludes to this custom, Hostile antrum exercitus insolens,-Lib. i. Od. 16.

The mountain of the house] The temple stood upon mount Moriah (see 2 Chron. iv. i, and xviii. 3, of this prophecy).

Ver. 19. Did Hezekiah—and all Judah put him at all to death?] Did the people come together in a body to accuse Micah, and demand sentence against him, as they had now done in the case of Jeremiah! Did he not fear the Lord? See 2 Chron. xxxii.

Ver. 20.] This seems to be an instance alleged by others of the Sanhedrin, in favour of the priests and prophets, who were for condemning Jeremiah.

Ver. 22. Jehoiakim—sent men into Egypt.] There was a strict alliance between him and Pharaoh-nechunehkoh of Egypt (see 2 Kings xxiii. 24).

Ver. 23. Cast his dead body into the graves of the common people.] Thence to put a mark of infamy upon his after his death, by burying him among the common people; for persons of quality and character had sepulchres belonging to their own families (see 2 Sam. xvii. 23, 1 Kings ii. 21).

Ver. 24. The hand of Ahikam—was with Jeremiah.] Both he and his father Shaphan were chief ministers under Josiah (2 Kings xxii. 12, 14). And the brothers of Ahikam, Gemariah, Flassah, and Jazaniah, were considerable men in those days with Ahikam, and members of the great council (see Jer. xxix. 3, Ezek. viii. 11): so Ahikam made use of his interest with them, to deliver Jeremiah from the danger that threatened him.

That they should not give him into the hand of the people] The common people are inconstant in their CHAPTER XXVII.

ARGUMENT.—This prophecy seems to have been uttered at the beginning of Zedekiah's reign (see the following note), and foreshows the conquest of Judea, and the neighboring countries, by the king of Babylon, as was more largely set forth in the twenty-fifth chapter.

Ver. 1.] There is a difficulty in the date of this prophecy, because it plainly relates to the times of Zedekiah (see ver. 3, 12, 16). Some suppose that Jeremiah might have it in charge to declare this decree of God's in the reign of Jehoiakim, which yet he was not to execute, till the time of Zedekiah. Others think that the prophet did presently execute some part of his orders, viz. that of putting on bonds and yokes upon his neck, which he wore, during the reigns of Jehoiakim and Jehoniah, till the fourth year of Zedekiah. There are other ways of solving this difficulty, which are less probable: but the answer which seems to me the least forced, is to say, that Jehoiakim is crept into the text, by the negligence of the scribes (who might have their eyes upon the beginning of the last chapter or section), instead of Zedekiah. This emendation is confirmed, by comparing this verse with the third, twelfth, and twentieth verses of this chapter, and with the beginning of the next. Such little verbal mistakes must be allowed by all impartial readers, to have sometimes happened in transcribing the holy scriptures, as well as in other books, and may easily be corrected, by comparing the suspected reading with other parts of the sacred text, which admit of no difficulty or uncertainty.

Ver. 2.] The prophets foreshowed things by actions as well as words. So Isaiah went "naked and barefoot" (Isa. xx. 3). Ezekiel propounded in like manner by signs (Ezek. iv. 1, &c., xii. 3, xvii. 17, 19).

Ver. 3. Send them to the king of Edom, &c.] These were some of those countries which God had given into the hand of the king of Babylon (see xxv. 21, 22, and ch. xlviii. xlix.).

By the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah] Their business was either to congratulate Zedekiah upon his accession to the throne; or else to engage him in a league against the king of Babylon. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say unto your masters; I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me. And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land

Ver. 6. Now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar] God is the sole Lord and proprietor of the world, and, by virtue of his absolute sovereignty and dominion, has a right to give the kingdoms of the earth to whomsoever he pleases (Dan. iv. 17), and he exercises this authority, by "changing times and seasons," by "removing kings, and setting up kings" (ibid. ii. 21). It is the business of human laws, to establish every government in that method wherein it is already settled: but as this is no bar to providence, which still has a right to alter governments, and, for great and wise reasons, often changes the scene of worldly affairs: so neither ought it to be an objection against submitting to any persons, whom God's providence hath placed over us, and put into their hands the full power of exercising all those acts of government in which sovereignty consists. But although the people are bound in such cases to obey, yet this does not lessen the guilt of usurpers themselves (see the note on xxv. 12).

King of Babylon, my servant;] See xxv. 9.

The beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him.] Compare Dan. vi. 28. An instance of that absolute sovereignty which God hath given to the king of Babylon, whereby men, and all their goods and fortunes, which chiefly consisted in cattle in those days, were entirely at his disposal.

Ver. 7. All nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son.] Belshazzar, the last king of the Babylonian monarchy (Dan. v. 29, 31), was grandson to Nebuchadnezzar, who is called his father, Dan. v. 2, that is, his grandfather, by a usual Hebraism (see 1 Kings xv. 3, compared with ver. 10, and 2 Kings viii. 20, compared with ver. 18). For the two kings mentioned in Ptolemy's Canon, between Evil-merodach and Belshazzar (called there Nabonesus; viz. Neriglissaros and Laborosurchocbus, had no right by lineal descent: for Neriglissaros was only husband to Evil-merodach's daughter, and Laborosurchus was son to Neriglissaros. Compare Isa. xiv. 22, where God saith, "I will cut off from Babylon the name and remnant, son and nephew," or rather, "son and grandson"; that is, all that should lineally succeed king Nebuchadnezzar (compare Job xviii. 19).

Until the very time of his land come;] The Vulgar Latin translates the words thus, "Until the time of his land, and of himself come;" i. e. the time of their punishment or visitation, as it is elsewhere ex-come: and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him.

8 And it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the Lord, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand.

9 Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your dreamers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon:

10 For they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish.

11 But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the Lord; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

12 ¶ I spake also to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying, Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live.

13 Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the Lord hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon?

14 Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

15 For I have not sent them, saith the Lord, pressed; that is, at the end of seventy years (see xxv. 12). The word time is used in the same sense, Ezek. vii. 7, xxx. 3.

Kings shall serve themselves of him.] See xxvi. 14.

Ver. 8. That will not put their neck under the yoke] Will not submit to that servitude represented by the yokes mentioned ver. 2, 3.

That nation will I punish.] Those punishments are elsewhere denounced against Zedekiah, and all the Jews who joined with him in resisting the king of Babylon's forces (see xxiv. 9, xxxviii. 8, Ezek. xii. 13, 14, xvii. 20, 21).

Ver. 9.] The Jews, together with the idolatrous rites of their neighbours, learned their arts of divination, and foretelling future events, the use of which was expressly forbidden, Deut. xviii. 11, &c. and for which practices they are severely reproved, Isa. ii. 6. The word none, which is here translated engraver, is rendered there soothsayer, and is supposed to be the same with a stargazer, or astrologer.

Ver. 10.] See xiv. 14, xxiii. 21, xxix. 8.

Ver. 11.] They that make no opposition against the king of Babylon's forces, but willingly submit yet they prophesy a lie in my name; that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you.

16 Also I spake to the priests and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the Lord; Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, Behold, the vessels of the Lord's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

17 Hearken not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and live: wherefore should this city be laid waste?

18 But if they be prophets, and if the word of the Lord be with them, let them now make intercession to the Lord of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah, and at Jerusalem, go not to Babylon.

19 ¶ For thus saith the Lord of hosts concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city,

20 Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when he carried away captive Jechoniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem;

21 Yes, thus saith the Lord of hosts concerning the temple, which was in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah and of Jerusalem;

22 They shall be carried to Babylon, and there shall they be until the day that I visit them, saith the Lord; then will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

themselves to him, shall continue in their own country and possessions, being only tributary to the king of Babylon (see xxxviii. 17, xlii. 10, 11).
1 And it came to pass the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet, which yeas of Gideon, spake unto me in the house of the Lord, in the presence of the priests and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.

3 Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the Lord's house, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon:

4 And I will bring again to this place Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the captives of Judah, that were carried away thence, saith the Lord: for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon.

5 ¶ Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood in the house of the Lord,

6 Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen: the Lord do so: the Lord perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the Lord's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place,

7 Nevertheless hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people;

8 The prophets that have been before me and before thee of old prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence.

9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the Lord hath truly sent him.

10 ¶ Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it.

11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the Lord; Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations of Zedekiah, until the fourth year" (see his Concordance, p. 143, 164).

The LXX. read this part of the verse thus, "In the fourth year of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fifth month."

Ver. 2. I have broken the yoke of Babylon. That tyrannical power which Nebuchadnezzar exercises, of which the bonds and yokes which Jeremiah were are the figures (see xxxvi. 1, 12).

Ver. 3. Within two full years See note on ver. 16. Will I bring again into this place See xxvii. 16, 20.

Ver. 4. ¶ This was grateful news to the people, who looked upon Zedekiah only as Nebuchadnezzar's deputy, or viceroy (see the note on xxxvi. 12).

Ver. 6. Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen. Thereby expressing his hearty concern for the good of his nation, and wishing that God would repent him of the evil wherewith he had threatened them by his ministry.

Ver. 8. ¶ Jeremiah offers two several reasons in defence of his own prophecies, and against the truth of Hananiah's. First, that many other prophets agreed with himself in prophesying evil against the Jews, and other neighbouring countries, such as Hosea, Joel, Amos, Isaiah, Micah, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, &c. Whereas Hananiah, being single in his prophecy, nothing but the punctual answering the event could give him the authority of a true prophet. Secondly, that considering the general corruption of the people's manners, it was so much the more likely God should inflict severe punishments upon them, their iniquities being now ripe for judgment. To this the Jews add a third explication of the words, viz. that when a true prophet foretells peace, his prophecy must certainly be fulfilled, and the event would prove him to be a true prophet: whereas when a prophet foretold evil, which was Jeremiah's case, the event might be suspended by the repentance of the persons concerned (see Bishop Kidder's Dem. of the Messias, par. i. p. 371).
tions within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way.

12 Then the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the prophet, after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, saying, 13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord; Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.

14 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also.

15 Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet. Hear now, Hananiah; The Lord hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie.

16 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord.

17 So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 Now these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon;

2 (After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem;) 3 By the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiiah, (whom Ze-de

CHAP. XXIX.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a message sent by Jeremiah, at the beginning of Zedekiah’s reign, to the captives in Babylon, who were carried away with Jeconiah, exhorting them to live quietly there, and not hearken to the prophets among them, who deluded them with a vain hope of a speedy return home: against two of which prophets he denounced God’s judgments; as he did afterward against Shemaiah, who sent a threatening letter against Jeremiah, at the return of those very messengers who carried this letter to Babylon.

Ver. 1. Residue of the elders which were carried away captives.] These were those probably that survived of the Sanhedrin, that were carried away captive in the third year of Jehoiakim’s reign (Dan. i. 3), or else who remained of Jeconiah’s captivity (see 2 Kings xxvi. 14); many of whom might die by the hardships they suffered in their transportation. These being persons of authority, were more likely to influence the rest of the people, and induce them to hearken to the prophet’s advice.

To the prophets.] We do not read of any true prophet that was carried away captive with Jeconiah, kiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon) saying,

Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon;

5 Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;

6 Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished.

beside Ezekiel. So the Septuagint rightly understand the word here of false prophets, who flattered the people with hopes of a speedy restoration (see xxvi. 7, xxxviii. 10). So Hananiah is often called the prophet in the foregoing chapter; and compare ver. 8, of this chapter.

Ver. 2. After that Jeconiah—and the queen.] By the queen is meant Jeconiah’s mother (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12, 14, 15, where an account is given of this captivity; and compare xxii. 26, xxv. 10, xxviii. 4 of this prophecy).

And the eunuchs.] See xxxiv. 19. The princes of Judah and Jerusalem.] If these be persons of a distinct rank, we may understand the princes of Judah to be the same with the elders, or Sanhedrin, ver. 1 (compare xxvi. 10, 16, 17, xxxiv. 19). By the “princes of Jerusalem” are meant the rulers of that city, called the lesser Sanhedrin, consisting of twenty-three.

Ver. 3. By the hand of Elasah] See xxvi. 24. Gemariah the son of Hilkiiah.] A distinct person from Gemariah, mentioned xxxvi. 10. Whom Zedekiah—sent unto Babylon to Nebuchad nezzar] To renew his promises of fidelity to him (see the note on xxvii. 3, 12).

Ver. 5, 6.] The prophet gives them this advice to check their hopes of a speedy return from Babylon, 7 And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

8 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.

9 For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith the Lord.

10 ¶ For thus saith the Lord, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place.

11 For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end.

12 Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you.

13 And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.

14 And I will be found of you, saith the Lord; and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

15 ¶ Because ye have said, The Lord hath raised up prophets in Babylon:

16 Know that thus saith the Lord of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity:

17 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

18 And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, to be a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them:

19 Because they have not hearkened to my words, saith the Lord, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them: but ye would not hear, saith the Lord.

20 ¶ I hear ye therefore the word of the Lord, all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon:

21 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Kohalah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesies a lie unto you in my name; Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall slay them before your eyes;

22 And of them shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, the Lord make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire;

Ver. 14.] These words are directly spoken to those that were carried captives with Jeconiah, and were fulfilled in their restoration under Cyrus: yet the expressions being so large and general, may be supposed to relate to that general restoration of the whole nation which is often foretold in the prophecies of the Old Testament (see xxiii. 3, 8, xxxii. 37, and the notes there).

Ver. 15. This is meant of the false prophets, who foretold nothing but peace and prosperity (see ver. 8, 9).

Ver. 16—18. See xxiv. 8, 10.

Ver. 19.] When at the same time they readily gave ear to the false prophets, that flattered them with promises of peace and safety (see xiv. 14, xvii. 15, xxvii. 2).

Ver. 21. He shall slay them before your eyes.] As persons that disturbed the minds of the Jews, his subjects, and made them unwilling to submit to his government, by giving them hopes of a speedy deliverance from under it (see ver. 7, 5).

Ver. 22. Taken up a curse.] See note on xxiv. 9. Whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire.] Casting into the fire was a punishment used in that country, as appears from the history of the three children, Dan. iii. There was likewise a way of roasting by a gentle fire, to make men die by a more lingering death, such as Antiochus practised upon the seven brethren (2 Macc. vii. 5); and was often used in the Diocesan persecution, as Lactantius describes it, De Mortib. Persecutorum, cap. 21. The word here properly denotes this sort of punishment.

Ver. 23. And have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives.] Compare xxiii. 14. The Jewish CHAPTER XXX.

23 Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; even I know, and am a witness, saith the Lord.

24 Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the Nehelamite, saying,

25 Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying,

26 The Lord hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be officers in the house of the Lord, for every man that is mad, and maketh himself a prophet, that thou shouldest put him in prison, and in the stocks.

27 Now therefore why hast thou not reproved Jeremiah of Anathoth, which maketh himself a prophet to you?

Writers will needs have these to have been the two elders that attempted Susannah's chastity. For they have a traditional account of that story; though they do not look upon the history of it, that is still extant in the Greek, to be authentic.

Ver. 24, Shemaiah the Nehelamite. Or, "the dreamer," as the word is rendered in the margin (see ver. 8). This was done after the messengers who delivered the former message to the captives at Babylon were returned home, who brought along with them the letter of Shemaiah mentioned in the following verse (see ver. 27).

Ver. 25, To Zephaniah. See note on xxi. 1.

Ver. 26, The Lord hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada. Shemaiah directs the words of his letter to Zephaniah, in the first place, as being next in order to the high-priest, and therefore called the second priest, lxx. 24, and tells him, that God has appointed him to supply the place of the high-priest, being probably absent at that time, who was either Azariah, or Seraiah his son; but might be called by the name of Jehoiada, a person so remarkable for his zeal and courage, 2 Chron. xxxiii. xxxiv.

It is certain, some of the high-priests had several names, as is taken for granted frequently by Selden, Lightfoot, and other learned men, who have endeavoured to give us an account of their succession, out of the histories of the Kings and Chronicles (see Selden, De Success. in Pontif. lib. i. cap. 3, Lightfoot's Temple Service, ch. 1).

For every man that is mad. See xx. 1, 2, and the note there. The prophets and inspired persons, were often accused of madness, or being possessed with an evil spirit, by their enemies (see 2 Kings ix. 11, Hos. ix. 7, John x. 20, Acts xxvi. 24).

Ver. 27. For therefore [or, because, see Noldius, p. 725] he sent unto us in Babylon. See ver. 5.

Ver. 32, He shall not have a man to dwell among this people. None of his posterity shall remain to see my people restored to their own land again (compare ver. 11).

Because he hath taught rebellion. See xxviii. 16.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the Lord God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book.

CHAP. XXX.

ARGUMENT.——This and the following chapter contain general promises of God's mercy to the Jews, and assurances that he will never forget the covenant that he made with their fathers: those were partly fulfilled in their restoration under Cyrus, but more fully to be accomplished in the times of the Messias; and by the gracious terms of that new covenant, which he will establish with the spiritual Israel. At, or before, whose second appearing, we may expect a general conversion and restoration of God's ancient people; a blessing implied in those prophecies of the Old Testament, where the joint restoration of Israel and Judah is foretold; as has been observed upon Isa. xi. 11, 13.

3 For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.

Ver. 2. Write thee all the words] The words that follow contain a promise of the Jews' restoration from their captivity (compare ver. 4). These God commands should be committed to writing for the use of posterity, to be a support to the Jews, and an encouragement for them to trust in God, and a proof of God's prescience and overruling providence, when the event shall be brought to pass (see the note on xxii. 30).

Ver. 3.] Israel and Judah having been carried away by two distinct captivities, into different parts of the world, several prophecies of the Old Testament not only foretell the restoration of each of them, but likewise their reunion after their restoration (see above, iii. 18, Ezek. xxxvii. 6, 21, 22, Hos. i. 11). Now, though it be granted that some of every tribe
4 ¶ And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

5 For thus saith the Lord; We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace.

6 Ask ye now, and see whether a man doth travaile with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travaile, and all faces are turned into paleness?

7 Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it; it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it.

8 For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him:

9 But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them.

10 ¶ Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity: and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee; though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

12 For thus saith the Lord, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.

13 There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines.

14 All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they if God had utterly forsaken thee, or cast thee off (compare Isa. xii. 15, xlv. 2).

15 I will save—thy seed from the land of their captivity: I will deliver thee from thy captivity, though thou shouldst be dispersed into the most distant countries: and this, though it be not accomplished in the Jews of the present age, shall be made good to their posterity, who are believed for their fathers' sake, as St. Paul speaks, Rom. xi. 28. National blessings are promised in common to parents and children, who, as they are called promiscuously by the same name, as Jacob here denotes his posterity: so they are looked upon in such cases as one aggregate body, or race of people (see the note on xxix. 10).

Jacob—shall be in rest, and be quiet. These expressions denote external peace and freedom from the annoyance of enemies, as hath been observed upon xxiii. 6.

16 Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, such as the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, &c. yet I will not make a full end of thee (see the note on xxxi. 36).

17 But I will correct thee in measure (see x. 24), and will not leave thee altogether unpunished. This latter part of the verse some render, "and not utterly destroy thee!" which sense, as it suits very well with this place, so it agrees much better with the scope of those two texts in the pentateuch, where we first meet with it, Exod. xxxiv. 7, and Num. xiv. 18, than the common translation, which renders the words there, "and will by no means acquit the guilty."

18 The sense which our translation gives here of this phrase, "I will not leave thee altogether unpunished," agrees very well with the context of some other places, where this phrase is used, as particularly xxxv. 29, xlix. 12, of this prophecy, as also Nah. i. 3.

19 Ver. 12.] In all human appearance, and therefore it is none but God can heal thee, and recover thee out of this desperate condition.

20 Ver. 13.] There is none that, by the reformation of their lives, or their intercessions with God, endeavour to avert his displeasure (see Ezek. xxii. 30). Or else the words may be rendered, "There is none to judge thy cause" (see vi. 28, xxxii. 6). None knows the true nature of thy malady, or what medicines are fit to be applied to thy case. Their calamities state is compared to a distempered body (see ver. 17, viii. 22, Isa. i. 5, 6); and the false prophets, instead of applying proper remedies, have healed the wounds of my people slightly:" as we read, vi. 14.

seek thee not: for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a curse; for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased.

15 Why criest thou for thy affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.

16 Therefore all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey.

17 For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord; because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.

18 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be built upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof.

19 And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving;

I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy.] Thy iniquities have provoked me to punish thee with that severity, as looks like cruelty, and as if I had declared myself an utter enemy to thee.

Ver. 15.] Yet why shouldst thou expostulate with me, as if I had dealt unjustly with thee? Whereas, if thy condition seems desperate, it is owing to thine own iniquities, which have still been increased with new aggravations of guilt.

Ver. 17. I will restore health.] See ver. 12, 13.

Ver. 18.] I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents; The expression alludes to the ancient custom of dwelling in tents or tabernacles (compare Isa. xxxii. 20, lxx. 2). This was in some degree fulfilled under Zerubbabel.

[Or build her upon her own heap:] Or, hill, as it is in the margin, as that part of Jerusalem particularly was, which was called mount Zion. And generally there was a castle or citadel, in the middle of the ancient cities, upon a rising ground, for the greater strength and security of the place (see Josh. xi. 13).

The palace shall remain [or be placed] after the manner thereof.] By the palace may be understood either the temple or the king's house; which the prophet foretells shall be built upon its former foundation and dimensions.

Ver. 19.] See xxxi. 4, 13, 18, xxxiii. 11, Zech. x. 8, Ver. 20.] Their church and commonwealth shall be restored to their former state (compare xxxiii. 7, 11, Isa. i. 27).

Ver. 21. Their nobles shall be of themselves.] The Hebrew word addira, is in the singular number, and literally signifies their mighty one, a title given to God himself, Ps. xxiii. 4, and to a mighty angel, Isa. x. 34, probably the AG120, or Son of God. The sense is, they shall no more be governed by strangers, but shall have a ruler of their own nation; such as was Zerubbabel, a figure of Christ.

I will cause him to draw near.] He shall have a near attendance upon me: for I will make him a priest to me as well as a king, according to that prophecy concerning the Messiah, Ps. cx. 4, Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec.
And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

I will deliver thee from thy captivity, though thou shouldest be dispersed into the most distant countries; and this, though it be not accomplished in the Jews of the present age, shall be made good to their posterity, who are beloved for their fathers' sakes, as St. Paul speaks, Rom. xi. 26. National blessings are promised in common to parents and children, who, as they are called promiscuously by the same name, as Jacob here denotes his posterity; so they are looked upon in such cases as one aggregate body, or race of people (see the note on xxii. 10).

Ver. 11. Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee. Such as the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, &c. yet I will not make a full end of thee (see the note on xxxi. 26).

16 But I will correct thee in measure [see x. 24], and will not leave thee altogether unpunished. The latter part of the verse some render, "and not utterly destroy thee." which sense, as it suits very well with this place, so it agrees much better with the scope of those two texts in the penitent, where we first meet with it, Exod. xxxiv. 7, and Numb. xiv. 18, than the common translation, which renders the words there, "and will by no means acquit the guilty.

The sense which our translation gives here of this phrase, "I will not leave thee altogether unpunished," agrees very well with the context of some other places, where this phrase is used, as particularly xxv. 29, xlix. 12, of this prophecy, as also Nah. i. 3.

ing and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them.

21 And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord.

22 And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

23 Behold, the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind: it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.

24 The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it.

This phrase of coming, or drawing near, to God is particularly applied to the office of the priests and Levites, Num. xvi. 5.

Who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? For who is there but the Messiah, that is so entirely devoted to my service (see Ps. xi. 8, John iv. 34, xiv. 31). The words mihi ze, "who is this," have an emphasis in the original, that cannot be expressed in another language, and are spoken by way of admiration: the very same phrase is used Ps. xxiv. 10, where the altering the phrase from that which was used in the eighth verse is designed to denote some extraordinary person, and is generally expounded of the Messias.

Ver. 22.] You shall continually adhere to my religion and worship, and I will take you into my favour and protection (see Ezek. xi. 24, xxvi. 20, xxviii. 27, Hos. ii. 22, Zech. xiii. 9. Rev. xxi. 9. Ver. 23, 24.] We find the same judgment denounced xxii. 19, 20. And with respect to the context here, and the latter days, to which it does particularly relate, it may best be explained with regard to the general conversion of the Jews, when God will make a remarkable discrimination among them; will bring back those that repent and believe into their own country, and punish the refractory with utter destruction, as he did the rebels in the wilderness (see Ezek. xi. 17, 21, xx. 34, 38, and the notes upon Isa. iv. 11, lv. 12).

Ver. 24. Fierce anger of the Lord] See xxiii. 20. In the latter days ye shall consider [or understand] it. The latter days, or last days, as the phrase is sometimes translated, may signify, in general, the time to come; and so perhaps it is to be understood, Gen. xlix. 1, Jer. xxxi. 32, xxi. 20, but it commonly signifies the times under the gospel, as being the last dispensation, and such as should continue to the end of the world (see the note on Isa. ii. 2). And taking the phrase in this sense, the words import that when all these evils are come upon you, which God has threatened against your disobedience, and particularly for that heinous sin of yours in rejecting the Messias; and you have found the denunciations of the prophets verified in the several captivities you have undergone; then you will understand the import of this and several other prophecies, and the event will perfectly instruct you in their meaning (see xxiii. 20),

I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy.] Thy iniquities have provoked me to punish thee with that severity, as looks like cruelty, and as if I had declared myself an utter enemy to thee.

Ver. 15.] Yet why shouldst thou expostulate with me, as if I had dealt unjustly with thee? Whereas, if thy condition seems desperate, it is owing to thine own iniquities, which have still been increased with new aggravations of guilt.

Ver. 16.] They say (see the note on xvi. 14) all thou that devour thee shall be devoured.] See ver. 11. Isa. xxxiii. 1.

Ver. 17.] I will restore health.] See ver. 12, 13.

Ver. 18.] I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents.] The expression alludes to the ancient custom of dwelling in tents or tabernacles (compare Isa. xxxiii. 20, liv. 2). This was in some degree fulfilled in Zerubbabel.

The city shall be built upon her own heap.] Or hill, as it is in the margin, as that part of Jerusalem particularly was, which was called mount Zion. And generally there was a castle or citadel, in the middle of the ancient cities, upon a rising ground, for the greater strength and security of the place (see Josh. xi. 10).

The palace shall remain [or be placed] after the manner thereof.] By the palace may be understood either the temple or the king's house; which the prophet foretells shall be built upon its former foundation and dimensions.

Ver. 19.] See xxxi. 4, 13, 18, xxxiii. 11. Zech. x. 8. Ver. 20.] Their church and commonwealth shall be restored to their former state (compare xxxiii. 7, 11. Isa. i. 27).

Ver. 21.] Their nobles shall be of themselves.] The Hebrew word addito, is in the singular number, and literally signifies their mighty one, a title given to God himself, Ps. xci. 4, and to a mighty angel, Isa. x. 34, probably the Angel, or Son of God. The sense is, they shall no more be governed by strangers, but shall have a ruler of their own nation; such as was Zerubbabel, a figure of Christ.

CHAPTER XXXI.

ARGUMENT.—See the argument of the foregoing chapter, the same subject being continued in this: together with a more explicit declaration of the nature and terms of that new covenant which God will reveal by Christ.

Ver. 1. At the same time, saith the Lord, I will be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. Ver. 2. Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest. Ver. 3. The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.

CHAP. XXXI.

1 At the same time, saith the Lord, I will be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. 2 Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest. 3 The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.

4 Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry. 5 Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things. 6 For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. 7 For thus saith the Lord; Sing with gladness.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria. Building and planting are commonly joined together (see Isa. lxv. 21, Amos ix. 14). Samaria, being the metropolis of the ten tribes, seems to be put for the kingdom of Israel, as it was distinct from that of Judah, expressed often by Samaria in the books of Kings. According to which interpretation, the "mountains of Samaria" are equivalent to the "mountains of Israel" (Ezek. xxxvi. 8, xxxvii. 22). Taking Samaria in this sense, it implies that the deliverance here spoken of shall extend to Israel as well as to Judah (see ver. 6, and the argument on ch. xxx.).

The planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things. After they have planted them, they shall eat the fruits thereof, according to the promise contained in the parallel texts, Isa. lxv. 21, Amos ix. 14. Whereas God had threatened them as a curse, that when they had "planted their vines, another should eat the fruit," Deut. xxviii. 30. The verb hålélut, translated "eat them as common things," alludes to that law that forbade the fruit of any young trees to be eaten, till the fifth year of their bearing, when the fruit was lawful, or common, for every one to eat (see the margin of our bibles upon Deut. xxv. 6, xxvii. 30).

Ver. 6. They that were to publish any proclamation used to get to the top of some high hill, from whence their voice might be heard a great way off (see Judg. ix. 7, 2 Chron. xiii. 4, Isa. xi. 9). Watchmen gave the same kind of warning if they saw an enemy approach, which is now done more commonly by beacons. The Jews took much the same method in proclaiming their festivals (see Dr. Lightfoot's Temple Service, ch. 11). In allusion to which custom the prophet here saith, that the time shall come when there shall be a general summons throughout all the ten tribes (Ephraim being often put for the whole kingdom of Israel; see the note on Isa. vii. 2) to repair to the temple at Jerusalem, and join themselves to the true church, from which they had made so long a separation.

When the prophets foretold the general conversion of the Jews, they often speak of Judah and Israel as no longer in a state of separation, but united together under one king, the Messias (see above, iii. 15, xxx. 3, Isa. xi. 13, Ezek. xxxvi. 6, 22, Hos. ii. 11). The expressions arise ye, &c. allude to the Jews going in companies to Jerusalem, at the three solemn feasts of the year (see Isa. ii. 3, and the notes there). The prophets being styled watchmen (see vi. 17), the word προφῆται may be applied to the evangelical preachers, who should be instruments in converting the Jews, and bringing them into the church. And the word νότηρια may allude, as Grotesus observes, to the title of Nazarene, given to Christ and his disciples at the first preaching of Christianity (see Matt. ii. 23, ness for Jacob, and shew among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel.

8 Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither.

9 They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.

10 Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.

11 For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he.

12 Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the nations.

Acts xxiv. 5). We find that names often carry some mystical allusion in them, by several instances of scripture, and particularly Jacob's blessings to his sons do, for the most part, allude to their proper names (Gen. xlix).

Ver. 7. Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations! When you see some dawning of these blessed times, express your joy for the restoration of Jacob: posteriority in the most public manner that you can, in the sight of the chiefest of those potent nations from whence you are to be delivered (see ver. 11). The phrase which we translate "among the chief of the nations," may otherwise be rendered, "in the sight of the nations."

Publish ye, praise ye.] Publish those good tidings with the highest expressions of praise and glory to God: and likewise pray that God, who hath begun so glorious a work, would go on to complete and perfect it (compare Ps. cxviii. 23).

Ver. 8. I will bring them from the north country.] This promise relates to the ten tribes, as well as to the other two who were carried captive to Babylon: for Assyria and Media, whither they were removed, lay north of Judah, as well as Babylon (compare iii. 12, 18). And the following words speak of a general restoration of the Jews from their several dispersions (see xxiii. 8).

With them the blind and the lame, &c.] God will conduct them with all imaginable care and tenderness, and furnish the most capable and ingenuous with suitable accommodations. The words allude to God's conducting his people of all ages and conditions through the wilderness, compared to the care with which a tender child is carried (Deut. i. 31 [compare Isa. xi. 11, xii. 18, xlix. 10]).

Ver. 9. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them.] The Sepulchre render the words thus, "They went forth with weeping, but with comfort will I bring them back:" which sense exactly agrees with the words of the hundred and twenty-sixth Psalm, which was composed upon the return from captivity (ver. 5, 6), "If that sows in tears, shall reap in joy; he that goeth forth weeping, shall come again with rejoicing." But I conceive the sense which our translators give of the words more agreeable to the original; and it is withal confirmed, by comparing this verse with lxxi. 21, where we read, "A voice was heard, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel: the prophet speaking of a nation, shall the same words be used of a nation, wherein the same is here made use of. Compare likewise l. 4, where it is said, "that the children of Israel and Judah shall come together, going and weeping—and seek the Lord their God:‖ implying that the Jews, at the time of their general restoration, shall have their joy tempered with tears of repentance for their former mistakes. The same thing is more fully expressed Zech. xiii. 10, where God promises to "pour upon them the spirit of grace and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd: and their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all.

13 Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow.

14 And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping: Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not.

For wheat, and for wine.] Spiritual blessings are elsewhere described under the emblems of fruitfulness and plenty (see the note on Isa. iv. 2).

Their soul shall be as a watered garden.] God's grace and blessing are often compared to waters that refresh and enrich dry ground (see Isa. xlvi. 9, lviii. 11).

They shall not sorrow any more.] Compare Isa. xxxv. 11, lxv. 19, Rev. xxi. 4. Taking this promise in its full extent, it implies a happiness too great to be expected, while the present state of things continues.

Ver. 13. There shall be signs of a universal joy which all ages shall unanimously join in (see ver. 4).

Ver. 14.] The former expression alludes to that plentiful provision that was made for the priests under the law, who were maintained by the sacrifices and offerings brought to the temple (see 1 Sam. ii. 25). And the whole verse implies, that both the priests and people shall rejoice in the abundance of God's blessings (compare Ps. cxxii. 10).

Ver. 15. A voice was heard in Ramah.] The prophet describes the lamentations in and about Jerusalem, at the time of the several captivities mentioned li. 15, 28—30, under the resembles of a mother lamenting over her dead children. The mournful scene is laid in Ramah, in the land of Benjamin, not far from Jerusalem (see Judg. xix. 10, 19), part of that city itself being in the tribe of Benjamin, v. 14. And Rachel, the mother of Benjamin, is introduced as chief mourner upon so sad an occasion.

This figurative representation was, in a great measure, literally true, when Herod slew the infants at Beth-lehem, not far from Ramah (see the forementioned place in Judges); and therefore St. Matthew tells us, that this prophecy was fulfilled in that event, li. 17, 18. Several other instances may be alleged, where the mystical sense of the prophecies, or that which relates to the times of the gospel, is the interpretation that most exactly answers the natural and genuine import of the words. This particularly appears in those prophecies concerning Christ's sufferings contained in the twenty-second and sixtyninth Psalms. If David's afflictions were the occasion of composing those Psalms, yet it is plain that the literal sense of several passages of those Psalms was never fulfilled in him.

Because they were not.] An expression denoting those who were dead, as being cut off from the land of the living, and excluded from any farther concern in the things of this world (see Gen. xlii. 13, Lam. v. 7.) This was literally true, according to St. Matthew's interpretation of the text, but only metaphorically so in the sense that was first intended; being spoken of those who were removed into a foreign country, and for ever deprived of the conversation of their relations, as if they had been naturally dead.

Ver. 16. For thy work shall be rewarded.] God will have a regard for the tender affection which the mothers bear to their children. Their prayers and tears shall be heard and accepted by him.

Ver. 17. There is hope in thine end.] Or, "to thy posterity," as the word in the original may be rendered; though these of the present age do not see a return from captivity, yet their posterity shall enjoy that blessing. This was particularly fulfilled with respect to the tribe of Benjamin in their return under Cyrus (see Ezra i. 5).

Ver. 18. I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus;] Or, "When he was led into captivity, saying thus;" so the word mitnoded signifies, xviii. 27, and in this sense the Vulgar Latin understands it here.

I was chastised as a bullock, unaccustomed to the yoke.] Or, I was instructed by thy discipline; whereas, before, I was as an untamed bullock, or heifer, that is not to be managed but by stripes and corrections.

Turn thou me, and I shall be turned;] Do thou turn my heart by thy preventing grace, and then I shall be effectually reformed (compare Lam. v. 21). Sometimes the scripture ascribes the whole work of man's conversion to God, because his grace is the first and principal cause of it. But yet to make it effectual, man's concurrence is necessary, as appears particularly from those words, 1, 9, of this prophecy; where God saith, "We have healed Babylon, but she is not healed;" that is, God did what was requisite on his part for her conversion, but she refused to comply with his call. To the same purpose he speaks to Jerusalem, Ezek. xxiv. 13, "I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged."

Ver. 19. Surely after that I was turned, I repent.] As soon as God's grace touched my heart, and gave me a due sense of my duty, and the many devotions from it I had been guilty of, I straightway became a true penitent, and expressed my repentance, by all the outward and inward signs of an unfeigned contrition.

Because I did bear the reproach of my youth.] The burden of my former sins lay heavy upon my mind, and I became sensible, that all the calamities and reproaches I have undergone, were the due deserts of my offences. The prophet, representing a whole nation as a single person, speaks of their former sins, as if they were the extravagances of their younger years.
20 Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are troubled for him; I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord.

21 Set thee up way-marks, make thee high heaps: set thine heart toward the highway, even the way which thou wentest: turn again, O virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy cities.

22 ¶ How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter? for the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man.

Ver. 20. Is Ephraim my dear son? &c. The interrogative particle he, is in sense the same with ha! : and so it is plainly taken, 1 Sam. iii. 27, which place should be translated, “Did not I plainly appear to thy father’s house,” &c. and 2 Sam. xxviii. 17, where our English translators render it to the same sense, “Is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives!” Taking that particle in this sense, the text here should be rendered, “Is not Ephraim my dear son? is he not a pleasant child!” which is, Is he not one that I have set my affections upon, as a parent does upon a child in whom he has a peculiar concern.

For since I spake against him [or of him, see xlviii. 27]. I do earnestly remember him still: Ever since I have so severely reproved and chastised him, I have still retained a fatherly kindness and affection for him.

Therefore thy bowels are troubled for him: &c. He bids them think of preparing for their return to their own country, and in order to that end, to set up way-marks to direct travellers in the right road (see Isa. viii. 14, xi. 10). The word marorim, high heaps, is used here in a different sense from that in which it is taken ver. 15, and signifies such pillars or obelisks as used to be set up on the road-side, for the direction of travellers; in which sense Schindler understands it, Hos. xii. 14, and renders that place thus, “Israel provoked him to anger by his heaps;” that is, his altars, which stood as “heaps in the field,” as it is said there, ver. 11.

O virgin of Israel.] See note on ver. 14.

Ver. 22. How long wilt thou go about.] Or go out of the right way, or follow thine own imagination (compare ii. 18, 19, 26).

O thou backsliding daughter! Compare vii. 24. Thou that wast formerly backward in obeying God’s laws, and art now grown to be a peculiar people and better when God calleth thee to return homeward out of a strange country. This expression is often used of Israel, or the ten tribes (see iii. 6, 8, 11, 12); and of Judah and Israel together (ibid., ver. 11, 22), both being comprehended under the title of “The virgin of Israel,” in the foregoing verse. In which sense it may most properly be understood here.

The Lord hath created [or doth create] a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man:] As it is a new thing, and unheard of, that a woman should court a man, so God will bring as strange a thing to pass, that the Jewish nation shall return to God their husband (see iii. 14). So most of the modern Jews, and some Christian expositors, understand the words;

23 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity: The Lord bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness.

24 And there shall dwell in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks.

25 For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul.

26 Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me. but several ancient Jews expounded the text of the Messianic title of the Messiah (see bishop Pearson on the third article of the Creed, Dr. Pococke’s miscellany notes on Malachi, p. 345, and Dr. Jackson’s discourse upon the place); and most Christian interpreters understand it of the miraculous conception of the Virgin Mary, without the operation of man. The Hebrew sabab is used in a sense near akin to this, Deut. xxxii. 10, where it signifies carrying in the arms, and cherishing as a mother does a child: to the same sense it is said, “Thou shalt embrace a son.” 2 Kings iv. 16, Habe- bis in utero, as the Vulgar Latin renders it; though the word sabab signifies proper affection to a child it is not used of a virgin. Taking the words in this sense, they properly import a new creation, and such as is the immediate work of God. That such a prophecy concerning the conception of Christ may not be thought to come in here abruptly, it is to be observed, that as the coming of the Messiah is the foundation of all promises both of the first and second covenant (see 2 Cor. i. 20); so it contains the most powerful arguments to persuade men to obedience. And that covenant of which Christ was to be the Mediator, is plainly foretold and described at the thirty-first and following verses of this chapter. A learned friend thinks the phrase, “a woman shall compass a man,” to be a proverbial speech; as much as to say, A woman, i.e. the most feeble, despisable persons, compared elsewhere to women in Micah i. 12, xix. 6, xxvii. 11, Jer. i. 57, Nahum iii. 11, even such a one shall turn back or disappoint a mighty warrior, as the word geber properly signifies. He supposes the expression to be equivalent to those promises, that “one should chase a thousand,” and the like; which promises should again be fulfilled at the general restoration of the Jewish nation (see ver. 8 of this chapter, Joel iii. 17, Zech. xii. 8): he farther supposes, that the word woman alludes to the virgin of Israel, ver. 21, called also a backsliding daughter, ver. 22, and compared to Rachel, ver. 15.

Ver. 23. O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness.] The giving up of the city and temple into the hands of the heathen, was a profanation of the peculiar place of God’s residence (see Lam. i. 7). But when the captivity should be restored, and the temple rebuilt, Jerusalem shall enjoy its former privileges, and be called the seat of justice, because there the supreme courts of justice should be re-established (compare Ps. cxxxiii. 5); and the temple shall be styled the “holy mountain,” or place dedicated to God’s service (see the note on ver. 12, and compare Isa. i. 26, Zech. viii. 3).

Ver. 24.] The country shall be inhabited as well as the city (see xxxiii. 12, Isa. lxv. 10).

Ver. 25. I have satiated [or I will satiate] the weary soul.] I will comfort them after their sorrows and afflictions.

Ver. 26.] The words of the prophet, when he re-27 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.

28 And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord.

29 In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

30 But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

31 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord:

33 But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

34 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

35 Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The Lord of hosts is his name:

36 If these ordinances depart from before me,
CHAPTER XXXII.

1 The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;

4 And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Gezith.

6 And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord: it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more for ever.

Ver. 36.] God will preserve a remnant of them where they are led captive, and restore them to their own country and government, as is foretold in several verses of this chapter. He will likewise preserve another remnant at the beginning of the gospel, called the ευαγγελιον, Luke xii. 38, Acts ii. 47, who, by embracing the faith of Christ, should escape those terrible judgments that should be inflicted upon the main body of that nation: and providence doth still continue them in a distinct body from all other people in the world, in order to their conversion in God's due time. To this place St. Paul, speaking of the conversion of the Jews in the latter times, seems to refer, when he saith, "The gifts and calling of God to the Jews are without repentance" (Rom. xi. 29).

Ver. 37. I will also cast off all the seed of Israel Though their sins have deserved that God should utterly reject them, yet, out of a regard to the promises made to their fathers, he will, in due time, receive them to mercy (see Rom. xi. 25, 28).

Ver. 38. The city shall be built to the Lord The following prophecy might, in some sense, be fulfilled, in the rebuilding of the city after the captivity: but I conceive the mystical sense of the words relate to a more perfect state of the church, which is elsewhere called the city of God, and the New Jerusalem:

Ver. 39 And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Gezith.

Ver. 40 And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the cast, shall be holy unto the Lord: it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more for ever.

Ver. 40. The whole valley of the dead bodies, &c. The valley of Tophet, which was made a common burying-place (see vii. 39), and the receptacle of the fifth of the city, even this place shall be cleansed, and set apart as holy unto the Lord. This may be mystically understood of the holiness of the New Jerusalem, when the church shall be thoroughly purged from all corruption (compare Zech. xiv. 20, 21, Joel iii. 17, Isai. li. 1, ix. 21, Rev. xvi. 27).

It shall not be plucked up (see ver. 28), nor thrown down any more. This probably denotes such a settled and immovable state of the church, as is not to be expected in this world (compare Isa. xxxv. 8, li. 16, lii. 1, lx. 15, lxxii. 8).
and there shall be until I visit him, saith the Lord: though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

6 ¶ And Jeremiah said, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth: for the right of redemption is thine to buy it.

8 So Hanameel mine uncle's son came to me in the court of the prison according to the word of the Lord, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord.

9 And I bought the field of Hanameel my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver.

10 And I subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances.

11 So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom, and that which was open:

12 And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle's son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison.

13 ¶ And I charged Baruch before them, saying,

14 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both which is sealed, and this evidence which is open; and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.

15 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land.

16 ¶ Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the Lord, saying,

17 Ah Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee:

18 Thou showest loving kindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: the Great, the Mighty God, the Lord of hosts, is his name, 19 Great in counsel, and mighty in work: for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the purchase itself, like other prophetical signs, was rather a declaration of what should come to pass, than the conveyance of a present benefit: but our margin reads, "Seven shekels, and ten pieces of silver." and the ten pieces may stand for a larger sum than a shekel, as the seventy pieces mentioned Judg. ix. 4, certainly do. The Chaldee paraphrase renders it "Seven minas, and ten shekels of silver: each mina, according to Ezekiel's computation (xl. 12) amounting to sixty common shekels, which is nine pounds sterling, according to Dr. Prideaux's computation: by which number the whole sum amounts to above sixty-four pounds of our money.

Ver. 10. Weighed him the money.] In ancient times all money went by weight (see Gen. xxiii. 16, Zech. xi. 12; a custom still used in several countries.

Ver. 11.] The open or unsealed writing, was either a copy of the sealed deed, or else a certificate of the witnesses in whose presence the deed of purchase was signed and sealed.

Ver. 12. Mine uncle's son.] The word son is not in the Hebrew, but it is to be understood by a usual ellipsis (see Matt. x. 2, 3). But the Hebrew word dod, signifies any relation or near kinsman; see Amos vi. 10, where the Septuagint very properly render it, οικον.

Ver. 14. Put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.] When hid under ground for greater security, to be produced when the land is re-inhabited.

Ver. 17.] This prayer begins with an acknowledgment of God's infinite power, which is made manifest, both in the works of creation and providence, whereby he shows himself wonderful in his mercies, and terrible in his judgments. There is nothing too hard for thee) Or, "hidden from thee," as the Hebrew word literally imports; i.e. out of the reach of thy wisdom to compass, or bring to pass (see the same phrase, Gen. xviii. 14).

Ver. 19. Great in counsel, and mighty in work:
sons of men: to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings:

20 Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; and hast made thee a name, as at this day:

21 And hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with great terror;

22 And hast given them this land, which thou didst swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey;

23 And they came in, and possessed it; but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law; they have done nothing of all that thou commandedst them to do: therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them:

24 Behold the mountains, they are come unto the city to take it: and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans, that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it.

25 And thou hast said unto me, O Lord God, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 ¶ Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 27 Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there any thing too hard for me?

28 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar, king of Babylon, and he shall take it:

29 And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come and set fire on this city, and burn it with the houses, upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink-offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger.

30 For the children of Israel and the children of Judah have only done evil before me from their youth: for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the Lord.

31 For this city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger and of my fury from the day that they built it even unto this day; that I should remove it from before my face,

32 Because of all the evil of the children of Israel and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger, they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

33 And they have turned unto me the back, and not the face: though I taught them, rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction.

34 But they set their abominations in the house, which is called by my name, to defile it.

35 And they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass selves to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin (see 2 Chron. xxix. 24, xxx. 1, 11, 15, xxxiv. 33, Ezra vi. 17).

Done evil before me] See ii. 7, 25, vii. 23, 28, xxii. 21).

Ver. 31. From the day that they built it] Or, "that it was built," the personal being often used for the impersonal (see the note upon Isa. xlv. 15). David was the builder of that part of Jerusalem that is called Zion, therefore styled the "city of David" (see 2 Sam. vi. 9). He likewise enlarged the whole city of Jerusalem, making it the seat of the kingdom: for which reason Jerusalem is sometimes called the "city of David" (see Isa. xxix. 1). But we do not read that idolatry, the sin here spoken of, was committed there in David's time: so that the expression seems to be hyperbolical, like that of Isa. xlvii. 8, where God, speaking of the Jews' proclivity to idolatry, saith, "Thou wast called a transgressor from the womb: the meaning from the very time of their living in Egypt (compare Ezek. xx. 8, xxxii. 3, 19, 27). If we take the words in a stricter sense, they must be understood of the times of Solomon, who beautified the city with the temple, and other stately buildings, but afterward defiled it by idolatry (see 1 Kings xi. 7, compared with 2 Kings xxiv. 13).

That I should remove it from before my face.] I should withdraw my protection from it (see 2 Kings xxii. 27, xxiv. 3).

Ver. 32.] See ii. 8, 26.

Ver. 33. Turned unto me the back.] See ii. 27.

Rising up early, &c.] See vii. 13.

Ver. 34.] See note on vii. 30, 31.

Ver. 35. High places of Baal.] See note on xix. 5.
To pass through the fire] The words "through the fire" are not in the Hebrew; but in other places which speak of the same thing, the words are expressed at full length (see Deut. xviii. 10, 2 Kings xxiii. 10). Elsewhere, the same thing is expressed by "burning their sons and their daughters in the fire," and "offering them for burnt-offerings:" see vii. 18, xix. 5 of this prophecy. Deut. xvi. 21. The idolatrous Jews are often upbraided with the practice of this inhuman rite (see Ps. civ. 37, Isa. lvii. 5). And the phrase of making children pass through the fire, is certainly taken in this sense, Ezek. xvi. 20, 21, xxiii. 37, where it is explained by slaying them, sacrificing them, and giving them to be devoured. But some critics are of opinion, that the exposition is taken in a milder sense in other texts, particularly 2 Kings xvi. 3, and denotes only holding children over the fire, or making them pass through the flame, by way of lustration or dedication to some idol. To confirm this interpretation, they observe, that the verb henebir, used in the text, signifies to dedicate, or consecrate (see Exod. xii. 12). See the reasons on which this interpretation is grounded, at large expressed by Dr. Spencer, De Legih. Hebr. ii. cap. 10, sect. 2.

Which I commanded them not.] See vii. 31.

Ver. 36. And now therefore thus saith the Lord.] In this and the following verses, God gives an answer to the doubt proposed by the prophet, ver. 25. Or the words may be thus translated, "But now, notwithstanding [all this], thus saith the Lord." So the particle taken is often taken (see note on xvi. 14). In these verses, and in the following ones, God speaks to the prophet, by the mouth of himself, as if he were present with him, and the terms which he employeth for that purpose, show that God himself pronounced these words. The prophet stands not in the same capacity as in the preceding verses, nor doth he take any part in the design of proclaiming them. Those words are addressed to the people, and not to the prophet. (See ver. 35. 36.)

Ver. 37. I will gather them.] See xxiii. 8, xxix. 14. I will cause them to dwell safely.] Compare xxiii. 4.

St. Jerome observes in his notes upon the place, that this promise, taken in its full extent, was not made good to those that returned from captivity, because they were frequently infested with wars, as well by the kings of Syria and Egypt, as by the rest of the Gentiles. On the contrary, as appears from the history of the Maccabees, and were finally subdued and destroyed by the Romans.

Ver. 38. They shall be my people.] See xxx. 22.

Ver. 39. This must be understood, at least as to its ultimate completion, of the reunion of Judah and Israel after the general restoration (see the note on iii. 15, xxx. 3). When the ten tribes are taken up a distinct kingdom from that of Judah, they stood divided, not only in their civil interests, but also with respect to their religious worship. These distinctions, God would never have thought of giving up, nor any thing that was most foreign to his nature. But God would not only give to the Jewish tribes a kingdom of their own, but give it to them as God's people, so that they should be distinguished from the Gentiles by a peculiar external mark of distinction. How thankful, therefore, should we be, who are God's people by nature, to be distinguished in the same manner from the Gentiles, by an external mark! The Jews themselves, who had lost the character of God's people, would be restored to it, and their nation would be a consecrated people, and the temple a holy temple.

To do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.

Ver. 41. Ye shall rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul.

Ver. 42. For thus saith the Lord: Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them.

Ver. 43. And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

Ver. 44. Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses; in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord.

To be desolate without man or beast.] Words spoken by the Jews, by way of despair, as if they had no hopes that their land should ever be inhabited again. The land would be as good yet as if they had never been possessed of it.

Ver. 44. In the land of Benjamin.] See xxvii. 26. I will cause their captivity to return.] The return of their captivity under Cyrus shall be an earnest of those greater blessings I will bestow upon them at their general restoration (compare ver. 37, 41, xxxiii. 7, 26).
CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the second time, while he was yet shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord the maker thereof, the Lord that formed it, to establish it; the Lord is his name;

3 Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not.

4 For thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, that are thrown down by the mounts, and by the sword;

5 They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

7 And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first.

8 And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.

9 ¶ And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it.

10 Thus saith the Lord; Again there shall be splendour. And, De Dieu renders the words thus, "The Chaldeans come to fight, and to fill," &c., and he proves, by several instances, that the Hebrew particle eth sometimes goes before a nominative case: a plain instance of which syntax is to be seen, xxxvi. 22 (see likewise Noldus's Concordance, p. 121).

Ver. 6. I will bring it health and cure.] I will restore this place to its former prosperity, and deliver it out of that calamitous state into which the sins of the inhabitants have brought it (compare xxx. 12, 13, 17).

Ver. 7. I will cause the captivity of Judah and—Israel to return.] See the note on xxx. 3.

And will build] Comp. xxiv. 6, xxxi. 4, 28, xliii. 10.

Ver. 8.] I will not impute their sins any longer to them, but remit the punishments I have inflicted upon them for their iniquities. The word cleanse may be here taken in a legal sense for acquitting or "pronouncing clean," as the word is translated, Ley, xiii. 28. In the same sense, the Greek verbs ἄφησαν and ἠθετήσαν (which answer to the Hebrew tahar in the text) are used by St. Paul and St. John, for taking away the guilt of sin (see Heb. ix. 12, 14, xiii. 14, 1 John i. 7, 9). The whole verse implies that general promise of pardon of sins which is elsewhere spoken of, as the peculiar blessing of the gospel (compare xxxi. 34, Ezek. xxxvi. 25).

Ver. 9. It shall be—a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth.] God's especial providence over the Jews, in restoring their city and temple, shall be taken notice of by the heathen world, and make them give glory to that God whom they worship (See Ezra i. 2, vi. 12). To the same sense God is said to make "Jerusalem a praise in the earth" (Isa. lxx. 1), i. e. the subject of men's praise and admiration, the glory of which redounds to God, who is her protector. This promise is more signally fulfilled in the Christian church, which the heathens resorted to, as the seat and temple of truth (see Isa. ii. 3, Zech. viii. 21, 29).

They shall fear and tremble for all the goodness—that I procure unto it.] These surprising effects of my goodness shall produce an astonishment like that which arises from fear (compare Ps. cxxxix. 14, Isa. lx. 5).

heard in this place, which ye say shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate, without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast;

12 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be an habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down.

13 In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the Lord.

14 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah.

15 ¶ In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.

16 In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name whereby she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness.

17 ¶ For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel:

18 Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually.

19 ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying,

20 Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season;

21 Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son and sanctification, is derived from him. This seems to be the genuine sense of the words, as may appear to any that will compare the original phrase here, "Yikkare tah," with Isa. lxii. 4, 12, where it is said of Zion, the person only being changed, "Thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah," and "Sought out." Nor is there any greater impropriety in giving the name of Jehovah to a city, than in calling an altar Jehovah-nissi (Exod. xvii. 15), and Jehovah-shalom (Judg. vi. 24), in token that the Lord was author of those mercies, of which the said altars were designed to be monuments. So the servants of God are described in the Revelation, as having his name written upon their forehead (Rev. iii. 12, xiv. 1). But several interpreters, particularly Huetius (De monar. Evang. prop. vii. cap. 16), and our learned Bishop Pearson, in the notes upon his Exposition of the Creed, p. 165, render the words thus, "He that shall call her [to be his peculiar people] is the Lord our righteousness."

Ver. 17.] The promise of perpetuity made to David's kingdom shall be fulfilled in Christ, "whose kingdom shall have no end." (see 2 Sam. vii. 16, Ps. lxix. 29, 36, Luke i. 32, 33).

Ver. 18.] This, as it may be applied to the Christian church, imports that there shall never want a succession of men set apart to God's service, to perform the public offices of religion. As the prophets often describe the Christian worship, by representations taken from the temple-service, and speak of the day as succeeding the other (see the notes on Isa. xix. 10, lxi. 7, lxiv. 3), so the apostles prove the rights and privileges belonging to the ministers of the gospel, from the prerogatives given to the Jewish priesthood (see Rom. xv. 16, 1 Cor. ix. 13. 14). The phrase "to stand before me," is explained in the note upon xv. 1.

Ver. 20.] My covenant of the day.] Called the ordinances of the day and night, xxix. 35, 36.

Ver. 21.] The words contain a promise, that the kingdom and priesthood shall always continue in the church. For as Christ's "kingdom shall have no end," so the saints that shall reign with Christ in

1 The word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth of his dominion, and all the people, fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities thereof, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; Go and speak to Zedekiah king of Judah, and tell him, Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire:

3 And thou shalt not escape out of his hand, but shalt surely be taken, and delivered into his hand; and thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth, and thou shalt go to Babylon.

CHAP. XXXIV.

ARGUMENT.—The king of Babylon and his army threatening to besiege Jerusalem (which gave occasion to the prophecy related at the beginning of the chapter), the Jews, being terrified under these apprehensions, entered into a solemn covenant of serving God, and obeying his laws: particularly that which enjoined them to let their servants go free after six years' service (Exod. xxi. 2, Deut. xv. 12). But the king of Egypt coming with an army to the relief of Zedekiah, and thereupon Nebuchadnezzar raising the siege of Jerusalem to march against him (see ver. 21, and xxxvii. 5): their present fears being over, the people repented of their reformation, and made their servants, whom they had set at liberty, return into bondage again, contrary to the law of God, and the covenant they themselves had lately agreed to. For which inhuman and unjust act, Jeremiah proclaims liberty to the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, to execute God's vengeance upon them.

to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers.

22 As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.

23 Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying,

24 Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them.

25 Thus saith the Lord; If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth;

26 Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abrahams, Isane, and Jacob: for I will cause their capvity to return, and have mercy on them.

And afterward in Jehosaphat's time, it appears from the muster-roll, that the soldiers in the kingdom of Judah only amounted to eleven hundred thousand (see 2 Chron. xvii. 14, &c.).

Ver. 24.] By the two families are meant the tribes or families of Judah and Levi, mentioned ver. 22 (compare Zech. xii. 13, 18). The words are spoken by those who thought the Jews would never be restored to their former condition, or again enjoy their ancient government in church and state. [The expression may more probably denote the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah (see ver. 26, and compare Ezek. xxxviii. 16, &c.). The word family is equiv-lent to kingdom (see the note upon i. 15): so it is used, Micah ii. 3.]

Ver. 25, 26. The ordinances of heaven and earth, &c. i. e. The vice versa of day and night, and of summer and winter, upon which the seasons of the year, and fruitfulness of the earth depend (see xxxi. 36).

kings of Judah: Thus saith the Lord of thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword:
5 But thou shalt die in peace: and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so they shall burn odours for thee; and they will lament thee, saying, Ah lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the Lord.
6 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem, 7 When the king of Babylon's army fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish, and against Azekah: for these defenced cities remained of the cities of Judah.
8 ¶ This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim liberty unto them:
9 That every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother.
10 Now when all the princes, and all the people, which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant and his maid-servant—go free; they consented, I say, and let them go." Concerning the princes, see the notes on xxvi. 10, xxxvi. 12, xxxviii. 4.
11] Upon the king of Egypt's advancing with many ships to help the king of Jerusalem (see ver. 21, and xxxviii. 5).
12 ¶ Therefore the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,
13 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying,
14 At the end of seven years let ye go every man his brother an Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear.
15 And ye were now turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour; and ye had made a covenant before me in the house which is called by my name:
16 But ye turned and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their

Ver. 5. Thou shalt die in peace:] By a natural death.
So shall they burn odours for thee:] It was customary among the Jews at the funeral of their kings, especially of those whose memory they honoured, to prepare a bed of spices, as it is called, 9 Chron. xvi. 14, which they made a perfume of by burning them, and therein to deposit the body of the deceased prince (compare the formentioned place with 2 Chron. xxi. 19).
They will lament over thee:] In these and the foregoing words, God promises Zedekiah an honourable interment, and suitable to his quality: a favour he did not vouchsafe to Jehoiakim (see xxii. 18).

Ver. 7. Lackish, and—Azekah:] Compare 2 Kings xviii. 13, xix. 8. Those two cities were not far from Jerusalem, and had been fortified by Rehoboam for the defence of his kingdom (see 1 Chron. xi. 9.)
Ver. 8. Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people:] See the argument of the chapter. Archbishop Usher supposes, that this covenant was entered into at the beginning of the year, which he computes to be a sabbatical year, upon the first news of the king of Babylon's intended invasion: whereas the Chaldean army did not actually besiege Jerusalem, till the latter end of the year, as hath been observed upon ver. 1 (see Annales V. T. ad. A. M. 3414)
To proclaim liberty unto them:] That they should grant liberty to all their servants, who had served them six years. The seventh is called "the year of release," Deut. xv. 9, the same was also the sabbatical year, Lev. xxv. 4. This week or circle of years, the Jews called sheanithah, and seven times seven years, i.e. forty-nine years, make the jubilee, when a general liberty was proclaimed throughout the land (Lev. xxv. 8, 10).

Ver. 10.] The verse may be thus translated, "And all the princes—consented that every one should let pleasure, to return, and brought them into subsection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids.

17 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour; behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Lord, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed to into all the kingdoms of the earth.

18 And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof.

19 The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all obey his laws in general, and this concerning giving freedom to their servants in particular.

Ver. 17. Proclaiming liberty.] Though you made proclamation of such a liberty, yet you have not performed it.

I proclaim a liberty for you,—to the sword.] I will now make public proclamation, or declare that I give free commission and liberty for the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, to invade and make havoc among you (see xxxii. 34, 35). These judgments shall lay the land desolate, whereby it "shall enjoy its sabbaths," which you would not suffer it to do, as long as you dwelt upon it (see Lev. xxvi. 34, 35).
The expressions here used do farther import, that these calamities come upon men, by direction and commission from God, as the executioners of his justice (compare Ezek. xiv. 17).

I will make you to be removed.] See xxxiv. 9.

Ver. 18—20. When they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof.] Implying by that ceremony, that they wished themselves might be cut in sunder, in like manner, if they broke their solemn vow and promise. The same rite was used in ancient times, and appears from Gen. xv. 10, and carried down to after-ages, as may be seen in those forms recorded by Livy: "Tu Jupiter popuorum, sic ferito, ut ego humo agnum," lib. i. cap.

24, and lib. xxi. cap. 35, "Si falleret, Jovem cesterosque precatus Deos, sic saeculorum, quemadmodam ipse agnum mactasset." So the Greeks in Homer, when they had entered into a solemn league or agreement with the Trojans, to put an end to the war, by the single combat of Paris and Menelaus, at the pouring out the wine upon their sacrifice, make the like imprecation upon those who did not observe their part of the treaty in that remarkable passage, Iliad, i. ver. 298.

The sense of which a late English translation thus expresses,

Almighty Jove, and all ye other powers,

Whoever first shall dare to break this treaty,

May their warm blood be poured upon the earth,

As is this wine,—

I The word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying, of the Lord, into one of the chambers, and give never were incorporated with the Jewish nation (see below, ver. 7); but yet were looked upon as their friends and allies (see 1 Sam. xv. 6); and a respect was paid to them for the sake of Habob, Moses's father-in-law, who was of that nation (Judg. iv. 11).

They were worshippers of the true God, though they were not circumcised (see the following verse, and 2 Kings x. 13, 16).

Bring them into the house of the Lord.] Into one of the chambers which join the temple (see ver. 4).
By this it appears that the Rechabites were not idolaters, for it was not lawful for such persons to come within the precincts of the temple.

Ver. 4. Into the chamber of—Hanan.] There were several chambers adjoining to the temple, for the use of the priests and Levites, during the time of their ministration; and as repositories for laying up the

CHAP. XXXV

ARGUMENT.—By the obedience of the Rechabites to their fathers' commands, the Jews' disobedience to God's commands is condemned.

Ver. 1.] This may most probably be referred to the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign, when Nebuchadnezzar, having beaten the king of Egypt's army at Ephorus (see xlvi. 2), marched towards Syria and Palestine, to recover those provinces again which the king of Egypt had conquer'd (see 2 Kings xxvii. 30, 94, compared with xxiv. 7): in which expedition he laid siege to Jerusalem (see Dan. i. 1, and ver. 11, of this chapter).

Ver. 2. Rechabites.] The Rechabites were de-cended from the Kenites (1 Chron. ii. 55): they the son of Habaziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites; 4 And I brought them into the house of the Lord, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maseiah the son of Shallum, the keeper of the door: 5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them. Drink ye wine. 6 But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons for ever: 7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers. 8 Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters; 9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed: 10 But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us. 11 But it came to pass, when Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians; so we dwelt at Jerusalem.

holy vestments and vessels, and whatever stores were necessary for the daily sacrifices, and the other parts of the temple-service (compare xxxvi. 10, 1 Kings vi. 5, 1 Chron. ix. 27, 30).

Which was by the chamber of the princes. [Where the Sanhedrin, or great council, used to assemble (see xxvi. 10). The Sanhedrin always sat in some great room adjoining to the temple (see Dr. Lightfoot's description of the temple, chap. 9, 22).]

Above the chamber of Maseiah—keeper of the door. [i. e. One of the keepers: for there were several Levites appointed for that office, both to open and shut the gates of the temple in due time, and likewise to attend at them all day, for preventing anything that might happen to the prejudice of the purity or safety of that holy place (see 1 Chron. ix. 15, 19, xxvi. 12, 13, &c., 2 Chron. viii. 14, 2 Kings xii. 9, xxv. 15). Some of these officers had likewise the custody of the holy vessels (see Lii. 24, 1 Chron. ix. 26).]

Ver. 6.] Jonadab was a considerable man of this family (see 2 Kings x. 15): and his design was to reduce his family to the primitive manner of life, which was that of shepherds, living in tents, being in an habituation, and taking care only for a supply of what was barely necessary to support nature. These rules he might probably give them, to put them in mind that they were strangers in Judea, and had no original right of inheritance there (see the following verse). Such voluntary austerities, in aftertimes, came into great repute among several sects of the Jews, particularly the Pharisees and Essenes (see Joseph. de Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. 7).]

Ver. 8.] We have conformed ourselves to his injunctions, and governed our lives by them, during the space of near three hundred years.

Ver. 11. When Nebuchadrezzar—came up into the land.] If the words be understood of his coming with an army in person, then they must refer to his invading Judea, in the fourth year of his reign (see the cases on ver. 1). For fear of the army of the Syrians.] Berosus mentions Nebuchadrezzar's conquest over Syria and Phenice, as he is quoted by Josephus (lib. i. contra Apion. p. 1045. B). Out of these conquests he probably recruited his army. So we dwell at Jerusalem.] Upon the Chaldean invasion we retired to Jerusalem, where, during the siege of the place, we are forced to continue. In such a case, they did not think themselves obliged to a strict observance of the injunctions of Jonadab; because all human laws admit of an equitable construction, and may be superseded in cases of necessity; or when the observance of them is attended with such great inconveniences, as the law-maker himself, if he could have foreseen, would probably have excepted.

Ver. 15. I have sent—prophets.] See xxv. 4.

Ver. 19. Jonadab—shall not want a man to stand before me] When the main body of the Jewish nation are dispersed in their several captivities, some of that family shall remain to attend upon my service, and enjoy the privileges of worshipping in my temple at Jerusalem (compare vii. 10). Some branches of this family returned from the captivity, as appears from 1 Chron. ii. 55. Benjamin Tadulensis, who lived in CHAPTER XXXVI.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Jonadab the son of Rechab, shalt not want a man to stand before me for ever.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 And it came to pass in the fourth year of Jehoiakin the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, from the days of Josiah, even unto this day.

3 It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin.

4 Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah; and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon the roll of a book.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying,

I am shut up: I cannot go into the house of the Lord:

6 Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the Lord in the ears of the people in the Lord's house upon the fasting-day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.

7 It may be they will present their supplication before the Lord, and will return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the fury that the Lord hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the Lord in the Lord's house.

9 And it came to pass in the fifth year of Jehoiakin the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the and using such methods, as in human probability may be most likely to prevail [compare vii. 6].

Those and such-like expressions do likewise import, that God's foreknowledge of future events doth not put any force upon men's will, nor take away the liberty of human actions, as Origen hath acutely observed, in his Philocele, cap. 29.

Ver. 5. I am shut up. [1] He was under confinement, probably for having given offence to the king, or the great men, by his prophecies. A calamity which often befell him (see xx. 2, xxxii. 3, xxxvii. 18, xxxviii. 6).

Ver. 6. Go thou and read— in the ears of the people. [2] The prophets usually published their sermons in the audience of the people (see vii. 2, xi. 6, xvii. 20): which were afterward delivered in writing for common use: as the law itself was written for that purpose, as God tells the Israelites by his prophet Hosen, viii. 12.

Upon the fasting-day. [3] The great day of expiation, which was kept upon the tenth day of the seventh month (Lev. xxiii. 27, 29), called by way of eminence the fast, Acts xxvii. 9.

In the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities. [4] Who came to the feast of tabernacles, which followed five days afterward (Lev. xxvii. 34).

Ver. 9. They proclaimed a fast. It was customary among the Jews to proclaim anniversary fasts upon certain days, in memory of some great calamities which had befallen them at that time. Of this kind were the fasts of the fourth, fifth, seventh, and tenth months, mentioned Zech. vii. 5, viii. 19. The first instituted in remembrance of the city's being taken by Nebuchadnezzar: the second in memory of the temple's being burnt in that month: the third for the murder of Gedaliah: the fourth in memory of the ninth month, that they proclaimed a fast before the Lord to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the Lord, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house, in the ears of all the people.

11 And when Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the Lord, 12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber: and, lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elphanan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes.

13 Then Michaiah declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people.

14 Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thine hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in his hand, and came unto them.

15 And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears.

16 Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words.

siege then begun. The fast mentioned in the text, was occasioned by the taking of the city by Nebuchadnezzar at that time, in the fourth year of Je-hoakim, as Archbishop Usher conjectures, ad A. M. 3393, 3399 (see the note on xxxvi. 1).

Ver. 10. Then read Baruch in the book] This was the second time of Baruch's reading this book, almost a year after the first reading of it (ver. 6). In the higher court. There were two courts before the temple (see 2 Kings xxii. 5); the higher court was that of the priests; between which and the court of the Israelites there was only a partition: but this whole platform was parted from the court of the women, by a wall, and an ascent of fifteen steps. From whence some derive the title of a Song of Degrees, which is given to the hundred and twentieth Psalm, and those that follow to the hundred and thirty-second (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 20).

At the entry of the new gate] See xxvi. 10.

Ver. 11.] Shaphan's family were all great men at court (see the note on xxvi. 24).

Ver. 12. All the princes sat there.] The chief officers of state, who were probably members also of the great Sanhedrin (see xxvi. 16, xxxviii. 4).

17 And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth?

18 Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book.

19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah; and let no man know where ye be.

20 And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Eli-shama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the winter-house in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless Elhanan and Deliah and Gemariah had made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll: but he would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of Hammelech, and Seraiath the son of Az-rieh and Shelemiah the son of Abedil, to take Baruch the scribe and Jeremiah the prophet: but the Lord hid them.

27 ¶ Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah, saying, 28 Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim the king of Judah, Thus saith the Lord: Thou hast burned this roll, saying Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

Ver. 30. The Lord hid them.] By the direction of providence, they were concealed in such a place where they were not discovered.

Ver. 39, Thou shalt say to Jehoiakim] Or, of Jehoiakim, so the expression is translated, ver. 30. For this command seems to have been given to Jeremiah during the time of his concealment.

Ver. 40. This probably was part of the message which was to have been delivered to Jeremiah by the king's command, if he could have been found.

Ver. 30. He shall have none to sit upon the throne] A prophecy foretold by Jeremiah, that no son of Josiah should succeed to the throne of Judah.

Ver. 30. None of his seed shall prosper, sitting on the throne of David,] as God threatens his son Jehoiakim.

Ver. 30. Therefore thus saith the Lord of Jehoiakim king of Judah: He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.

31 And I will punish him and his seed and his servants for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them; but they hearkened not.

32 ¶ Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 AND king Zedekiah the son of Josiah reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

2 But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the Lord, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah.

3 And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the scribes to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the Lord our God for us.

4 Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people: for they had not put him into prison.

CHAP. XXXVII.

5 Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt; and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Then came the word of the Lord unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying,

7 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to enquire of me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land.

8 And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire.

9 Thus saith the Lord; Deceive not your-

Ver. 3. The king sent—Zephaniah] See xxii. 1.

Ver. 4. They had not put him into prison.] As they did afterward (see ver. 15, and xxxvi. 2).

Ver. 5. Zedekiah, contrary to the oath that he had given to Nebuchadrezzar, made an alliance with the king of Egypt, and contracted with him for assistance against the king of Babylon: whereupon the king of Egypt sent an army to his relief (see Ezek. xvii. 15); which obliged the Chaldeans to raise the siege of Jerusalem, that they might go and fight this army.

Ver. 7. Pharaoh's army—shall return to Egypt.] They shall be confounded by the Chaldeans, and forced to retreat without giving any assistance to Zedekiah (see 2 Kings xxiv. 7, Ezek. xvii. 17).

Ver. 8.] See xxxiv. 22.

Ver. 10.] God himself will fight against you, so selves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart.

10 For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was broken up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army;

12 Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of Benjamin, to separate himself thence in the midst of the people.

13 And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Thou farewell away to the Chaldeans.

14 ¶ Then said Jeremiah, It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him; so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15 Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe: for they had made that the prison.

16 ¶ When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabinets, and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

17 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out: and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the Lord? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land!

20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there.

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

that there will be no need of any opposition from your enemies (compare xxii. 4, 5).

Ver. 12. Land of Benjamin," To Anathoth (see i. 1).

To separate himself thence in the midst of the people.] Or rather, "from the midst of his people," or "from among his people:" for the preposition min is to be taken as belonging in common to the latter part of the sentence. And so the French translation, published for the use of the reformed churches, understands it to this sense, that Jeremiah purposed to leave the city, and retire into his own country.

Ver. 13. When he was in the gate of Benjamin.] The gate that leads towards the country of Benjamin.

Irijah,—the son of Hananiah.] Probably of that Hananiah whose death Jeremiah foretold, xxvii. 17. So this nephew of his thought to revenge his grandfather's quarrel.

Thou farewell away to the Chaldeans.] Compare xxviii. 4. The ground of this accusation was, because the prophet had foretold that they should take the city, and had exhorted the Jews to submit to them (see ver. 10 of this chapter, xxvii. 6, &c. xxviii. 14, xxxiv. 2, 9).

Ver. 14. It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans.] His foretelling the calamity that should come upon the nation, by the means of the Chaldeans, did not prove him to take their part, because at the same time he gave advice both to king and people, how they, in some measure, might escape the judgments he had denounced against them (xxii. 2, 3, xxxviii. 17, xviii. 11, xxxvi. 3, and the note upon iv. 28).

Brought him to the princes.] To the chief officers of state (see xxxvi. 12).

Ver. 16. When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon.] See xxxviii. 9.

Had remained there many days: ] Till the Chaldean army had renewed the siege (see ver. 19).

Ver. 19. Where are now your prophets i. e. Your false prophets (compare xxxvi. 7, xxix. 1). The event hath now convinced you how much they have deceived you: for you see the siege renewed, and the city in imminent danger of being taken.

Ver. 21. Into the court of the prison.] A more favourable restraint (see xxxvi. 2).

Until all the bread in the city were spent.] Till the famine forced the city to surrender (see li. 6). This was the king's first order, but afterward it was reversed, by the importance of the princes and great men (xxxviii. 6), when Jeremiah was again thrown into the dungeon: though after that he was released from that place, and returned to his former confinement (ibid. ver. 29).

ARGUMENT.—Upon the princes' informing the king against Jeremiah, he is again thrown into the dungeon: but afterward released, upon Ebed-melech's heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying, div in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is: for there is no more bread in the city.

10 Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon, before he die.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

12 And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine arm-holes under the cords: And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 ¶ Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the third entry that is in the house of the Lozn: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?

16 So Zedekiah the king sware secretly unto event of the siege (see xxxvii. 3, xxi. 1, 9). The answer which Jeremiah returned by them to the king, he afterward published to all the people, which was the occasion of the new troubles he fell into, recorded in this chapter.

Ver. 4. The princes said] See xxxvi. 12, 21.

For thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war] By making them despair of success.

Ver. 5. The king speaks as one who in such difficult times durst not contradict the great men about him: or else his answer implies, that it was properly the business of the Sanhedrin to take cognizance of the prophets (see Luke xix. 33, and Selden, De Synedris, lib. iii. cap. 9, n. 1).

Ver. 6. Into the dungeon of Malchiah] Near the place where he was before, under a more gentle restraint (see xxxii. 2, xxxvii. 21).

So Jeremiah sunk in the mire.] Some think that when he was in this dismal place, he made those mournful meditations which are set down in the third chapter of the Lamentations (see the fifty-third and fifty-fifth verses of that chapter).

Ver. 7. Now when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian,] Huetius, in his Treatise De Navigatione Solomonis, cap. 7, n. 7, observes out of Josephus, that Solomon, in his voyage to Tarshish, mentioned 1 Kings x. 22, amongst other merchandise, brought slaves from Ethiopia: which was likewise the practice of the Greeks and Romans in aftertimes, as he there proves by several testimonies: such a slave he supposed this Ebed-melech to have been, called here a eunuch, or officer of the king's house (compare xxix. 2, xxxiv. 19). In the Hebrew he is called the Cuzite, which may likewise signify the Arabian (see the note on xiii. 25).

The king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin.] Princes and magistrates usually heard causes in the gates of the city (see Deut. xxi. 19, xxii. 15, Ruth iv. 1, 11, Ps. lxxix. 12, Amos, v. 10, 12, 15). Concerning the gate of Benjamin, see xxxvii. 13.

Ver. 9. These men have done evil] This person, though only a proselyte, had a greater regard for God's word, and the messenger that published it, than any of the great men of his own nation (see xxxix. 15).

[Whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger] They needed not to have put him into the dungeon, he would have died of hunger, without adding the cruelty of that punishment.

There is no more bread] See xxxvii. 21, lli. 6.

Ver. 14. Then Zedekiah—took Jeremiah—into the third entry that is in [or by] the house of the Lord.] Dr. Lightfoot explains this of the third passage or gate which lay between the king's palace, where the prison was, and the temple, whither the king now retreated for fear of the Chaldean army (see his description of the temple, ch. 38).

Ver. 15. If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death?] The prophet had so much experience of the unstendness of the king's temper, of his backwardness in following good counsel, and want of courage to stand by those that durst advise him well, that he might with good reason resolve not to venture his life to serve a man that was in a manner incapable of being directed. And although God had shown him what would be the effect of his advice, if it were followed (ver. 17), yet it doth not appear that he had commanded him to make this known to Zedekiah.

Wilt thou not hearken unto me?] The latter part of the sentence may be translated without an interrogation, "thou wilt not hearken unto me." So the prophet might well conclude from his former behavior (see xxxvii. 2). If we follow our English Jeremiah, saying, "As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life."

17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; if thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house:

18 But if thou wilt not go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then shalt this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire; and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews which are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me.

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.

21 But if thou refuse to go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire; and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

22 And, behold, all the words that were in the king of Judah's house shall be published unto the king of Babylon's princes, and those women shall say, Thy friends have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back.

23 So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans; and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and thou shalt cause this city to be burned with fire.

24 ¶ Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house to die there.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So they left off speaking with him: for the matter was not perceived.

28 So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

translation, the sense is the same as if the words were rendered, "Wilt thou hearken unto me?" Noldius observes in his Concordance, p. 256, that the negative indication hath, is sometimes equivalent to an affirmative; of which he gives this example (1 Kings i. 11), "Nathan spake unto Bathsheba, saying,—Hast thou not heard that Adonijah doth reign?" Where the sense is the same as if he had said, "Hast thou heard?" See a like instance, Zech. iv. 13. This observation will help to explain that difficult place in Job (iv. 6), "Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways?" So interpreters generally render the words: but the sense would be much plainer, if we translate them, "Is this thy fear?" &c. i. e. Are thy great praises to pity, and thy assurance of God's favour, of so little force, that they cannot afford thee any support in thy troubles? To this sense the Vulgar Latin translates the verse, Ubi est timor tua, fortitudo tua, &c.

Ver. 16. As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul, i. e. The author of our life and being, and may be preserve it or take it away as I speak truth or falsehood. For such-like occasions had always some good or ill wish understood to go along with them; like that form of asseveration, 2 Kings ii. 2, &c. As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth; or "As I wish thy soul may live:" for so the expression may be translated.

Ver. 17. The king of Babylon's princes. Those mentioned, xxxviii. 3, and submit thyself to them. For such-like as the bad always some good or ill wish understood to go along with them; like that form of asseveration, 2 Kings ii. 2, &c. As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth; or "As I wish thy soul may live:" for so the expression may be translated.

Ver. 18. Thou shalt not escape. See xxxix. 5.

Ver. 19. They mock me. When I am in the power of the Chaldeans, I fear that they will treat me with scorn and contempt, without any regard to my royal character. This he said as conscious to himself, that he had broken that oath of homage and fidelity he had before given to the king of Babylon, so that he might justly be treated as a man of no faith or honour (see note on xxxvii. 5).

Ver. 20. God foresees all possible events, and what will be the different success of the several counsels men propose to themselves.

Ver. 21. This is the word. Namely, that both the king and city shall be delivered into the hand of the Chaldeans (see ver. 18).

Ver. 22. All the women that are left in the king of Judah's house, &c. The king's wives, his daughters, and the other women that belong to the king's court and family, shall become a prey to the chief officers of the king of Babylon's army (see xli. 10, xliii. 6).

Those women shall say, Thy friends have set thee on. These very women shall then reproach thee for having suffered thyself to be ensnared by the ill advice of thy friends, and brought under insuperable difficulties.

They are turned away back. Even thy friends, who advised thee not to submit to the Chaldeans, will forsake thee in thy distress, and take the first opportunity of going over to them.

Ver. 24. Keep what hath passed between us secret, and I will keep my promise to thee of preserving thy life (see ver. 16).

Ver. 25. Jeremiah had been formerly kept prisoner there (xxxvii. 15). But the last time he was imprisoned was in the dungeon of Hammelech (ver. 6 of this chapter); a place which at this time might, perhaps, be put to some other use.

Ver. 26. He told them according to all these words. He told them part of the truth, but not all, concealing from them the advice he had given the king, with relation to the questions he had proposed to him.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 In the ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

2 And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up.

3 And all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo, Sarsechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fied, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls: and he went out the way of the plain.

5 But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him.

6 Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah.

CHAP. XXXIX.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains an account of the taking and burning Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, who also took Zedekiah, and carried him to Babylon: but had particular orders from their king to use Jeremiah well, who a little before had, by God's direction, made a promise to Ebed-melech, of the divine favour and protection, as a reward of the kindness he had shown to the prophet.

Ver. 1.] See lii. 4, 2 Kings xxv. 1, 2.

Ver. 2, The city was broken up.] Such breaches were made in the walls, that the army of the Chaldeans, with their commanders, entered, and took possession of the city (see the following verse).

Ver. 3. Sat in the middle gate.] The gate between the wall that encompassed the city, and that which enclosed the temple.

Even Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo.] It was customary among the Chaldeans to give the names of their idols, as an additional title, or mark of honour, to persons of distinction (see the note on Isa. xxxix. 1). Nergal was the name of an idol among the Chaldees (2 Kings xvii. 30). Nebu was a considerable deity among the Chaldeans (Isa. xlv. 1).

[Ver. 4, When Zedekiah— saw them, and all the men of war.] When the king, and the armed men that were with him, saw that the Chaldeans were entered into the city, and had made themselves masters of it; instead of submitting himself to them, as Jeremiah advised him (xxxviii. 17, 18), he endeavoured to make his escape.

Betwixt the two walls.] Betwixt the wall and the outworks: or betwixt the old wall of the city, and that new one which Hezekiah built (see 2 Chron. xxxvii. 9).

Ver. 5, Plains of Jericho.] Compare Josh. v. 10.

7 Moreover he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with chains, to carry him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

9 Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.

11 ¶ Now Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon gave charge concerning Jeremiah to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, 12 Take him, and look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

13 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard sent, and Nebushashban, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes:

14 Even they sent, and took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan,

This is called the "way of the plain," or wilderness, Josh. vii. 15, and the "plain of the wilderness," 2 Sam. xv. 28, xvii. 16, and elsewhere the "wilderness of Judah." (see Matt. iii. 1).

To Riblah.] See the note on xlix. 23. Most interpreters suppose this city to be the same which was called Antioch, in after times, when it was re-edified by Seleucus. In this sense the Jerusalem Targum, upon Numb. xxxix. 11, understands the word.

Where he gave judgment upon him.] Pronounced sentence upon him, as one who had broken his oath of fidelity to the king of Babylon, with whom he took when he made him king of Judea (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10, 13, 2 Kings xxiv. 20, Ezek. xvii. 15, 18).

Ver. 7.] See lii. 11, where the text adds, that he "put him in prison till the day of his death." And thus were fulfilled two prophecies that seemed at first hearing to contradict one another: the first that of Jeremiah, that "Zedekiah's eyes should behold the eyes of the king of Babylon," Jer. xxxii. 4, and the other that of Ezekiel, that "he should not see Babylon, though he should die there," Ezek. xii. 14.

Ver. 9.] Compare 2 Kings xxv. 11. He carried away the fugitives, or deserters, that fell away to the Chaldeans during the siege, as well as those whom he took that were shut up in the city.

Ver. 11, Nebuchadrezzar—gave charge concerning Jeremiah.] He was informed that the prophet had exhorted both king and people to submit themselves to his authority (see xxviii. 11, xxxviii. 17, 18); whose advice if it had been hearkened to, would have prevented the charge and labour of so long a siege, and the bloodshed which attended it.

Ver. 14. Took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison.] Where he was when the city was taken (xxxviii. 28).

Committed him unto Gedaliah.] After he had first that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people.

15 ¶ Now the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

16 Go and speak to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and been carried out of Jerusalem, with the rest of the captives, as far as Ramah (see xl. 1, 5).

Ver. 13. While he was shut up] Before the taking of the city (see the foregoing verse).

CHAPTER XL.

ARGUMENT.—Jeremiah is directed by Nebuzar-adan to repair to Gedaliah, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people: or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

5 Now while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people: or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam unto Mizpah; and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 ¶ Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the

CHAP. XL.

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah] This relates to the prophecy set down xlii. 7, which was occasioned by the story that here follows, concerning Ishmael's conspiracy against Gedaliah. After that Nebuzar-adan—had let him go from Ramah,] He was taken out of the court of the prison (see xxxix. 14), and carried with the other captives as far as Ramah, a town not far from Jerusalem (see Judg. xix. 10, 13).

Ver. 5. While he was not yet gone back] The words in the Hebrew are very perplexed, and by the different translations of the ancient interpreters, one might guess that some Hebrew copies had a different reading from the present. The Vulgar Latin reads, "And come not along with me;" as if he read, in the Hebrew, "incense for admixture." Some of the ancient Greek copies read, "Before I go away, go back thou to Gedaliah." The Chaldee seems to in-Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of a Maachathite, and their men. 9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan spake unto them and to their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans, which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken.

11 Likewise when all the Jews that were in Mochab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan;

12 Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer fruits very much.

13 ¶ Moreover Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah.

14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not.

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, Thou shalt not do this thing: for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

CHAPTER XLI.

Ver. 9. Fear not to serve the Chaldeans.] The same advice Jeremiah had formerly given the Jews (see xxvii. 11, xxix. 7).

Ver. 10. I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans, which will come unto us.] I keep my residence here to be ready to obey any orders that the king of Babylon sends me by his servants (see xli. 3).

CHAP. XLI.

ARGUMENT.—Ishmael treacherously killeth Gedaliah and his companions, with an intent to carry away the Jews that were with him captivest into the country of the Ammonites. But Johanan recoverst the captives, and purposeth to fly into Egypt.

Ver. 1. Seventh month.] Answering partly to our September, and partly to October. The murder of Gedaliah gave occasion for the fast of the seventh month, which the Jews observed after their return from captivity (see Zech. vii. 5, viii. 19).

Ishmael of the seed royal.] He valued himself upon his extraction, and bare a grudge against Gedaliah, because he was set above him.

The princes of the king.] Some of the chief officers of state belonging to Zedekiah (see xxvii. 13, 21, xxviii. 4); these brought a great number of others with them as their retinue, or else they could not have made such destruction as they did (ver. 3).

Ver. 3. That is, all those that joined in opposing Ishmael, and assisting Gedaliah: for several of the commanders, as well as the greatest part of the people, were still left alive, as appears by the sequel of the story (see ver. 10, 11).

Ver. 5. Having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, &c.] These were tokens of great mourning, by which these persons expressed their grief for the destruction of the city and temple. Such expressions of sorrow were forbidden to be used at funeral obsequies (see Lev. xix. 27, 28), but might be lawfully used upon other mournful occasions: as hath been observed upon Isa. xv. 2.

With offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the Lord.] Some understand this as if devout persons brought their oblations to the place where the altar formerly stood, which they looked upon as consecrated ground; and this custom they think countenanced by the words of Baruch, i. 10, where the exiles at Babylon are supposed to “send money to buy offerings for the altar of the Lord,” after that Jerusalem “was taken and burnt” (compare ver. 2): others understand the “house of the Lord,” of an altar, or place of worship, erected by Gedaliah at Mizpah, in imitation of that with which was formerly set up there by Samuel (1 Sam. vii. 7, with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land. 3 Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah, at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

4 And it came to pass the second day after he had shun Gedaliah, and no man knew it,

5 That there came certain from Shechem, from} from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the Lord.

6 And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

7 And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

8 But ten men were found among them that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not: for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbode, and slew them not among their brethren.

9 Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain because of Gedaliah, was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain.

10 Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over to the Ammonites.

11 ¶ But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done, 12 Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibeon.

13 Now it came to pass, that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad.

14 So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah.

15 But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

16 Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibeon:

17 And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Beth-lehem, to go to enter into Egypt.

18 Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

9), which place continued to be a prosecution, or place of worship, in aftertimes, as appears from 1 Macc. iii. 46. There were many such sanctuaries or places of worship, both in Judea and elsewhere, among the Jewish dispersions, as Dr. Prideaux hath shown at large, in his Connect, of Scripture History, p. 387, &c.

Ver. 6. Weping all along as he went:] As if he had sympathized with them.

Ver. 7. Ishmael—slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit.] The Hebrew reads, "slew them into the midst of a pit." We find the very same expression, 1 Macc. vii. 19, a book translated out of Hebrew, as St. Jerome tells us, in Prolog. Galeato. Of the same kind are the following expressions (Ps. lxxiv. 7), "They have defiled the dwelling-place of thy name unto the ground:" as our old translation reads out of the Hebrew. So Ps. lxxix. 39, "Thou hast profaned his crown by casting it to the ground," as the new translation supplies the sense.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 Then all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jehozanah the son of Hoshannah, and all the people from the least even unto the greatest, came near, promising obedience to his will. The prophet assures them of safety in Judea, and destruction in Egypt, and reproves their hypocrisy in promising what they meant not to perform.

And new pass and (for have The go TI be all to remnant be that).

Besides, the things Be Pray to this astonishment, Thus this many, him, the shall come.

And now therefore hear the word of the Lord, ye remnant of Judah; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there;

Then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt, and the famine whereof ye were afraid, shall follow close after you there in Egypt; and there ye shall die.

Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt: and ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach: and ye shall see this place no more.

The Lord hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah: Go ye not into Egypt: know certainly that I have admonished you this day.

For ye dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us unto the Lord our God: and according unto all that the Lord our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it.

And now I have this day declared it to you; but ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord your God, nor any thing for the which he had sent me unto you.

Ver. 15. If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt: If you are fully resolved to go thither (compare Luke ix. 51).
22 Now therefore know certainly that ye shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, in the place whither ye desire to go and to sojourn.

effect refusing to submit themselves to the king of Babylon, to whom God had decreed the government of Judea, and all the neighbouring countries (xxvii. 6).

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 And it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking unto all the people, all the words of the Lord their God, for which the Lord their God had sent him to them, even all these words,

2 Then spake Azariah the son of Hoshaiah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely: the Lord our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there:

3 But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of the Lord, to dwell in the land of Judah;

5 But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations, whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah;

CHAP. XLIII.

Argument.—The leading men, discrediting Jeremiah's prophecy, carry the people into Egypt, contrary to his advice: whereupon he foretells the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 2. Azariah the son of Hoshaiah.] Called Jezealiah, xliii. 1. We may observe many like instances in the books of Kings and Chronicles, of the same persons being called by two different names.

All the proud men.] Who refused to obey Almighty God, when his commands crossed their own inclinations.

The Lord—hath not sent thee.] The constant method of hypocrites and infidels, who pretend they are not satisfied of the truth of divine revelation, when the true cause of their unbelief is, that God's commands contradict their own lusts and appetites.

Ver. 3. But Baruch—setteth thee on against us.] They would not directly accuse Jeremiah of partiality towards, or concordancy with, the Chaldeans, as his enemies had done formerly (xxxvii. 13), but they lay the blame upon Baruch, whom they knew to be an intimate companion of Jeremiah's, and to have been kindly used by the Chaldeans upon Jeremiah's account.

Ver. 5, 6.] Chap. xi. 11, xii. 10.

Ver. 7. Thus came they even to Tahpanhes.] See ii. 16, one of the principal cities of Egypt, and a place of residence for their kings (see ver. 9). The word is contracted to hanes, Isa. xxx. 4, and joined with Zoon, the chief city of the kingdom. Tahpanhes gave a name to a queen of Egypt (1 Kings xi. 19), and is supposed by many to be the same city which was afterward called Dapline Pelusiac.

6 Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So they came into the land of Egypt: for they obeyed not the voice of the Lord: thus came they even to Tahpanhes.

8 Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying,

9 Take great stones in thine hand, and hide them in clay in the brick-kiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah;

10 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them.

11 And when he cometh, he shall smite the land of Egypt, and deliver such as are for death

St. Jerome tells us from an ancient tradition, that in this place the prophet Jeremiah was stoned to death by the Jews.

This tradition may receive some confirmation from that passage in the gospels (Matt. xvi. 14, Luke ix. 19), where, among other opinions concerning Christ, it is said some thought him to be the prophet Jeremiah, "risen from the dead." Dr. Lightfoot observes that the Jews thought the kingdom of the Messias should begin with the resurrection of the dead: and particularly, that some of the ancient prophets should rise again, and appear as harbingers to the Messias (see his Horae Hebr., on Matt. xvi. 13, xxvii. 52, and on Luke ix. 8). And then, who could better pretend to that privilege than the prophet Jeremiah? who beside his remarkable zeal and piety, sealed the truth with his blood. And the Jews were persuaded that the martyrs had a title to the resurrection above all others, as appears from 2 Macc. vii. 9, 18. An opinion countenanced by St. John, Rev. xx. 4, 5, and afterward universally received in the Christian church.

Ver. 9. Hide them in clay in the brick-kiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house.] Bricks were the chief materials which the Babylonians used in most stately buildings (see Gen. xi. 3, and Prideaux's Script. Hist. ad. an. A.C. 570). So there was constant occasion for such a brick-kiln near Pharaoh's palace, yet this might be a great way from the palace itself: the courts of great kings being almost equal to a city for extent in ancient times: particularly the palace in Babylon was four miles in compass, according to Dio. Siculo, lib. ii.

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwelt in the land of Egypt, which dwelt at Migdol, and at Tahapanes, and at Noph, and in the country of Pathros, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein,

3 Because of their wickedness which they have committed to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate.

5 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to burn no incense unto other gods.

6 Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem; and they are wasted and desolate, as at this day.

7 Therefore now thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, out of Judah, to leave you none to remain;

8 In that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye might be a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth?

9 Have ye forgotten the wickedness of your fathers, and the wickedness of the kings of Judah, and the wickedness of their wives, and your own wickedness, and the wickedness of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

10 They are not humbled even unto this day, neither have they feared, nor walked in my law, of Thebaïs, as Bochart proves by several arguments (Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 27).

Ver. 3. To serve other gods whom they knew not.] Compare Deut. xiii. 6, xxiii. 17. These idols are opposed to the true God, called elsewhere "the God of their fathers:" i. e. He that had made himself known to them by so many miracles of mercy, and had promised to show the same favour to their posterity, if they continued steadfast in their obedience.

Ver. 4. See vii. 13, xxv. 4.

Ver. 5. See ver. 17, 21, xix. 13.

Ver. 7. To cut off—man and woman, child and suckling.] God designed that this remnant should have kept possession in Judea, when the rest of their brethren were carried away captive (see xlii. 10). But by their going into Egypt, and defiling them—nor in my statutes, that I set before you, and before your fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Behold, I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah. And I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed, and fall in the land of Egypt; they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine: and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach.

13 For I will punish them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence:

14 So that none of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they have a desire to return to dwell there: for none shall return but such as shall escape.

15 ¶ Then all the men which knew that their wives had burned incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying,

16 As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee.

17 But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, as we have done, we and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for then had we plenty of victuals, and were well, and saw no evil.

18 But since we left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine.

19 And when we burned incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drink-offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink-offerings unto her, without our men?

20 ¶ Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying,

21 The incense that ye burned in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the Lord remember them, and came it not into his mind?

22 So that the Lord could no longer bear, because of the evil of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day.

23 Because ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you, as at this day.

24 Moreover Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the Lord, all Judah that are in the land of Egypt:

25 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying: Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings which is threatened to unbelievers (see Acts ii. 47, 1 Cor. i. 18, 2 Cor. ii. 15).

Ver. 17. We will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth.] That which we have solemnly vowed to perform (see ver. 25). So the phrase is used, Numb. xxx. 12. Deut. xxiii. 22, Judg. xi. 98. To burn incense unto the queen of heaven.] To the moon and the rest of the host of heaven (see notes on vii. 18, xix. 13).

For then had we plenty of victuals, and were well.] They compare their former condition before the invasion of Judah, and the siege of Jerusalem, with their present state: and argue, from the fulminating topics of worldly prosperity, that then they must needs have been in the right.

Ver. 19. When we burned incense] These are the words of the women, who were the most zealous promoters of this idolatry (see ver. 15). Did we make her cakes] See the note on vii. 18.

Ver. 22. So that the Lord could no longer bear.] God's patience is elsewhere said to be wearied out by men's continued provocations (see Isa. vii. 13, xiii. 24, Mat. ii. 17).

Ver. 25. We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed.] They insist upon their unlawful vow as an obligation in conscience, which could not be.

selves with the idolatries of that nation, they have provoked God to make an utter destruction of them (see ver. 11, 12, 14, 27).

Ver. 11.] See xxi. 10, Lev. xvii. 10, xx. 5, Ps. xxxiv. 16.

Ver. 12.] See xiii. 15-18.

[Ver. 14. None of the remnant—shall escape—that they should return into the land of Judah.] Scaliger observes out of Eusebius, that Artaxerxes Ochus, making an expedition into Egypt, removed a considerable colony of Jews out of that country, and carried them away as far as the Caspian sea, and there settled them. These he thinks were the remainder of those Jews that went down into Egypt at this time. They were called by the other Jews, the Median captivity. See his notes on Euseb. numb. 1058.]

For none shall return but such as shall escape.] See the note on iv. 27. None shall return but the remnant mentioned ver. 25, to whom I will grant that peculiar favour of being saved, or escaping out of the common destruction (compare l. 20). This is the import of the word pellit, commonly rendered by the Septuagint, έσωκομεν and ἀετουμαι (see li. 50, Isa. x. 20, xxxvii. 32, xliv. 20, lxvi. 20): from whence the word σωκομεν is applied in the New Testament to signify those who embrace the gospel, and thereby are rescued from that destruction...
CHAPTER XLV.

1 The word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Barach the son of Neriah, when he had written these words in a book at the mouth of Jeremiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Barach:

3 Thou didst say, Woe is me now! for the Lord hath added grief to my sorrow; I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest.

CHAP. XLV.

ARGUMENT.—This prophecy was occasioned by the danger Barach had incurred, by copying out a collection of all Jeremiah's prophecies, by his direction (see xxxvi. 4, 26). The design of it is to comfort Barach against the apprehensions his fears suggested to him, by letting him know, that in these general calamities which should involve his own nation together with the neighbouring countries, God would take him into his especial protection. The Septuagint, according to the Vatican copy, place this prophecy at the conclusion of the book; immediately before the fifty-second chapter.

Ver. 1. See xxxvi. 1, 4, 32.

shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah, and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, mine, or theirs.

29 And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the Lord, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words surely stand against you for evil:

30 Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hephra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that seek his life; as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, his enemy, and that sought his life.

The remnant of Judah—shall know whose words shall stand, mine, or theirs. Since they are so peremptory in abiding by their own vows and resolutions (see ver. 16, 17, 25), they shall see whose words shall stand good, or take effect, mine or theirs.

Ver. 30. Pharaoh-hephra. Pharaoh was a common name to all the kings of Egypt. As the predecessor of this king was called Pharaoh-nechob by way of distinction (2 Kings xxiii. 29), so this king was called Pharaoh-hephra, or Apries, as Herodotus calls him: he engaged in a battle with Anasis, by whom he was overcome and strangled (see Archbishop Usher's Annals, ad A. M. 3450).

4 Thus shalt thou say unto him, The Lord saith thus: Behold, that which I have built will I break down, and that which I have planted I will pluck up, even this whole land.

5 And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not: for, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the Lord: but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest.

Ver. 3. The Lord hath added grief to my sorrow. The sorrow which I felt for the threatenings denounced against my country and religion, are increased by my own troubles, being sought after by the king's commands, in order to be put to death (see xxxvi. 26).

Ver. 4. The land and people which have so long flourished under the peculiar care of my providence, I resolve now to give up to utter destruction (compare xxxi. 28).

Ver. 5. Seekest thou great things for thyself? Dost thou aspire to honour and dignity in a time of common calamity (compare 2 Kings v. 26).

I will bring evil upon all flesh. See xxv. 26.

Thy life will I give unto thee for a prey. See xxxi. 9.
The word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Gentiles;

Against Egypt, against the army of Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, which was by the river Euphrates in Carchemish, which Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon smote in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah.

Order ye the buckler and shield, and draw near to battle.

Harnest the horses; and get up, ye horsemen, and stand forth with your spears; furnish the spears, and put on the brigandines.

Wherefore have I seen them dismayed and turned away back? and their mighty ones are beaten down, and are fled apace, and look not back: for fear was round about, saith the Lord.

Let not the swift flee away, nor the mighty man escape; they shall stumble, and fall toward the north by the river Euphrates.

Who is this that cometh up as a flood, whose waters are moved as the rivers?

Egypt riseth up like a flood, and his waters are moved like the rivers; and he saith, I will go up, and will cover the earth; I will destroy the city and the inhabitants thereof.

Come up, ye horses; and rage, ye chariots; and let the mighty men come forth; the Egyptians and the Libyans, that handle the shield; and the Lydians that handle and bend the bow.

For this is the day of the Lord Goats of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries: and the sword shall devour, and it shall be satiate and made drunk with their blood: for the Lord Goats of hosts hath a sacrifice in the north country by the river Euphrates.

Go up into Gilead, and take balm, O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou Egyptian army should escape. Or else the imperious may be taken for the future, by a usual emulsion (see note on xxv. 27).

Full toward the north, by the river Euphrates.] The river Euphrates was northward from Judea. So Babylon is described as lying northward, being situate upon that river (see i. 14, iv. 6, vi. 1).

In order to raise an expectation of some mighty enterprise, the prophet describes, by way of vision, the march of the Egyptian army, coming on like a flood, and carrying all before it: which expressions allude to the overflowing of the river Nile (compare likewise xlvii. 2, Isa. viii. 7, 8, Dan. xi. 26, xii. 22, Amos viii. 8).

The Ethiopians and the Libyans—and the Lydians, that handle and bend the bow.] These names in Hebrew are Cush, and Phut, and Lud, who were the Egyptians' allies, and are mentioned together as such, Ezek. xxx. 5, which makes it probable that they are all Africans. Cush, though it often signifies Arabia, yet sometimes denotes Ethiopia, as hath been shown upon xiii. 22. Phut is rendered Lybia, by our interpreters here, and Ezek. xxx. 5. But Phut and Libim are spoken of as a distinct people, Nahum iii. 9. Phut may probably signify Mauritania, and Lud, or Libim, the people of Meroe. These were famous for the use of the bow, as it is expressed both here and Isa. lxvi. 19.

The day of the Lord] The "day of the Lord" often signifies the day of his vengeance (see Isa. xiii. 6, Joel i. 15, ii. 1, Amos v. 18, Zeph. i. 14, 15). From thence it comes to signify the day of judgment in the New Testament, of which all other days of vengeance are the earnest and forerunners.

That he may avenge him of his adversaries.] Of the idols of Egypt, and their worshippers (see ver. 25, xlviii. 10).

The sword shall devour.] See Isa. xxxiv. 6.

The Lord God hath a sacrifice!] The slaughter of men is called a sacrifice, because it makes some kind of satisfaction and atonement to God's justice (Isa. xxxiv. 6, Ezek. xxxix. 17, Zeph. i. 7).

Go up into Gilead, and take balm.] Gilead was famous for producing balm, and such-like healing gums (see the note on viii. 22). The prophet alluding to the custom of men's going thither for relief in dangerous infirmities, ironically advises the Egypt-use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured.

12 The nations have heard of thy shame, and thy cry hath filled the land: for the mighty man hath stumbled against the mighty, and they are fallen both together.

13 ¶ The word that the Lord spake to Jeremiah the prophet, how Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon should come and smite the land of Egypt.

14 Declare ye in Egypt, and publish in Migdol, and publish in Noph and in Tahpanhes: say ye, Stand fast, and prepare thee; for the sword shall devour round about thee.

15 Why are they valiant men swept away? they stood not, because the Lord did drive them.

16 He made many to fall, yea, one fell upon another: and they said, Arise, and let us go again to our own people, and to the land of our nativity, from the oppressing sword.

17 They did cry there, Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise; he hath passed the time appointed.

18 As I live, saith the king, whose name is the Lord of hosts, Surely as Tabor is among the mountains, and as Carmel by the sea, so shall he come.

19 ¶ O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt, furnish thyself to go into captivity: for Noph shall be waste and desolate without an inhabitant.

20 Egypt is like a very fair heifer, but destruction cometh; it cometh out of the north.

21 Also her hired men are in the midst of her like fatted bullocks; for they also are turned back, and are fled away together: they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation.

22 The voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, and come against her with axes, as hewers of wood.

23 They shall cut down her forest, saith the Lord, though it cannot be searched; because Though Egypt were as inaccessible as the top of mount Tabor, and begirt with the sea like Carmel, yet the enemy should come upon her, and make an entire conquest of her.

Ver. 19. ¶ O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt.] Compare xlviii. 18. Countries and cities are usually compared to women (such representations being very common, particularly on medals), and sometimes to young women, when their wealth makes them soft and effeminate (see Isa. xlvii. 1).

Furnish thyself to go into captivity.] The expression is tropically implying, that even the richness and goodly furniture wherein she did pride herself, she should be carried away captive, naked and bare, and wanting all manner of conveniences (see Isa. xx. 4, xlvii. 2, 3).

Ver. 20. Egypt is like a very fair heifer.] In the foregoing verse, the prophet compared Egypt to a delicate young woman, here he resembles her to a fat and well-favoured heifer (compare l. 11). In which comparison, as Grotius not improperly conjectures, there is an allusion to their god Apis, who was a bull remarkable for his beauty, and the fine spots or marks he had about him.

It cometh out of the north.] See ver. 6, 10.

Ver. 21. ¶ Her hired men are in the midst of her like fatted bullocks.] The auxiliary troops which the king of Egypt had hired (see ver. 9, 16), are like bullocks fattened up, and fit for the slaughter (see l. 27, Isa. xxxiv. 7, Ezek. xxxix. 15).

They did not stand, [in the fight, see ver. 15,] because the day of their calamity was come upon them.] Their 'day was come, even the time of their visitation, ' as it is expressed, l. 37.

Ver. 22. ¶ The voice thereof shall go like a serpent.] They shall not shout like conquerors, but make a feeble noise, like the hissing of a serpent when it is pursued: and shall speak in a very submissive and humble tone (see Isa. xxix. 4, Micah vii. 16, 17).

Come against her with axes, as hewers of wood.] The destruction of Egypt is described by the metaphor of cutting down the trees of a forest (compare Isa. x. 33, 34, xiv. 8, xxxvii. 24).

Ver. 23. ¶ Cities, and their stately buildings, are elsewhere compared to the trees of a forest (see the note on xxii. 14), so here the text imports, that though the cities of Egypt were never so numerous and large yet the Chaldean army should plunder and destroy them, because their number is proportionable to such JEREMIAH.

Weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction.

6 Flee, save your lives, and be like the heath in the wilderness.

7 ¶ For because thou hast trusted in thy works and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken: and Chemosh shall go forth into captivity with his priests and his princes together.

8 And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape; the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the Lord hath spoken.

9 Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away: for the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein.

10 Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully, and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood.

11 ¶ Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity: therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed.

12 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will send unto him wanderers, that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles.

13 And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, as the house of Israel was ashamed of Beth-el their confidence.

14 ¶ How say ye, We are mighty and strong men for the war?

15 Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and his chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith the king, whose name is the Lord of hosts.

16 The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast.

17 All ye that are about him, bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!

18 Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, come down from thy glory, and sit in thirst; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy thy strong holds.

19 O inhabitant of Aror, stand by the way, and espy; ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done?

20 Moab is confounded; for it is broken down:

nothing grows but barren shrubs (see xvii. 6); and where no enemy can find you out.

Ver. 7. In thy works] Or, "In thy possession:" for so the word is translated, 1 Sam. xxv. 2.

Chemosh] The idol of the Moabites, Numb. xxii. 29 (see the note on xlili. 12).

Ver. 8. The valley also shall perish.] Those that live in the country, with their flocks and pastures, shall be involved in the same calamity with the inhabitants of the cities.

Ver. 9. Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee] It is not a common speed that can deliver him from that imminent danger which threatens him (see ver. 28, and compare Ps. iv. 6).

Ver. 10.] God executes his judgments upon sinners, by the ministry of men, and those oftentimes as great sinners, as those that suffer by them. He had declared by Jeremiah his purpose of making the Chaldeans his instruments in punishing the Jews, and the neighbouring countries (see xxv. 9). Their success answered the prediction, and Nebuchadnezzar seems to have looked upon Jeremiah as a prophet, and had a particular regard to his character (see xxxix. 11).

Being thus assured that he had a commission from God, he might confidently proceed in his conquests, and it would have been a fault to have shown mercy to those whom he had good reason to believe, that God had marked out for destruction. Such an unreasonable act of mercy is highly blamed in Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 11, and in Ahab, 1 Kings xx. 42. God's judgment was denounced in form of imprecation (see Deut. xxvii. 15, &c., Judg. v. 23, Gal. i. 8, 1 Cor. xviii. 22, 2 Tim. iv. 16).

Ver. 11. Moab hath been at ease from his youth.] He hath never felt any calamity, since that judgment foretold by Isaiah, and inflicted by Shalmaneser. So that there were forty years between that captivity and this here spoken of (see Archbishop Usher's Annals ad An. M. 3960, and 3410).

He hath settled on his lees.] He hath flourished in peace and grown rich, as wine that feeds on its lees (compare Zech. i. 13); when the Jews during that time have suffered several calamities.

His taste remained in him.] As generous wines retain their strength as long as they continue in the lees; so he retained his wonted pride and luxury, and doth not depart from any of those vices which a long prosperity has occasioned (see xxvi. 6).

Ver. 12.] The Chaldean soldiers that came out of a foreign country: these shall make a prey of him, and shall carry off as much of his wealth as they can, and spoil the rest (compare xii. 14).

Ver. 13.] They shall be disappointed in their expectations of succours from their tutelary idol (see Judg. xi. 24, 1 Kings xi. 7); as the ten tribes have been in the trust they repose in the calf they worshipped at Beth-el (see Hos. viii. 5, x. 6).

Ver. 15. Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities.] Or, [the spoiler] "is gone up against her cities" (compare ver. 18).

Come down to the slaughter.] Compare 1. 27. The same thing is otherwise expressed, by bringing down to the grave, or the pit.

Ver. 17. All ye that are about him, bemoan him "] His calamities are so great, as must needs make all that see him, or have heard of his former fame and glory, bewail his misfortunes.

How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod?] Compare Isa. xiv. 5. A staff or rod is an emblem of authority, and thence comes to signify a kingdom, or government, especially such a one as oppresses its subjects, or neighbours (see Isa. ix. 4, x. 5).

Ver. 18. Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon,] Thou that art softened with luxury and effeminacy (see xlv. 18). Dibon was one of the chief cities of Moab (see Numb. xxii. 30, Isa. xv. 2).

Come down from thy glory and sit in thirst.] Submit to a mean condition, wherein thou shalt feel the want of all conveniences of life. The Hebrew expression expresses a barren land, which yields no food or sustenance, by a thirsty ground (see Ps. liii. 2, Isa. xxxvi. 7, Ezek. xix. 15).

Ver. 19. O inhabitant of Aror [a town in the borders of Moab; see Deut. ii. 30], stand by the way, and espy :] The prophet describes the great concern and fear that was upon them, which made them hearken to every little report that was stirring.
hewl and cry: tell ye it in Arnon, that Moab is spoiled.

21 And judgment is come upon the plain country; upon Holon, and upon Jahazah, and upon Mephaath.

22 And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-sibmah, and upon Beth-baal-meon, and upon Beth-geber.

23 And upon Kerioth, and upon Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near.

24 The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord; Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and he also shall be in derision.

25 The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord; Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and he also shall be in derision.

26 For was not Israel a desolation unto thee? was he found among thieves? for since thou spakest of him, thou speakest for joy.

27 O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the cities, and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove.

Ver. 20. Howl and cry: There will be just occasion for a general lamentation.

Tell ye it in Arnon. A country which took its name from the river Arnon, which was upon the border of Moab (see Num. xx. 28).

Ver. 24. Upon Kerith. See ver. 41, Amos ii. 2. Bozrah. The same town that is called Bezer, Deut. iv. 43, Josh. xxxii. 36. A different place from Bozrah, which belonged to the land of Edom (xix. 13).

Ver. 25. Strength is often expressed by the horn, wherein the strength of bulls, and such-like creatures, consists; and by the arm, wherein human strength doth chiefly discover itself.

Ver. 26. Make ye him drunken. God's judgments are represented under the metaphor of a cup of intoxicating liquors (see the note on xxi. 15).

Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and be in derision. The judgments which God sends upon him shall expose him to the scorn of his enemies: just as a drunken man is the object of men's laughter and derision (compare Hab. ii. 16).

Ver. 27. For was not Israel a desolation unto thee? Didst not thou insult over the calamities of the Jews, when they were carried away captive! (see the note on xii. 14, and compare Ezek. xxv. 8, Zeph. ii. 8). Israel is here put for Judah (see note on xvii. 13).

Was he found among thieves? &c. Though the sins of Israel were great in the sight of God, yet he had done no injury to the Moabites; so there was no reason why they should use him with the same severity and contempt as if he had been a common thief taken in the very fact, whom every one thinks they have a right to abuse (compare ii. 36). The latter part of the verse may be thus rendered, "For the words thou hast spoken against him, thou shalt be carried captive." This interpretation of the words the vulgar Latin followers, and the verb thaddnded may very well be rendered to this sense (see the note on xxxi. 18).

Ver. 28. Leave the cities, and dwell in the rock. Flee away, and hide yourselves, if you can, from these calamities which are coming upon you (see ver. 9, and compare Ps. iv. 6, 7).

Ver. 29. Whereby he hath "magnified himself that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth."

29 We have heard the pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud) his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart.

30 I know his wrath, saith the Lord; but it shall not be so: his lies shall not so effect it.

31 Therefore will I howl for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab; mine heart shall mourn for the men of Kir-heres.

32 O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer: thy plant is gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer: the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer fruits and upon thy vintage.

33 And joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab; and I have caused wine to fail from the wine presses: none shall tread with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting.

34 From the cry of Heshbon even unto Elealeh, and even unto Jahaz, have they uttered their against the Lord" (ver. 36), and "against the people of the Lord" (Zech. ii. 10).

35 His lies shall not so effect it. Or, "his strength shall not avail" answerably to his wrath; his power shall not be answerable to his malice (see the note on Isa. xvi. 6). The latter part of the sentence may be thus rendered, "But it is not right, his liars do not that which is right." The word baddon, sometimes signifies those that pretend to the arts of divination, as detracting what is to come (see I. 36).

If we take the word in this sense, the meaning of the sentence is, That although the soothsayers and magicians, upon whose skill Moab relies, promise him good success, and thereby encourage his pride and arrogancy; yet, in the event, it will appear that there was nothing of truth in what they said.

For all Moab. The whole country of Moab: the phrase is the same with that of whole Palæstina, Isa. xiv. 31.

For the men of Kir-heres. See Isa. xvi. 7, 11.

Ver. 32. O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer. The expressions denote the destruction of the fruitful vineyards of Si- mah. The loss of which the neighbouring places of Jazer would have reason to lament (compare Isa. xvi. 9).

They reach even to the sea of Jazer. The words, pursuing the metaphor of a vineyard, imply that the principal inhabitants (compare Nahum ii. 2) are carried away, or forced to fly their country, and pass over the sea, that is, the river of Jazer—a stream that runs into the river Arnon, the border of Moab (Num. xvi. 13). All lakes and rivers are called seas in the Hebrew language.

Ver. 33. The gathering in the harvest, and other fruits of the earth, is usually accompanied with great expressions of joy (see Isa. ix. 3, Joel i. 12); for which there will be no occasion, when the enemy has spoiled or carried away their crop and vintage (compare Isa. xvi. 10).

Ver. 34. From the cry of Heshbon even unto Elealeh, and—Jahaz, have they uttered their voice. When Heshbon was taken by the enemy (see ver. 2, 15), the cry of the inhabitants reached as far as Elealeh and Jahaz: the same was likewise heard from Zoar to Horonaim (see Isa. xv. 4, 5).
voice, from Zoa even unto Horonaim, as an heifer of three years old: for the waters also of Nimrim shall be desolate.

37 Moreover I will cause to cease in Moab, saith the Lord, him that offereth in the high places, and him that burneth incense to his gods.

38 Therefore mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes, and mine heart shall sound like pipes for the men of Kir-heres: because the riches that he hath gotten are perished.

39 For every head shall be bald, and every beard clipped: upon all the hands shall be cuttings, and upon the loins sackcloth.

40 There shall be lamentation generally upon all the housestups of Moab, and in the streets thereof: for I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure, saith the Lord.

41 They shall howl, saying, How is it broken down! how hath Moab turned the back with shame! so shall Moab be a derision and a dismaying to all them about him.

42 For thus saith the Lord; Behold, he shall fly as an eagle, and shall spread his wings over Moab.

43 Kerioth is taken, and the strong holds are surprised, and the mighty men's hearts in Moab at that day shall be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

44 And Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, because he hath magnified himself against the Lord.

45 Fear thou, and the pit, and the snare, shall be upon thee, O inhabitant of Moab, saith the Lord.

46 He that fleeth from the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that getteh up out of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for I will bring upon it, even upon Moab, the year of their visitation, saith the Lord.

47 They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force: but a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon, and shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the tumultuous ones.

As an heifer of three years old: [See the note on Isa. xv. 5. Dr. Lightfoot, in his Chirographical Inquiries before his Horae Hebraicae upon St. John, ch. iii. 8, proposes another rendering of these words, Eglah Shelishia, and interprets the sentence thus, "From Zoa unto Horonaim, even to the third Eglah." He supposes several places might be called by the name of Eglah, particularly there is one of them mentioned, Ezek. xlv. 16, and this in the text meant be called the third Eglah, by way of distinction.

For the waters also of Nimrim] See Isa. xvi. 0.

Ver. 35.] See ver. 7, and Isa. xvi. 12.

Ver. 36. Nine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes.] My bowels are moved within me, I groan inwardly for trouble and anguish (compare xiv. 19, Job xxx. 27, see Isa. xvi. 11, Lam. i. 20, and the notes upon xiv. 15). The music of pipes was used at funerals (see Sir Norton Knatchbull's notes on Nahum xii. 15). Ver. 37.] See note upon xii. 5, and compare xlvii. 5, Isa. xv. 2.

Ver. 38. Housestups of Moab,] See Isa. xvi. 3.

For I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure.] As earthen vessels, if they are not fit for the use to which they were designed, are broken to pieces, without any concern or regret (compare xiii. 11), so as never to be repaired: thus God will deal with Moab.

Ver. 39. How is it broken down!] Or "broken to pieces," as the word is rendered, 1, 2. The prophet persists in the allusion to the breaking of an earthen vessel.

Ver. 40.] Conquerors are often compared to eagles and other birds of prey (see xlix. 22, Deut. xxxvii. 49, Dan. vii. 4); and the encamping their armies is represented by spreading their wings (see Isa. vii. 8, and the note there).

Ver. 41.] They shall be dismayed at the apprehension of the evils that are coming upon them, and shall lose their wonted courage and resolution (compare vi. 24, xxv. 6, xlix. 22, 24, 1. 37, 43, li. 59, Lam. xiii. 8, Lam. i. 6, Nahum iii. 33).

Ver. 42, 44. Fear, and the pit, &c.] The words are taken out of Isa. xxiv. 17, 18 (see the notes there).

The year of their visitation.] See xi. 23.

Ver. 45.] They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force: They that fled for fear of the enemy's forces, thought to find shelter and safeguard in Heshbon, a strong fenced city (see ver. 29). But the Hebrew miccoah, "because of the force," may be rendered "for want of force or strength" (compare x. 14). And so the preposition min is translated by our interpreters, Ps. cx. 24, Lam. iv. 9, according to the old translation; and Micah iii. 6, where we read in the Hebrew, "Therefore might shall be unto you from a vision," or "because of a vision," which our translators rightly render, "Then shall not have." A fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from- Sihon.] That is, of the city of Sihon, meaning Heshbon (see Numb. xxii. 28). When the enemies once possessed themselves of Heshbon, the principal city of Moab, they quickly spread fire like fire over the rest of the country. So that the prophet firstly applies to the present case the words of an ancient poet, or psalmion, made upon Sihon's conquests over Moab, and recited by Moses, Numb. xxvii. 27, 28, &c.

And shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the tumultuous ones.] By the corner may be meant the borders, or extreme parts of the country. So the Hebrew word signifies, Numb. xxiv. 3, Neh. xi. 22, or it may mean the nobility, who are the stay and support of the government, expressed likewise by the "crown of the head," in the following sentence: or else both expressions may allude to the custom practised in those countries, of pollining and cutting round the corners or forepart of their hair, concerning which see the note on xxv. 26. By the tumultuous are meant those that through pride indulge themselves in their state and plenty, and insult over their inferiors.

Ver. 46. Woe be unto thee, O Moab! This verse is likewise taken out of Numb. xxii. 10.

The people of Chemosh perisheth.] People are sometimes denominated from the god they worship. So the Jews are called the people of the Lord, or Jehovah.

Ver. 47.] The Moabites were afterward restored to their country, as appears from Josephus, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 17, versus fuem. But these and such-like promises of mercy after judgment, are chiefly to be understood of the conversion of the gentiles under 46 Woe be unto thee, O Moab! the people of Chemosh perisheth: for thy sons are taken captives, and thy daughters captives.

the gospel, called the latter days in the prophets (compare xii. 15—17, xix. 6, 39, Isa. xviii. 7, xix. 18; &c. xxiii. 12). The conversion of idolaters is expressed by “returning from their captivity,” Ezek. xvi. 55.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 CONCERNING the Ammonites, thus saith the Lord: Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth his kingdom inherit God, and his people dwell in his cities?

2 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burned with fire: then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs, saith the Lord.

3 Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is spoiled: cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth: lament, and run to and fro by the hedges; for their king shall go into captivity, and his priests and his princes together.

a city of the Ammonites is destroyed: then it is time for Heshbon, the chief city of Moab, to lament her danger, for her turn comes next (see xviii. 2).

4 Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys, thy flowing valley, O backsliding daughter? that trusted in her treasures, saying, Who shall come unto me?

5 Behold, I will bring a fear upon thee, saith the Lord God of hosts, from all those that be about thee; and ye shall be driven out every man right forth; and none shall gather up him that wandereth.

6 And afterward I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the Lord.
or afford him any shelter or accommodation (compare Isa. xvi. 3).

Ver. 6.] See 1 Macc. v. 5, and note upon xlviii. 47.

Ver. 7. Is wisdom no more in Teman? The eastern part of the world (by which is chiefly meant Arabia, and the adjacent countries, see the note on Isa. xi. 14) was famous for the study of wisdom, or philosophy, as it was called in later times (see 1 Kings iv. 30). The Edomites put in their claim to this respect, as appears from the text, and the parallel place of Obediah (ver. 8), as also from the book of Job, where Eliphaz, one of the disputants, is called the Temanite, as being descended from Teman, Esau’s grandson, who gave name to the city or country of Teman elsewhere mentioned (see Amos i. 12, Obad. ver. 9, Hab. iii. 5). Unless we suppose it the same Teman mentioned xxv. 33, Isa. xxi. 14, which took its name from Teman, Ishmael’s son, Gen. xxv. 15.

Is counsel perished from the prudent?] When God designs a people for destruction, he deprives them of that common prudence and foresight which is requisite for the due management of their affairs (see Isa. xix. 11, &c.).

Ver. 9.] The Edomites were Arameans of the posterity of Dedan, the grandson of Abraham (Gen. xxv. 3). They seem by this place to have been in latter times subdued by the Idumeans, and incorporated with them: the prophet exhorts them to flee, and turn their backs from an enemy they are not able to encounter; and hide themselves in the deepest caves and dens they could find (compare ver. 10, and Judg. vi. 2).

Ver. 9.] The vintage can hardly be gathered in so clean, but that there will be a gleaning left (compare Isa. xvii. 6). Nay, the house-breakers commonly leave something behind them. But the desolation that is coming upon thee will be so entire, that scarce a remnant shall be preserved (compare Obad. ver. 5).

Ver. 10. I have uncovered his secret places.] Or treasuries, as the word signifies, Isa. xiv. 3. I have taken from him every thing that might be a refuge or defence to him in the time of a general calamity.

His seed is spoiled, and his brethren, and his neighbours.] The divine judgments extend not only to his children, but even to his brethren and neighbours: such as the Ammonites, Moabites, and all about him, from whom he might expect some succour and assistance.

And he is not.] He is utterly ruined and destroyed (compare Isa. xvii. 14). Some join this word envena to the following verse, and render it, “And there is none left [that may say] leave [to me] thy father’s children,” &c. that is, there is none left to take care of the fatherless and widow.

Ver. 11.] The Chaldee paraphrase understands this of the Jews, to whom the following words do certainly belong, as if it contained God’s promise to take care of their families, under that distressed and forlorn state, to which the captivity had reduced them. If we understand the words of the Edomites, the sentence seems to be ironical (see a like instance, Isa. xvi. 4): for the prophet said, Though thou wast not to be concerned for thy helpless children, and thy widows thou must leave to the mercy of the enemy, for none of them shall survive or escape. This sense agrees very well with that expression of ver. 10, “His seed is spoiled,” and with ver. 13, 17.

Ver. 12. They whose judgment was not to drink of the cup shall be filled up.] The Jews, in whose human appearance might have expected mercy at God’s hands in regard to the gracious promises made to them, and to their fathers (see xxv. 29). Concerning the phrase of “drinking God’s cup,” see note on xxv. 15.

Ver. 14.] The note on xxvii. 9. Bozrah was one of the chief cities of Idumea (see Isa. xxxiv. 6, lxxiii. 1). It is usual in the prophets to describe the destruction of a whole nation, by the ruin of some one or more of its principal cities (see ver. 23, Amos i. 8, 12, 14, ii. 3, 5).

Ver. 11.] The prophets often represent God as summoning armies, and setting them in array of battle against those people whom he has decreed to destroy (see l. 9, 21, li. 11, Isa. xiii. 2, 3, xviii. 3). God’s stirring up men’s spirits to invade such countries, is described here, as if he had sent an ambassador to the Chaldeans and their confederates, to engage them in a war against the Idumeans: according to the methods which earthly princes use to engage their allies (compare 27, 28). St. Jerome, who lived in the neighbourhood, tells us, in his Commentary upon Obadiah, that Idumea was a rocky mountainous country, and that the inhabitants dwell in caves dug out of the rocks and hills.

Though thou shouldst make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down.] The greatest height or the cliffs of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill: though thou shouldest make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord.

17 Also Edom shall be a desolation: every one that goeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss at all the plagues thereof.

18 As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbouring cities thereof, saith the Lord, no man shall abide there, neither shall a son of man dwell in it.

19 Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan against the habitation of the strong: but I will suddenly make him run away from her: and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd that will stand before me?

20 Therefore hear the counsel of the Lord, that he hath taken against Edom; and his purposes, that he hath prepared against the inhabitants strength cannot place thee out of the reach of the divine vengeance (compare li. 53, Amos ix. 2). The eagle is remarkable for its flying high (see Job xxxix. 27).

Ver. 17. See note on xviii. 16.

Ver. 15. As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah A proverbial expression, denoting an utter desolation (see 1. 40, Isa. xiii. 19).

Ver. 19. He shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan] A description of Nebuchadnezzar marching with his army against Idumea, whom the prophet compares to a lion coming out of his den, near the banks of Jordan. The lions in the time of harvest (see Josh. iii. 15, I Chron. xii. 15), the lions that lie in the thickets on the riverside, are raised out of their coverts, and infest the country (see Maundrell's Travels, p. 81, and compare Zech. xi. 3).

I will suddenly make him run away from her] I have observed in my notes on Isa. li. 4, that the words should be rendered "I will raise him up, and make him run," or seize upon her. The preposition menah, here translated from, both likewise signify upon, and is so rendered by our interpreters, 1 Kings ix. 5 (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 650).

Who is a chosen man [or warrior] that I may appoint over her?] That is, I will single out a man remarkable for his prowess, viz. Nebuchadnezzar, and place him at the head of the army, that shall execute my vengeance upon Edom.

Who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd? Who will challenge me to meet him in the field, as if we were upon equal terms? or what leader or general can enter into the lists with me? The word shepherd often signifies a prince or commander (see vi. 14, 15). But here it is used in opposition to the lion mentioned before: as if he had said, a shepherd may as well encounter a lion, as the best appointed warrior contend with God Almighty, or those whom he makes the instruments of his vengeance.

Ver. 20. Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out:] The prophet having given the name of shepherd to the generals of the army, in pursuance of that metaphor, he expresses the common soldiers by "the least of the flock," as the commanders are called "the principal of the flock," xxv. 34. These he shall have strength and courage enough to draw out or devour the Idumean forces. The verb sahab, "to draw out," alludes to the custom of dogs, of Teman: Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out: surely he shall make their habitations desolate with them.

21 The earth is moved at the noise of their fall, at the cry the noise thereof was heard in the Red sea.

22 Behold, he shall come up and fly as the eagle, and spread his wings over Bozrah: and at that day shall the heart of the mighty men of Edom be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

23 Concerning Damascus, Hamath is confounded, and Arpad: for they have heard evil tidings: they are faint-hearted: there is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet.

24 Damascus is waxed feeble, and turned herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her: anguish and sorrows have taken her, as a woman in travail.

25 How is the city of praise not left, the city of my joy!

26 Therefore her young men shall fall in her who draw about a carcass before they devour it. So it is used xv. 3, where our interpreters read, "and the dogs to teer."

Ver. 21. The earth is moved at the noise of their fall] The neighbouring countries are astonished at it. The prophet compares the destruction of a nation to the fall of a great building, the noise of which frights those that are near it (see Ezek. xxvi. 15, xxxi. 16). Horace uses the same metaphor, Ode i. lib. ii.

"auditorumque Medis Hesperis sonitum ruines."

At the cry the noise thereof was heard in the Red sea:] Or, "the noise of their cry was heard in the Red sea;" which was a considerable distance from the land of Edom.

Ver. 22. Come up—as the eagle,] See xlvi. 40, 41. Ver. 23. Concerning Damascus.] The judgment denounced against Damascus, the principal city of Syria, is to be supposed to extend to the whole country (see the note on ver. 18). Nebuchadnezzar had subdued Syria at the beginning of his reign (see the notes on xxxv. 1), but he might upon some new provocations overrun that country afterward, during the siege of Tyre, which lasted thirteen years (see the larger and the shorter chapter and the notes on xxv. 20).

Hamath is confounded, and Arpad: Hamath and Arpad are elsewhere joined together (see 2 Kings xviii. 34). Hamath is supposed to be the same with Riblah "in the land of Hamath," xxxix. 5, called "Hamath the great," Amos vi. 2. It is a frontier town, lying upon the borders of Judea towards Syria, thence called the "entrance of Hamath," Kings viii. 69, Isa. ix. 9, Amos vi. 14. Arpad in this place is otherwise called Arvad, the habitation of the Arvadites, Gen. x. 18, called the Arudites by the Septuagint, that is, the inhabitants of the island of Arudas.

There is sorrow on the sea:] Or, "as on the sea," as the margin reads: the particle as is frequently understood (see xxvii. 34, and the note on Isa. xxii. 2). They shall come by the troubled sea, when it cannot rest," as the prophet Isaiah speaks, lii. 20. If we follow the reading of the text, we may interpret the words of the Arvadians, who lay upon the sea-coast (compare xxv. 22).

Ver. 24. Sorrows have taken her:] See xlvii. 41. Ver. 25.] A city of praise, is a city of fame and renown (compare xxxiii. 8, li. 41, Isa. xxix. 7). This is spoken in the person of the king, or some other inhabitant of Damascus, bewailing the lot of so famous and pleasant a city, that it should not be spared or left untouched by the enemy.

Ver. 26. Therefore Or, “Surely her young men,” &c. See the article taken is rendered, v. 2.

Ver. 27. Ben-hadad] The name of several kings of Syria (see 1 Kings xv. 28, 2 Kings xiii. 3).

Ver. 28. Concerning Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms of Hazor.] The kingdom whose metropolis is Hazor or Potra; so called, because it is sìscnìg cçopagod, Strabo. lib. xvi. So Vitringa explains it upon Isa. xxi. 13. Kedar was that part of Arabia, which was inhabited by the posterity of Kedar, Ishmael’s son (Gen. xiv. 13); called likewise the provinces or kingdoms of Hazor; each division having anciently a petty prince or king over it (see the note on xxv. 20).

Ver. 29. They take away] The Arabsians are called the sons of the desert, the men, or children of the east (see the note on Isa. xi. 14).

Ver. 29. Their tents and their flocks shall they take away:] Their substance consisted in their cattle and their tents, from whence the country itself is called the “tents of Kedar,” Ps. cxx. 5. With these they removed from place to place for the convenience of pasture (see Isa. xiii. 20).

Ver. 30. Flee, get you far off, &c. See ver. 8.

Ver. 31. Get you up unto the wealthy nation.] The prophet gives the Chaldeans a commission from God to undertake this expedition, and seize upon the wealth of the inhabitants of Kedar.

Ver. 32. Their canna shall be a fruitful,] See ver. 29. I will scatter—them. See note upon ix. 26.

Ver. 33. Against Elam.] The promise of Elymania, which, together with Susiana, Nebuchadnezzar subdued, and took from Assyrges king of Media, as Archbishop Usher gathers, by comparing Jer. xxv. 25 with Dan. viii. 1, 2, where, in the reign of Belshazzar, Daniel speaks of himself, as residing in “Slushan the palace, in the province of Elam;” which therefore at that time must be a province belonging to the Babylonians: Cyrus having used her kindly, and kept her children for his husband; the sense of this passage was, that Cyrus should be the king over Cyrus’s party: whereupon Elam was joined to the empire of the Medes and Persians” (Vid. Cyri Ped. lib. iv).

Accordingly, we find the Elamites come with them to the siege of Babylon (see Isa. xxi. 2).

Ver. 35. The Elamites were famous archers (see Isa. xxix. 4).

Ver. 36. The four winds.] I will bring enemies upon them from every quarter: wars and commotions are metaphorically denoted by winds (see iv. 11, 12, li. 1. Dan. vii. 2).

Ver. 37. I will send the sword after them.] Even after they are driven out of their own country, my vengeance shall pursue them (compare x. 16).

Ver. 38. Nebuchadnezzar shall place his throne, or his royal pavilion, in Elam, in token of his entire conquest over that country (see i. 15. xliii. 10). This is called God’s throne, as Nebuchadnezzar is called his servant: one that had an especial commission from God, to conquer this and the neighbouring countries (see xxvii. 6, 7).

Ver. 39. The Elamites joined with Cyrus to subdue the Babylonians (see note upon ver. 74): upon which Shushan, the chief city of Elymania, was made the metropolis of the Persian empire.
CHAPTER L.

1 The word that the Lord spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans by Jeremiah the prophet.

2 Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set up a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces: her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces.

3 For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein; they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4 ¶ In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go, and seek the Lord their God.

CHAP. L.

ARGUMENT.—This and the following chapter contain a large description of the downfall of Babylon, and of that empire of which that city was the seat; it follows the rest of the prophecies of Jeremiah against the neighbouring countries, according to the method of God's judgments laid down before, xxv. 12, 13, where the prophet declares, that after Nebuchadnezzar and his successors had fulfilled God's purposes, in being executioners of his vengeance upon other countries, they themselves should drink of the same cup. This prophecy has a farther aspect upon the mystical Babylon, mentioned in the Revelation, and many expressions of it are applied by St. John to the downfall of anticristh, as shall be more particularly observed under the several verses there referred to.

Ver. 2. Declare ye among the nations and publish. The downfall of Babylon was an event in which many nations were concerned, that empire having been a common oppressor.

Set up a standard.] To call people together, and impart to them these good tidings. The destruction of Babylon would be likewise a sort of signal to the Jews, to assemble together in order to their return home: the time of their captivity being then to expire.

Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces. When God punished an idolatrous nation, he asserts his own authority, to the confusion of all idols and their worshippers (see the note on ch. xi. 12). Bel is the same with Baal, a name common to the idols of the eastern countries, and at first probably given to some of the heavenly bodies. Afterward, when the worship of the deified men came into practice, Bel, or Belus, the idol of the Assyrians, is supposed to be the same with Nimrod: and when Daniel saith that Nebuchadnezzar carried the vessels of the temple of Jerusalem "into the house of his god" (Dan. i. 2), he is generally supposed to mean the idol Bel; who was worshipped as the tutelar deity of that country. Merodach might be the name of one of their kings, that was afterward deified by his subjects (see Isa. xxxix. 1).

Ver. 3. Out of the north there cometh up a nation. The Medes, who lay north of Babylon (see ver. 9, 41). Which shall make her land desolate. See ver. 40. Vol. III. 62

5 They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten.

6 My people hath been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains; they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their resting-place.

7 All that found them have devoured them: and their adversaries said, We offend not, because they have sinned against the Lord, the habitation of justice, even the Lord, the hope of their fathers.

8 Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldeans, and be as the he goats before the flock.

Ver. 4.] This may, in some senses, be meant of the Jews' return from the captivity, upon the destruction of the Babylonish monarchy. But I conceive this verse, among many others, is a proof that this prophecy has a farther aspect upon that general restoration of the Jews, which should be the consequent of the downfall of anticristh. For, first, here and in Judah are spoken of as partners of the same restoration of the Jews, and required in the worship of the true God: a blessing not yet brought to pass, but reserved for aftertimes (compare ver. 10; see the argument upon ch. xxx., and the note upon iii. 18): and, in the second place, they are described as weeping; and troubled with a true compunction for their former sins: another circumstance to be hereafter fulfilled (see the note on xxxi. 9).

Ver. 5. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward. The words allude to the custom of the Jews going in companies up to Jerusalem at the solemn festivals (compare ch. xxxii., Isa. ii. 3).

Let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant. The gospel is styled an "everlasting covenant," xxiv. 40. The Hebrew phrase is the same in both places. The words may allude to that solemn covenant Josiah and the people entered into after the general corruption of religion and morality, which had overspread the nation under the reign of Manasseh (see 2 Kings xxiii. 3).

Ver. 6. Their shepherds have caused them to go astray. The rulers of my people, both civil and ecclesiastical, have been the occasion of their idolatry, and other sins, by which they have gone astray from God's commandments (see notes on ii. 8, and compare Ezek. xxxiv. 4—6).

They have turned them away on the mountains. They have turned them aside from the right worship of God performed at Jerusalem, to sacrifice to idols upon the mountains and high places (see ii. 20, lii. 23).

Ver. 7. We offend not, because they have sinned against the Lord. The heathen took advantage against the Jews from those remarkable judgments God had brought upon his people; and concluded from thence, that he cast them off utterly for their sins, and, being out of his protection, they might use them as they pleased (compare Isa. xlvii. 6, Zech. i. 15).

The habitation of justice. A refuge and protection for those that are good and just: and, consequently, 9 ¶ For, lo, I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her: from thence she shall be taken: their arrows shall be as of a mighty expert man; none shall return in vain.

10 And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the Lord.

11 Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of mine heritage, because ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls; your mother shall be sore confounded; she that bare you shall be ashamed: behold, the hindmost of the nations shall be a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert.

12 Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate: one that would not have cast off the Jews, if they had not first forsaken him (compare Ps. xci. 1)

Ver. 8. Remove out of the midst of Babylon.] An exhortation often used by the prophets upon this subject (see li. 6, 45, xviii. 20, see the notes there, li. 11); and renewed by St. John, Rev. xviii. 4.

This exhortation Dr. Prideaux supposes to relate to the siege of Babylon, carried on by Darius Hystaspes, in the fifth and sixth years of his reign. Before which time God had warned the Jews, by their prophet Zechariah (li. 6, 7), to "flee out of Babylon," and to deliver themselves from the miseries that should befall that city during the siege (see his Connex. of Script. Hist. p. 185).

Be as the he goats before the flocks.] Let every one strive to lead the way to others, and give them an example of holiness, speedily obeying God's call, without showing any fuddiness to the place, or the idolatries there practised.

Ver. 9. An assembly of great nations from the north country: See ver. 41, li. 27.

Their arrows] See ver. 14, 29, Isa. xiii. 18.

Ver. 10.] They shall revenge themselves upon her, and shall have as much spoil and plunder as they can de.

Ver. 11. Because ye were glad, O ye destroyers of mine heritage.] Ye insulted over the miseries of my people, after you had destroyed them. Though the Chaldeans were the executors of God's judgments upon the Jews; yet he punished them for what they did by his appointment, because they were carried on purely by their own ambition and covetousness; though providence directed their cruelties and oppressions to the fulfilling its own ends and purposes. In like manner, God threatens to punish the king of Assyria, after he had been the executioner of his judgments upon Jerusalem, Isa. x. 12 (compare Isa. xlvii. 6).

Because ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass.] The insolence and rudeness of oppressors is often compared to the wantonness of full-fed cattle (see Ps. xxii. 12, lxviii. 31, Amos. iv. 1). For doha, which our translation renders, "at grass" some read doha, and understand it of a heifer that treads out the corn, and by being fed all that time, grows fat and wanton (see Isa. x. 11). Ver. 12. They shall be sore confounded.] Behold, the hindmost of the nations shall be a wilderness. The Vulgar Latin renders the words to this sense, "Behold, she shall be the hindmost of the nations, a wilderness," &c. (see ver. 40).

Ver. 18.] See note on xviii. 16.

every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plagues.

14 Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about: all ye that bend the bow, shoot at her, spare no arrows: for she hath sinned against the Lord.

15 Shoot against her round about: she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down: for it is the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her.

16 Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that feedeth her, saying, What is that which is done in the north country? how shall the Chaldeans be driven away?

Ver. 14. All ye that bend the bow, shoot at her.] The Elamites were famous for their skill in archery: which people were part of Cyrus's army (see note on xlix. 34, 35; see ver. 9, 28, 42).

For she hath sinned against the Lord.] She hath been in a remarkable manner an enemy to God's truth and people. This may be especially applied to mystical Babylon (see ver. 29, 31).

Ver. 15. Shoot against her round about.] As conquerors do when a city is taken.

She hath given her hand:] She has submitted herself, and promised obedience to the conqueror.

Giving the hand is a token of consenting to any conditions offered (see 2 Kings x. 13, 1 Chron. xxix. 24, 2 Chron. xxx. 8, Ezra x. 10); and was sometimes a ceremony used in taking an oath, to fulfill it with all sincerity (compare Gen. xlvii. 2, Lam. v. 6, Ezek. xviii. 15).

As she hath done, do unto her.] See ver. 29.

Her foundations are fallen.] See li. 58.

Ver. 16. Cut off the sower from Babylon, Babylon was more like a country walled in than a city: her walls being sixty miles in compass, as Herodotus testifies: forty-eight miles according to Strabo (lib. xvi. n. 523). Before this large circuit, a great deal of ground was taken up in corn-fields. So that they had corn sufficient growing within the walls to maintain a siege, as Q. Curtius affirms (lib. v. cap. 1). Whereupon the husbandmen suffered as well as others, in a general destruction of the inhabitants: which our learned Dr. Prideaux refers to the taking of Babylon by Darius Hystaspes. He is directed to this part of the prophecy by the word punisht, (see his Connex. of Script. Hist. p. 157, &c.). Here he applies several parts of this prophecy, relating to the utter overthrow of Babylon, to this reduction of it: for there is no necessity of supposing the destruction of Babylon here foretold should come to pass all together. The prophet only foretelling what should be the conclusion of God's judgments upon that place.

The same learned writer observes, that the punishment of Babylon kept pace with the restoration of the Jews. And as there are two ways of computing the seventy years of the Jewish captivity, one used by Jeremiah, the other by Zechariah (see the note on xxv. 11): so, if we reckon these seventy years ended in the fourth year of Darius, as Zechariah does, the desolation of Babylon was in a great measure completed about the same time.

They shall turn every one to his people.] This is spoken of the Babylonish allies (compare xlvii. 15, Isa. xiii. 14).

Ver. 17. Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away.] Compare ver. 6. As a lion coming among a flock of sheep scattereth them one from an-have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him: and last this Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones.

18 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria.

19 And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and Gilead.

20 In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve.

21 ¶ Go up against the land of Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the Lord, and according to all that I have commanded thee.

22 A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction.

23 How is the hammer of all the earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

24 I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord.

25 The Lord hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans.

26 Come against her from the utmost border, open her store-houses: cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left.

27 Stay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter: woe unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation.

28 The voice of them that flee and escape out of the land of Babylon, to declare in Zion the

Against the inhabitants of Pekod.) This was a country belonging to the Babylonian empire (see Ezek. xxiii. 23): it is mentioned here, because the word signifies visitation. This being the time when God will visit Babylon (see ver. 27, 31, and the note upon xlviii. 2).

Waste and utterly destroy after them.) Or, " destroy their posterity." Cut off from Babylon " the name and remnant," as God threatens in the parallel prophecy, Isa. xlv. 22. The word abarath signifies the same with abarath, which commonly denotes posterity (see Dan. xi. 4).

Do according to all that I have commanded thee.) Those persons whom God raises up to fulfill the decrees of his providence are said to perform his commands (see xxvii. 22, Isa. x. 6); and therefore are called his servants (see xxv. 9, xxvii. 6). Such a commission was, in a particular manner, given to Cyrus by the prophet Isaiah, xliv. 28, xlv. 11, xlviii. 14.

Ver. 23.) That oppressive empire which " smote the nations with a continual stroke," as it is described Isa. xiv. 6.

Ver. 24.) Cyrus took the city by surprise, and unexpectedly, by draining the river Euphrates (see xxviii. 8, 20.

Ver. 27.) He hath raised up enemies to subdue the Chaldeans, Cyrus and his confederates: and hath furnished them with all necessary provisions for such an undertaking.

Ver. 26. Come against her from the utmost border.) From distant parts, " from the ends of the earth," as it is expressed ver. 40. Some render it " from all parts," or " from every quarter, as the word mittek is rendered, Gen. xiv. 4.

Cast her up as heaps.) The word naremim properly signifies " heaps of corn; " taking it in this sense, the marginal reading is to be preferred, " tread her as heaps; " that is, as the corn is trodden down when it is threshed. The phrase alludes to the way of threshing used in the eastern parts of the world, which was to beat the wheat out of the husk, by drawing heavy drays or planks over it (see the note upon Isa. xxviii. 28).

Destroy her utterly, &c.) See ver. 40.

Ver. 27.) Some of those that were more than ordinarily zealous for the welfare of God's church and people, were ready upon the first news of the taking of Babylon to bring the glad tidings thereof into Judea, how God had avenged the cause of his vengance of the Lord our God, the vengeance of his temple.
29 Call together the archers against Babylon:
all ye that bend the bow, camp against it round about; let none thereof escape; recompense her according to her work; according to all that she hath done, do unto her: for she hath been prideful against the Lord, against the Holy One of Israel.
30 Therefore shall her young men fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the Lord.
31 Behold, I am against thee, O thou most prideful, saith the Lord God of hosts: for thy day is come, the time that I will visit thee.
32 And the most proud shall stumble and fall, and none shall raise him up: and I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all round about him.
33 § Thus saith the Lord of hosts: The children of Israel and the children of Judah were oppressed together: and all that took them people and executed his judgments on those who destroyed his temple, and profaned the holy vessels of it that were dedicated to his service (Dan. v. 1—3, 5, 30, and compare li. 51).
Ver. 29. Call together the archers against Babylon.] This is chiefly meant of the Elamites, who where famous archers, and were part of Cyrus's army which he brought against Babylon. See xlii. 3, 4, 35, and the note there, compared with Isa. xxi. 2.
Recompense her according to her work.] Which will be "a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God," as St Paul speaks, 2 Thess. i. 5, at which all good men ought to rejoice, to express their appro bation of it, and give glory to God when they see it do (compare Rev. xvii. 6, Ps. xxvii. 4, xviii. 9, 10).
For she hath been proud] See ver. 14, 31.
[Ver. 30. Xenophon relates (lib. vii.), that Ga datas and Gobryas, with their soldiers, when they were got into the town, marched directly towards the palace, and killing all they met, became masters of the place, and slew the king himself.]
Ver. 31.] Who hath been proud against the Lord?—That exalted himself against God, saying, "I am; and there is none beside me" (see Isa. xlvi. 7, 8, and the notes upon that place).
[Ver. 32. I will kindle a fire in his cities.] This may be meant of the destructions made in the Ba ylonian territories in the several expiditions Cyrus undertook against that monarchy, during the space of twenty years before the taking of Babylon. See Dr. Prideaux, from the year before Christ 559, to the year 539.
Ver. 33.] It was the same government that oppres sed them both, though under different denominations:
sometimes called the kingdom of Assyria, and after ward the kingdom of Babylon: the latter succeeded the former in its oppression, as well as in its empire.
Ver. 34.] God will thoroughly plead the cause of his living truth and people (see the note on ver. 11).
This will be more remarkably fulfilled in the de struction of mystical Babylon (compare Isa. xlvii.
4, Rev. xvii. 8).
Ver. 35. A sword is upon her princes.] Who were slain, together with their king Belshazzar, at a feast (see li. 39, Dan. v. 2, 30).
God against Gobryas, p. 373 (see likewise
Dr. Prideaux's Connex. of Script. Hist. p. 177, &c.).
They are mad upon their idols.] It looks as if men had lost the use of their reason, that they should place the whole of their religion in image-worship, and put an extraordinary value upon one image more than another. So as to deck them with the most costly ornaments, and make long pilgrimages and processions to them. For which reason idolatry is called in scripture by the name of sorcery and witchcraft.
Ver. 39.] The desolation of Babylon is expressed not able to foresee or prevent the dangers coming upon themselves in the common calamity (see Isa.
xxvii. 13, 14).
Ver. 36. A sword is upon the liars; and they shall dote:] The false pretenders to the knowledge of what is to come. Compare xlviii. 30, Isa. xlvii. 25, where the prophet, speaking of the Chaldeans, saith, "He frustrateth the tokens of the liars [bad-anz in the Hebrew is the same word that is used here], and maketh diviners mad."
Ibid. and ver. 37.] See notes on li. 30.
Ver. 37. The mingled people that are in the midst of her; Her auxiliaries, made up of several na tions (see Ezek. xxx. 5).
Become as women.] See note xlviii. 41.
They shall be robb'd.] They shall be a prey to such as come with sword in hand to rile them: as SOLON said to Croesus, who by way of ostentation showed him his treasures, "Sir, if any one come that has better iron than you, he will be master of all your gold" (compare Isa. iv. 3, and see the note thereon).
Ver. 38. A drought is upon her waters.] God opened a way for Cyrus to take Babylon, by sug gesting to him a method of draining the river Eu phrates, and making it passable for his army (com pare li. 36, Isa. xlv. 27).
For it is the land of graven images.] This veng ance comes upon them, because they have been the great couragers and supporters of idolatry (see ver. 31, li 44, 47, 52). And the executioners of the divine judg ments were the Persians, who, in opposition to the Sabeans, whose notions the Chaldeans embraced, followed the ancient discipline of the magi, or wise men among them, and had neither alters nor images:
as Strabo testifies, lib. xv. The same thing is affirn ed by Herodatus also, whose words are quoted in Original Notes on the Book against Caucasus, p. 373 (see likewise
Dr. Prideaux's Connex. of Script. Hist. p. 177, &c.).
They are mad upon their idols.] It looks as if men had lost the use of their reason, that they should place
the whole of their religion in image-worship, and put an extraordinary value upon one image more than another. So as to deck them with the most costly ornaments, and make long pilgrimages and processions to them. For which reason idolatry is called in scripture by the name of sorcery and witchcraft.
Ver. 39.] The desolation of Babylon is expressed not able to foresee or prevent the dangers coming upon themselves in the common calamity (see Isa.
xxvii. 13, 14).
there, and the owls shall dwell therein: and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation.

40 As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbor cities thereof, saith the Lord; so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein.

41 Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

42 They shall hold the bow and the lance: they are cruel, and will not show mercy; their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon.

43 The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble: anguish in much the same words, Isa. xiii. 21, compare xxxiv. 11, 15, of the same prophecy, and Rev. xviii. 3.

St. Jerome assures us, in his commentary upon the parallel text of Isaiah, that, in his time, the place where Babylon stood was turned into a park, where the king of Persia used to hunt.

Ver. 40.] See Isa. xiii. 19, xviii. 5, and notes there. Upon the Persians removing the seat of empire from Babylon, the glory of it was much diminished. And when Alexander proposed to restore it to its ancient greatness, he was prevented by death, before he could make any progress in that work. Under his successors it still decayed more and more, first by the neighbourhood of Seleucia, built upon the Tigris, by Seleucus Nicator; afterward by the building of Ctesiphon, on the other side of that river: so that at last it was reduced to utter solitude, and continued so in Strabo (lib. xvi.) and Pliny's time (see his Nat. Hist. lib. vi. cap. 26).

Ver. 41. A people—from the north.] See ver. 9. Coasts of the earth.] See ver. 29, i. 15, li. 27.

1 Thus saith the Lord: Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst of them that rise up against me, a destroying wind;

2 And will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about.

3 Against him that bendeth let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his brigandine: and spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host.

4 Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are thrust through in her streets.

5 For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel.

6 Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver make a perfect riddance of everything that is valuable (compare xv. 7).

Ver. 8. Let the archer bend his bow.] See 1. 14. Ver. 5. For Israel hath not been [or shall not be] forsaken.] Though God was justly displeased with his people, yet he will not cast them off utterly, or deprive them of his protection.

Ver. 6.] God's people are exhorted to flee out of Babylon with all haste, as Lot did out of Sodom, lest they be consumed in the iniquity of that place (see 1. 26).

Ver. 7.] She has recommended her idolatries to the world by several specious pretences, as well as every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her her recompence. 7 Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken: the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations are mad. 8 Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. 9 We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country: for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies. 10 The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness even, and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God. 11 Make bright the arrows; gather the shields: the Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes; for his device is against Babylon, to by her authority and example. So that they have been like poison set off by a golden cup, which hath enticed men to drink without being aware of the danger; and all this by God's permission, in order to the accomplishing some great ends of his providence. The expressions allude to the practice of harlots, in giving love-poisons to their gallants, which were made up of such ingredients as disturbed their brains, and made them run mad. The sense of this verse is plainly applied by St. John to spiritual Babylon, which has used the most plausible methods to disguise her idolatrous practices (see Rev. xiv. 8, xvii. 4).

Ver. 8. Babylon is suddenly fallen.] It is one aggravation of the punishment of Babylon, that her destruction should come upon her suddenly and unexpectedly (compare 1. 24) in one day, as the prophet Isaiah expresseth it, xlvi. 9 (see the note upon that place, and compare Rev. xvii. 8, 10, 17, 19).

Hoist for her.] Compare xlvii. 20. So the kings, the merchants, and other factors, are described as lamenting the destruction of Babylon, Rev. xvi. 9, 10, 11, 17.

If so be she may be healed.] This is spoken ironically, implying that her ruin is irrecoverable (see the note on xlvii. 11).

Ver. 9.] This is spoken in the name of God's prophets, and the other witnesses of his truth, importating that they had sufficiently testified against her errors and idolatries, but she was irremediable: and therefore it was time for all the lovers of truth to depart out of her, lest they be involved in her punishments (see ver. 6).

[Her judgment reacheth unto heaven.] As sin is sometimes used for the punishment due to sin, by a metaphor of the cause for the effect: so here judgment is taken for sin which brings down God's judgments, by a metaphor of the effect for the cause.

Ver. 10.] He hath declared our cause to be just (compare Ps. xxxvii. 6), by bringing such remarkable judgments upon our enemies: and therefore we ought to give glory to him in the assemblies of his church, and in the most public manner imaginable.

Ver. 11. Make bright the arrows; Prepare the instruments of war (see xlvii. 6).

The Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes.] [Nergal-baserous king of Babylon having destroyed it; because it is the vengeance of the Lord, the vengeance of his temple.

12 Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, make the watch strong, set up the watchmen, prepare the ambushes: for the Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon.

13 O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness.

14 The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men, as with caterpillars: and they shall liit up a shout against thee.

15 He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heaven by his understanding.

16 When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens; and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: formed an alliance against the Medes, Cambyses sent his son Cyrus with an army of thirty thousand Persians to join the Medes commanded by Cyaxares. (See Xenophon Cyropaed. lib. 1.) This Cyaxares a king of Medes, called Darius the Mede in scripture, was Cyrus's uncle; and it was properly his army that made the expedition against the Babylonians, he employing Cyrus as his general. Persia was then a small part of the empire of Medin, and was of little account till Cyrus made a figure in the world: and even then it was called the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, the Medes having still the preference. And, in aftertimes, the Greek historians style those wars in which their country encountered with Xerox, by the name of the Median wars, to Medes, because the Medes were the founders of that empire.

It is the vengeance of the Lord.] See 1. 28.

Ver. 12. Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, &c.] Give a signal to the inhabitants of Babylon to come together speedily for the defence of their walls and ramparts. To this sense some understood those words of Isaiah (xviii. 2), “Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountains,” meaning Babylon, called so in the twenty-fifth verse of this chapter (see the note there). In these and the following words the prophet ironically encourages the Babylonians to use their best skill and courage for the defence of their city; which yet he foresees will be to no purpose (see the like figure, ver. 8, and xlvii. 4).

For the Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake, &c.] Or, “For as the Lord hath devised, so hath he done:” and thus the particle gam, being repeated, is translated ver. 29 of this chapter.

Ver. 13. Dwellest upon many waters.] Upon the river Euphrates, which encompassed Babylon, and ran through it, and by means of which it thought itself secure and impregnable. “Many waters” do likewise mysteriously signify the many people over which this was the reigning city (see Rev. xvii. 15). The measure of thy covetousness.] God has put a bound to thy covetousness, which it shall not go beyond.

Ver. 14. As with caterpillars: &c.] Or, locusts, as Bochart saith the word properly signifies. Armies are often mentioned to caterpillars, locusts, and such-like devouring insects (see Nahum i. 15, 16, Joel ii. 3, 3, &c). he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

17 Every man is brutish by his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image; for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

18 They are vanity, the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

19 The portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the former of all things: and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: the Lord of hosts is his name.

20 Thou art my battle-ax and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms;

21 And with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider;

22 With thee also will I break in pieces man and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the young man and the maid;

Ver. 17—19.] An elegant and lofty description of God Almighty’s power and wisdom, in opposition to the weakness and unprofitableness of idols: the same which he had before, x. 12, where see the notes. This is a powerful argument to encourage our trust in God, and to assure us, that he will in due time assert his own authority against all the encroachments of idol-worship and false religions.

Ver. 20.] God speaks here to Cyrus, and tells him, that he will make use of him as an instrument of providence, for the destroying of the whole power of the Babylonian empire, and of all orders and degrees of men in it; as he had formerly made that empire the executer of his judgments upon other countries (see I. 28): or else the words may be understood of the church, and imply, that God will destroy all those earthly powers and kingdoms, which are adversaries to God’s truth and people, in order to establish and advance his church. This will be fulfilled at the fall of mystical Babylon, when God’s kingdom shall “break in pieces all the kingdoms of the earth,” in the destruction of that remnant of the fourth monarch, according to Daniel’s prophecy, ii. 44 (compare Othul. ver. 18, Mic. x. 10, &c., Hag. ii. 21—23, Zech. xii. 3, 6, and see below the note on ver. 24).

Ver. 24. I will render unto Babylon—all their evil See ver. 11, and 25.

In your sight.] This expression confirms the latter interpretation given of ver. 20, the same persons being spoken of here in the plural number, which are there mentioned in the singular, that is, God’s church or faithful servants. The enmity or change of numbers is frequent in scripture (see Ps. xiii. 7), and indeed in all writers when they speak of collective bodies.

Ver. 25. O destroying mountain—which destroyest all the earth:] Or, as the words may be more fitly rendered, “O corrupting mountain, that corruptest the whole earth.” Babylon was situated in a plain (see ver. 13, and Gen. xi. 2), but is called a mountain here, by reason of its lofty edifices, walls, and towers (compare Isa. xiii. 2, Zech. iv. 7). It is called here “the mountain of corruption,” a name given by way of reproach to the mount of Olives, after it was defiled by idolatry (2 Kings xxiii. 13), by a slight changing of the Hebrew name, Har Measchith. The same appellation is here given to Babylon, because it was the seat of idolatry;

23 I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock: and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers.

24 And I will render unto Babylon and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the Lord.

25 Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth: and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.

26 And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolate for ever, saith the Lord.

from whence it was derived into other countries under its government and jurisdiction. Which is remarkably true of mystical Babylon (see Rev. xvi. 5). I will—roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.] I will dismantle all thy walls and forts, and then destroy thee with fire (compare ver. 58, 59); that thou shalt appear like a great mountain covered with fire and smoke (compare Rev. viii. 8). We do not find that Babylon itself was ever destroyed by fire, but that mystical Babylon shall be so destroyed is plain from Rev. xvii. 16, xviii. 8, 9.

Ver. 26.] There shall not be left an entire stone fit to use (see l. 40).

Ver. 27. Set ye up a standard—blow the trumpet These were common signals for assembling armies together (see Isa. xii. 2, xviii. 3).

Call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni and Ashchenaz.] These were countries under the dominion of the Medes. The two former are probably the same with the greater and lesser Armenia. Cyrus’s first expedition in this war, was for reducing the Armenians, who had revolted from the government of the Medes, who, upon this conquest, were obliged to send their usual quotas of auxiliaries to the carrying on the war against the Babylonians (see Xenophon, Cyropaed. lib. iii.). Ararat is a place noted for the resting of the ark after the deluge, which is commonly supposed to be the same with the Gordian mountains; Minni is the country called Mynias, by Strabo and Pliny; and is described by Damascenus as situate under the mountain Baris; that word signifies a ship in the Persian language, and was a name given to mount Ararat, from the ark’s resting there (see Huetius’s Demonstr. Evan. prop. iv. cap. 2, n. 40). By Ashchenaz, Bochart understands Phrygia and Tros, where there were footsteps of the name remaining in aftertimes: part of that country being called Aeschnia by Homerus; a lake and haven of the same name is mentioned by Strabo and Pliny. And since Cyrus had conquered Cressus, and subdued several nations, from the Egean sea to Euphrates, before he marched against Babylon, as both Herodotus (lib. i.) and Xenophon (Cyropaed. lib. vii.) testify, it is very probable that a great part of his army might consist of such troops as followed him out of Asia. [Xenophon informs us 28 Prepare against her the nations with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion.

29 And the land shall tremble and sorrow: for every purpose of the Lord shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.

30 The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds: their might hath failed; they became as women: they have burned her dwelling-places; her bars are broken.

31 One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to shew the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end, 32 And that the passages are stopped, and the that there were both Phrygians and Cappadocians in Cyrus's army. Cyropod. lib. 7, p. 158, 159, edit. Leunclav.

Appoint a captain against her.] Compare l. 41. The word 'apthysar, captain, is supposed by Grotius to be derived from the Persian word 'artaphan; the letters being transposed.

Causes the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars.] Or, "the rough locust," as Bochart renders it, who observes that there are some insects of that kind rough and hairy (Hierozoicon, p. 456). Locusts represent horses, not only in their swiftness, but likewise in the shape of their heads: the figure of which may be seen in Ludolphus's note on his Ethic. History, p. 177 (compare Rev. ix. 7, 8). The war-horse may be compared to caterpillars, because their backs were bristled with sheaves of arrows.

Ver. 28.] The several princes or viceroy's of the provinces belonging to the Median empire with their people (compare l. 41). All princes and governors are called kings in the Hebrew language (see Isa. x. 2, and note on xxv. 10).

Ver. 29. The land shall tremble and sorrow.] An expression commonly used to denote the confusion of the inhabitants under some great calamity (see viii. 16, x. 10, Joel ii. 10, Amos. viii. 8).

Babylon a desolation.] See notes on l. 16, 39, 40.

Ver. 30. The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds.] The year before the siege of Babylon, Cyrus overthrew Belshazzar in battle, whereupon his army retreated within the walls, where they were shut up by him and besieged. Afterward, when Cyrus entered the city, he ordered public proclamation to be made, that all persons should keep within their houses, and whoever was found abroad should be put to death: and threatened to set their houses on fire, if any offered to hurt the soldiers from the tops of their houses (see Xenophon Cyropod. lib. vii. p. 171, 192).

They became as women.] See note on xviii. 41.

They have burned her dwelling-places.] See ver. 25.

Her bars are broken.] All her fortresses, and what she confided in as her chief defence against the enemy (compare Lam. ii. 9, Amos i. 5, Nah. iii. 13).

Ver. 31. One post shall run to meet another, &c.] Babylon was taken by surprise, by unexpectedly draining the river Euphrates, and entering through the channel into the city, as Herodotus (lib. i.) and Xenophon (lib. vii. Cyropod.) relate.

For the carrying on this stratagem, Cyrus took the opportunity of a public festival, when the whole reeds they have burned with fire, and the men of war are affrighted.

33 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor, it is time to thresh her: yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come.

34 Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delights, he hath cast me out.

35 The violence done to me and to my flesh be upon Babylon, shall the inhabitant of Zion say; and my blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say.

36 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I night was usually spent in revellings, and all manner of disorders (see ver. 39). In this time of riot, the gates leading down to the river, that used to be shut every night, were left open, and gave a passage to Cyrus and his army into the city: which he became master of, while they thought themselves in the utmost security, both from the height and strength of their walls, and depth of the river: Cyrus having as yet made little progress in the siege, though he had invested the city with his army two years before. This surprise caused so many messengers to run one after the other, to acquaint the king with this unexpected news. The vast compass of this city has been observed in the notes on l. 16.

Herodotus takes notice, that the extreme parts of the city were taken before they who dwelt in the middle of it were sensibl of the danger (lib. i. n. 191).

Aristotle mentions it as a common report, that one part of the city had been taken three days before the other end knew it (Politic. lib. iii. cap. 3), which may probably be understood of this surprise by Cyrus.

Ver. 32. The passages are stopped.] Or rather surprised (see ver. 41 of this chapter). Cyrus's forces made themselves masters of the gates and passages that led from the river to the city.

The reeds they have burned with fire.] The word 'agamantio, translated reeds, properly signifies marshes or lakes: and the phrase here imports, that the enemies have burnt up all the outworks belonging to the marshy grounds about the river Euphrates.

Ver. 33. The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor.] God's people have been sorely bruised by the Babylonians, and trodden under foot by them as corn in a floor (see the notes on Isa. xxi. 9).

It is time to thresh her.] It is time for her to feel the same miseries she has made others suffer (see l. 15, 29). The word 'thresh often signifies to subdue by force and power (see Isa. xlii. 15, Hos. i. 3, Mic. iv. 13, Hab. iii. 12).

The time of her harvest shall come.] There shall be a clear riddance made of her inhabitants and their treasures, as the harvest clears the fields, and leaves them empty and bare (see Isa. xvii. 5, Hos. vi. 11).

Ver. 34.] A pathological description of the calamities brought upon the Jews by Nebuchadnezzar and his forces, who, after they had devoured the wealth, and laid waste the beauty of their country, then turned them out of it, and led them captives into a strange land.

Ver. 35.] Let God return upon herself the violence she has done to me and to my children (see will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee; and I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry.

37 And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant.

38 They shall roar together like lions: they shall yell as lions' whelps.

39 In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord.

40 I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he goats.

41 How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations!

42 The sea is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.

43 Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.

44 And I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up: and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him: yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall.

45 My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the Lord.

46 And lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the words may be taken in a more literal sense (see the note on ver. 64).

Ver. 43.] When the seat of the empire was removed from Babylon to Shushan, the consequence of that translation was the decay of Babylon itself, and all the lesser cities within its territories (see likewise the notes upon l. 39, 40); or else the words may be understood of the cities belonging to the Babylonish empire, which Cyrus took in his expedition from Asia to Babylon.

Ver. 44. I will punish Bel in Babylon.] See ver. 47, and note on l. 2.

I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up.] The haecdes ascribed the honour of all their successes to their idols, and upon any great victory offered the best part of the spoils to their gods, and deposited them in their temples, as a grateful acknowledgment that the success was owing to their assistance. So Nebuchadrezzar, upon every victory over the Jews, carried away part of the furniture of the sanctuary, and put it in the temple of his idol (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7, Dan. i. 9, 2 Kings xxv. 13, &c.). The restoring of the holy vessels to their right owner, and their former use, is what is here particularly foretold; which was done by Cyrus upon his proclamation for rebuilding the temple, Ezra i. (compare ver. 11, 31 of this chapter, and l. 29.)

The farther accomplishment of this prophecy, Dr. Prideaux places in Xerxes's demolishing the temple of Belus, and plundering it of its vast wealth; which, from Diodorus Siculus's account of it, he computes to amount to twenty-one millions of our money (see his Connect. of Script. Hist. p. 130, 191).

[The words may be explained from the apocryphal history of Bel and the Dragon, where the idol is supposed to have been daily fed with the choicest provisions, which his priests pretended were devoured by him: ver. 0, 11, &c. Here the prophet saith, there shall be no more such provisions made for him, and the idol Bel shall be broken in pieces, to make him restore, if it were possible, what he has consumed.

And the nations shall not flow together any more unto him.] There shall be no more costly presents brought by foreign nations unto the temple of Bel, as a compliment to that monarchy: just as, under the Roman empire, people that were conquered by them, sent golden crowns to Jupiter Capitoline. The wall of Babylon shall fall.] See ver. 58.

Ver. 45. Go ye out, &c.] See note on l. 8.

Ver. 46. And ye fear, for the rumour that may be heard!] Lost the rumours of new forces ready to Join themselves to the Babylonians, disheartened you 2t2 the rumour that shall be heard in the land: a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler.

47 Therefore, behold, the days come, that I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon: and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her.

48 Then the heavens and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the Lord.

49 As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth.

50 Ye that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still: remember the Lord afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind.

51 We are confounded, because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces: for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the Lord's house.

52 Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will do judgment upon her graven images: and through all her land the wounded shall groan.

53 Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the Lord.

54 A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans:

55 Because the Lord hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice; when her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered:

56 Because the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and her mighty men are taken, every one of their bows is broken: for the Lord God of recompenses shall surely requite.

57 And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the king, whose name is the Lord of hosts.

58 Thus saith the Lord of hosts: The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and themselves in heart and mind with God's church and people.

Ver. 51. We are confounded, because we have heard reproach.] The prophet represents the words of these pious exiles, when they reflected upon the desolation of God's people and sanctuary, whereby they were not only exposed themselves to the scorn and reproach of their enemies, but God's name and truth were blasphemed by strangers and heathens, who profaned his sanctuary, as if he were not able to protect his temple and worshippers (compare Ps. xlv. 16, lxix. 4, Lam. ii. 15, 16).

Into the sanctuaries] The word sanctuaries, in the plural, is likewise used Ps. lxxxiii. 17, though our English reads there sanctuary; and the word is either an allusion to the several courts of the temple, or else it may comprehend those private oratories, which religious persons built for performing their devotions, and which were lived at a distance from the temple (see Ps. lxxix. 8, and the notes upon xli. 5).

Ver. 52. Behold, the days come.] See ver. 47.

Ver. 53.] Though she prides herself in the glory of her empire, placed above the common height of human greatness (compare Isa. xlvii. 7, 8); though she thinks herself never so secure in her high gates (ver. 58), and strength of her walls, which were three hundred and fifty feet high, according to Herodotus (lib. i. cap. 178); yet this shall not place her out of the reach of my vengeance (compare xix. 16).

Ver. 55.] As multitudes are compared to waters (see ver. 13), so the noise and stir that are heard in populous cities are resembled to the waves of the sea (compare Isa. xlvii. 2), and when they are de-populated, they are reduced to silence (see Isa. xv. 1, lvi. 5). The same is expressed, xxv. 10, by "taking away the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness," &c. A judgment threatened to mystical Babylon, Rev. xviii. 23. Some render the latter part of the verse thus, When their waves roar, &c. and explain it of the Medes and Persians coming up like a flood against Babylon (see ver. 42).

her high gates shall be burned with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

59 ¶ The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah the son of Neriah, the son of Maseiah, when he went with Zedekiah the king of Judah into Babylon in the fourth year of his reign. And this Seraiah was a quiet prince.

60 So Jeremiah wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon.

61 And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou broken.] The walls were eighty-seven feet in breadth, according to Herodotus (lib. i. cap. 178). Ctesias saith, they were so wide, that six chariots might meet upon them (apud Diocr. Sicyi. lib. ii.); their height was three hundred and fifty feet, as was observed before: on each square of the walls were twenty-five gates of brass, mentioned Isa. xlv. 2. These were taken away by Darius, when he took the city (see the notes upon 1. 16), who likewise brought down their walls to the height of fifty cubits only. Berosus affirms, that Cyrus ordered the outward walls of the city to be pulled down (see his words in Josephus, lib. i. contra App. p. 1045); though Herodotus and Xenophon take no notice of this circumstance.

The people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.] If the Chaldeans take never so much pains to quench the fire, it shall be to no purpose (compare ver. 64). And all their efforts to preserve their empire and city shall be as insignificant, as if men wrought in the fire, which immediately destroys all the fruits of their labours.

The words may be better translated, "And the people shall labour for a thing of nought, and the folks shall weary themselves for that which shall be fuel for the fire:" that is, the works which have been erected with such incredible labour and expense shall at last fall to ruin, and be a prey to the flames (compare ver. 25. Hab. ii. 12, and see Noldius's Concordance, p. 155).

Ver. 59. When he went with Zedekiah] Or rather, "from Zedekiah," or, "on the behalf of Zedekiah," as our margin reads (see Noldius’s Concordance, p. 114).

2 And he did that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

3 For through the anger of the Lord it came as appears from St. Jerome's epistle to Paulinus. This chapter is briefly taken out of the latter part of the second book of Kings, with some few additions, which Ezra might supply out of the public records, from whence the books of Kings were compiled: which books were written either in or after the captivity, as may be collected from the Chaldee names, which are given to the months in those books, which were never used by the Jews till after the captivity.

Ver. 1—3] This is word for word the same with 2 Kings xxiv. 15—20.

Ver. 4—11. It came to pass] See xxxix. 1, &c. to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

4 And it came to pass in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, and all his army, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it, and built forts against it round about.

5 So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

6 And in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land.

7 Then the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night by the way of the gate between the two walls, which was by the king's garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about;) and they went by the way of the plain.

8 But the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and all his army was scattered from him.

9 Then they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him.

10 And the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah.

11 Then he put out the eyes of Zedekiah: and the king of Babylon bound him in chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in prison till the day of his death.

12 Now in the fifth month, in the tenth day of the month, which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzaradan, captain of the guard, which served the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem.

13 And burned the house of the Lord, and the king's house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burned he with fire:

14 And all the army of the Chaldeans, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down all the walls of Jerusalem round about.

15 Then Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard carried away captive certain of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude.

16 But Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard left certain of the poor of the land for vine-dressers and for husbandmen.

17 Also the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brased sea that was in the house of the Lord, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18 The caldrons also, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the bowls, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

19 And the basins, and the fire-pans, and the bowls, and the caldrons, and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away.

20 The two pillars, one sea, and twelve brazen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the Lord: the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

21 And concerning the pillars, the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits; and a fillet of twelve cubits did compass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow.

22 And a chapiter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapiter was five cubits, with network and pomegranates upon the chapters round about, all of brass. The second pillar also and the pomegranates were like unto these.
23 And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the network were an hundred round about.

24 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Serai-ah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door: 25 He took also out of the city an eunuch, which had the charge of the men of war; and seven men of them that were near the king's person, which were found in the city; and the principal scribe of the host, who mustered the people of the land; and threescore men of the people of the land, that were found in the midst of the city.

26 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard took them, and brought them to the king of Bab-ylon to Riblah.

27 And the king of Babylon smote them, and put them to death in Riblah in the land of Ha-math. Thus Judah was carried away captive out of his own land.

28 This is the people whom Nebuchadrezzar carried away captive: in the seventh year three thousand Jews and three and twenty: 29 In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred thirty and two persons: 30 In the third and twentieth year of Nebu-chadrezzar Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive of the Jews seven hundred forty and five persons: all the persons were four thousand and six hundred.

31 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the five and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach of the city. These were eminent persons who had concealed themselves, but were afterward discovered. Ver. 28. This is the people whom Nebuchadrezzar carried away captive.] Archbishop Usher, in his Chronolog. S. p. 36, supposes, that this and the two following verses give an account of the lesser captivities which the Jews suffered under Nebuchadnezzar: whereas, there were three others, in which many more persons were carried away, viz. in the first year of his reign (Dan. i. 3), in the eighth year mentioned 2 Kings xxiv. 12, and in the nineteenth, when the city was destroyed, an entire rabble was made of the inhabitants which were left after the former captivities.

In the seventh year three thousand Jews and three and twenty:] Upon Jehoiakim's rebellion against Nebuchadnezzar, he ordered the governors of the neighbouring provinces to make war upon him, who invaded his kingdom from every quarter. The Ammonites, Moabites, and other subjects to the Babylonish empire, infesting Judea with frequent incursions (see 2 Kings xxiv. 2, 3); and in the last year of Jehoiakim's reign, which is coincident with the seventh year of Nebuchadnezzar (see Jer. xxv. 1), the captivity here mentioned happened. Ver. 29.] This was when Nebuchadnezzar raised the siege of Jerusalem, to march against the king of Egypt, who cannot sit the great army to the relief of the place (see xxxvi. 5). At which time he sent all the captive Jews which were in his camp to Ba- bylon (see Archbishop Usher's Chronolog. S. p. 38).

Ver. 30.] When Nebuchadnezzar had laid siege to Tyre, which was in the borders of Judæa, Nebu- zar-adan made this expedition into the country, and carried with him the captives here mentioned; who seem to be no other than the poor people, that he himself had left to manure the ground (ver. 1). And this he probably did by way of revenge for the mur- der of Gedaliah.

Ver. 31. In the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, &c.] This note of time confirms the observation already made upon xxv. 1, viz. that the scripture computation of the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, anticipates that of Ptole- my's canon by two years, which two years he reign- ed with his father. For if we add the thirty-seven years of his reign here mentioned, to the eight years of it which preceded Jehoiachin's captivity (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12), that sum will amount to five and forty years: whereas, according to the common ac- count, he reigned but three and forty.

Lifted up the head of Jehoiachin—and brought him forth out of prison.] St. Jerome, in his commentaries upon 1 Es. xiv. reports, from an ancient tradition of the Jews, that Evil-merodach having had the government of the Babylonish empire during his father’s distraction, used his power so ill, that as soon as the old king came to himself, he put him in prison for it, where he contracted a particular acquaintance with Jehoiachin, who was his fellow-prisoner, and that this was the cause of the great kindness he expressed towards him.

THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

CHAPTER I.

1 How dost the city sit solitary, that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princely

CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—I observed in the argument to the fifty-second of Jeremiah, that that chapter was added, at the end of his prophecy, as a prologue or introduction to his book of Lamentations: which was originally joined to the former, but is now divided from it in the modern Jews’ copies, which place this book, among other smaller tracts, such as the Canticles, Ruth, &c. at the end of the Pentateuch. This is a plain proof, that the order of the books of the Old Testament, in which the Jewish copies at present place them, is but of later date, and differs from that order in which Ezra placed the holy writings, when he collected them into one body. In which collection, Daniel had a place among the prophets: though the Jews, since the time of Christ, have thrust him down among the Hagiographa, contrary to the character their forefathers gave of him, as appears from Josephus, who calls him a prophet, nay, one of the greatest of the prophets (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 12), in agreement with which opinion our Saviour gives him the same title, Matt. xxiv. 25.

Instead of that ancient preface to the Lamentations, among the provinces, how is she become tributary!

2 She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks: among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her, they are become her enegies.
Judah is gone into captivity because of affliction, and because of great servitude: she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest; all her persecutors overtook her between the straits.
The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate: her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness.
Her adversaries are the chief, her enemies prosper; for the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: her children are gone into captivity before the enemy.
And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed: her princes are become like harts that had no pasture, and they are gone without strength before the pursuer.
Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction and of her miseries all her pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths.
Jerusalem hath grievously sinned; therefore she is removed: all that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness: yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward.
Her filthiness is in her skirts; she remembereth not her last end; therefore she came down wonderfully: she had no comforter. O Lord, behold my affliction: for the enemy hath magnified himself.
The adversity hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things: for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation.
All her people sigh, they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul: see, O Lord, and consider; for I am become vile.
gives of him, Mirus in affectibus conjectus Jeremia: “that he had a wonderful talent in exciting the passions.”

Ver. 1. How is she become as a widow! ] Cities are commonly described as the mothers of their inhabitants, and their kings and princes as their husbands. So, when they are bereaved of these, they are said to be widows and childless (compare Isa. ii. 26, xlvi. 5). Jerusalem, under these circumstances, is described as sitting alone (the multitude of her inhabitants being dispersed and destroyed), and in a pensive condition (compare iii. 25).
She that was great among the nations, and princes among the provinces. ] The kings of Judah, in their flourishing state, made conquests over the Philistines, Edomites, and other neighbouring countries: and by thus enlarging their dominions, advanced the power of the metropolis of their kingdom (see 2 Sam. viii., 2 Chron. xxvi. 6-9, 2 Kings xviii. 8).
Ver. 2. She weeps sore in the night. ] The darkness or solitude of the night doth naturally promote melancholy reflections (see Ps. vi. 6, xvi. 7, lxvii. 6).
Among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her; All her allies, whose friendship she courted by sinful compliances (see Jer. iv. 90, xxii. 20, 22), have forsaken her in her affliction, and join with her enegies in insulting over her.
Ver. 3. Judah is gone into captivity because of af-liction, &c. ] Her miseries have received their finishing stroke, in a total captivity and bondage to a foreign power of infidels and idolaters.
All her persecutors overtook her between the straits. ] A metaphor from those that hunt a prey, which commonly drive into some strait and narrow passage, from whence there is no making an escape.
The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts. ] The highways that lead to Jerusalem are unfrequented, because there are none that come up thither at the solemn feasts of the year, the temple and altar being destroyed.
Her virgins are afflicted. ] Her calamities afflict the young as well as the old, and spoil all their mirth and gaiety (see ver. 15, ii. 21, v. 14).
Ver. 5. Her adversaries are the chief. ] They have is none to comfort her: the Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstrous woman among them.

18 ¶ The Lord is righteous; for I have rebelled against his commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity.

19 I called for my lovers, but they deceived me: my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat to relieve their souls.

20 Behold, O Lord; for I am in distress: my bowels are troubled; mine heart is turned within me; for I have grievously rebelled: abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.

21 They have heard that I sigh: there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, and they shall come unto me.

22 Let all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions: for my sighs are many, and my heart is faint.

The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob. It is the divine decree and pleasure.

Jerusalem is as a menstrous woman Whom every body lusteth or disdaineth: she is looked upon as abominable in the sight of God, and therefore men think they have a right to use her with despite and scorn (see Jer. 1.7).

Ver. 11. See ii. 12, iv. 10, Jer. lii. 6.

Ver. 12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? The words may be rendered, "O all ye that pass by," or, "Oh, I appeal to all ye that pass by." The word lo or lu, is sometimes used for entreating or conjuring: as if the prophet had said, let any indifferent person judge, whether any calamity is like to mine.

Ver. 13. He hath consumed my habitations by fire, as he struck me with a blast of lightning, which immediately pierces into the vitals; and he has prevented my making any escape from my enemies, as if he had spread a net under my feet to hinder my flight.

Ver. 14. He has laid upon me the burden of my iniquities, and inflicted such heavy punishments on me, that I must sink under them. The Septuagint and the Vulgar Latin, with very little variation, read, "He watcheth over my transgressions." To the same sense Daniel saith, "the Lord hath watched over the evil." Dan. xiv. and Job xiv. 16. "Thou watchest over my sin," that is, thou diligently markest every sin I commit, that thou mayest in due time requite it with a proper punishment.

Ver. 15. The Lord hath trodden under foot The destruction that is made by war is elsewhere expressed by treading under foot (see the note on Jer. 1.26)
The Lord hath called an assembly against me The army of the Chaldeans.

The Lord hath trodden the virgin, as in a winepress. That people that was formerly betrothed to him as a chaste spouse, and secured from all violent attempts by his immediate protection (see the notes on Jer. xiv. 13, xviii. 17), God has now given up to the fury of their enemies, who have made such an effusion of their blood, as may be fitly represented by the squeezing out of the red juice of grapes by a wine-press: to which God's vengeance is often compared in the prophethical writings (see Isa. lxiii. 3, Rev. xiv. 19, 20, xix. 15).

Ver. 17. Spreadeth forth her hands. A gesture of entreeing and importunity (see Jer. iv. 31).
CHAPTER II.

1 How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!

2 The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied: he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath brought them down to the ground: he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof.

3 He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel: he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about.

4 He hath bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: he poured out his fury like fire.

5 The Lord was an enemy: he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces: he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation.

6 And he hath violently taken away his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden: he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the Lord hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised in the indignation of his anger the king and the priest.

7 The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast.

8 The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion: he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying: therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together.

9 Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.

10 The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up and left us exposed to the fury of our enemies (compare Isa. v. 5).

Solemn feasts—(to be forgotten) See 1. 1. And hath despised—he king and the priest. And shown no regard for either of those honourable offices, but hath suffered the kingdom to be destroyed, and the temple laid waste.

Ver. 7.] Instead of the joyful sound of praises and thanksgivings to God, such as used to be solemnly performed in the temple at the public festivals; there was nothing to be heard but the noise of soldiers, and rudeness of infidels, profaning that sacred place, and insulting over the God that was worshipped there (compare Ps. lxiv. 4).

[Ver. 8. To destroy the wall] Dr. Lightfoot explains this of the wall which encompassed the temple and its outward courts. See his description of the temple, chap. 17. He hath stretched out a line. The instruments designed for building, are in some places applied to destroying, because sometimes men mark out those buildings they intend to pull down. So 2 Kings xxvi. 13, God saith, I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samar: and the line of confusion, is mentioned Isa. xxxiv. 11 (see likewise Amos vii. 7, 8).

[Ver. 9. Her king and her princes are among the Gentiles.] The king of Babylon's officers carried away captive all the royal family, and likewise all the men of note for valor or quality, and left none behind but the poorest people of the land. See 2 Kings xxiv. 14—16, xxv. 7, 11, 12. [The law is no more.] The priests and Levites, whose office it is to instruct the people in the law, are dispersed among the heathen: and that part of the law which regards the public worship of God, is rendered impracticable by the temple's being destroyed. [Her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.] The prophets are either dead, or those that are alive in captivity, as Ezekiel, Daniel, and Jeremiah himself: these are not favoured with divine revelations as they were wont to be, and so cannot resolve the doubts of those that come to them for advice (compare Ezek. vii. 20).
dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth: the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.

11 Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucklings swoon in the streets of the city.

12 They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers’ bosom.

13 What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea; who can heal thee?

14 Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee: and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of banishment.

Ver. 10.] Expressions of the deepest mourning and sorrow (see ll. 28, Job ii. 12, 13, Is. iii. 26, xlvii. 15).

Ver. 11. Mine eyes do fail with tears.] I have lost my sight with weeping (compare v. 17, Ps. vi. 7, xxxi. 2).

[My liver is poured upon the earth.] My vitals seem to be dissolved, and have lost all their strength (compare Job xvi. 13, Ps. xxi. 14).

The children and the sucklings swoon For want of sustenance (see ver. 19, and iv. 4).

Ver. 12. When they swooned as the wounded] Who are not presently dispatched, but die of a lingering death (see iv. 9).

Ver. 13. What thing shall I take to witness for thee?] What instance can I bring of any calamity like thine, that such an example may be some mitigation of thy complaints?

For thy breach is great like the sea.] It is like the breaking in of the sea, that overflows a whole country, where no stop can be put to the inundation.

Ver. 14. Thy prophets—have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity.] They have not given the people a just sense of their iniquities, in order to avert God’s judgments: but rather flatter them in their sins, and in hopes of impunity (see Jer. v. 31, xiv. 14).

[False burdens] The Hebrew word massa is usually translated burden, and generally signifies a burdensome prophecy (see the note on Jer. xxiii. 33). But it likewise importeth prophecy, in general (see Prov. xxx. 1, xxxi. 1), and so it is used here; for Jeremy complains of these impostors who prophesied peace, and soothed men up in their sins, to their final destruction.

Ver. 15. Clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head] Gestures of derision, whereby the enemies of the Jews expressed a satisfaction in their calamities (see Jer. xviii. 6, 1 Kings ix. 8, Ezek. xxv. 6).

Is this the city that men call—The joy of the whole earth?] Or, the whole land? (see Ps. xlvii. 2). Jerusalem was the metropolis of the Jewish nation, and highly valued by them for the magnificence of their temple, and the presence of the true God there; whither the whole nation resorted to celebrate their solemn festivals, which were observed with all the 15 All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?

16 All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it.

17 The Lorp hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.

18 Their heart cried unto the Lorp, O wall of the daughter of Zion, let tears run down like a river day and night; give thyself no rest; let not the apple of thine eye cease.

19 Arise, cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lorn: lift up thy magnificence of a religious joy. Their being deprived of those ornaments, gave occasion to their enemies to insult over them (see Ps. lxxix. 4).

Ver. 16. Thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee.] As if they were ready to swallow thee up (compare ii. 46, Job. xvi. 9, 10, Ps. xxii. 13).

Ver. 17. He hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old.] He hath fulfilled those threatenings which he denounced against our disobedience to the law of Moses (see Lev. xxvi. 31, &c., Deut. xxvii. 25, 26, 49, &c.). The word command is sometimes used for any part of the covenant, which God had engaged himself to perform (see Ps. ev. 8, exi. 9).

He hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.] Advanced their power and glory (see ver. 3).

Ver. 18.] As the wall and rampart are said to lament (ver. 8), because their ruins are objects of lamentation: so here devout persons, upon the destruction of the city, direct their prayers to God, as if the ruins themselves did entreat him to take compassion on the miseries of that place which he had chosen for his peculiar residence (see the like prolix popinian, Hab. ii. 11). To this purpose the Vulgar Latin expresses the sense, Clamavit cor meum suam muris filia Zion: “My heart cried unto the Lord concerning the walls of the daughter of Zion.”

Ver. 19. Cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches] Devout persons showed their earnestness in prayer, by attending upon it late at night, and early in the morning, when others give themselves up to sloth and drowsiness (see Ps. lixii. 6, cxix. 147, 148, Isa. xxvi. 9, 1 Pet. iv. 7). The Jews divided the night into three watches (see Judg. viii. 19); and in aftertimes into four (see Matt. xiv. 25, Mark xiii. 35, Luke xii. 38). The first watch was reckoned from the time of going to bed.

Pour out thine heart like water] Offer up thine earnest prayers with tears to the throne of grace: and send up thy very soul, and thy devoutest affections, along with them (compare 1 Sam. vii. 6, 8 Ps. liii. 8).

For the life of thy young children.] See ver. 11.

In the top of every street.] See the same phrase, iv. 1, Is. li. 30, Nahum iii. 10. Nobius thinks the expression means the same, as in every street (see his Concordance, p. 214).
hands toward him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street.

20 Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast done this. Shall the women eat their fruit, and children of a span long? shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord?

21 The young and the old lie on the ground.

Ver. 20. Consider to whom thou hast done this.] To thy people, for whom thou hast formerly expressed so much tenderness and affection.

Shall the women eat their fruit, and children of a span long?] The margin reads, "swaddled with their hands:" in which sense the word is used, ver. 22. We find, by comparing this verse with iv. 10, that God brought upon them that terrible judgment which he had denounced against them, if they continued to provoke him; viz. That they should "eat the flesh of their own sons and daughters" (Lev. xxvi. 29. Deut. xxviii. 58. Jer. xix. 13).

Ver. 21. The young and the old lie on the ground.]

Either they lie slain without any regard to age or condition: or else they lie prostrate there, in a desponding manner, and just ready to give up the ghost (see ver. 10).

Ver. 22. Thou hast called as in a solemn day my terrors round about.] Terrors come upon me on every side by thy appointment; just as multitudes use to flock to Jerusalem at the times of the solemn feasts. The phrase magor missabbih, "fear or terror on every side," is elsewhere used, by Jeremiah, to express great desolation and misery (see Jer. vi. 25. xx. 3. xlv. 5. xlix. 19).

CHAPTER III.

1 I am the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath.

2 He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light.

3 Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day.

4 My flesh and my skin hath he made old: he hath broken my bones.

5 He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travel.

CHAP. III.

Argument.—This chapter is written in different metres from the two former, and that which follows, as St. Jerome hath observed in his preface to the Lamentations: and whereas in those the first letter of every verse follows the order of the alphabet, here the same initial letter is continued for three verses together. The subject of the chapter is penitential meditations upon the prophet's own calamities, as well as those of the public: together with pious reflections upon the end which God proposes in sending afflictions, and the good use men ought to make of such chastisements.

Ver. 1.] The prophet speaks with a particular regard to the ill treatment he met with in the discharge of his prophetic office (compare Jer. xv. 10. 17. 18. xx. 8. &c. xxvi. 8. &c. xxxvi. 26. xxxvii. 15. xxxviii. 6).

Ver. 2.] Light is often used in scripture for happiness or comfort, and darkness for affliction and misery (see Isa. lxix. 9. Jer. xiii. 16. Amos v. 20). The words probably allude to the prophet's being cast into the dungeon (see ver. 53, 55).

Ver. 3.] God, that was formerly kind and gracious, now exercises continual acts of severity. "He turneth his hand against me," is a phrase equivalent to that we read, Isa. i. 25, "I will turn my hand upon thee" (see the note there).
11 He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces: he hath made me desolate.
12 He hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow.
13 He hath caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins.
14 I was a derision to all my people; and their song all the day.
15 He hath filled me with bitterness, he hath made me drunken with wormwood.
16 He hath also broken my teeth with gravel stones, he hath covered me with ashes.
17 And thou hast removed my soul far off from peace: I forgot prosperity.
18 And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord:
19 Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall.
20 My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled in me.
21 This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope.
22 ¶ It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not.

layeth my country desolate, and makes it to cease from being a nation, or body politic.

Ver. 12, 13.] He hath made me the mark and object of his indignation (compare Job xvi. 12, 13, Ps. xxxvii. 2).

Ver. 13. The arrows of his quiver.] Called here in the Hebrew, the " sons of his quiver," by an elegant metaphor, as they are called " the sons of the bow," Job xli. 25. By the same metaphor, sparks are called " the sons of coal," Job v. 7.

Ver. 14. I was a derision to all my people.] This may be understood of Jeremiah himself (see Jer. xx. 7); but some critics suppose the word ammi, rendered my people, to stand for ammi, the people, as the word is used in some places (see 2 Sam. xxii. 44, Mic. v. 3, compared with Ps. xxvii. 14); and then this sentence is to be understood of the Jewish nation, and import, that their miseries exposed them to the scorn and reproach of all the neighbouring countries (see ii. 15).

Their song.] See ver. 63, Job xxx. 9, Ps. lxix. 2.

Ver. 15. Drunken with wormwood.] See ver. 19, 16.] In this and the foregoing verse, the prophet aggravates the calamities of his people by such expressions as imply, that instead of any support or comfort, they find nothing but miseries and afflictions (see the note on Jer. ix. 15). The Septuagint renders the latter part of the verse, " He hath fed me with ashes;" i.e. We fare as hard as those who feed upon bread baked in ashes, whose teeth are in danger of being broke with grits and stones (compare Job vi. 7, Ps. cix. 9). This translation Noldius defends in his Concordance, p. 168.

Ver. 17. I forgot prosperity.] I have been a stranger to prosperity long enough to wear the remembrance of it out of my mind: so Joseph, speaking of the seven years of famine, saith, That " plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt " (Gen. xli. 30). By the same figure, the prophet Isaiah, describing happy times, saith, The former troubles are forgotten (Isx. 10).

Ver. 18.] I began to despair of God's mercy (see Ps. xxxi. 22).

Ver. 19. Mine affliction and my misery [or banishment, see i. 7], the wormwood and the gall.] Wormwood and gall are put for the most severe and rigorous treatment (see the notes on Jer. ix. 15).

Ver. 20.] I have still new occasions to remember them.

Ver. 21.] The reflections set down in the following verses, are a sufficient ground for our trust in God under the severest trials.

Ver. 22.] The Septuagint and Chaldee paraphrase the sentence, " Because the Lord's mercies are not at an end."

Ver. 23.] Thy mercies are renewed to us every day: and thy faithfulness in performing them is as great as thy goodness in promising them. God's mercy and truth, or fidelity, are usually joined together (see Gen. xxxii. 10, Ps. liii. 10, 4, c. 4).

Ver. 24.] An interest in the favour and promises of God is the best inheritance (see Jer. x. 16).

Ver. 25.] To them that patiently wait his time, when he thinks it a proper season to afford them comfort and deliverance: and in the meanwhile apply themselves to him by prayers and humiliation (see the following verse).

Ver. 26.] It is good to be inured both, to bear those useful restraints which arise from a sense of the duty we owe to God, and the obedience we ought to pay to his laws.

Ver. 28.] The discipline of afflictions makes a man serious and thoughtful, it disposes him to reflect upon himself and his ways, and instructs him to acquire in the dispositions of providence.

Ver. 29.] He penetrates himself even to the ground before Almighty God, in token of the deepest humiliation of his soul (see Ps. cxix. 25), if by that means he may recover the divine favour.

Ver. 30.] He not only humiliates himself in the sight of God; but likewise patiently bears the ill treatment of men (compare Isa. l. 6).

Ver. 33.] God doth not take pleasure in the misery of men, or in exercising his authority over them, but designs all his chastisements for our good (see Heb. xii. 9, 10).

Ver. 34—36.] As God takes no pleasure in oppressing the poor and helpless, so neither will he suffer any men to escape unpunished that are guilty of such acts of injustice and cruelty, who never consider
CHAPTER III.

35 To turn aside the right of a man before the face of the most High.
36 To subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not.
37 ¶ Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?
38 Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not evil and good?
39 Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?
40 Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord.
41 Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.
42 We have transgressed and have rebelled: thou hast not pardoned.
43 Thou hast covered with anger, and persecuted us: thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied.
44 Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through.
45 Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people.
46 All our enemies have opened their mouths against us.
47 Fear and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction.
48 Mine eye runneth down with rivers of water for the destruction of the daughter of my people.
49 Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaseth not, without any intermission.

that all the wrongs they do are committed in the sight of the supreme Judge of the world; and although at present he thinks fit to prosper such oppressors, the Chaldeans in particular, yet in due time, he will call them to a severe account for their wickedness.

Ver. 37. The king of Babylon, and such haughty tyrants, may boast of their power, as if it were equal to omnipotence itself; but still it is God's prerogative to bring to pass whatever he pleases, without any let or impediment, only by speaking or declaring his purpose, that the thing should be done, as he did at the beginning of the creation (see Ps. xxxvii. 7); and ever since nothing is brought to pass, but according to his determinate counsel and foreknowledge, who, as he makes men the instrument of his vengeance, so he can restrain their cruelty whenever he thinks fit.

Ver. 38.] Do not exalt yourselves over God's will and disposal, as well as prosperity (see Isa. xliv. 7, Amos iii. 6).

Ver. 39.] If we consider God's afflictions as a just reward of our evil deeds, this will prevent all murmuring and repining against providence: especially as long as men are on this side of the grave, they ought to be thankful for having an opportunity given them of repentance.

Ver. 40.] See ii. 1. Or the words may be rendered "Thou hast covered thy face in anger," &c. (see the next verse).

Ver. 41.] The same sense is elsewhere expressed by God's "hiding his face."

Ver. 42.] That is, of the heathen nations, whether thou hast driven us (see ver. 14, ii. 15); St. Paul plainly alludes to this text, 1 Cor. iv. 13, and translates the Hebrew word μανας, "refuse," by the Greek τρίπτημα. I have observed in the notes upon Jer. xxv. 16, that the apostles, in quoting the scriptures, 50 Till the Lord look down, and behold from heaven.

51 Mine eye affected mine heart because of all the daughters of my city.
52 Mine enemies chased me sore, like a bird, without cause.
53 They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me.
54 Waters flowed over mine head; then I said, I am cut off.
55 ¶ I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon.
56 Thou hast heard my voice: hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry.
57 Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee; thou saidst, Fear not.
58 O Lord, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul; thou hast redeemed my life.
59 O Lord, thou hast seen my wrong: judge thou my cause.
60 Thou hast seen all their vengeance and all their imaginations against me.
61 Thou hast heard their reproach, O Lord, and all their imaginations against me;
62 The lips of those that rose up against me, and their device against me all the day.
63 Behold their sitting down, and their rising up: I am their music.
64 ¶ Render unto them a recompense, O Lord, according to the work of their hands.

do not always follow the Septuagint, but now and then make a new translation of the words out of the Hebrew.

Ver. 46.] See the note on ii. 16. Or else the words may be understood of the reproaches they utter against us, and the God whom we worship (compare Rev. xiii. 6).

Ver. 47. [Fear and a snare.] See Jer. xlvi. 43, Destruction and destruction.] The expression is much the same in the original with that we meet with Isa. i. 10 (see the note there).

Ver. 51. [Mine eye affected mine heart.] Or, preys upon my heart; my grief wears out my health and strength. Abraham a Schultens, in his animalvers, on Job, p. 47, observes, that naisit signifies, in Arabic, to weaken, grieve, or make sick.

Ver. 52.] The prophet in this and the following verses describes his own sufferings, when his enemies seized him and put him into the dungeon (Jer. xxxvii. 16, xxxviii. 6). He compares them to a fowler that is in pursuit of a bird; so, saith he, they sought all opportunities to take an advantage against me, and to deprive me of life or liberty: and thus they did without any provocation given on his part. So the word הינאנה, "without cause," signifies (compare Ps. xxxv. 7, 19, lxix. 4, cix. 3).

Ver. 53.] I was not only sequestered from all human society, like a dead man (see ver. 6), but in apparent danger of losing my life in the dungeon (see Jer. xxxvii. 34, xxxviii. 9, 10). And their laying a stone upon the entrance of that dark cavern, resembled the burying me alive (Compare Dan. vi. 17, Matt. xxvii. 60).

Ver. 54.] When I sunk down into the mire in the dungeon, I despairs of my life, just as if I had been sinking over head and ears in a river (compare Ps. lxix. 2). And I said, I am cut off from the land.
65 Give them sorrow of heart, thy curse unto them.

of the living (see Ps. xxxi. 2, lsa. xxxviii. 10, 11).

Ver. 56. [Hide not thine ear at my breathing;] Or, sighing: God’s answering our prayers is commonly expressed by “opening his ears”: hiding them denotes the contrary.

Ver. 60. [All their vengeance] See Jer. xi. 19.

66 Persecute and destroy them in anger from under the heavens of the Lord.

Ver. 63.] In every part of their life (compare Ps. xxxix. 2). I am the object of their scorn and derision (see ver. 14).

Ver. 64.] See note upon Jer. xi. 20.

Ver. 66.] Let them be destroyed from off the face of the earth (compare Jer. x. 11).

CHAPTER IV.

1 How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street. 2 The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter! 3 Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to the young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness. 4 The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst: the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them. 5 They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets: they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dunghills.

CHAP. IV.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet returns to the same metre he used in the first two chapters, and treats of the same subject.

Ver. 1. [How is the gold become dim?] How is the glory of the temple obscured! The sanctuary which was overlaid with gold (see 2 Chron. iii. 8), now lies in ruins: and the stones of it are not distinguished from common rubbish! In like manner, the priests and Levites, who attended upon God’s service, and the elders of the people, the members of the great Sanhedrin, who kept their court within the precincts of the temple (see the note on Jer. xxxv. 4); these persons that might be resembled to the pillars or corner-stones of that sacred building, are now involved in the same common destruction with the meanest of people (see ver. 16, ii. 30).

In the top of every street. See note on li. 19.

Ver. 2.] Those that in honour and worth exceed the meanest, as much as gold doth earthenware, now lie undistinguished in their death. The words are an explication of what is said in more general terms in the verse before.

Ver. 3. [Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast.] [Dr. Pocock translates the word tunvin, “jackals,” sea-monsters having no breasts. See the notes upon Mic. i. 8.] The word tunvin signifies any great fish, as a whale or a crocodile (see the note on Isa. xxvii. 1); and is here very fitly rendered sea-monsters. These the prophet saith are not so unnatural, as to neglect the care of their young ones: whereas the women of Jerusalem have been reduced to that miserable necessity, as not only to disregard their children, not having wherewithal to provide for themselves, but likewise to feed upon them (ver. 4, 10).

Like the ostriches] See Job xxxix. 14, 16.

6 For the punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her.

7 Her Nazarites were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire: 8 Their visage is blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets: their skin cleaveth to their bones; it is withered, it is become like a stick.

9 They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger: for these pine away, stricken through for want of the fruits of the field.

11 The Lord hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof.
12 The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem.
13 ¶ For the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just of the midst of her.
14 They have wandered as blind men in the streets, they have polluted themselves with blood, so that men could not touch their garments.
15 They cried unto them, Depart ye; it is unclean; depart, depart, touch not: when they Isa. xlix. 15), and yet the famine hath forced that tender sex to divest themselves of it (see ii. 20).

Ver. 11. It hath devoured the foundations thereof.
It hath made an entire destruction, so as not to leave "one stone upon another" (see Jer. vii. 20).

Ver. 12. The city was so well fortified, and had been so often miraculously preserved by God from the attempts of its enemies, that it seemed incredible that it should at last fall into their hands.

Ver. 13. See Jer. v. 31; vi. 19, xxviiii. 11, Ezek. xxi. 26, 28; Zeph. iii. 4.

Ver. 14. They have wandered as blind men—polluted themselves with blood.

Ver. 15. Depart ye: it is unclean; [or, ye polluted depart.
When they fled to save their lives, they could find no safe retreat, but every body shunned and avoided them; and used the same words to express their abhorrence of this defilement of such persons, whose office it was to cleanse and purify others, as the lepers were by the law obliged to pronounce upon themselves, and cry, "Unclean, unclean" (see Lev. xiii. 45). The filthy garments of the priest were an emblem of their filthy minds (see Zech. iii. 4, 5): and called to remembrance the innocent blood which had been shed by their means (see ver. 13): when people saw their sins thus retaliated upon them.

They said among the heathen, They shall no more sojourn there.

Ver. 16. If God, in his just displeasure, hath scattered and dispersed them into foreign courts, where no respect will be given to their characters.

Ver. 17. We have watched for a nation that could not save us. We have long waited for, and have at last been disappointed in, the succours we expected from the Egyptians (see Jer. xxxvii. 7, and the note upon xxxiii. 20).

Ver. 18. They hunt our steps, that we cannot go in our streets:
Our enemies pursue us as wild beasts hunt their prey, and lay wait for us in every turning and corner of the streets (see 2 Kings xxvii. 3, 4).

Our end is come.
Compare Ezek. vii. 6, Amos viii. 2.13.

Ver. 19. Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles
God has brought upon us that judgment which he threatened by Moses, of "bringing a nation against us as swift as the eagle flieth" (Deut. xxiuii. 49). Such were the horsemen of the Chaldean army (see Jer. iv. 13, lii. 8).

They pursued us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness.
We could nowhere escape them, neither by flying to the mountains, nor by hiding ourselves in the valleys. The wilderness is elsewhere taken for the lower or pasture grounds (see Isa. liii. 13, 14, Joel i. 19).

Ver. 20. This verse some expositors understand of king Josiah, and thenceupon ground their opinion that the Lamentations were written upon occasion of his death (see the argument to ch. 1). But I rather conceive that Zedekiah is here meant, of whom the prophet saith, that he was taken in those toils his enemies had laid to catch him (see Jer. lii. 8, Ezek. xii. 13). As long as he was safe, we had hopes of preserving some face of government, although we were carried away into a foreign country.

The protection a king affords his subjects, is compared to the shelter of a great tree, which is a covert against storms and tempests (see Ezek. xvii. 23, xxxii. 6, Dan. iv. 12). And we might then have hoped to preserve some face of religious and government.

Ver. 21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom,
An ironical expression, like that of Solomon, Eccles. xi. 9, "Rejoice, O young man," &c. As if the prophet had said, Rejoice, while thou mayest, O Edom, over the calamities of the Jews (see Ps. cxxxvii. 7, Obad. ver. 10). But thy joy will not last long, for in a little time, it shall come to thy turn to feel God's ailing hand (see Jer. xlix. 7, &c.).

That dwelled in—[See.] See the note on Jer. xxxv. 19.

CHAPTER V.

ARGUMENT.—The title of this chapter in the Vulgar Latin is, Oration Jeremiae, "The Prayer of Jeremiah," it is not written in metre, as the foregoing chapters, but contains, like them, a pathetic complaint to God of the miserable condition of the Jews, with respect both to their spiritual and temporal state.

Ver. 1. Consider, and behold our reproach.] Which we suffer from the heathen (compare li. 15, lii. 61, Ps. lxxxix. 50, 51).

Ver. 4.] When our country was in our possession, we had free use of water and wood, which now we are forced to buy.

Ver. 5. Our necks are under persecution:] We are become slaves to our enemies, who "put an iron yoke upon our neck," according to the threatening denounced by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 45.

Ver. 6.] We have made ourselves slaves or tributaries to those people; which was done by the ceremony of "giving the hand," a form used when an oath or covenant was entered into (see Ezek. xvii. 15, Gen. xxiv. 2). The Jews are often upbraided for the alliances they made with Egypt and Assyria, for which they are threatened with being forced to live there as exiles (see Hos. vii. 11, ix. 3, xlii. 1). These two countries being the places whither many Jews fled for refuge from the calamities which threatened them at home; the prophecies that mention their return from their several dispersions, speak of Assyria and Egypt, as the principal places from whence they should return: as hath been observed in the notes upon Isa. xi. 10. Ver. 7.] See the note on Jer. xxxii. 29. The expression is not, or are not, is used of those who are departed out of this world (see Gen. xlii. 13).

Ver. 8. Servants have ruled over us:] Servants to the great men among the Chaldeans, and other strangers, are become our masters (see Neh. v. 15). Ver. 9.] If we fly to the most solitary places, in hopes to get a livelihood there, yet thither the ene-

15 The joy of our heart is ceased: our dance is turned into mourning.
16 The crown is fallen from our head: woe unto us, that we have sinned!
17 For this our heart is faint; for those things our eyes are dim.
18 Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it.

Grind at the mill, was the common employment of slaves (see Exod. xi. 5). Such was the pistorianum among the Romans.

The children fell under the wood. They made children turn the handle of the mill, till they fell down for weariness; so some explain it, with relation to the former part of the verse. But it may be understood of making them carry such heavy burdens of wood, that they fainted under the load.

Ver. 16.] All our glory is at an end, together with the advantages of being thy people, and enjoying thy presence amongst us, by which we were distinguished from the rest of the world (compare Job xix. 9). The word crown may signify both the kingdom and the priesthood: the mere being sometimes called the crown (see Zech. vi. 11).

19 Thou, O Lord, remainest for ever; thy throne from generation to generation.
20 Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us so long time?

Ver. 19.] Our only hope is in the eternity and unchangeableness of thy nature; and that thou still governest the world, and orderest all the events of it; whereby thou art always able to help us, and art never forgetful of the promises which thou hast made to thy people (compare Ps. cii. 28, Hab. i. 12).

Ver. 21.] Do thou give us the grace of conversion and amendment, and then thou wilt remove thy heavy judgments, and restore us to that happiness and prosperity which we formerly enjoyed.

Ver. 22. Thou hast utterly rejected us.] Thou art resolved to cast off the Jews of this generation, and wilt not show us any favour, till the seventy years of our captivity are expired.

THE BOOK OF

THE PROPHET EZEKIEL.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,
WILLIAM,
BY DIVINE PROVIDENCE,
LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY; PRIMATE OF ALL ENGLAND, AND METROPOLITAN;
AND ONE OF HIS MAJESTY'S MOST HONOURABLE PRIVY-COUNCIL.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

In pursuance of my design to explain the prophetic writings, I humbly offer to your Grace the following Commentary upon the Prophet Ezekiel; the depth of whose thoughts and expressions might justly deter me from undertaking a work of so much difficulty: but, begg ing your Grace’s and my reader’s pardon if I have been guilty of lesser mistakes, I hope, at least, that I have avoided committing any dangerous errors, by carefully following those directions, which the text itself, and the labours of several judicious commentators upon it, have suggested to me; having had likewise the assistance of some very learned friends, who have been pleased to communicate their thoughts to me upon the most difficult passages of it.

The most remarkable difficulties of this prophecy relate to the description of the temple, represented to the prophet in a heavenly vision. By the general consent of interpreters, this vision, in its mystical sense, sets forth a model or pattern of the catholic church of Christ, viewed in its state of perfection; of its largeness and extent, its strength and compactness, its beauty and order, and all those other qualifications, which are proper to edify and adorn this spiritual house of the living God, the pillar and basis of truth.”

Our church, in conformity with that of the first and purest ages, hath always been careful to maintain those principles of catholic unity and charity, which, if they were generally embraced and received, would render the Christian church like that Jerusalem which was a figure of it, a city at unity in itself. And since it hath pleased the divine providence to appoint your Grace as a wise master-builder to preside over it, we may hope, that under his Majesty’s most gracious protection, and your Grace’s auspicious conduct, it may receive new acquisitions of strength and edification; and, according to the obliging words of the late royal promise, be not only in a safe, but likewise in a flourishing condition.

That becoming zeal which your Grace expressed against those dangerous opinions which every where spread and abound, in your excellent speech at the opening of the convocation, as it gave great satisfaction to all those who had the honour to hear it; so it may justly be looked upon as a certain indication of your continual care and concern for the advancement of true piety and religion among us.

That God, who hath advanced your Grace to this high station, may long continue you in it, and may prosper all your pious designs for the promoting his glory, and the good of his church, as it is the united prayer of that great body of the clergy placed under your Grace’s jurisdiction, so it is of none more earnestly than of him who begs leave to subscribe himself, My Lord,

Your Grace’s most dutiful and obedient servant,

WILLIAM LOWTH.

PREFACE.

Ezechiel was a prophet of the priestly order, carried away into Babylon with several other Jews in Jehoiachin’s captivity, and therefore dates his prophecies by the years of that captivity. Clemens Alexandrinus tells us, some thought him contemporary with Pythagoras, and that they had conversed together in Babylon (Strom. lib. i. n. 13). This opinion he rejects as inconsistent with the age of Pythagoras, whom he supposes to have flourished about the sixty-second Olympiad (ibid. n. 21), which was near sixty years after Ezekiel was carried into Babylon. The late learned Bishop of Worcester, in his chronological account of Pythagoras’s life, supposes him born about nine years after Ezekiel’s coming to Babylon, and that Pythagoras himself came to Babylon at eighteen years of age; but there is no proof that ever he conversed with Ezekiel. Though it appears by the testimony of Hermippus, in Josephus (lib. i. cont. App. p. 22), that he had conversation with some Jews; and learned men have observed, that there is great resemblance between several of his symbols, and some of the precepts of the Jewish law.

But whatever became of Pythagoras, the accounts of whose life are very uncertain; it is certain that Ezekiel, being at Babylon, directed many of his prophecies to his fellow-exiles there, who, as St. Jerome observes in his preface to Ezekiel, reproved at their ill fortune, and thought their countrymen who remained in Judea in a much better condition than themselves. The prophet, with regard to those circumstances, sets before their eyes that terrible scene of calamities which God would bring upon Judea and Jerusalem, which should end in the utter destruction of the city and temple. He recounts the heinous provocations of the Jews, which brought down these heavy judgments upon them, in strong and lively colours; his style—exactly answering the character the Greek rhetorician gives of that part of oratory they call ἀποκρίσεως, which Quinctilian defines to be “oratio quaus rebus asperis, indignis et invidiosis viam addit” (lib. vi. cap. 3), its property being to aggravate things in themselves monstrous and odious, and represent them with great force and efficacy of expression. For the same reason Rapin, in his treatise of Eloquence, calls Ezekiel’s style le terrible, as having something in it that strikes the reader with a holy dread and astonishment.

Josephus (lib. x. Antiq. cap. 6), divides this prophecy into two books; but it is generally supposed, that he took that part of the prophecy which contains a description of the temple, beginning at the fortieth chapter, for a distinct book from the rest, as treating altogether of a different subject.

St. Jerome hath more than once observed (Præf. in Ezek. et in Proleg. Galeato), that the beginning and latter part of this prophecy is more than ordinarily difficult and obscure, and may justly be reckoned among the δαιμονία, or things in scripture which are hard to be understood. To contribute what I could to the clearing of these difficulties, I have taken the liberty of transferring into the following commentary whatever I thought useful for that purpose in the elaborate work of Villalpandus, a book which is in very few hands; and in the latter observations of Bernardus L’Amy, in his learned book De Tabernaculo Federis.

But I must not conceal the kind assistance I have received upon this and former occasions, from that great master of divine and human learning, the Right Reverend Father in God, Edward, Lord Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield; and I gladly embrace the opportunity of making my grateful acknowledgements to his Lordship in this public manner, for his many and constant favours.

CHAPTER I.

1 Now it came to pass in the thirteenth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God.

CHAP. I.

Argument.—The first chapter contains a description of God’s appearing in a glorious manner to Ezekiel, in order to give him a commission to execute the prophetical office.

Ver. 1. Now it came to pass [The Hebrew text reads, “And it came to pass;” but it is usual in that language to begin a discourse or book with the parole .telē ἐστι, or and (see Jonah i. 1. and the beginning of most of the historical books of the Old Testament); which particle is very properly translated in those places, “Now it came to pass” so that there is no ground for the fancy of Spinosa, who would conclude from hence, that this book of Ezekiel is but a fragment of a larger book, and contained several prophecies now lost, which were in order of time before those set down in these and the following chapters. In the thirteenth year.] It is a great question, from
In the fifth day of the month, which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity, 2 the word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans, by the river Chebar; and the hand of the Lord was there upon him.

4 ¶ And I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and the midst thereof as the colour of amber, out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire.

5 Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man.

6 And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings.

7 And their feet were straight feet; the sole of the sole of the foot was like a shoe sole turned outwardward. And the sole thereof was as it were a chain: and the middle thereof as the iron in a molten ephah:

8 Their wings were stretched outward: four had their wings one towards another, and four had their wings one toward the loins of him that was slain.

9 Their faces were towards the four winds of heaven: at the east was the face of the east wind; and at the west was the face of the west wind; at the north was the face of the north wind; and at the south was the face of the south wind: 10 the wind also cometh out of their midst. They have one8 face, and four names at every one of them, and they have four wings.

11 Their wings were full of eyes: they went not out without them; and day and night they stood in the门 of the temple of the Lord: and the way of the living creatures was straight forward.
of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot; and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass.

8 And they had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings.

9 Their wings were joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward.

10 As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle.

11 Thus were their faces: and their wings were stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies.

12 And they went every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went.

13 As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the living creatures went with him, as it were a spirit.

Ver. 10. They four had the face of a man, and—of a lion, on the right side, &c.] See the note on ver. 6. Grotius and Viallændus by the word face understand the shape or appearance, and explain the words to this sense: That these living creatures were like a man with respect to their visage, or their upper parts; they resembled a lion with respect to their back parts; their wings were like the wings of an eagle, and their feet like those of an ox.

But this exposition does not well agree with what is said here, that the face of the lion was on the right side, and that of the ox on the left; or, as Castalio translates it, and I think to a better and clearer sense, "the face of the man and the lion were on the right side, and the face of the ox on the left." And by comparing the several parts of this description, their figure may be rather concluded to be quadruple; and as the wheels were made to turn every way, so the living creatures could move towards any point without turning about: to signify, as I observed before, the steadfastness of their motions and purposes (compare ver. 15, 19, 20, of this chapter, with x. 11, &c.).

Ver. 11. Their wings were stretched upward.] In a posture of flying, to show their readiness to execute God's commands (compare ver. 24, with x. 16); or they were stretched to cover their faces, as the seraphim are represented, Isa. vi. 2 (compare ver. 23, of this chapter). Some translate the former part of the verse thus: "their faces and their wings were stretched upwards," to denote a position of attention, and as if they were submitted to the voice of God's word," as the angels are represented, Ps. civ. 20.

Two wings of every one were joined one to another.] Being thus stretched out, they touched one another, or the wings of one living creature touched those of another, as the wings of the cherubim did over the mercy-seat (see 1 Kings vi. 37).

Two covered their bodies.] See Isa. vi. 2. Grotius, upon ver. 6 of this chapter, assigns a reason why, in that text of Isaiah, and Rev. iv. 6, each seraphim hath six wings assigned him, whereas the living creatures here have but four; viz. the seraphim in these texts make use of two of their wings to cover their faces, out of reverence to the divine presence, before which they stand; whereas here the living creatures are supposed to stand under the throne, as supposing it (compare x. 10).

Ver. 12. They went straight forward.] See ver. 9. Whither the spirit was to go, they went.] That is, that spiritual or angelical power, which was the principle of all their motions (see ver. 20).

They turned not when they went.] See ver. 17.

Ver. 13.] The angels are always described of a bright and flaming colour (see ver. 4, 7). But here the coals of fire and the lightning, breaking forth out of the fire, denote God's vengeance coming in flaming fire to destroy the city and temple of Jerusalem (compare x. 2, Ps. xxi., Rev. iv. 5, 12).

Ver. 14.] The swiftness of their motions every way down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.
14 And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.
15 ¶ Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces.
16 The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl: and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel.
17 When they went, they went upon their four sides: and they turned not when they went.
18 As for their rings, they were so high that they were dreadful; and their rings were full of eyes round about them four.
19 And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.
20 Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, and they were as spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.
21 When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood: and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.
22 And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above.
23 And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies.

The wheels were lifted up and saw the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature; and they were full of eyes round about them four. And so were also the living creatures themselves (comp. x. 12): to signify, that all the motions of providence are directed by a consummate wisdom and foresight. To the same sense the angels, who are the instruments of providence, are called "the eyes of the Lord," Zech. iv. 10, Rev. v. 6.

Ver. 19–21] Both the living creatures and the wheels were animated by the same principle of understanding and motion, to signify with what readiness and alacrity all the instruments of providence concur in carrying on its great designs and purposes (compare x. 16, 17).

Ver. 20. The wheels were lifted up over against them] Those wheels, which were placed just by them (see ver. 15, 19); the word lewtham is rendered besides them, x. 19, xi. 22.

For the spirit of the living creature] That is, the spirit of each living creature, as the word is used in ver. 22.

Ver. 22.] over the heads of all the living creatures, or of this whole vision of living creatures (compare x. 15, 20), was the likeness of a clear sky or firmament, where the divine glory appeared as upon a throne (see ver. 26, x. 1, and compare Rev. iv. 2, 3). By the "terrible crystal" is meant such as dazzles the eyes with its lustre.

Ver. 23. Under the firmament were their wings straight.] The sense is the same with that of ver. 11, denoting that two of the wings of each living creature were stretched upward, out of reverence to the divine presence, or to express their readiness to obey his commands (see ver. 11, 24), and with the two other they covered their bodies.

Ver. 24. Like the noise of great waters.] To de-ote the terribleness of the judgments which they were to execute upon Jerusalem and the whole Jewish nation (compare xiii. 3; Dan. x. 6, Rev. i. 15).

As the voice of the Almighty] It resembled great

2X
And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings.

And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and I heard a voice of one that spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me.

21 And he said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee.

22 And the spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me.

23 And he said unto me, Son of man, I send My Spirit into the sons of Israel; and it shall effectuate in the hearts of the prophets, and in the mouths of the seers I will give them utterance, and I will make My Spirit dwell in the sons of Israel, and I will be sanctified in Jacob, and My name shall be sanctified ere the nations; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

24 And the word of the Lord came to me, saying:

25 And the voice of the Lord came to me, and said: What seest thou? And I said: Behold, I see the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone; and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above it.

26 And he said, This is the place of the feet of the house of the Lord, and this is the place of his glory; and he brought me thither, and, behold, he was standing there upon the oracle of it.

27 And he said as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about.

28 As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

And dreadful thunder (compare Job xxxvii. 4, 5, Ps. xxix. 3, lxviii. 33). St. Jerome, in his note upon the place, tells us, that the LXX. translate these words φωνὴ τῆς Λέυκου, The voice of the Léuko, or second person in the blessed trinity: which words are now in the Alexandrian copy. The Vatican copy is defective, but the Alexandrian copy runs thus: εἰ φωνὴ ἥκου, in τῷ περιπλέκοντα ἀτόμῳ φωνὴ τοῦ Λέυκου, ως φωνὴ τῆς παράσκευας. As the voice of the Almighty. "When they went [there was] the voice of speech, like the voice of a host." This reading shows that the LXX. designed to translate the following words by φωνὴ τῆς Λέυκου, where we read, "The voice of speech:" and then the word λέυκος may probably be taken in its ordinary signification: though we may certainly conclude that this was the appearance of the second person of the blessed trinity, both because he appears under the resemblance of a man (ver. 26), and from what hath been said upon this subject in the note upon Isa. vi. 1.

The voice of speech, as the noise of an host! Like the confused murmur of an army; either to denote the army of the Babylonians that should besiege the city, or to signify the angels, who are called God's host. When they stood, they let down their wings. They put themselves in a posture of hearkening to God's voice; and as it were waiting to receive his commands (see the next verse).

Ver. 25.] The Vulgar Latin renders it, "When there was a voice they stood," in an attentive posture (compare Ps. cxxvii. 20).

Ver. 26. Above the firmament—was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone: God is described in scripture as "dwelling in light," and "clothing himself with it" (compare Exod. xxiv. 10, Ps. cvii. 2, 1 Tim. vi. 16, Rev. iv. 2, 3). So the throne of God here described was made up of light, resembling the colours and brightness of a sapphire.

And upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness of a man, as the appearance of a man above upon it. When Moses and the elders "saw the God of Israel" (Exod. xxiv. 8), or "the glory of God," as the Targum explains it, they saw no determinate figure, but an inconceivably resplendent brightness, that they might not think God could be represented by any image (Deut. iv. 16). But in this vision the form and shape of a man is directly represented to Ezekiel, as a personification, or figure of the incarnation (see the note on Jer. i. 4).

Ver. 27.] The upper part of this appearance was of an amber colour outwardly, but appeared more flaming inwardly; the lower part of a deeper red, encompassed with a bright flame, to represent God's coming to take vengeance of the Jews (see the notes on ver. 4).

In most of our English bibles the stops are placed wrong in this verse; whereas the whole verse should be pointed thus: "And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downwards, I saw as it were the appearance of fire," &c. The words should be thus pointed, as appears by comparing them with vii. 2.

Ver. 28. As the appearance of—the cloud, &c.] The light reflected from this vision had the appearance of a rainbow, a token of God's covenant of mercy (Gen. ix. 11, &c.), to denote that God, in the midst of judgment, would remember mercy, and not utterly destroy his people (compare Rev. iv. 3). Especially this vision being an evident representation of the word that was to be made flesh, whose incarnation is the foundation of God's covenant of mercy with mankind: a rainbow, the symbol and token of mercy, was a very fit attendant upon that glorious vision (compare Rev. x. 1).

This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord: This is a description of that glorious vision wherein God appeared, and whereby he made manifest his attributes and perfections. When I saw it, I fell upon my face. As struck down with fear and astonishment (compare iii. 23, xi. 2, Dan. viii. 17, Rev. i. 17). Prostration was also a posture of adoration used upon any token of the divine presence (see Gen. xv. 8, xvi. 4).

CHAP. II.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains Ezekiel's commission for executing his prophetical office, and instructions given him for the discharge of it.

VER. 1. Son of man! This expression is commonly understood to signify the same with a common and ordinary man, as it is usually expounded in that text, Ps. viii. 4, "What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?" So thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious nation that hath rebelled against me: they and their fathers hath transgressed against me, even unto this very day.

4 For they are impudent children and stiff-hearted. I do send thee unto them: and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God. And I saw whether they will hear, whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) ye shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

6 ¶ And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

7 And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear: for they are most rebellious.

8 But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee.

9 ¶ And when I looked, behold, an hand was sent unto me: and, lo, a roll of a book was therein;

10 And he spread it before me: and it was written within and without: and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

here most commentators understand it as applied to the prophet, to put him in mind of his frailty and mortality, and of the infinite distance between God and man. In which sense it is supposed to be taken when spoken of Christ in the New Testament, implying his great humanity in assuming our nature, and appearing no otherwise than an ordinary man: and so the Hebrew phrase Ben Adam is plainly used, when it is opposed to Ben Iech; and is rightly translated "men of low degrees," or " mean men," Ps. Ixix. 2. Isa. ii. 9.

But some critics have observed, that the phrase son of man, is likewise taken for a man of dignity or character, as in Ps. lxxx. 17, "The man of thy right hand, and the son of man, whom thou madest so strong for thyself." And Ps. cxlv. 3, "Put not thy trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help." And there is no incongruity in supposing that Christ himself may be called the Son of man, even by way of eminence, as a title denoting him to be that great person whom God promised to raise up to be a " Prince and a Saviour" of his people. And so the title of "son of man," may be given to the prophet in the text, as one set apart for the prophetic office; in like manner as Daniel is called " son of man," viii. 17, who, in the next chapters hath the title of a " man greatly beloved," ix. 13, 19.

Stand upon thy feet." Put thyself into a posture of attending to what I say (see ver. 2, and compare Dan. x. 11).

Ver. 2.] God's Spirit revived me and gave me new life and vigour, that I could attend to what was said unto me (see the note on iii. 24, and compare ver. 12, 14 of that chapter).

Ver. 3. To a rebellious nation] The Hebrew word is gozim, nations, the word which is commonly used to denote the heathens, intimating that the Jews had outdone the wickedness of the heathens (see v. 6, 7).

Ver. 4. They are impudent children and stiff-hearted.] The original might be more significantly rendered, "They are children impudent in their conscience, and hardened in their heart." They are so far hardened in wickedness as to have cast off all shame, and even the very outward show of modesty.

Ver. 5] Whether they will regard what is said by thee or not (see iii. 27), yet the event answering thy predictions shall render thy authority unquestionable, and them inexcusable for not hearkening to the warnings thou hast given them (see xxxiii. 33).

Ver. 6. Be not afraid of them.] The prophets and messengers of God are often exhorted to take courage, and are promised a proportionable assistance in the discharge of their office, without fearing any man's person, or standing in awe of any man's greatness (see iii. 8, 9, Jer. i. 8, 18, Matt. x. 28). Such a presence of mind is expressed by τρέφεται, boldness, in the New Testament; and is spoken of as a peculiar gift bestowed upon the first preachers of the gospel (see Acts iv. 13, 29, Eph. vi. 19, Phil. i. 29), called the spirit of might, or courage, Col. i. 11, 2 Tim. i. 7. And they had need of great presence of mind, who are to reprove men hardened in sin, who are always impatient of reproof, and become the enemies of those who tell them such truths as they have no mind to hear.

Briers and thorns be with thee.] Such as study to vex and torment thee (compare Mic. vii. 4). The prophets often denote the wicked by briers and thorns (see the note on Isa. ix. 15).

Thou shalt dwell among scorpions.] Who would sting thee to death, and are as venomous as the worst of serpents (compare Matt. iii. 7, xxiii. 33).

Be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks.] Be not afraid of their threats wherewith they would affright thee: neither be afraid of their looks wherewith they would browbeat thee.

Ver. 8. Open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee.] The knowledge of divine truths is often expressed by the metaphors of bodily food and nourishment (see Isa. lv. 1, 2, Josh. vi. 37). So to eat the words of this prophecy, signifies to commit them to memory, to meditate upon them and digest them (compare Rev. x. 10).

Ver. 9. An hand was sent unto me.] I saw a hand stretched out towards me, as from that divine person which appeared to me in the shape of a man, i. 26 (compare viiiii. 3, Jer. i. 9, Dan. x. 10).

A roll of a book was therein.] Wherein was contained the contents of the following prophecy (compare Rev. v. 1). The ancient way of writing was upon long rolls of parchment rolled upon sticks (see Isa. viii. 1, Jer. xxxvi. 1).

Ver. 10. He spread it before me.] That I might understand the contents of it.

It was written within and without.] It was written on both sides, both that which was innermost when it was rolled up, and on the outside also: to denote a large collection of prophecies (compare Rev. v. 1).

Lamentations, and mourning, and woe.] All the prophecies contained therein consisted of God's judgments and mournful events, without any mixture of mercy, at least with respect to the Jews of the present age.
CHAPTER III.

1 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel.
2 So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll.
3 And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.
4 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them.
5 For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech and of an hard language, but to the house of Israel;
6 Not to many people of a strange speech and of an hard language, whose words thou canst not understand. Surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee.
7 But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted.
8 Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads.
9 As an adamant harder than flint have I made thy forehead: fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.
10 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears.
11 And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of thy people, and speak unto them, Thus said the Lord God; whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.
12 Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place. 13 I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures that touched one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing.
14 So the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; but the hand of the Lord was strong upon me.

Ver. 7. They will not hearken unto me.] They have so long resisted the means of grace that I have offered them by the former prophets (see Jer. xxv. 4), that there is less hopes of their conversion, than if they were infidels (compare Matt. v. 13).

Ver. 8. I have made thy face strong against their faces.] I have given thee courage and assurance proportionable to the hardness and impudence of those thou hast to deal with (see ii. 6, Isa. 1. 7).

Ver. 10.] See note on ii. 8.

Ver. 13. Then the spirit took me up.] Carried me from the place where I was before, when I saw the vision mentioned i. 3, 4 (see the note on viii. 9).

I heard behind me the voice as of a great rushing.] I heard a voice so loud, that it shook the earth like thunder (see John xii. 27, 28).

Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place.] Whatever place God honours with his especial presence, is equivalent to his temple, and there the angels always attend upon the divine majesty, to give him the honour due unto his name (compare Gen. xxviii. 13, 16, 19). The words imply, that though God should forsake his temple (see note on ix. 3), and destroy the place that is called by his name, yet his presence will make a temple of every place, and multitudes of the heavenly host will always be ready to do him service.

Ver. 13. Living creatures.] See note on i. 20.

Over against them.] That is, besides them, as the Hebrew phrase is elsewhere rendered (see note on i. 20).

Ver. 14. So the spirit lifted me up.] See ver. 12, and the note on viii. 3, xxxvii. 1.

I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit.] The joy that I first conceived in receiving the divine message, was quickly turned into grief and anguish of mind (see ver. 15).

The hand of the Lord was strong upon me.] I was unable to resist the impulses of God's Spirit (see i. 4, viii. 1, Jer. xx. 9).
CHAPTER III.

15 ¶ Then I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonied among them seven days.

16 And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.

18 When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

19 Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

20 Again, When a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumbling-block before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

21 Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul.

22 ¶ And the hand of the Lord was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee.

23 Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face.

24 Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thine house.

25 But thou, O son of man, behold, they shall put bands upon thee, and shall bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them:

26 And I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprover: for they are a rebellious house.

Ver. 19. Thou hast delivered thy soul.] Thou art clear from the guilt of his sin (compare Acts xx. 26).

Ver. 20. I lay a stumbling-block before him.] I caused his iniquity to become his ruin, as the word wicked is translated, xviii. 30.

Ver. 22. Was there upon me?] See ver. 14, i. 3.

Go into the plain.] As a place more retired and fitter for contemplation.

Ver. 23. The glory of the Lord stood there.] See i. 26.

As the glory which I saw by—Chebar.] This part of that river seems distant from that place where the former vision was shown him (compare ver. 15 with i. 3), “Then the Spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me.” The words are literally to be translated thus: “Then the Spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet; and he spake unto me;” for the last verb is in the masculine gender, and the two former in the feminine. In like manner the fifth verse of the eleventh chapter should be read, “And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me, and he said unto me.” The spirit or power of God which the prophet felt within him (called likewise “the hand of the Lord,” ver. 14, 32 of this chapter, and viii. 1), being distinguished here from the divine glory or Shechinah, which the prophet saw, as it is very plainly, ii. 2, “And the Spirit entered into me, when he spake unto me.”

Go, shut thyself within thine house.] Hereby to represent the siege of Jerusalem (see iv. 1, &c.).

Ver. 25. They shall put bands upon thee.] Thou shalt be confined to lie so many days upon thy right side, and so many upon the left, as thou wert bound and not able to stir (see iv. 8). The LXX. and the Vulgar Latin read, “Bonds shall be put upon thee,” and it is very common in the Hebrew language to take the verb transitive in an impersonal sense (see the notes on Isa. xlvii. 16).

Ver. 26. Thou shalt be dumb, and shall not be to them a reprover.] Ezekiel’s dumbness might proceed from two causes: excess of grief, as we read ver. 15 of this chapter, that he “remained astonied seven days,” wherein he was a type or figure of the condition of the Jews, when they were to be

CHAPTER IV.

ARGUMENT.—Under the emblem of a siege, and of the straitness of provision during the siege, is shown the miseries the Jews shall suffer when the city is besieged: and by the prophet's lying up his right and left side a certain number of days, is declared of how long continuance those sins were which God did visit upon that people.

Ver. 1. Take thee a tile, and lay it before thee.] The prophets often foreshow impending judgments by significative emblems, being of greater force and efficacy than words. So Jeremy was commanded to go down to the potter's house, and see how frequently vessels were marred in his hands (ch. xviii.), and to take one of those earthen vessels and break it in the sight of the elders of the Jews (ch. xix.), that they might thereby be sensibly taught the greatness of God's power, and their own frailty. So here God commands the prophet to take a tile, or such a slate as the mathematicians draw lines or figures upon, and there make a portraiture of Jerusalem, thereby to represent it as under a siege. We may observe that God often suits prophetical types and figures to the genius and education of the prophets themselves. So the figures which Amos makes use of are generally taken from such observations as are proper to the employment of a shepherd or a husbandman. Ezekiel had a peculiar talent for architecture; so several of his representations are suitable to that profession. And they that suppose the emblem here made use of to be below the dignity of the prophethetical office, may as well accuse Archimedes of folly for making lines in the dust.

Ver. 2. Lay siege against it.] Make a portraiture of a siege, and of such warlike preparations as are necessary to it.

Ver. 3. Take—an iron pan.] A plate or slice, as the margin reads. This may either represent the walls of Jerusalem, which were to be broken down, in order to the taking of it, as the following words may be thought to imply; or else some of those works which the besiegers cast up for their own defence: so this is another representation of the siege mentioned ver. 1. [This shall be a sign] Ezekiel often expressed God's purposes by signs (see xii. 2, 12, xxiv. 24, 27, and the notes upon ver. 17 of this chapter).

Ver. 4. Lie thou also upon thy left side.] Lie on that side without stirring or moving thyself (see ver. 5). [Thou shalt bear their iniquity.] By lying on one side thou shalt signify God's forbearing their punishment for so many years: so the words are commonly explained; but in my opinion not agreeably to the genuine sense of the phrase, "To bear one's iniquity." [The word nasa, to bear, when it is joined with sin, or iniquity, doth sometimes signify to forgive, or forbear the punishment due to sin, particularly Ps. xxv. 15, and is sometimes rendered aprox in the LXX. but it usually denotes bearing or suffering punishment (see Lev. xvi. 29); especially when it is joined with "laying on iniquity," as it is here (see ver. 4, 5). And we find the circumstances under which Ezekiel was here placed, were all of them penal. As also that other expression of laying iniquity upon any, imports the imputing the guilt of it, or inflicting the punishment due unto it. So here the prophet does in vision bear the punishment due to the idolatry of Israel and Judah, which had continued, the one for three hundred and ninety, the other for forty years. The circumstances of this vision prove, that the prophet did really perform what is here related; or else it could not have been a "sign unto the house of Israel" (ver. 5), unless they themselves had been eye-witnesses of it (compare xii. 7, 11). The chief objection against this opinion is, that there is not the distance of four hundred and thirty days between this vision and that which is next related (viii. 1); but that may be answered by supposing this to be an intercalary year, which may be supposed to have happened often in the Jewish computation of time, whose years consisted at most but of three hundred and sixty days, or, as some think, were lunar years, reduced by intercalations to the solar form (see Dr. Prideaux, Script. Hist. par. i. p. 281). [Concerning
CHAPTER IV.

5 For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel.

6 And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year.

7 Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and thine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophesy against it.

8 And, behold, I will lay bands upon thee, the form of the Jewish year, see many useful observations on Mr. Marshal's Treatise upon the Seventy Weeks, par. ii. ch. 4.)

Ver. 5. Three hundred and ninety days.] The most probable computation of this time is, to date its beginning from Jeroboam's first setting up the idolatrous worship of the golden calves, to the last captivity of the Jews, in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign (see Jer. iii. 30). This sentence may be read, as the entire riddance of the native, and consequently to be the finish- ing stroke of the Jewish captivity. Both Judah and Israel being now entirely carried away, whereas before that time many of the ten tribes lived in their own habitations (see 2 Chron. xxix. 14, xxxi. 11, 15, xxxii. 33, Ezra vi. 17).

Ver. 6. Thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah, forty days.] This series of time may probably be computed from the eighteenth year of Josiah, at which time the king and people entered into a solemn covenant to serve and worship God, so that the idolatry they were afterward guilty of received a new aggravation, as being a breach of this solemn covenant, the greater part of the people being still idolatrous in their hearts (see the notes on Jer. iii. 6, 10). The thirtieth year, mentioned in the beginning of this prophecy, is supposed to take its date from the eighteenth year of Josiah, which makes it probable that the prophet refers to the same era in this place.

Scaliger and some others begin these forty years from Jeremiah's mission as a prophet, which was in the thirteenth year of Josiah, from which time till the fall of Zedekiah, when city and temple were destroyed, is just forty years. [The learned bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, in his Defence of Christianity, ch. 3, sect. 1, explains the forty days of Judah's transgression, of the years wherein Judah had exceeded Israel in idolatry under the reign of Manasseh. The sins committed at that time filled up the measure of Judah's transgressions. See 2 Kings xxi. 11—15, xxii. 20, xxxiv. 3, Jer. xxvi. 4.] I have appointed thee each day for a year. Days frequently stand for years in the prophetic accounts of time. See Numb. xiv. 34, "After the number of forty days (each day for a year), shall you bear your iniquities, even forty years," Dan. ix. 24. The days of the seventy weeks must necessarily be understood in the same sense, so as to make up the sum of the last hundred and forty years. And the one thousand two hundred and sixty days mentioned Rev. xi. 3, are, according to the genius of the prophetic style, to be understood of so many years.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem.] When thou liest in one posture, as is commanded thee, ver. 4, 6, thou shalt have the portraiture of the siege of Jerusalem before thee (ver. 1); or "setting thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem," may signify looking earnestly, or with and thou shalt not turn thee from one side to another, till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.

9 ¶ Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread thereof, according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side, three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.

10 And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it.

a threatening visage towards it: as the prophet is said to set his face against a place, when he prophesies against it (see vi. 2).

Thine arm shall be uncovered.] Or, stretched out. Their habits were anciently contrived, so that the right arm was disengaged from the upper garments, that they might be the more ready for action. So ancient statues and coins represent heroes with their right arm bare, and out of the sleeve of their garments. Thus God is said to "make bare his arm," Isa. lii. 10, where he is represented as subduing his adversaries, and bringing salvation to his people.

Thou shalt prophesy against it.] By signs and not by words (see note on lii. 20).

Ver. 8. I will lay bands upon thee. See lii. 25. Till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.] The three hundred and ninety days, mentioned ver. 5, 9, were designed not only to signify the years of Israel's sin, but the continuance of the siege of Jerusalem. That siege lasted, from the beginning to the ending of it, seventeen months, as appears from 2 Kings xxv. 1—4. But the king of Egypt coming to relieve the city, was the occasion of raising the siege for some time, as appears from Jer. xxxvii. 3. So that it may reasonably be gathered from the authority of the text joined to the circumstances of the story, that the siege lasted about thirteen months, or three hundred and ninety days (see Archbishop Usher's Annals, ad An. Mundi 3415).

Ver. 9. Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, &c. In time of scarcity it is usual to mix a great deal of the coarse kinds of grain with a little of the better sort, to make their provisions last the longer. It signifies, as they were not to signify the scarcity and coarse fare the inhabitants should endure in the siege of the city.

Three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.] During which time the siege lasted (see ver. 5). The forty days, mentioned ver. 6, seem not to be reckoned into this account. These denoted Judah's sin of forty years' continuance, from the eighteenth year of Josiah (ver. 6). And as they were superadded to the three hundred and ninety days of the siege, they may signify the days spent in plundering the city, and burning the temple, and carrying away the remnant of the people: Jerusalem was taken on the "ninth day of the fourth month" (Jer. lii. 6), and on the "tenth day of the fifth month" the temple was burnt (ver. 12); and so we reason upon the eighteenth of that month, which was the fortieth from the taking of the place, the whole city was burnt, and the few Jews which were left were carried into captivity.

Ver. 10. Thy meat—shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day.] In sieges it is common to stint every one to a certain allowance, by which means they can guess how soon their provisions will last: twenty shekels is but ten ounces, a short allowance for a day's sustenance (see ver. 16, Jer. xxxvii. 21).
11 Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of an hin: from time to time shalt thou drink.

12 And thou shalt eat it as barley cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight.

13 And the Lord said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them.

14 Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted: for from my youth up even till now have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces;

From time to time shalt thou eat it.] This shall be thy daily allowance during the whole three hundred and ninety days.

Ver. 11. The sixth part of an hin.] Which is something above a pint and a half of our measure (see Bishop Cumberland's account of Jewish Weights and Measures, placed at the end of many English Bibles).

Ver. 12. Thou shalt eat it as barley cakes.] Such as people make in haste, when they have not time for preparing a set meal (see Exod. xii. 39). This represents the hurry and disorder of a siege.

Bake it with dung, &c.] To signify the scarcity of all sorts of fuel (see ver. 15).

Ver. 13. Their circumstances in their captivity shall not permit them to observe the rules of their law relating to clean meats, and they will be constrained to partake of meats, part of which hath been offered unto idols (compare Dan. i. 5, Hos. ix. 1). Bread is often used in the Hebrew for all sorts of food (see Gen. xlii. 31).

Ver. 14. My soul hath not been polluted.] I have always carefully observed the distinction between meats clean and unclean: I beseech thee, command me not now to eat anything so contrary to my former practice.

Neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth.] The Hebrew word piggul, abominable, is properly used of such meats as are forbidden by the law (see Lev. vii. 18, xix. 7, Isa. lxv. 4). Such as are those here mentioned (see the texts quoted in the margin of our Bibles).

Ver. 15. I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem.] The siege shall produce a scarcity of bread in Jerusalem (2 Kings xxv. 3), and deprive you of the chief support of man's life (compare Lev. xiv. 15, xxvi. 23, Isa. iii. 1).

They shall eat bread by weight, and with care.] See ver. 10, 11. When they have consumed their last allowance, they shall be in great care where to get more for the next meal; and some of you be forced to eat the flesh of their nearest relation (see v. 10).

Ver. 17. Look one upon another as persons under astonishment for the greatness of your calamities, and pining away or dying a lingering death through famine and other hardships (see xxiv. 23).

CHAPTER V.

I And thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head and upon thy beard: then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair.

2 Thou shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled: and thou shalt take a third part, and smite about it with a knife: and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind; and I will draw out a sword after them.

3 Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts.

ed sacrifice upon mount Carmel (1 Kings xviii. 20), contrary to the rule of the law, Deut. xii. 5.

Then take thee balances, &c.] To signify the exactness of the divine justice.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt burn—a third part in the midst of the city.] Of that portraiture of the city which the prophet was commanded to make, vi. 1, this signifies the destruction of the inhabitants within the city by famine and pestilence (see ver. 12, v. 12). Take a third part, and smite about it with a knife—] To show that a third part of the inhabitants shall be slain with the sword, just after they have escaped out of the city (see ver. 13). This was remarkably fulfilled in the slaughter of Zedekiah's sons, and the rest of his retinue, Jer. lii. 10.

A third part thou shalt scatter in the wind; and I will draw out a sword after them.] The rest shall be dispersed to all the four winds (see vi. 5). And even my vengeance shall pursue many of them in their dispersions (see ver. 12, and compare Lev. xxvi. 38, Jer. xxiv. 10, xlv. 12, Amos ix. 4).

Ver. 3. Bind them in thy skirts.] The Hebrew—
4 Then take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire, and burn them in the fire; for thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her. 6 And she hath multiplied her judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her: for they have refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you:

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations.

9 And I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thin punishments.

10 Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.

11 Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord God; Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thin abominations, therefore will I also diminish thee; neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity.

12 ¶ A third part of thee shall die with pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee: and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee: and I will scatter judgments in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations.

8:12 As your sins have particular aggravations above those other nations, so your punishment shall be proportionally greater (see Dan. ix. 12, Lam. iv. 6, Amos ii. 2).

I will not do any more the like. The punishments you shall suffer shall be more remarkable for their greatness than those I shall at any time inflict upon other nations. The punishment due to the sins of Israel and Judah, which the prophet was to bear for four hundred and thirty days by way of type or vision, may probably signify a judgment to continue for such a length of time as is not yet expired; according to God's threatenings, that for their obstinacy and irreclaimableness, as he would go on to punish them seven times more for their sins (Lev. xxvi. 15, 28); multiplying the length of their calamities by a seven-fold proportion. And taking the words in this large extent, so as to comprehend all the marks of God's indignation which have already lain upon that people for above sixteen hundred years, and how much longer they may continue we know not, it may truly be said, that none of God's judgments have been like it.

Ver. 10. The fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee.] A terrible judgment threatened by Moses, Lev. xxvi. 29, Deut. xxvii. 53, and afterward by Jeremy, xix. 9, and actually fulfilled in the famine that attended the siege of Jerusalem (see Lam. ii. 20, iv. 10).

The whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.] This is another judgment threatened against them by Moses, Deut. xxvii. 56, and remarkably fulfilled in this their last dispersion, when every known part of the world hath some share of them, and yet they live everywhere like strangers, only upon sufferance.

Ver. 11. Thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and—thine abominations.] Thou hast profaned my temple, by placing idols in it (see vii. 20, viii. 5, xxiii. 38, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14). Detestable things and abominations are words of the same signification, denoting idols (see xi. 21).

Therefore will I diminish thee; neither shall mine eye spare.] Or, "I will destroy thee (for so this word is used Numb. xxvii. 4), without showing any pity or compassion" (see vii. 4, 9, viii. 18, ix. 10, xxiv. 14).

Ver. 12. A third part of thee shall die with pestilence (see xiv. 29), and with famine, &c.] See ver. 2, vi. 14, Jer. xv. 2, xxii. 9.
ter a third into all the winds, and I will draw out a sword after them.

13 Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them.

14 Moreover I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by.

15 So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, an instruction and an astonishment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute judgments in thee in anger and in fury and in furious rebukes. I the Lord have spoken it.

16 When I shall send upon them the evil arrows of famine, which shall be for their destruction, and which I will send to destroy you; and I will increase the famine upon you, and will break your staff of bread:

17 So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I will bring the sword upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it.

I will draw out a sword after them.] And thereby fulfil that threatening denounced against them, Lev. xxvi. 39. Compare likewise Deut. xxviii. 65, Amos ix. 4. All which places import, that God's anger should still pursue them even into the countries whither they were banished and carried captive. This was particularly fulfilled in those that went into Egypt (see Jer. xiv. 7); and it was remarkably verified in the several persecutions and massacres they have undergone at different times, in most of the countries of Europe, in latter ages; of which see an account in Basnage's continuation of Josephs.

Ver. 13. I will cause my fury to rest upon them.] See the note on viii. 18. The words may be rendered thus, "I will cause my fury towards them to rest," as the phrase is translated, xvi. 42, that is, my anger shall be appeased towards them, after I have executed due punishment upon their sins.

I will be comforted:] This and the former expression is borrowed from men's passions, who find some ease and rest in their minds upon their venting them, and bringing offenders to consign punishment. So God is here described as feeling ease and satisfaction in executing his justice upon obstinate and incorrigible sinners (compare xvi. 42, xxi. 17, Isa. i. 29).

I have spoken it in my zeal:] Out of a just concern for mine own honour and authority, which they have slighted and despised (see xxxvi. 5, 6, xxxviii. 17). The word may likewise be taken here for that passion of jealousy that is proper to a husband when his wife proves false to him, and is applied to God, when his people forsake his worship and serve idols (see xvi. 35, 42, xxiii. 25).

The covenant between God and his people is often represented under the notion of a marriage contract (see xvi. 8), wherein idolatry is called "going a whoring after other gods," and "committing adultery with sticks and stones" (Jer. iii. 9).

Ver. 14.] See Deut. xxviii. 37, 1 Kings ix. 7, Ps. lxxix. 4, Jer. xxiv. 9, Lam. ii. 15.

And I will break your staff of bread:] See iv. 16.

Ver. 17. So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts. ] Wild beasts multiply in a land when it is become uninhabited (Exod. xxxii. 29). This is likewise a punishment threatened against the Jews, among other desolations (see Lev. xxvi. 22, Deut. xxxii. 24, and compare xiv. 21, xxiii. 27, xxxiv. 25, of this prophecy).

Pestilence and blood:] Blood signifies any unusual sort of death, and denotes here such a pestilence as will destroy multitudes (compare xiv. 19). Or it may be equivalent to the sword which is joined with the pestilence, ver. 12 (see xxxviii. 22).

CHAPTER VI.

1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them,

3 And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus said the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys; Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places.

CHAP. VI.

ARGUMENT. — The prophet continues to denounce God's severe judgments upon the Jews for their idolatry; but tells them that a remnant shall be saved, and by their afflictions shall be brought to a sense of their evil doings.

Ver. 2. Set thy face] Direct thy face and thy speech toward the mountains in the land of Judaea (compare iv. 7, xiii. 17, xx. 46, xxi. 2, xxv. 2, xxxviii. 2).

Towards the mountains of Israel.] Judaea was a hilly country (see Josh. xi. 21, xx. 7). So the whole land of Judaea is expressed here and elsewhere by the mountains of Israel (see xix. 9, xxxiii. 18, xxiv. 14, xxxv. 12, xxxvi. 1, xxxvii. 22; Isa. lv. 9, Mic. vi. 1). The prophets sometimes direct their discourse to the inanimate parts of the creation, thereby to upbraid the stupidity of men (see Isa. i. 2).

Prophesy against them.] As the most conspicuous parts of the land: but the judgments denounced extend to all the other parts of the country, as appears in the following verse.

Ver. 3. The mountains, and to the hills, &c.] Every part of the country had been defiled with idolatry; the altars built for idol-worship were commonly placed upon mountains and hills (see xvi. 10, 24, Jer. ii. 20, iii. 6). The shady valleys and riversides were likewise made use of for the same purpose (ibid. ver. 23); particularly for the sacrificing of children offered to Moloch (see Isa. lvii. 5, Jer. vii. 31). So the prophet denounced a general judgment against the whole country.
And your altars shall be desolate, and your images shall be broken: and I will cast down your slain men before your idols.

And I will lay the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars.

In all your dwelling places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate: that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished.

And the slain shall fall in the midst of you, and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries.

And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, because I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations.

Ver. 4. Your images shall be broken. The verse is plainly taken from Lev. xxvi. 30, where Moses denounces the same judgments against the Jews upon their provocations. The word hamamim, images, is generally supposed to signify such as were erected to the honour of the sun, and is accordingly translated sun-images in the margin (compare 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4, Isa. xvii. 5). I will cast down your slain men before your idols. So that their sin may be read in the manner of their punishment (see Lev. xxvi. 30).

Ver. 7. Ye shall know that I am the Lord. An epiphonema, or conclusion of a severe denunciation often repeated by this prophet; importing, that the judgments God intended to bring upon the Jews, would make the most hardened and stupid sinners sensible that this was God's hand.

Ver. 8. Yet will I leave a remnant, &c. A gracious exception that often occurs in the prophets, when they denounce general judgments against the Jews: implying, that God will still reserve a remnant of that people to whom he will fulfil the promises made to their fathers (see xiv. 22, and the notes upon Isa. iv. 3, Jer. xlv. 14).

Ver. 9. They that escape of you shall remember me. Their afflictions shall bring them to the sense of themselves, and their duty to me (see Hos. v. 15).

Because I am broken with their whorish heart. My patience is tired out with this people's idolatries, called in scripture "spiritual whoredom" (see the note on v. 13). God is here introduced as speaking after the manner of men, whose patience is tired out by the repeated provocations of others, especially when they see no hopes of amendment (compare Isa. xliii. 21).

And with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols. The eyes are the seat of lascivious inclinations (see 2 Pet. ii. 14). So in pursuance of the same metaphor, they are said to be enticed to idolatry: being often tempted to idolatrous worship, by the costliness of the images, and the fine show which they make (see Jer. x. 4, 9, Dan. xi. 38).

They shall loathe themselves. They shall "abhor themselves," as Job speaks, xlii. 6, when they reflect upon their manifold provocations (see vii. 16, xii. 43, xxxvi. 32).

Ver. 10. Not said in vain. Or, "without cause," as the word hiinnim is more significantly translated, xiv. 22.

Ver. 11. Suitse with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot. Join to thy words the gestures which are proper to express grief and concern at the wickedness of thy people, and for their calamities that will ensue (compare xxii. 12, 14, Numb. xxiv. 10).

For they shall fall by the sword. See v. 12.

Ver. 12. He that is for ever. He that is out of the reach of the siege.

Ver. 13. When their slain men See ver. 4, 5. Upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains. These were the noted places for idolatrous worship (see Jer. ii. 20, Hos. iv. 13, and the notes upon ver. 3 of this chapter).

Under every green tree, and under every thick oak. The offering sacrifice in groves and shady places was another ancient rite of idolatry (see the note on Isa. i. 29); upon which account groves and images are often joined together by the sacred writers.

Ver. 14. Diblah. Diblah was part of the desert in the borders of Moab (see Numb xxxiii. 46, Jer. xlviii. 32).
CHAPTER VII.

1 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Also, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God unto the land of Israel: An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land.

3 Now is the end come upon thee, and I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompence upon thee all thine abominations.

4 And mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity: but I will recompense thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

5 Thus saith the Lord God; An evil, an only evil, behold, is come.

6 An end is come, the end is come: it watcheth for thee; behold, it is come.

7 The morning is come unto thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the sounding again of the mountains.

8 Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompence thee for all thine abominations.

9 And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompence thee according to thy ways and thine abominations that are in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the Lord that smiteth.

10 Behold the day, behold, it is come: the morning is gone forth; the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded.

11 Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness; none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of any of their's: neither shall there be wailing for them.

12 The time is come, the day draweth near; let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

13 For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive; for the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life.

14 They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready; but none goeth to the battle: for my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

15 The sword is without, and the pestilence and the famine within: He that is in the field shall die with the sword; and he that is in the city, famine and pestilence shall devour him.

16 ¶ But they that escape of them shall es-

And not the sounding again of the mountains.] The sound of war and tumults; not such a joyful sound as useth to echo from the mountains, by which the treader of grapes express their satisfaction at the time of the vintage; which the Hebrew word hed or heidad, properly signifies (see Isa. xvi. 9, Jer. xxv. 30, xlvi. 35).

Ver. 10. The rod hath blossomed, pride hath budged.] Wickedness daily spreads and increases, till it becomes ripe for judgment.

Ver. 11. Neither shall there be waiting for them.] In an utter destruction there shall none escape to bewail the calamities of their brethren; or they shall use no expressions of sorrow, as persons that are astonished under the greatness of their afflictions (compare xlv. 10, 22, Dcut. xlvi. 28, 34).

Ver. 12. Let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn.] The buyer will have no reason to rejoice, because he will not enjoy what he hath bought; nor the seller cause to mourn for the loss of his possessions, which the approaching captivity will for ever deprive him of.

Ver. 13. For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive.] The year of jubilee shall be no advantage to the sellers, when once they are gone into captivity: for though they should live so long, yet they shall not enjoy the benefit of the law (Lev. xxv. 13, nor return any more to their possessions.

Neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his sin, and though they harden themselves in sin, and shut their eyes against the judgments which hang over their heads, these will at last unavoidably overtake them.

Ver. 14. They have blown the trumpet (see Jer. vi. 1)—but none goeth to the battle.] Men's hearts fail them, as looking upon themselves as given up to destruction (see ver. 17).
cape, and shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys, all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity.

17 All hands shall be feeble, and all knees shall be weak as water.

18 They shall also gird themselves with sackcloth, and horror shall cover them; and shame shall be upon all faces, and baldness upon all their heads.

19 They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed: their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels: because it is the stumbling-block of their iniquity.

20 As for the beauty of his ornament, he set it in majesty: but they made the images of their abominations, and of their detestable things there-in: therefore have I set it far from them.

21 And I will give it into the hands of the strangers for a prey, and to the wicked of the earth for a spoil; and they shall pollute it.

22 My face will I turn also from them, and they shall pollute my secret place: for the robbers shall enter into it, and defile it.

23 ¶ Make a chain: for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence.

24 Wherefore I will bring the worst of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses: I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease; and their holy places shall be defiled.

25 Destruction cometh; and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none.

26 Mischief shall come upon mischief, and re-future; who, to denote the certainty of the event, speak of what is to come, as if it were already done (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9). The same sense is expressed in the following, ¶ I will give it into the hands of strangers. ¶

Ver. 22. [I will not hear them when they cry to me in their distress (see viii. 18): but will deliver up the holiest part of the temple, where none but the high-priest used to enter, into the hands of the Chaldeans, that shall profane and plunder it.

Ver. 25. [Make a chain.] The prophets foretold things by actions as well as by words. So Jeremiah is commanded to make bonds and yokes (Jer. xxviii. 2); and Ezekiel here to make a chain, to foreshow the approaching captivity, when king and people should be carried in chains to Babylon (see 2 Kings xxv. 7, Jer. xl. 1).

For the land is full of bloody crimes,] The innocent blood that has been shed in it cries aloud for vengeance (see ix. 9, xxiii. 27, xxvi. 15).

Ver. 24. [I will bring the worst of the heathen.] The Chaldeans, who were at that time the great oppressors of the world, and a terror to all the countries round about them (see xxviii. 7, xxx. 11).

I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease.] All the state and magnificence of the mighty men shall be brought to nothing (compare xxviii. 28).

Their holy places shall be defiled.] The word holy places being in the plural number, denotes the temple and all its outward courts, where the people assembled for the worship of God, and thereupon were accounted holy (compare ix. 7, xxx. 2, Ps. lxviii. 35, lxviii. 17, Jer. li. 51).

Ver. 29. [Then they shall seek a vision of the prophet.] Men are desirous to hear what the event shall be in times of perplexity (see xiv. 9, xx. 1, xxxviii. 17).

But the law shall perish from the priest.] Jeremiah, Daniel, and Ezekiel himself, shall go into captivity. So there shall either be no prophet left among you, or, if there be any left, they shall not be favoured with divine revelations (see Lam. ii. 8).

Counsel from the ancients.] Or the elders, as the word is elsewhere translated (viii. 1, xvi. 1, xx. 1), men of authority, and famous for wisdom, whose advice they asked in all cases of difficulty (see Ps. cxix. 100, Isa. iii. 2). In like manner the prophet, the priest, and the wise men, are joined together, Jer. xviii. 18.

Ver. 30.] There shall be a general consternation of all ranks and degrees of men. They that are in authority shall want presence of mind to give counsel.
people of the land shall be troubled: I will do unto them after their way, and according to their deserts will I judge them; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

CHAPTER VIII.

I And it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord God fell there upon me.

2 Then I beheld, and lo a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire; and from his loins even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber.

3 And he put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north: where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoked to jealousy.

4 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I saw in the plain.

5 ¶ Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold northward at the gate of the altar this image of jealousy in the entry.

6 He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, The appearance of fire [See the note on i. 27. Ver. 3. He put forth the form of an hand.] Just as the form of a hand appeared "writing upon the wall," Dan. v. 5.

Brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem.] This expression, in the vision of God (which is likewise used again at the end of the recital of this prophecy, xl. 24, and xl. 2), may import that all this representation was performed only in vision; that is, by a lively representation to the mind, as if the prophet had been personally present at Jerusalem. In the same manner, Elisha was present with Gehazi when he took Naaman’s present, 2 Kings v. 20, and heard the words that were spoken in the king of Syria’s bed-chamber, 2 Kings vi. 12. And St. Paul, though he was “ absent in body,” yet was “present in spirit” at the church of the Colossians, beholding their order, &c. (Col. ii. 5). But the words may also signify a local translation of the prophet from Chaldea to Jerusalem (compare iii. 14. xl. 1).

The latter interpretation is confirmed “by the spirit’s lifting him up between heaven and earth, and bringing him to Jerusalem,” and afterward “carrying him back into Chaldea” (xl. 24).

To the door of the inner gate] The entrance that goes into the inner court, called the court of the priests, where the altar of burnt-offerings stood (see ver. 5). The prophet stood at the outside of this door, and viewed the image here mentioned, placed in some outward verge of the temple; which yet was all accounted holy ground, and called in scripture “ the mount of the Lord,” or “ the holy mountain.” (see vii. 24).

Where was—the image of jealousy, which provoked to jealousy.] An image set up within the precincts of the temple, to provoke God to jealousy, by setting up a rival against him in the place dedicated to his own worship (see note on v. 11).

Ver. 4. The glory of the God of Israel was there.] To show that that was the place of his peculiar residence.

Ver. 5. Northward at the gate of the altar] Northward of the gate or entrance that was over against the altar.
seest thou what they do! even the great abominations that the house of Israel committed here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations.

7 ¶ And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold a hole in the wall.

8 Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.

9 And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here.

10 So I went in and saw: and behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, portrayed upon the wall round about.

11 And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jazaniah the son of Shaphan, with every man his censer in his hand: and a thick cloud of incense went up.

12 Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, The Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth.

13 ¶ He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do.

14 Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's house which was toward the north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz.

15 ¶ Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these.

16 And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the

Ver. 6. That I should go far off from my sanctuary? That I should forsake it, and deliver it up to be polluted by the heathen (vii. 21, 22), which is significantly represented by "the departing of the divine glory from the threshold of the temple," x. 18.

Thou shalt see greater abominations. Because committed by persons of greater authority, and nearer the place of my immediate presence (see ver. 11, 14, 10).

Ver. 7. He brought me to the door of the court. This Dr. Lightfoot (Des. of the Temple, ch. 28) understands of the east gate of the inner court, called "the gate of Nicanor," over which was the council-chamber where the Sanhedrin used to meet, and in some of the rooms near it they secretly practised idolatry, as God discovered to the prophet (ver. 11).

Behold a hole in the wall. Through which I could look in, and see what abominations were committed there.

Ver. 8. Dig now in the wall. This was done only by vision, to give the clearer proof and conviction of the idolatries there committed, by thus introducing him into the rooms where they were practised.

Behold a door. Which had been made up, and another more secret entrance contrived, that they might go in and out unobserved.

Ver. 9. To give me the fullest conviction, I did not only peer through the hole, mentioned ver. 8, but went into the very room where these idolatries were committed.

Ver. 10. Pictures were as much prohibited by the law as carved images (see Num. xxxiii. 58). The worshipping serpents and other brute creatures were idolatries practised in Egypt, and upon that account particularly forbidden by Moses, Deut. iv. 17, 18.

Ver. 11. Seventy men of the ancients. Those probably were the members of the Sanhedrin, or great council of the Jews (see the note on Jer. xxvi. 19). The place of this idolatry was near the council-chamber where they used to sit (see ver. 7).

The Lord hath forsaken the earth. They either deny the being and providence of God (see ix. 9); or else they say in their hearts, God hath cast us off; and withdrawn his wonted protection from us. They seem to have been of the same mind with king Ahaz, who resolved to worship the gods of the Syrians, his conquerors (2 Chron. xxviii. 23). So these men worshipped the idols of their neighbours, whom they saw more prosperous than themselves.

Ver. 14. He brought me to the door of the gate—which was toward the north. Which was over against the temple; Dr. Lightfoot (ubi supra) distinguishes this temple from that mentioned ver. 5, that this was the upper north gate, and that the lower; this being just over against the temple itself, whereas that was opposite to the altar.

There sat women weeping for Tammuz. St. Jerome, by Tammuz, understands Adonis, which learned men, suppose the same with Osiris (see Vossius, De Idololatria, lib. ii. cap. 4, 10). By Osiris is generally understood the sun. (We may rather understand by Osiris, the god of the Egyptians supposed to preside over the fruits of the earth, which were then cut and gathered in; this being called the death of Osiris, was celebrated with mourning and lamentations (see Dr. Spencer, De Leg. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 24, sect. 1). This gives a plain account why this solemnity was kept in the month of Tamuz, answering to part of our June and July, because the harvest was finished in those hot countries by or before that time.)

This idolatry was derived from the Egyptians, and afterward the Phoenicians and Greeks improved it by the addition of a new fable, viz. of Venus's mourning for the death of Adonis.

The fourth month of the Jews, which answered part of our June and July, was called Tamuz, from a feast dedicated to this idol in that month. The Egyptian year consisted but of three hundred and sixty-five days, without any Bisexstile, which was afterward added in the Julian year. By this means they lost a day every four years, which in process of time made a great change in the beginning of their year, and a variation in their festivals, which must consequently remove from one season of the year to another. It is therefore probable that under the idolatrous kings of Judah, who brought in the worship of Tamuz, this festival fell in the month that answered the fourth month of the Jews, and gave that month this name; so that month Ezekiel probably saw this vision (see the note on ver. 2, and Selden, De Diis Syris, Sytagm. ii. cap. 11).

Ver. 16. Between the porch and the altar. Near the entrance into the temple, where the brazen altar stood, in the middle of the court, before the house of the Lord (see 2 Chron. vii. 2, Kings xvi. 14). With their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east. So they turned their backs to God Almighty, and their faces toward the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east.

17 ¶ Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here! for they have filled sun. Perhaps Hezekiah may allude to some such idolatrous practice, in that confession of his, 2 Chron. xxxix. 6, "Our fathers have done evil in the sight of the Lord, and have forsaken him, and turned away their faces from the habitation of the Lord, and turned their backs." "They turned their back to God, and not their face;" as Jeremy expressed their contempt towards him, ii. 27, xxvii. 33 (compare xxviii. 35 of this prophecy). For this reason the people were commanded to come in at the north or southern gates of the outward court of the temple, when they came to worship, that they might not, at their return, turn their backs upon God (see xxxvi. 9). God ordered the holy of holies in his temple to be placed towards the west, in opposition to this species of heathen idolatry, which consisted in worshipping the rising sun. And the Jews always turned their faces towards the temple, when they worshipped (see Dr. Spencer, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 2, sect. 4).

Ver. 17. And have returned to provoke me to anger.] Or, "again they provoke me to anger" (see the note on Isa. vi. 13). After their repeated acts of injustice and oppression (see xxiii. 6, 7), they add new aggravations to their wickedness, by committing those heinous provocations of idolatry.

They put the branch to their nose.] Those that translate the words to this sense, suppose them to relate to some custom among the idolaters, of dedicating a branch of laurel, or some other tree, to the honour of the sun, and carrying it in their hands at the time of their worship. But this text is one of those which the rabbins reckon among the Tikkun Sopherim, or such as have been corrected by their Scribes and learned men; and the original reading, say they, was ἀπίστοι, to my nose, or face, instead of the present reading ἄπιστοι. According to which reading the sense will be "and they put a stink to my nose," that is, they put an open affront upon me, by turning their back parts to me in the place dedicated to my worship.

To this sense the LXX. render it, ἀπίστοι με ἄπιστοις. "They are those that mock me, or publicly affront me."

Dr. Lightfoot, upon John xv. 6, renders the place, "They put the branch to my wrath," or "to their wrath," that is, they add more fuel to my wrath, which will burst out like a flame to consume them; just as if one should lay a heap of dry sticks upon a fire (compare xv. 6).

[These religious rites were called among the Greeks, ἐπικρατεῖα συνάγων. See Dr. Spencer, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iv. cap. 5.]

Ver. 18. Therefore will I also deal in fury.] God's unalterable decree of executing vengeance upon them for their heinous iniquities, is described like the fury of an enraged person, which cannot be appeased but by bringing the offender to condign punishment (see v. 13, xvi. 42, xxiv. 13).

CHAPTER IX.

1 He cried also in mine ears with a loud voice, saying, Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near, even every man with his destroying weapon in his hand.

CHAP. IX.

ARGUMENT.—This part of the vision represents the destruction of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, beginning with those that were nearest the temple.

Ver. 1. He cried also in mine ears with a loud voice.] To denote the terribleness of God's judgment. (see i. 24, Rev. xiv. 7, 9, 15.)

Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near.] The angels who had the charge of executing God's judgment upon the city (compare 2 Kings x. 24).

Ver. 2. Of the higher gate, which lieth toward the north.] See the note on vili. 14. There is mention of the higher or upper gate of the Lord's house which Joshua built or repaired, called the "new gate." 2 Kings xv. 35, Jer. xxvi. 10. But that is generally thought to be at the east side of the temple, and the same with that which was afterward called the "gate of Nicana;" whereas this is supposed to be on the north side of the temple and altar, because there the sacrifices were ordered to be slain (see Lev. i. 11, and the note upon the following ed the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger: and, lo, they put the branch to their nose.

18 Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them. with a writer's inkhorn by his side: and they went in, and stood beside the brasan altar.

3 And the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub, whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house. And he called to the man clothed with linen, which had the writer's inkhorn by his side;

4 And the Lord said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof.

5 ¶ And to the others he said in mine hearing, Go ye after him through the city, and smite: let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity:

6 Slay utterly old and young, both maids, and little children, and women: but come not near any man upon whom is the mark; and begin at my sanctuary. Then they began at the ancient men which were before the house.

elsewhere expressed by the name of a sacrifice (see xxxix. 17. Is. xxix. 2, xxxiv. 11. Jer. xiii. 27. The God of Israel was gone up from the cherub,—to the threshold of the house.] Ezekeiel saw the glory of God depart out of the inner sanctuary to the threshold, or door of the temple; to show that God would shortly forsake this temple (compare x. 4, 18, 19, xi. 25). The word cherub stands for cherubim, as x. 2. We are to distinguish this apparition of the divine glory, which had its constant residence in the temple, from that which was shown particularly to Ezekiel, i. 26, ii. 23, viii. 24, x. 1.

He called to the man] The Logos, or second person of the blessed Trinity, gave his commands to the angel, mentioned ver. 3.

Ver. 4. Set a mark upon the foreheads] Compare Rev. vii. 3. The expression alludes to the custom of the eastern nations to mark their servants in the forehead (see Grotius upon that place of the Revelation). The Vulgar Latin renders the words, "Mark with the letter thanu the foreheads;" and it is very probable the ancient reading in the LXX. was τὴν ἔτην ἀνώτατον, though the present copy reads τῆς ἐτησίας (see Huetius, Demonstr. Evang. prop. 9).

It was the general opinion of the Fathers, that the ancient Samaritan letter thanu was made in the form of a cross; and St. Jerome (a very competent judge in this matter) does attest the same in his commentary on this place.

This opinion Scaliger rejects in his notes upon Eusebius's Chronicle, p. 109, but Bishop Walton defends it at large in his third Prolegomenon, p. 36, and the Dissertation upon the ancient Hebrew Scribes, in his Apparatus to the Polyglot Bible, p. 36. The Ethiopic letter intact, or int, still retains the form of a cross, and the learned Ludolphus supposes, that the Ethiopic letters were borrowed from the Samaritans. The Coptic letter of that sound is in the same form. The modern antiquaries do all agree, that the Samaritan thanu was in the form of a Greek X. But whether their authority be sufficient to outweigh that of St. Jerome, must be left to the learned to judge. It is observable that the high priest was anointed upon the forehead, in the form of an X, as Selden assures us, lib. ii. Do Success, in Pontiff, cap. 6.

[The words of the learned Montfaucon (Paleograph. Graec. lib. ii. cap. 3), decide this controversy in favour of the ancients: In nummis Samaritani, quae in musulis occurrent, Dovs forma crucis excutiam frequentissime visitur: in quos si incidisset Scaliger, qui in Hieronymi testimonio reiectus daretur, non est. He tells us, "That in several Samaritan coins, to be found in the collections of medals, the letter thanu is engraven in form of a cross, which if Scaliger had seen he would not have contradicted the testimony of Origen and Jerome upon this subject."]

Of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done] The irreclaimable temper of sinners that hate to be reformed, is just matter of grief to good men (see Ps. cxix. 136. Is. xvii. 18, Jer. xiii. 17. 2 Cor. xii. 23, 2 Pet. ii. 8). And when the number of such mourners is not sufficient to divert God's judgment from a nation, they shall at least deliver their own souls (see xiv. 14).

Ver. 5. Let not your eye spare] See x. 11.

Ver. 6. Stay utterly old and young] This denunciation was executed by the Chaldeans (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17).

Begin at my sanctuary] Judgment often "begins at the house of God" (1 Pet. iv. 17), because such persons sin against greater light and clearer convictions (see Amos iii. 2. Luke xii. 47).

Then they began at the ancient men which were before the house] Who committed idolatry in the several courts and apartments belonging to the temple (see viii. 11, 12, 16).

Ver. 7. Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain] God declares he will own the temple no longer for his place of residence (see ver. 8), as having been polluted with idolatry (viii. 10, &c.); and therefore delivers up both the inner and outer courts belonging to it (compare x. 3, 5), to be polluted by blood and slaughter.

Ver. 8. I will fill.] The prophet thought himself preserved alone out of the common destruction, the slaughter was so great; although those who had a mark set upon them were certainly preserved, as well as he.

I fell upon my face. In a posture of supplication, to depress God's anger (see Num. xii. 3. xvi. 4, 22, 40); and to beseech him not to make an utter destruction of those small remains that were left of the nation: Jerusalem being almost the only place which was not in the enemies' power (see xi. 13).

CHAPTER X.

1 Then I looked, and, behold, in the firmament that was above the head of the cherubims there appeared over them as it were a sapphire stone, as the appearance of the likeness of a throne.

2 And he spake unto the man clothed with linen, and said, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub, and fill thine hands with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and scatter them over the city. And he went in in my sight.

3 Now the cherubims stood on the right side of the house, when the man went in; and the cloud filled the inner court.

4 Then the glory of the Lord went up from the cherub, and stood over the threshold of the house; and the house was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightness of the Lord's glory.

5 And the sound of the cherubims' wings was heard even to the outer court, as the voice of the Almighty God when he speaketh.

6 And it came to pass, that when he had commanded the man clothed with linen, saying, Take fire from between the wheels, from between the cherubims; then he went in, and stood beside the wheels.

7 And one cherub stretched forth his hand words may better be translated thus, "Now (or for) the glory of the Lord was gone up," &c. For the prophet repeats here what he had related before, ix. 3.

The house was filled with the cloud.] A bright cloud was the sign of God's presence, which first filled the tabernacle (Exod. xl. 35), afterward the temple (I Kings viii. 10), where it fixed itself upon the mercy-seat (Lev. xvi. 2). From whence God is said so often to "dwell between the cherubims." This glory now removed from that, its residence in the inner sanctuary, and came down towards the porch of the temple, and fixed itself partly in the temple, and partly in the inner court adjoined to it, to denote God's being just about to leave the temple, and dismiss any relation to it (see the note on viii. 5). The Shechinah, or divine glory, is represented as a bright flame breaking out of a thick cloud (see the note on Isa. vi. 1); so both together make up a description of it.

Ver. 5.] See i. 24. The cherubims in Ezekiel's vision seem to have moved to attend upon the Shechinah, which now had taken its residence at the "threshold of the house" (compare ver. 15, 19, xi. 22).

Ver. 7. Who took it, and went out.] To signify putting the command in execution.

Ver. 8. The form of a man's hand.] See i. 8. Var. 9—12.] The same, in substance, which was described i. 16—18.

Ver. 11. To the place whither the head looked they followed it.] Each wheel consisted of four semicircles (see the note on i. 16, 17). In correspondence to the four heads of each animal.

Ver. 13. O wheel.] Or, more round, as some render the word. They are put in mind of continually attending upon their duty, for the wheels and living creatures were animated with the same principle of understanding and motion (see i. 19—21).

Ver. 14. Every one had four faces.] See i. 6, 10 from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen: who took it, and went out.

8 And there appeared in the cherubims the form of a man's hand under their wings.

9 And when I looked, behold, the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a beryl stone.

10 And as for their appearances, they four had one likeness, as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel.

11 When they went, they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither they had looked they followed it; they turned not as they went.

12 And their whole body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had.

13 As for the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel. And every one had four faces: the first face was the face of a cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle.
CHAPTER XI.

15 And the cherubims were lifted up. This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar.

16 And when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them: and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them.

17 When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: for the spirit of the living creature was in them.

18 Then the glory of the LORD departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims.

19 And the cherubims lifted up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels also were beside them, and every one stood at the door of the east gate of the LORD's house; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

20 This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and I knew that they were the cherubims.

21 Every one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings.

22 And the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar; their appearances and themselves; they went every one straight forward.

The first face was the face of a cherub.] That is, of an ox, as appears by comparing this verse with ch. 1. 10. The word cherub does originally signify an ox (see Dr. Spence, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 3, sect. 1). The several faces are here represented in a different order from the description given of them i. 10, of which difference this reason may be assigned. In the first chapter the prophet saw this vision coming out of the north; and advancing southward (ver. 4), where the face of a man, being placed on the south side, was first in view. The lion, being on the east part, was towards his right hand; the ox, being placed towards the west, was on his left; and the eagle was towards the north. The interpretation is justified from the situation of the standards of the several tribes, Numb. ii. 2, 10, 18, 23, where Judah, whose standard was a lion, was placed on the east side: Reuben, whose standard was a man, was placed on the south side: Ephraim, whose standard was an ox, was placed on the west side: and Dan, whose standard was an eagle, was placed on the north side (see the note upon i. 6). Here the prophet is supposed to stand by the porch of the temple (see vii. 16), westward of the Shechinah, as that was moving out of the inner court eastward (see ver. 18, 19); so the ox was first in his view, as being nearest to him.

Ver. 15. The cherubims were lifted up.] To attend upon the divine glory wherever it went, and particularly at its removal from the temple (see ver. 5, 19).

Ver. 16, 17.] See i. 19—21.

Ver. 18.] The divine presence here makes a farther remove from the temple (see ver. 4). It now quite leaves the house itself, and settles upon the cherubims which stood in the court adjoining it (ver. 3).

Ver. 19. Lifted up their wings.] See i. 19, 26. Every one stood at the door of the east gate of the Lord's house.] This is still a farther remove of God's presence from the temple; for the east gate was just at the entrance into the inner court before the temple (see the note on viii. 7, and compare xliii. 4).

Ver. 20. This is the living creature, &c.] See i. 22, 23, 26.

I knew that they were the cherubims.] Having often seen that form, which was carved in several places upon the walls, and doors, and utensils, of the temple (I Kings vi. 29, 35, vii. 29, 30).

Ver. 21, 22.] See i. 8, 10, 12.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Moreover the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the east gate of the Lord's house, which looketh eastward: and behold at the door of the gate five and twenty men; among whom I saw Jazaniah the son of Azur, and Pelaiiah the son of Breniah, princes of the people.

2 Then said he unto me, Son of man, these are the men that devise mischief, and give wicked counsel in this city:

3 Which say, It is not near; let us build houses: this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh.

4 ¶ Therefore prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man.

5 And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me, and lifted me up.

Argument.—God denounces his judgments upon those wicked men who remained in the city, and made a mock of the judgment of the prophets: he promises to favour those who are gone into captivity, and truly turn to him: intimating, likewise, that there shall be a general restoration of the nation in aftertimes. Then the divine glory leaves the city, denoting God's putting it out of his protection.

Ver. 1. The spirit lifted me up.] See iii. 12, 14, viii. 3.

Brought me unto the east gate.] Where the divine glory had then placed itself (x. 19).
and said unto me, Speak; Thus saith the Lord; Thus have ye said, O house of Israel: for I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them.

6 Ye have multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Your slain whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron: but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.

8 Ye have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord God.

9 And I will bring you out of the midst thereof, and deliver you into the hands of strangers, and will execute judgments among you.

10 Ye shall fall by the sword; I will judge you in the border of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

11 This city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; but I will judge you in the border of Israel:

12 And ye shall know that I am the Lord; for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, but have done after the manner of the heathen that are round about you.

sion on purpose to deride the menaces of the prophets: as if they had said, If this city be a caldron, we had rather take our chance of being consumed in it than leave our fine houses and other accomodations, and run the risk of war or captivity (compare ver. 7, 8, 11).

Ver. 5. The Spirit—fell upon me.] See note on iii. 24.

Ver. 6. Ye have multiplied your slain] See xxii. 3, 4.

Ver. 7. Your slain—they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron.] The comparing of the city to a caldron may fitly be applied to the slain, whom you have butchered in your streets, and cut in pieces in the midst of it, just as pieces of flesh prepared for the caldron (see xxiv. 6, and compare Mic. iii. 3).

I will bring you forth out of the midst! You shall not die there, but I will reserve you for another punishment (see ver. 9, 11).

Ver. 9, 10.] Ye shall be carried out of the city by the Chaldeans, and afterward be slain by them in the land of Hamath (see Jer. xxxix. 6, 2 Kings xxv. 19—21). Which is called the "entrance of Hamath," 1 Kings vii. 65, 2 Kings xiv. 25, because it was just upon the borders of Judaea.

Ver. 12. But have done after the manners of the heathen] Have defiled yourselves with their idolatries (see viii. 10, 14, 16, 19).

Ver. 13.] The prophet thought this an earnest of the common destruction which was coming upon all the inhabitants of the city, and therefore he earnestly deprecated so severe a judgment (see ix. 8).

Ver. 15. The men of thy kindred.] Those of thy kindred and acquaintance who are carried away captive with thee.

Unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord.] The Jews who were left in their own country, thought themselves more in God's favour than those who were carried away captive: whom they looked upon as outcasts, and such as had no right either to the privileges of Jews, or the land of Judæa (see note on Jer. xxiv. 5).

13 ¶ And it came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. Then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

14 Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

15 Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord: unto us is this land given in possession.

16 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.

17 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.

18 And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof and all the abominations thereof from thence.

19 And I will give them one heart, and I will CHAPTER XII.

1 The word of the Lord also came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and see not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: for they are a rebellious house.

ARGUMENT.—Ezekiel being commanded to remove his household-stuff, and to take his sustenance with quaking and trembling, is a type of the captivity both of king and people, and of the consternation which their calamities will bring upon them; he afterward reproves the idleness of those who disbelieved his prophecies.

Ver. 2. Son of man.] See ii. 1.

3 Therefore, thou son of man, prepare thee stuff for removing, and remove by day in their sight; and thou shalt remove from thy place to another place in their sight: it may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house.

4 Then shalt thou bring forth thy stuff by day in their sight, as stuff for removing: and thou shalt go forth at even in their sight, as they that go forth into captivity.

Vol. 111.—68

5 Dig thou through the wall in their sight, and carry out thereby.

6 In their sight shall thou bear it upon thy shoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight: thou shalt cover thy face, that thou see not the ground: for I have set thee for a sign unto the house of Israel.

7 And I did so as I was commanded: I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity, and in the even I digged through the wall with mine hand; I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my shoulder in their sight.

8 ¶ And in the morning came the word of the Lord unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, hath not the house of Israel, the rebellious house, said unto thee, What dost thou?

10 Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: This burden concerneth the prince in Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel that are among them.

11 Say, I am your sign: like as I have done, so shall it be done unto them: they shall remove and go into captivity.

12 And the prince that is among them shall bear upon his shoulder in the twilight, and shall go forth: they shall dig through the wall to carry out thereby: he shall cover his face, that he see not the ground with his eyes.

13 My net also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare: and I will bring him to Babylon to the land of the Chaldeans; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there.

14 And I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him to help him, and all his bands; and I will draw out the sword after them.

15 And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries.

16 But I will leave a few men of them from the sword, from the famine, and from the pestilence; that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

17 ¶ Moreover the word of the Lord came to me, saying,

18 Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulness;

19 And say unto the people of the land, Thus saith the Lord God of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and of the land of Israel: They shall eat their bread with carefulness, and drink their water with astonishment, that her land may be desolate from all that is therein, because of the violence of all them that dwell therein.

20 And the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste, and the land shall be desolate; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

21 ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

22 Son of man, What is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?

23 Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord God: I will make this proverb to cease, and therefore believed neither. But they both actually came to pass, as the sacred story assures us: the king of Babylon passing sentence upon him at Riblah, as one that had broken the oath and covenant he had made with him, and then putting out his eyes, and carrying him to Babylon.

Ver. 14. I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him] See 2 Kings xxv. 4, 5. I will draw out the sword] See note upon v. 12.

Ver. 16. That they may declare all their abominations among the heathen] And there justify my proceedings against them (see vi. 8—10).

Ver. 18. Show all the signs of anxiety and consternation whenever thou taketh thy common sustenance.

Ver. 19. Thus saith the Lord God of Jerusalem] This was designed to inform the captives that they were not in a worse condition than those that were left behind in Judah (see note on ver. 2).

They shall eat their bread, &c.] See iv. 16, 17. Ver. 20. That I am the Lord.] See vi. 7. Ver. 22. In the land of Israel.] See note on vii. 2. The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?] Words of the same import with those at ver. 27, and xi. 3. Both of them the words of infidels, who turn the grace of God into wantonness, and take encouragement from his patience and long-suffering to despise his threatenings, as if they would never be fulfilled (compare Isa. v. 10, Amos vi. 18, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4). Ver. 23. The days are at hand.] The same is elsewhere expressed, by "the day of the Lord is at hand."
CHAPTER XIII.

And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the word of the Lord;

3 Thus saith the Lord God; Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing!

4 O Israel, thy prophets are like foxes in the deserts.

5 Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither

6 They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith: and the Lord hath not sent them; and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word.

7 Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say, The Lord saith it; albeit I have not spoken?

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, behold, I am against you, saith the Lord God.

1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the word of the Lord;

3 Thus saith the Lord God; Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing!

4 O Israel, thy prophets are like foxes in the deserts.

5 Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither

6 They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith: and the Lord hath not sent them; and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word.

7 Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say, The Lord saith it; albeit I have not spoken?

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, behold, I am against you, saith the Lord God.

CHAPTER XIII.

Argument.—The prophet denounces God's judgments against false prophets who made a gain of their profession, and encouraged men to go on in their sins, by giving them false visions of peace and security; and at the same time disheartened the truly pious, and discouraged them from continuing in the ways of holiness.

Ver. 2. Say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts; The true prophets often denounce God's judgments against the false ones: laying to their charge many misdemeanors in their private conversation, and upbraiding them for unfaithfulness in the office they undertook of guiding and directing men's consciences (see xxii. 23, 28, Jer. vi. 11, xviii. 11, &c. xxviii. 14, xxix. 8, 22, 23, Mic. iii. 5).

Ver. 4. The foxes in the deserts. "Deceitful workers," as the apostle styles such persons, 2 Cor. xi. 13, who craftily insinuate false doctrines into weak and unstable minds; and withal hungry and ravenous, and such as greedily catch at any appearance of advantage (compare xxv. 25).

Ver. 5. Ye have not gone up into the gaps; Or, "stood in the gap," or breach, as it is expressed xxii. 30, Ps. cxi. 23. Which place alludes to the intercession which Moses made for the Israelites, whereby he withheld God's hand, as it were, when it was just stretched out to take vengeance upon the people for their heinous sin in making the golden calf (see Exod. xxxii. 10, 11).

The phrase is taken from those that put a stop to the enemy when he is just entering in at a breach. In like manner, it was the office and duty of those prophets, if they had truly been what they pretended by their prayers and intercessions, to put a stop to God's vengeance when it was just ready to be poured out upon a sinful people.

Neither made up the hedge; Or, "made up a wall," as the Vulgar Latin translates it. Another expression taken from those that are besieged, and if a breach be made in a wall, presently make it up, or build up a new one within it: to prevent the enemy from entering, and becoming masters of the city. The word gedeer, fence, signifies any other sort of fortification (see Ps. cxii. 3, lxxix. 40).

To stand in the battle in the day of the Lord; When God shall come like a leader, or general, at the head of his army, i.e. his judgments, to execute vengeance upon his enemies (compare Jer. xxv. 30, Joel ii. 11).

Ver. 6. They have seen vanity and lying divination; Concerning peace and prosperity (see ver. 10, and xxii. 23, 24).

They have made others to hope that they would confirm the word; Or, "that the word should be confirmed;" the transitive verb being often taken in an impersonal sense (see the note on Isa. xlv. 18). Their speaking with so much assurance made others confidently expect that the event should answer their predictions; and sometimes even impressed upon the true prophets for a time; as Hananiah did upon Jeremiah (see Jer. xxviii. 6).

Ver. 9. They shall not be in the assembly of my people; They shall not be members of the church here, 9 And mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies: they shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel, neither shall they enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

10 ¶ Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace; and they built up a wall, and, lo, others digged a pit beneath it. And I have spoken to you, saith the Lord God, saying, Peace; and there was no peace, except it was given with untempered mortar.

11 Say unto them that daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall: there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it.

12 Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger.

14 So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

15 Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered mortar, and will say unto you, The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;

16 To use the prophets of Israel which prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which see visions of peace for her, and there is no peace, saith the Lord God.

17 ¶ Likewise, thou son of man, set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them.

18 And say, Thus saith the Lord God: Woe and his fellow-workmen should daub it with untempered mortar (see ver. 11, 12, 16).

Ver. 11.] God's judgments are often compared to storms and tempests, the artillery of heaven (see xxviii. 22, Job xxvii. 10, Ps. xi. 6, xviii. 13, 14). Especially when he executes his judgments by a victorious army (see Isa. xxxix. 6, xxviii. 2, Jer. iv. 13, compare Ecclus. xlii. 9).

Ver. 13.] Under these metaphors is probably foretold the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldean army. Thus the Chaldee paraphrase expounds it: "I will bring a mighty king with the force of a whirlwind, and destroying people as it were an overflowing storm, and powerful princes like great hail-stones."

Ver. 14. So will I break down the wall, &c.] The Chaldee explains this verse to the same sense: "I will destroy the city wherein ye have uttered these false prophecies:" which exposition is confirmed by the following words, "and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof; that is, you shall be destroyed in the same common calamity." Ye shall know that I am the Lord; See vi. 7.

Ver. 15. The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;] The Chaldee expounds it, "The city is no more, nor the false prophets."

Ver. 16. See visions of peace; See Jer. vi. 10, viii. 11.

Ver. 17. Set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy: Direct thy discourse against these she-pretenders to prophecy (compare xx. 16, xxxii. 1). God did sometimes bestow the gift of prophecy upon women (see Exod. xv. 20, Judg. iv. 4, 2 Kings xxii. 14). This encouraged others of that sex to pretend the same gift (compare Rev. ii. 20).

Ver. 18. Woe to the women that sew pillows to all armholes, &c.] The learned Gataker, in Cinnus, p. 200, thinks the words may more properly be rendered, "Thou that puttest on a garment to all armholes;" so he understands the same word, Job xvi. 15, "I have put sackcloth upon my skin." As the prophet compares the deceitful practices of the false prophets to the daubing of a wall, so he represents the artifices of these female seducers, by sewing pillows under their lovers' elbows, that they might rest securely in their evil ways; and by covering their faces with veils or kerchiefs, or ornaments proper to women, thereby to keep them in blindness and ignorance.
to the women that sew pillows to all araboiles; and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

19 And will ye pollute me among my people for handfulls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the dead souls that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Be hold, I am against your pillows, wherewith ye there hunt the souls to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls upon your pillows to all araboiles; and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

Upon the head of every stature] "Of every age," both great and small: so the Greek word ἄπλιξ, used by the LXX. here, signifies age as well as stature (see Dr. Hammond upon Matt. vi. 27).

To hunt souls:] That they may drive them into those nests and snares that they have laid for them, and make their prey (compare xxv. 25, Mic. ii. 7, 2 Pet. ii. 14).

Will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?] Or, "will ye promise life unto those that come to you?" (see ver. 19, 22) that is, will ye make a prey of men's souls, by deluding them with fair hopes and promises?

Ver. 19. Will ye pollute me among my people?] Will ye profane my name, by making use of it to give credit to your own dreams and lies (see ver. 7)!

For handfulls of barley and for pieces of bread:] For the meanest reward (see Prov. xxviii. 21). So greedily are they of making gain to themselves (compare xxii. 25, Mic. iii. 5).

To slay the souls that should not die:] Thus they threatened death to those that yielded themselves to the Chaldeans in Jeconiah's captivity; and yet God preserved them alive (see Jer. xxix. 5, 6). And they have encouraged those that remain at Jerusalem with promises of peace and safety, who shall go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly.

21 Your kerchiefs also will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they shall be no more in your hand to be hunted; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

22 Because with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life:

23 Therefore ye shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations: for I will deliver my people out of your hand: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Then came certain of the elders of Israel unto me, and sat before me.

2 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their face: should I be enquired of at all by them?

4 Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet; I the Lord will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols;

5 That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart, because they are all estranged from me through their idols.

CHAP. XIV.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet denounces God's judgments against those hypocrites who pretended to be his worshippers, and at the same time secretly practised idolatry. He afterward sets forth God's mercy towards the Jews, in sparing a few of that sinful nation, and those no better than the rest that were destroyed, when he might in justice have involved all of them in one common destruction.

Ver. 3. These men have set up their idols in their heart, and—before their face:] They are not only idolaters in their heart, but they have actually set up idols and worshipped them; and thereby have fallen into that great sin of deserting me and my worship (see viii. 19).

should I be enquired of at all by them?] Though they have the impudence to come to ask counsel of God (see vii. 26), they shall not receive a favourable answer, but such a one as their hypocrisy deserves (see the following verse, and compare xxxvi. 37).

Ver. 5.] That I may deal with them according to their deserts, and thereby convince them that I am a searcher of hearts, and know the inward and secret wickedness of their thoughts.
Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Repent, and turn yourselves from your idols; and turn away your faces from all your abominations.

7 For every one of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel, which separateth himself from me, and setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to a prophet to enquire of him concerning me; I the Lord will answer him by myself:

8 And I will set my face against that man, and will make him a sign and a proverb, and I will cut him off from the midst of my people; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

9 And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out mine hand upon him, and will cut him off from the midst of my people Israel.

10 And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him;

Ver. 6. From all your abominations.] Your idolatries (see xvii. 10, xvi. 2).

Ver. 7. Of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel.] "The stranger within thy gates," as it is expressed in the fourth commandment. These, though they were not all of them circumcised, yet devoted themselves to the service of the one true God, for which reason they are styled "the worshippers of God," Acts xvi. 14, xvii. 8.

Which separateth himself from me.] Who turns apostate from me and my service; for men cannot serve God and idols; he having declared himself a Jealous God, that will not admit any rival in his worship (see Josh. xxv. 19).

I the Lord will answer him by myself.] I will punish him immediately by my own hands (see the following verse).

Ver. 8. I will set my face against that man.] I will make him a mark of my indignation (see xvi. 7, Jer. xxvi. 11).

Will make him a sign and a proverb.] I will make him a signal and remarkable instance of my vengeance (compare Num. xxi. 10, Deut. xxviii. 38. And will cut him off: By a sudden death, attended with extraordinary circumstances (see Lev. xx. 6, 17, 18).

Ver. 9. If the prophet be deceived.] This is to be understood of the false prophets, whose practices are reproved throughout the whole foregoing chapter.

I have suffered him to be deceived (see the note on Isa. lxxiii. 17). I have given him up to "strange delusions," as a just judgment upon him for going after idols, and setting up false pretences to inspiration (see xiii. 2, 7, 23, 1 Kings xxii. 33, Jer. iv. 10, and compare 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12). Or the words may be explained to this sense: I will disappoint the hopes and expectations of those prophets, who seduce my people by speaking peace to them (xiii. 10), for I will bring upon them those evils, which they with great assurance have declared should never come to pass. To this purpose it follows, "I will stretch out my hand upon him," &c. i. e. I will send such a judgment upon him, as I inflicted upon Hananiah the false prophet, Jer. xxviii. 16, 17.

10 That the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord God.

11 The word of the Lord came again to me, saying,

12 Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and will break the staff of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, and will cut off man and beast from it:

13 Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord God.

15 If I cause noisome beasts to pass through the land, and they spoil it, so that it be desolate, that no man pass through because of the beasts:

16 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters; they only shall be delivered, but the land shall be desolate.

17 Or if I bring a sword upon that land, and say, Sword, go through the land; so that I cut off man and beast from it:

Ver. 10.] Because both parties are equally guilty of going astray from me, and seeking after idols, and other unlawful means of divination (see ver. 11, and compare 2 Kings i. 3, 4).

Ver. 11. That—Israel may go no more astray.] The judgments I inflict upon the false prophets, and those that consult them, shall be an instruction to my people to keep close to me and to my worship, and not hanker after the idolatrous practices of the neighbouring nations.

But that they may be my people.] See xi. 20.

Ver. 13. When the land, &c.] Or, "When a land." The design of this and the following verses is to show that when the inhabitants of a land have filled up the measure of their iniquities, and God ariseth to execute judgment upon them, the few righteous that are left among them shall not be able by their prayers and intercessions to deliver the nation from the judgments decreed against it. "They shall but deliver their own souls;" as we see in the case of Sodom, where there was no righteous but Lot and his family; those just persons saved themselves, but no intercession could avail to save the city (see the following verse).

Break the staff of the bread.] See iv. 16.

Ver. 14. Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it.] All of them persons eminent for their piety: Noah and his family were saved out of the universal deluge, and obtained a promise from God that he would never destroy the world again (Gen. viii. 21); Daniel interceded with God for the whole nation of the Jews, and obtained a promise of their restoration, Dan. ix. Job was appointed by God to make intercession for his three friends, Job xlii. 8. But when God's irreversable decree is gone out against a nation, even the prayers of such men will be ineffectual towards their deliverance (compare Jer. xv. 1).

We may observe how early the fame of Daniel's piety was spread over Chaldea, who was at this time not above thirty years of age; it being but thirteen years ago since he was carried captive to Babylon, when he was very young (see Dan. i. 1, 4, &c.).

Ver. 15. If I cause noisome beasts.] See v. 17.

Ver. 17. If I bring a sword upon that land.] If I deliver it into the hands of a cruel and bloody ene-
18 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, but they only shall be delivered themselves.

19 ¶ Or if I send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast:

20 Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall but deliver their own souls by their righteousness.

21 For thus saith the Lord God; How much more when I send my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the my (see v. 12, vii. 15, xxi. 9, 10). The conqueror's sword is often called the "sword of the Lord," in the prophets: because they are the executioners of God's judgments (see Isa. x. 15, Jer. xxv. 9, xlvii. 6). Sword, go through the land.) So God is said "to call for a sword upon Gog," xxxviii. 21.

So that I cut off man and beast! The men are destroyed by the sword, and the cattle are driven away by the enemy; or else consumed by pestilence arising from the air's being corrupted through the stench of dead bodies (compare xxv. 13, xxxix. 8, xxvii. 13. Hos. iv. 3, Zeph. 1. 3).

Ver. 19. Or if I send a pestilence) See v. 12. And pour out my fury upon it in blood.) With great destruction of men's lives, as the Chaldean paraphrase explains it (compare xxxviii. 22).

Ver. 21. How much more [should there be an utter destruction] when I send my four sore judgments) See v. 12, vi. 12, xii. 16, Jer. xv. 2. The particles aphi ki, are very properly translated here, "How much more," in which sense they are plainly taken, 2 Sam. iv. 11, Prov. xli. 31, xxi. 15.

CHAPTER XV.

1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, What is the vine tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest?

3 Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon?

4 Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel; the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned. Is it meet for any work?

5 Behold, when it was whole, it was meet for no work; how much less shall it be meet yet for any work, when the fire hath devoured it, and it is burned?

6 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As the vine tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for fuel, so will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

7 And I will set my face against them; they or making any utensil. The works of that kind which Pliny takes notice of, Nat. Hist. lib. xiv. cap. 1, are rather to be looked upon as rarities, than as things of common use.

Ver. 4. It is cast into the fire for fuel.) The only use that dead vine-branches can be put to (see John xv. 6).

The fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned.) A fit representation of the present state of Judea, when both its extremities were consumed by the ravages of a foreign enemy, and the midst of it, where the capital city stood, is ready to be destroyed: just as the fire still spreads towards the middle part of a stick, when once both ends are lighted.

Ver. 7. They shall go out from one fire, and an-shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them; and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I set my face against them.

1 Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
2 Son of man, cause Jerusalem to know her abominations,
3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem: Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite.
4 And as for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water to supple thee; thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all.
5 None eye plied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but thou wast cast out in the open field, to the loathing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.
6 ¶ And when I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thine own blood, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live; yea, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live.

7 I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to excellent ornaments: thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou wast naked and bare.

8 Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of love; and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness: yea, I swore unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine.

9 Then washed I thee with water; yea, I thoroughly washed away thy blood from thee, and I anointed thee with oil.

10 I clothed thee also with brodered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and I girded scripture dialect, whose manners we resemble (see ver. 45, of this chapter; Matt. iii. 7, John viii. 44). There is an expression of the same import in the History of Susannah, ver. 50, that seems to be copied from this text, "O thou seed of Canaan, and not of Judah, beauty hath deceived thee, and Jast hath perverted thy heart."

Ver. 4, 5.] The prophet describes the forlorn condition of the Israelites in Egypt under the similitude of a new-born infant, exposed in its native filthiness, without any friend to pity his condition, or take the least care of it.

Ver. 6. I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live:] Whilst an yet nobody took so much care of thee as to wash thee from thy native filthiness (ver. 4). I took pity on thee; as a traveller that passes by, and sees an infant lie exposed; and I provided all things necessary for thy support.

Ver. 7.] The prophet describes the people's increasing in Egypt, under the metaphor of a child's growing to woman's estate (compare Exod. i. 7). Ver. 8. Thy time was the time of love :] I thought it now a proper time to betroth thee to myself: the Jews' deliverance out of Egypt is elsewhere described as the time of God's espousing them to himself (see Jer. ii. 2, &c., Hos. ii. 15, 19). And his entering into a covenant with them, is commonly represented by a marriage contract (see Isa. liv. 5, Jer. iii. 1, 14, and Bishop Patrick's Preface to his Commentary on the Canticles).

I spread my skirt over thee.] I took thee under my protection, as a husband doth the wife (see Ruth iii. 9). And covered thy nakedness:] Enriched thee with the goods and possessions of the Egyptians and Canaanites (see ver. 10, 11, &c.).

Ver. 9. Then washed I thee with water—and I anointed thee with oil.] I added everything that could contribute to thy beauty and ornament. The anointing with oil was reckoned a necessary ingredient in a festival dress (see Ruth iii. 3, Isa. ixi. 3, Matt. vi. 17).
CHAPTER XVI.

Thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk.

11 I decked thee also with ornaments, and I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck. 12 And I put a jewel on thy forehead, and earrings in thine ears, and a beautiful crown upon thine head.

13 Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver; and thy raiment was of fine linen, and silk, and brodered work; thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil: and thou wast exceeding beautiful, and thou didst prosper into a kingdom:

14 And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty; for it was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot because of thy renown, and pourdest out thy formations on every one that passed by; his it was.

16 And of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places with divers colours, and

Ver. 10. And shod thee with badgers' skin, &c.] Or, with sandals of a purple colour, as Bochart expounds the word tahash. This and the following verses allude to those parts of women's attire, which serve not only for use, but for ornament too; and import that God did not only provide the Jews with necessaries, but likewise with superfluities.

I girded thee about with fine linen.] This manufacture Egypt was famous for (see xxvii. 7): it was one of the principal ornaments of women (see Isa. iii. 16), as well as of good men.

Ver. 11.] These were ornaments that none but persons of better quality used to wear (see Gen. xxiv. 47, Prov. i. 9).

Ver. 12.] I put a jewel on thy forehead.] The same which is called a "nose-jewel," Isa. iii. 21, where the words might as well be translated, "a jewel for the face or forehead" (compare likewise Gen. xxiv. 47).

A beautiful crown upon thine head.] Crowns or garlands were used in times of public rejoicing; from whence is derived that expression of St. Paul, "A crown of life" (see 1 Tim. iii. 10) (compare Isa. xxxv. 10). Virgins were sometimes adorned with crowns (see Baruch vi. 9): and they were commonly put upon the heads of persons newly married (see Cant. iii. 11).

Ver. 13. Thou didst eat fine flour, honey, and oil.] Thy country afforded all manner of plenty and delicacies (compare Deut. xxxii. 13, 14).

Didst prosper into a kingdom.] Thou was advanced to be the sent of a kingdom, and the city of the great King of heaven and earth, Ps. xlviii. 2.

Ver. 14. Thy renown went forth—for thy beauty.] For the magnificence of the temple, called the "beauty of holiness," and honoured with God's especial presence (compare Lam. ii. 15, Ps. xlviii. 2).

Ver. 15. Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot.] Women that are proud of their beauty are easily tempted to lewdness, if they have not a strict guard upon themselves: so you abused those honours and advantages which I had bestowed upon you, and made them an occasion of forswearing me your benefactor, and serving idols. You presumed upon that very favour which I had shown to Jerusalem, in choosing it for the place of my residence; as if that would secure you from my ven-whoredoms thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and wast polluted in thy blood.

23 And it came to pass after all thy wickedness, that thou hast come unto me! saith the Lord God;) but That thou hast also built unto thee an eminent place, and hast made thee an high place in every street.

25 Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms.

26 Thou hast also committed fornication with the Egyptians thy neighbours, great of flesh; and hast increased thy whoredoms, to provoke me to anger.

27 Behold, therefore I have stretched out my hand over thee, and have diminished thine ordinary food, and delivered thee unto the will of on Jer. xxxii. 35. By children are meant here the first-born, who are set apart to be God's property in a peculiar manner, Exod. xiii. 2, and yet even these they sometimes sacrificed to their idols (see Mic. vi. 7).

To cause them to pass through the fire] The verb ἁνέβησαν, translated "to cause them to pass through the fire," signifies also to dedicate, and denotes the first-born unto God (Exod. xiii. 12). So the words imply, that the Jews, instead of dedicating their first-born to God, as the law required, offered them up a sacrifice to the devil, that was worshipped in their idols.

Ver. 29. Thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth.] That miserable condition from which I rescued thee when I first took notice of thee, and set thee apart for my own people (see ver. 3, &c. and compare ver. 43, 60).

Ver. 24.] Manasseh filled Jerusalem with idols (see 2 Chron. xxxiii. 4, 5, 15), many of which were worshipped upon high or eminent places (compare ver. 16, 31, and 2 Kings xxvii. 5, 12, 13). The LXX. render the Hebrew word gab, a "brothel-house:" and it is certain that the worship of some of the heathen idols consisted in committing all manner of uncleanness (see 2 Kings xxvii. 7, and the note upon ver. 26).

Ver. 25.] These and the following expressions allude to the practices of common harlots, who used to frequent the most public places, to allure passengers to them (see Gen. xxxviii. 21, Prov. ix. 14, 15): idolatry being in this chapter and elsewhere compared to the rage of lust (see Isa. lvi. 5, Jer. ii. 23, 31, iii. 2).

Ver. 36.] Thou hast also committed fornication with the Egyptians] While the Israelites sojourned in Egypt, they learned to practise their idolatries (see xx. 7, 8, Lev. xx. 3, Deut. xxix. 16, 17, Josh. xxiv. 14). From Josiah's time the Jews were in a strict confederacy with the Egyptians, and, to ingratiate themselves with them, practised their idolatries (compare xxviii. 19—21, 10, 41). And the worship of Tanmu, the idolatry they are upbraided with, viii. 14, was derived from the same country.

Great of flesh; and hast increased thy whoredoms,] Compare xxxviii. 20. The expressions may allude to the whoredoms which were committed in the worship of some of their idols (see xxii. 9, Numb. xxxi. 16, Hos. iv. 4, Baruch vi. 49). Ver. 27. And have diminished thine ordinary food.] I have abridged thee of many necessities and conveniences, by giving thy country into the hand of thine enemies, as it follows.
givest thy gifts to all thy lovers, and hires them, that they may come unto thee on every side for thy whoredom.

34 And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms: and in that thou givest a reward, and no reward is given unto thee, therefore thou art contrary.

35 ¶ Wherefore, O harlot, hear the word of the Lord:

36 Thus saith the Lord God; Because thy filthiness was poured out, and thy nakedness discovered, through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thy abominations, and by the blood of thy children, which thou didst give unto them;

37 Behold, therefore I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, and all them that thou hast loved, with all them that thou hast hated: I will even gather them round about against thee, and will discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness.

38 And I will judge thee, as women that break wedlock and shed blood are judged; and I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.

39 And I will also give thee into their hand, and they shall throw down thine eminent place, and shall break down thy high places: they shall strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take thy fair jewels, and leave thee naked and bare.

40 They shall also bring up a company against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones, and thrust thee through with their swords.

41 And they shall burn thine houses with fire, and execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more.

42 So will I make my fury toward thee rest, and my jealousy shall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, and will be no more angry.

43 Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me in all these things; behold, therefore I also will recompense thy way upon thine head, saith the Lord God: and thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations.

44 ¶ Behold, every one that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying, As is the mother, so is her daughter.

45 Thou art thy mother's daughter, that lowesth her husband and her children: and thou art the

With all thee that thou hast hated.] Compare ver. 41.

Such were Edom, Moab, and Ammon; who always bore a spite to the Jews, and insulted over their calamities (see xxxv. 3, 8, 12).

And will discover thy nakedness unto them.] They shall see thee carried away captive, stripped and bare (see ver. 39), without any covering to thy nakedness, according to the barbarous custom of conquerors (see the notes on Isa. iii. 17, xx. 4). The words allude to the punishment that used to be inflicted upon common harlots and adulteresses, which was to strip them naked, and expose them to the world (compare xxix. 23, Jer. xiii. 22, 26, Hos. ii. 3).

Ver. 38. And I will judge thee, as women that break wedlock.] Whose punishment was death by the law, Lev. xx. 10, Deut. xxii. 22.

And shed blood.] See ver. 20, 26. This was likewise a capital crime (see Exod. xxi. 12). In these two parts of Jerusalem's character, she was a type of the antichristian whore, who was likewise drunk with the blood of the saints" (Rev. xvii. 5, 6).

I will give thee blood in fiery and jealousy.] I will make an utter destruction of thine inhabitants (see xiv. 19): or I will "pour out the blood of thy slain like water" (Ps. lxix. 3). Jealousy is the "rage of a man" (Prov. vi. 34). Such indignation will God show against the idolatry of his own people, who hath declared himself a jealous God, and very tender of his honour, which is highly injured by the worship of idols, set up as his rivals (see the note on v. 13).

Ver. 39. They shall throw down thine eminent place.] They shall destroy all the high walls and fortifications; the expression alludes to the high places dedicated to idolatrous worship (see ver. 24, 31).

They shall strip thee also of thy clothes.] They shall first plunder thee before they carry thee away captive (see ver. 37, and xxiii. 26).
sister of thy sisters, which loathed their husbands and their children: your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite.

46 And this elder sister is Samaria, she and her daughters that dwell at thy left hand; and thy younger sister, that dwelleth at thy right hand, is Sodom and her daughters.

47 Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations: but, as if that were a very little thing, thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways.

48 As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters.

49 Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

50 And they were haughty, and committed abomination before me: therefore I took them away as I saw good.

51 Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters in all thine abominations which thou hast done.

52 Thou also, which hast judged thy sisters, bear thine own shame for that thou hast commended more abominable than they: they are more righteous than thou: yea, be thou confounded also, and bear thine shame, in that thou hast justified thy sisters.

53 When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them:

54 That thou mayest bear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art a comfort unto them.

55 When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their

Ver. 49. This was the iniquity of—Sodom, pride, fulness of bread: Sodom abused that plenty which God gave them to pride and idleness, which gave rise to those enormities which they afterward were guilty of. The scripture takes notice of the fruitfulness of the soil where Sodom stood (Gen. xiii. 10).

56 For thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride, 57 Before thy wickedness was discovered, as at the time of thy reproach of the daughters of Syria, and all that are round about her, the daughters of the Philistines, which despise thee round about.

58 Thou hast borne thy lewdness and thin abominations, saith the Lord.

59 For thus saith the Lord God; I will even deal with thee as thou hast done, which hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant.

60 ¶ Nevertheless I will remember my covenant shame and punishment due to thy sins, and shalt be some sort of comfort to thy neighbours, in being a companion with them in punishment, as thou hast been in wickedness.

Ver. 55.] When the prophets foretell the general conversion and restoration of the Jewish nation, they always join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that blessing (see xxxvii. 16, 22, and the notes there).

Ver. 56, 57. For thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride, before thy wickedness was discovered.] These words should be joined together in the same verse or sentence: God saith to Jerusalem, that in the height of her prosperity, before her wickedness so fully appeared to the eyes of the world, by the extraordinary judgments brought upon her, she did not reflect upon the terrible vengeance which befell Sodom, and was designed for an example or “warning to those who should afterward live ungodly” (2 Pet. ii. 6).

1bid. and ver. 58. As at the time of thy reproach of the daughters of Syria, &c.] The words begin a new sentence, which may be translated more perspicuously thus, joining them to the following verse: “But when it was the time of thy becoming the reproach of the daughters of Syria,” &c. The particle kemo sometimes signifies when (see Noldius, p. 431). The words, with regard to what goes before, import thus much: In thy prosperity thou didst despise those who are no worse than thyself; but since thou hast been insulted and invaded by thy neighbours, both Syrians and Philistines, whom God hath made use of as executioners of his judgments upon thee, thou hast been a remarkable instance of his vengeance, and God’s hand hath been heavy upon thee for all thine idolatries and abominations. The words relate to the frequent inroads the Syrians and Philistines made into Judaea in the time of king Ahaz (see 2 Kings xvi. 5, 2 Chron. xxvii. 15).

Ver. 58.] That solemn oath and covenant you entered into with me to be my people, and serve no other God besides: see Deut. xxix. 12, 14, which is likewise represented in this chapter, and many other places, under the solemnity of a marriage contract. Hereupon God threatens her, that since she had broken her oath and promise, he should not think himself obliged to make good any of the promises of favour and protection which he had made to her, but pant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant.

61 Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant.

62 And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

63 That thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God.

would give her up to ruin and desolation (see Num. xiv. 34).

Ver. 60. I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth.] I will have some regard for you, because you were formerly my people, by virtue of the covenant I made with you at your coming out of Egypt (compare ver. 4, 22, of this chapter, and Hos. ii. 15, xi. 1, Jer. ii. 2): at which time God chose them to be his peculiar people (see Exod. xix. 5, 6).

I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant.] Such a one as shall never be abolished, viz. that of the gospel (see Jer. xxxii. 40, and the note upon that place).

Ver. 61. Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed.] The Jews shall be touched with a deep sense and remorse for their former provocation, as a necessary preparation for their conversion (compare xx. 43, xxxvi. 21, Jer. xxxii. 9, 1, 5, and see the notes upon those places).

When thou shalt receive thy sisters;] See ver. 53.

And I will give them unto thee for daughters,] Jerusalem thus restored shall be a type of that heavenly Jerusalem, which is the mother of us all (Gal. iv. 29). And even in the times of the apostles there was a particular deference paid to the church of Jerusalem, as the mother-church of the Christian world (see Rom. xv. 26, 27). Accordingly she is styled the mother of all churches, by the second general council, in their synodical epistle (see Theodoret. Hist. Eccles. lib. v. cap. 9): a title which the church of Rome now assumes, without any pretense from scripture or antiquity.

But not by thy covenant.] Not by virtue of that covenant mentioned ver. 60,—you have forfeited all your title to its privileges, ver. 59; but by virtue of that new covenant which I will make with you, through the Messias (see Jer. xxxi. 31).

Ver. 62. Thou shalt know that I am the Lord:] I will be then as conspicuous in my mercies, as I was before in my judgments (see note on vi. 7).

Ver. 63. That thou mayest remember and be confounded.] Be confounded at the remembrance of thy former wickedness (see ver. 61).

And never open thy mouth any more] The mercies of the gospel in “calling sinners to repentance,” and accepting them, notwithstanding their many imperfections, do unanswerably confute all callin- or pretence to merit (see Rom. iii. 19).
CHAPTER XVII.

1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
2 Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel;
3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God: A great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:
4 He cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffic: he set it in a city of merchants.
5 He took also of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field: he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.
6 And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs.
7 There was also another great eagle with great wings and many feathers: and, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation.
8 It was planted in a good soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.
9 Say thou, Thus saith the Lord God: Shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, even without great power or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof.
10 Yes, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew.
11 § Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
12 Say now to the rebellious house, Know ye not what these things mean? tell them, Behold, lobster a fruitful country, and well watered (see Deut. viii. 7), where Zedekiah flourished as a willow tree, that thriveth best in a moist ground (see Isa. xlv. 4).
13 Ver. 6.) Though he flourished, yet he enjoyed but a tributary kingdom under the king of Babylon, and acknowledged him as his lord and sovereign (see ver. 14).
14 Ver. 7. There was also another great eagle] Pharaoh king of Egypt, with whom Zedekiah made an alliance; whereupon that king sent an army to raise the siege of Jerusalem (see 2 Chron. xxxvii. 13, Jer. xxxvii. 5, 7).
15 This vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, &c.] Zedekiah despaired the king of Egypt’s assistance and protection. Some render the words thus, “Shot forth her branches under him from the furrows where she was planted, that he might water it.”
16 Ver. 8.) The words are to the same purpose with ver. 5, to show that Zedekiah’s condition was so good under the king of Babylon, that he needed not to have broken his oath, out of a desire to better it; whereby he involved himself and his country in ruin (see 2 Kings xxiv. 20, and the note upon Jer. xvii. 25).
17 Ver. 9. Shall he not pull up the roots thereof?] Nebuchadnezzar, in return for this perfidiousness, shall destroy him and his family (see 2 Kings xxy. 7).
18 Even without great power] God will appear visibly on the Chaldeans’ side, so there will be no need of great force to subdue their enemies (see Jer. xxi. 4, xxxvii. 10).
19 Ver. 10. Shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it?] The prophet compares the Chaldean army to a parching wind, that blasts the fruits of the earth, withers the leaves of the trees, and makes every thing look naked and bare (see xix 12, Isa. xxvii. 8, Jer. iv. 11, Hos. xiii. 15).
20 Ver. 12. The rebellions house.] See ii. 4, xii. 9.
21 Know ye not what these things mean?] Will ye not apply your minds to understand what God speaks to you? And that, whether he directs his speech to the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken the king thereof, and the princes thereof, and led them with him to Babylon;
13 And hath taken of the king’s seed, and made a covenant with him, and hath taken an oath of him: he hath also taken the mighty of the land:
14 That the kingdom might be base, that it might not lift itself up, but that by keeping of his covenant it might stand.
15 But he rebelled against him in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people. Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doth such things? or shall he be delivered out of the hand of the mighty of the land?

16 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die.
17 Neither shall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him in the war, by casting up mounts, and building forts, to cut off many persons:

18 Seeing he despised the oath by breaking you in plain words, or delivers his mind in riddles and parables (see xli. 2, 9, xx. 49)!

And hath taken the king thereof, and the princes] Jeconiah, and all his princes and officers (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12).

Ver. 13. And hath taken an oath of him.) Hath made Zedekiah swear an oath of fealty to him (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13).

His oath to be broken: the mighty of the land: As hostages for the performance of the covenants agreed between him and Zedekiah.

Ver. 11. Zedekiah by this means became only a tributary king (compare xxix. 14), and consequently not in so honourable a condition as his predecessors had been; but yet this was the only means under the present circumstances to support himself and his government.

Ver. 15. That they might give him horses] See the note on ver. 7. Egypt was a country that abounded in horses, of which there was great scarcity in Judæa (see 1 Kings ix. 28, Isa. xxxi. 1, xxxvi. 9).

Shall he prosper?] This was not only a violation of his oath and covenant, but likewise a breach of that part of the Jewish law (Deut. xvii. 10), which expressly forbade their king to "fetch horses out of Egypt," or strengthen himself with the alliance of that people.

Ver. 16. In—Babylon he shall die.] Whither he shall be carried prisoner (see xli. 13).

By casting up mounts.] See Jer. xxxii. 7.

Ver. 18. When, &c.] In token of entering into a mutual league and covenant (see Isa. xli. 13). Particularly it was a ceremony used when an inferior made profession of his submission to his superior: see 1 Chron. xxix. 24, Jer. 1. 15, Lam. v. 6, where we read that the "princes and mighty men submitted themselves to Solomon the king;" but in the original it is, "they gave the hand under Solomon.’’

Ver. 20. I will spread my net upon him.] See xii. 13.

Will plead with him there for his trespass] God is said to plead with men, when he places their sins before his eyes, and convinces them of their disobedience by manifest tokens of his vengeance (see xx. 36, xxxviii. 22).

Ver. 22. I will also take of the highest branch of the highest cedar, and will set it.] The prophet, pursuing the same metaphor, foretells the restoration of the royal family of David, in such terms as might in some degree be fulfilled at the return from the captivity, but in much more glorious perfection, when the lineage of David, had a shadow of kingly authority among the Jews, and by his means their church and constitution was again restored. But the words do more properly belong to Christ and his kingdom, which shall be extended over all the world.

I will crop off from the—young twigs a tender one.] This description may fitly be applied to our Saviour, in respect to the low estate to which the family of David was then reduced, with great humility acknowledged by his mother, Luke i. 48. The meanness of his outward condition and appearance is represented by the prophet Isaiah, under the same expressions (liii. 2).

Ver. 23. In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it.] The temple stood upon Mount Moriah (2 Chron. iii. 1), thence styled God’s holy mountain; which expression is often used in the prophets to denote the Christian church; which is described as a city set on a hill, and conspicuous to all the world (see xx. 40, and the note upon Isa. ii. 2).

It shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit.] The living members of the church are compared to fruitful trees, and the branches of the temple (see Ps. i. 3, xviii. 2, John xv. 5, 7).

Under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing;] i. e. Of every kind. A powerful, especially if it be an easy government, is a shelter and security to all its subjects (compare xxxvi. 6, Dan. iv. 12). Such shall be the kingdom of Christ to all that submit themselves to his laws.

Ver. 24. That I the Lord have brought down the high tree, &c.] Christ's kingdom shall by degrees exalt itself above all the kingdom's of the world; and shall at length put an end to them, and itself continue unto all eternity (see Dan. iv. 35, 44, viii. 27, Luke 1. 33, 1 Cor. xv. 24).
EZEKIEL.

24 And all the trees of the field shall know that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, and have exalted the low tree, and have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the Lord have spoken and have done it.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 The word of the Lord came unto me again, saying,

2 What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?

3 As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel.

4 Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

5 But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right,

6 And hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to a menstruous woman,

7 And hath not oppressed any, but hath reigned in this vengeance falls, suffer no more than their own personal sins deserved; yet, because the sins of former generations, which they equal or outdo, make it time for God utterly to destroy them, the punishments due to the sins of many ages and generations are said to fall upon them (see Matt. xxiii. 35, 36; Dr. Sherlock, of Providence, chap. 8).

8 Ver. 4. Behold, all souls are mine.] As they are all equally my creatures, so my dealings with them shall be without prejudice or partiality.

9 The soul that sinneth, it shall die.] 'Death is the wages of sin,' and all men being sinners, the sentence of temporal death passes equally upon them all. But as life signifies in general all that happiness which attends God's favour, so death denotes all those punishments which are the effects of the divine displeasure (see 2 Sam. xii. 13); under which are comprehended the miseries of the next world; and these shall be allotted to men according to their deserts, without any regard to the faults of their ancestors, which shall not then be laid to their charge, or taken into account to aggravate their guilt. The words dying and death, are often used in the New Testament for the punishments of the next world (see particularly Rom. viii. 15); and they are expressed by the second death, Rev. xx. 14, an expression used among the Jews, and found in the Targum upon Deut. xxxiii. 6.

10 As the prophets instruct men in the practice of inward and evangelical righteousness, and in order to it speak slightly of the mere external duties of religion (see Isa. i. 11, &c. Jer. vii. 22, 23): so they raise men's minds to look beyond the temporal promises and threatenings of the law, to the eternal rewards and punishments of another life (see Isa. xxvi. 24, Dan. xiii. 2). In both which respects they prepared men's minds for the reception of the gospel when it should be revealed.

11 Ver. 6. Hath not eaten upon the mountains.] Idolatrous worship was commonly performed upon mountains or high places (see vi. 13, xvi. 16, 44, xx. 28); and eating part of the sacrifice, was properly maintaining communion with the idol to whom it was offered (see Exod. xxxiv. 15, 1 Cor. x. 20, 21.)

12 Neither hath lifted up his eyes] Lifting up the eyes, is a posture of religious worship or adoration (see Deut. iv. 19, Ps. cxxi. 1, cxxiii. 1).

13 Ver. 7. Hath restored to the debtor his pledge.] God commanded the Jews not to detain any pledge they took from a poor man all night; which was, in effect, stored to the debtor his pledge, hath spoiled none by violence, hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment;
CHAPTER XVIII.

8 He that hath not given forth upon usury, neither hath taken any increase, that hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity, hath executed true judgment between man and man,
9 Hath walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly; he is just, he shall surely live, saith the Lord God.
10 ¶ If he beget a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood, and doth the like to any one of these things, 11 And that doeth not any of those duties, but even hath eaten upon the mountains, and defiled his neighbour's wife,
12 Hath oppressed the poor and needy, hath spoiled by violence, hath not restored the pledge, and hath lifted up his eyes to the idols, hath committed abomination.
13 Hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase: shall he then live? he shall not live: he hath done all these abominations; he shall surely die; his blood shall be upon him.
14 ¶ Now, lo, if he beget a son, that seed all his father's sins which he hath done, and considereth, and doeth not such like,
15 That hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife,
16 Neither hath oppressed any, hath not withheld the pledge, neither hath spoiled by violence, but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment,
17 That hath taken off his hand from the poor, that hath not received usury nor increase, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my statutes; he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live.

18 As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall die in his iniquity.
19 ¶ Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them, he shall surely live.
20 The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.
21 But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die.
22 All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live.
23 Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways, and live?
24 ¶ But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die.
25 ¶ Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal. Hear now, O house of Israel; Is not my way equal? are not your ways unequal?
26 When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die.

Ver. 22. They shall not be mentioned unto him:] Or, "remembered against him:"
God is said in scripture to remember men's sins, when he punishes them (see Jer. xiv. 10, Hos. viii. 13); and to forget them when he pardons them (Jer. xxxi. 34, Amos viii. 7).
Ver. 23.] In conformity to this doctrine, the New Testament instructs us, that "God would have all men to be saved, and is not willing that any should perish" (1 Tim. ii. 4. 2 Pet. iii. 9).
Ver. 24. All his righteousness—shall not be mentioned.] For, "Better had it been for him not to have known the way of righteousness, than after he hath known it, to turn aside from the holy commandment" (2 Pet. ii. 21). Such a one sins against a clearer light and greater convictions, and withal is guilty of the greatest ingratitude, in doing despite unto the Spirit of grace.
Ver. 25.] The declarations I have so often repeated concerning the eternal rewards and punishments allotted to the righteous and the wicked, are sufficient to vindicate the justice of my proceedings against all your objections.
Ver. 26, 27.] It is an opinion that prevails among the Jews even till this day, that at the day of judgment a considerable number of good actions shall overbalance men's evil ones (see xxxiii. 13). So 27 Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive.

28 Because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

29 Yet saith the house of Israel, The way of the Lord is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways unequal? O house of Israel, are not thy ways unequal?

30 Therefore I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord God. Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin.

31 ¶ Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

32 For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye.

they thought it a hard case for a man, who had been righteous the far greatest part of his life, if he did at last commit iniquity, that his former righteousness should avail him nothing. In opposition to this doctrine, God here declares, that a righteous man sinning, and not repenting, should die in his sins: and that a wicked man, upon his repentance, should save his soul alive.

Ver. 30.] You complain of the injustice of my ways or proceedings; but if I judge you according to the desert of your ways, you will certainly be all found guilty, and nothing but repentance and true contrition can avert that ruin your sins threaten you with.

Ver. 31. Make you a new heart and a new spirit.] The prophets often exhort the Jews to an inward purity and holiness, thereby to take them off from relying upon an outward legal righteousness, and an exactness in the observance of the ritual parts of the law (see the note upon ver. 4). By thus instructing them in a more excellent way of serving God, than the ceremonial law did directly prescribe, they prepared their minds for receiving those truths which the gospel would more fully discover. God promises, xxxvi. 26, "to give them a new heart, and put within them a new spirit;" here he exHORTS them to "make themselves a new heart, and a new spirit." Which difference of expression is thus to be reconciled, that although God "works in us to will and to do," and is the first mover in our regeneration, yet we must work together with his grace, at least willingly receive it, and not quench or resist its motions (see the note upon Jer. xxxi. 18.).

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Moreover take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Israel,

2 And say, What is thy mother? A lioness; she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among young lions.

3 And she brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men.

4 The nations also heard of him: he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains unto the land of Egypt.

5 Now when she saw that she had waited, and her hope was lost, then she took another of her whelps, and made him a young lion.

6 And he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men.

7 And he knew their desolate palaces, and he but the evil practices of the wicked kings his predecessors (see 2 Kings xxiii. 32).

Ver. 4. The nations also heard of him.] Pharaoh-nechoh, king of Egypt, hearing his ill character, deposed him, and made him a prisoner (see 2 Kings xxiii. 33, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4).

He was taken in their pit.] The expression alludes to those pitfalls and snares which are made to take wild beasts.

Ver. 5. Then she took another of her whelps.] Jehoiakim was set up king in his brother's stead, by the king of Egypt, who, by this victory over Josiah, had made himself master of Judea (2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34): but yet Pharaoh seems to have done this by the joint consent of the people, who had before set up Jehoiakim's younger brother, without asking the king of Egypt's consent.

Ver. 6.] He learned and practised all the methods of tyranny and oppression (see Jer. xxiii. 13, 17, xxxvii. 2).

Ver. 7. He knew their desolate palaces.] Or, "He knew their palaces," as the word armenoth is translated, Amos 1:7. And the word armenoth here used is equivalent to armenoth (see Isa. xiii. 22). Jehoiakim made himself master of the riches and pleasant seats of the great men of the land.
laid waste their cities; and the land was desolate, and the fulness thereof, by the noise of his roaring.

8 Then the nations set against him on every side from the provinces, and spread their net over him: he was taken in their pit.

9 And they put him in ward in chains, and brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds, that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.

10 ¶ Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood, planted by the waters: she was fruitful and full of branches by reason of many waters.

11 And she had strong rods for the sceptres of Ver. 8, 9. The nations set against him on every side [The Chaldeans, and their neighbours and allies, invaded Judea, and afterward besieged Jerusalem, and took Jehochainkin prisoner (see 2 Kings xxiv. 2, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6).

Spread their net over him.] See ver. 4, and compare xii. 19.

Ver. 9. That his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.] The words allude to a lion's seeking his prey upon the mountains. Ezekiel often expresses the land of Israel by the "mountains of Israel" (see the note upon vi. 2).

Ver. 10.] The country of Judea from whence the royal family have their original, was like a fruitful vine in a flourishing condition (see xvii. 5, 6).

Ver. 11. She had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule.] From her sprung sovereign princes who were themselves very powerful, and made their people appear considerable among their neighbours. A rod or sceptre is an emblem of authority (see Isa. ix. 4, x. 5, Jer. xlviii. 17).

Her stature was exalted] Compare xxxi. 3, Dan. iv. 11.

Ver. 12. She was plucked up in fury.] God in his anger removed her out of the land (compare Ps. iii. 5, Jer. xii. 14).

The cast wind dried up her fruit.] See xviii. 10.

Her strong rods were broken and withered.] Her kings and princes were subdued and made captives.

The fire consumed them.] God's anger destroyed them, as fire consumeth the branches of a tree when it is withered (see xv. 4). God's wrath is often compared to fire (see xxx. 5).

Ver. 13.] A great part of her people are carried captive, where their condition is as much different from what it was formerly, as the condition of a tree is when it is removed out a rich soil into dry and barren ground. The Jews suffered several captivities before that final one which ended in the destruction of their temple and government (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12, Jer. lii. 28, Dan. i. 3).

Ver. 14. Fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, &c.] Zedekiah's breaking his oath of fealty to the king of Babylon, hath been the occasion of the utter destruction of the royal family, and the entire ruin of the government (see xvii. 18, 19, 2 Kings xxiv. 20).

This is a lamentation, and shall be] This is matter of present lamentation, and shall be so to afterwards.

CHAPTER XX.

1 And it came to pass in the seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of the elders of Israel came to enquire of the Lord, and sat before me.

2 Then came the word of the Lord unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Are ye come to enquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be enquired of by you.

4 Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers:

5 ¶ And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, for them!" as our margin reads, or defend their cause? But the words may perhaps be more significantly translated, "Wilt thou not judge them?" i.e. Wilt thou not reprove or condemn them? Noldius observes in his Concordance, p. 238, that he, the particle of interrogation, which answers the Latin article an, is often equivalent to the negative anno, and is to be translated, Is it not? (see ver. 50 of this chapter, and xxxviii. 17). In which sense it is understood by our translators, 2 Sam. xxii. 17, and so it should be rendered, 1 Sam. ii. 27, "Did I not plainly appear to the house of thy father?" &c.

Son of man,] See ii. 1.

Ver. 5. Lifted up mine hand] When I entered in to a solemn covenant with them, pursuant to the oath which I had sworn to their fathers (see Exod. xi. 6). Lifting up the hand was a ceremony used in taking an oath (see Gen. xiv. 22), and thereupon and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God;

6 In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands.

7 Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt: then said I, will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish applied to God himself, Deut. xxxii. 40. The same expression is used ver. 6, 15, 29, 42, of this chapter. The same is meant as when taking an oath is mentioned by Homer, Ἠλιος πρὸς ἄλλης ἔστρατον. Made myself known unto them By appearing unto Moses, and showing myself present among them by the wonders I wrought for their deliverance.

I am the Lord your God: I am the God whom you ought to serve, and none else (see Exod. xx. 2, 3).

Ver. 6. Into a land that I had espied for them. I performed the office of a spy, before those that were sent to search out the land, Num. xiii. 16, and chose it out of all others to bestow it upon them. So God is said “to go before them to search out a place to pitch their tents in,” Deut. i. 33, Num. x. 33. The expressions in both places import, that every step the people took, till their settlement in the land of Canaan, was under the immediate care and conduct of providence.

Flowing with milk and honey. Judea is often called a land flowing with milk and honey, both upon account of its own fruitfulness, the seed sown frequently bringing forth a hundred-fold (see Gen. xxvii. 12, Matt. xiii. 8); and also from God’s particular blessing upon it (see Deut. xi. 12). The great numbers of inhabitants, wherein it flourished, is an evident proof of its fertility (see note on Jer. xxxiii. 22). It might justly be called the “glory of all lands,” because it was the place of God’s especial residence (see Ps. xliv. 2, Dan. xi. 16, 41, 45).

Ver. 7. Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes. Lift not up your eyes to idols (see xviii. 6). One of the chief allurements to the worship of images is, that, by way of indulgence to men’s imaginations, they exhibit a visible object of adoration. This was what the Israelites were so fond of, when they said to Aaron, “Make us gods to go before us,” Exod. xxxii. 1.

Defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt. The Israelites, while they dwelt in Egypt, learned the idolatries of that country (see xxvii. 3, 8, Lev. xxii. 7, xvii. 5, 9, Deut. xxix. 16, Josh xxiv. 14). Some persons even suppose that the golden calf was copied from the Egyptian idolatry (see Selden, De Disis Syriis, Syntagm. lib. i. cap. 4).

Ver. 8. I will pour out my fury upon them. Such a threatening as this is nowhere recorded in scripture, no more than that which follows, ver. 23 of this chapter. Without question God might have justly cut them off in Egypt, for the idolatries and other sins they had committed, and never exerted his power for their deliverance.

my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt.

9 But I wrought for my name’s sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whose sight I made myself known unto them, bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

10 ¶ Wherefore I caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness.

11 And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall live, even by them.

12 Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.

13 But the house of Israel rebelled against me, and made themselves as vile as their fathers: saying, when shall we be free? (see xxxvi. 27). To this the Syr. adds, sicut Epaphroditus.
in the wilderness: they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; and my sabbaths they greatly polluted; then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them.

14 But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out.

15 Yet also I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands;

16 Because they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: for their heart went after their idols.

17 Nevertheless mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

18 But I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols:

19 I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

20 And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God.

21 Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my sabbaths: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

22 Nevertheless I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth.

23 I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries;

24 Because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

25 Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live;

26 And I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that which we find recorded, Lev. xxvii., Deut. xxviii., xxix. 20, Acc., xxxi. 17, xxxii. 22, &c.

Ver. 25.] This some understand of the ceremonial law, as if it were given purely to be a check and restraint to that perverse people, consisting of numerous rites and observances, many of which had no intrinsic goodness in them. But I conceive the statutes here spoken of to be of a different nature from those mentioned ver. 11, because they have a quite contrary character given them: therefore I take the words to import, that God, in a just judgment for their disobedience to his own laws, gave them up to a reprobate mind, and suffered them to walk after the idolatrous and impious customs of the heathen round about them. And whereas, by obeying the laws and ordinances which he had given them, they might have lived happily (ver. 11), they became slaves to the vile and cruel practices of the heathen idolatry, so as to offer up their very children in sacrifice to idols, to the utter destruction of themselves and their posterity (ver. 26). This will appear to be the sense of the text, if we compare it with ver. 59, and with Deut. iv. 25, xxviii. 20, Jer. xvi. 13, in which texts God threatens them as a punishment for their neglect of his worship, to disperse them into the heathen countries, and thereby deprive them of an opportunity of serving him in public, and expose them to the peril of being seduced to idols. Just as David complains to Saul of the heathenism of his exile, that it did lay him open to the temptation of serving the heathen gods (1 Sam. xxvii. 19).

Ver. 26. I polluted them in their own gifts.] I suffered them to pollute themselves (so the form khipis is elsewhere used in the sense of permission;) see the note on Isa. lxiii. 17) in those very gifts which by the law they were to dedicate to my service (see ver. 21, and xvi. 20, 21).

They caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb.] In offering their first-born sons in sacrifice to Moloch; the expression of "passing through the fire" is explained in the note upon Jer. xxxiii. 35.

openeth the womb, that I might make them desolate, to the end that they might know that I am the LORD.

27 ¶ Therefore, son of man, speak unto the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they committed a trespass against me.

28 For when I had brought them into the land, for which I lifted mine hand to give it to them, then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation of their offering; there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out there their drink-offerings.

29 Then I said unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go? And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day.

30 Wherefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations?

31 For when ye offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day: and shall I be enquired of by you, O house of Israel? As I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will not be enquired of by you.

32 And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone.

33 ¶ As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you:

34 And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out.

That I might make them desolate; Their sin brought its own punishment along with it, destroying the hopes of families, and bringing them to utter desolation.

That I am the Lord; See note upon vi. 7.

Ver. 27. Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me; Or, "Moreover in this;" &c. The prophet proceeds to speak of other instances of idolatry which their fathers were guilty of after their settlement in the land of Canaan; and in which their posterity imitated them.

Then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees; Offering sacrifice upon mountains or high places was a piece of service at first performed by the Jews to the true God, before the temple was built (see I Kings iii. 2); and afterward was permitted for that purpose by godly kings, who were zealous in putting down all sorts of idolatry (see I Kings xv. 4, xxii. 43, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 17). But by degrees those places became appropriated to idolatrous worship, and upon that score are severely condemned (see vi. 13, xviii. 6, 2 Kings xxiii. 5, Isa. lvii. 5).

There they presented the provocation of their offering; This is to be understood of their weekly offerings, being distinguished from their sacrifices already mentioned. The word in the Hebrew is mincho, which might more properly be rendered break-offering, as appears by the several kinds of it reckoned up Lev. ii. and answers to the moba or fasts of the Romans. The meat-offering was particularly styled an "offering of a sweet savour." (see xvi. 10); but being offered to idols, it became abominable, and was turned into a provocation.

Ver. 29. What is the high place whereunto ye go? The word bamah signifies an altar as well as a high place (see the note on xvi. 16): so the sense seems to be, What name is this altar called by, which you frequent? meaning, it is likely, the very altar belonging to the temple; is it not called bamah at this very time? which properly denotes a high place. An evident token that idolatry is so much practised among you, that it hath occasioned the changing the very names of the places and things dedicated to God's worship. So that instead of the word mizbeach, the name which God appropriated to his own altar, the place is usually called bamah, a name taken from an idolatrous custom. Or the words may be expounded of some noted high place, which the Jews frequented to perform their idolatrous worship; and then the sense will be to this purpose: What is this high place, or bamah, which you frequent? Who bid you call it so? I named my altar mizbeach; but this place had its name from the heathen idolatry, and it still retains it.

Ver. 30. Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? This reproof would be more vehement if the words were rendered thus, "Are ye not polluted after the manner of your fathers; and do ye not commit whoredom?" &c., i.e. Do ye not walk in your fathers' sins and idolatries! notwithstanding all the warnings I have given you, and the severe instances of my displeasure against their practices, which ought to have terrified you from following their ill example. The particle of interrogation often implies a negative in it, as hath been observed upon the fourth verse of this chapter; to which sense the Vulgar Latin renders this verse, Certe in viis patrum vestrorum polluimini, &c.

Ver. 31. When ye offer your gifts; See ver. 26. Shall I be enquired of by you; See ver. 3.

Ver. 32. We find by the scripture history that the Jews had all along a fond desire of worshiping the gods of their neighbours, and could not bear that imputation of idolatry which was a peculiar way of worship exposed them to. They thought likewise by this means to live more undisturbedly among the heathens, whither they were led captive. God tells them there, that he will prevent this purpose of theirs from taking effect. And we find, from the very time of their return from the Babylonish captivity, they have been very cautious of committing idolatry, and scrupulous of making the least approaches toward it.

Ver. 33. I will no longer try to reclaim you by the gentle methods of patience and forbearance, but will govern you as masters do ill servants, by stripes and corrections, and by this means cure you of your hankering after the heathen customs and idolatries.

Ver. 34. This some understand of God's bringing his people out of the countries of the Moabites, Ammonites, and other neighboring nations, whither many of them were carried captive, or went as voluntary exiles before the general captivity, by the Chaldeans (see Jer. xii. 14, xl. 11). But I conceive it is rather to be understood of the general restoration of the Jewish nation from the several parts of the world where they are dispersed: an event often spoken of in the prophets (see ver. 28, 41), and comprehended in the following verses with several passages in the thirty-fourth, thirty-sixth, and thirty-seventh chapters of this prophecy.
35 And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face.

36 Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God.

37 And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant:

38 And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn; [See the note on ver. 33. The word they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

39 As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God: Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me: but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

40 For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I accept them, and country in the singular number may be equivalent to countries in the plural, ver. 41. The sentence alludes, as the former does, to the judgment denounced upon the rebellions Israelites, that their carcasses should fall in the wilderness, and themselves never enter into the land of Canaan: which shall be only a portion for the righteous among them. This text, among many others, favours the opinion maintained by several authors, both ancient and modern, that the Jews, upon their conversion, shall return into their own land (compare xi. 14, xxvii. 25, see the note there, xxvii. 15, xxxvi. 24).

42. [As for you.] You of the present generation.

Go ye, serve ye every one his idols.] An ironical permission, full of indignation and rebuke, sharply upbarding them for despising those many warnings God had given them: and implying, that he was now resolved to forsake them, and give them up to their spoiling delusions, as a just judgment for their avarice, and for the means of grace so long offered to them, and still rejected by them (compare Amos iv. 4, Ps. lxiii. 11, 12, Rom. i. 28, 2 Thess. ii. 11, and see the note upon ver. 25 of this chapter).

But pollute ye my name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.] Whilst you offer your gifts, and make a present of your children to idols (see ver. 30, 31), do not call yourselves any longer my servants, nor pretend to pay your devotions in my temple, and thereby bring a reproach upon my name and worship (see xxviii. 37—39).

43. [For in mine holy mountain.] In the Christian church, called God's holy mountain, in allusion to the temple at Jerusalem, built upon mount Moriah (see the notes upon xvii. 28, Isa. ii. 2). The present use of the term holy of the Jews as converted and united to the Christian church; though some learned men are willing to believe, that, upon their conversion and return to their own country, certain privileges shall belong to the earthly Jerusalem, as the metropolis of that nation (see Isa. lviii. 19, lxv. 20, Jer. iii. 17, Joel iii. 17, et c.).

There shall be no more any such separation among you, as was when the ten tribes forsook the worship of God at Jerusalem (see xxviii. 22, 25).

There will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings.] Requiring signifies the same with accepting, by a metonymy of the cause for the effect: just as seeking is sometimes used for finding (see Isa. lv. 8). In the same sense God is said not to require such instances of worship, in which he takes no delight (Isa. i. 11). Offerings signify in general every thing devoted to God's service, so as to comprehend tithes under it (Numb. xviii. 21, 26). The first-fruits were offered out of the fruits of the earth which were first ripe: of this kind was a sheaf of the corn, which was first reaped (Lev. xxiii. 10), part of the dought which was first baked

Ver. 55. Into the wilderness of the people.] The "wilderness of the people" may be equivalent to "the country where they sojourn" (ver. 38); so as to signify either the several dispersions of the Jewish nation, or rather some particular place or country through which they are to pass, in order to their return into their own land. The dissolution of a government is expressed in scripture by a wilderness state (see xix. 18). The Jews going into captivity, are said to "go out of the city, and dwell in the field" (Hic. iv. 10): and the church under persecution is "lying into the wilderness" (Rev. xii. 14). The phrase does likewise allude to the wilderness through which the Jews passed to the land of Canaan, in order to the trial of the obedient, and the destruction of the rebellious (compare ver. 30, 38, xxxviii. 8, and Hos. ii. 14).

There will I plead with you.] I will convict you of your crimes, so that you shall not be able to deny your guilt, but shall honestly acknowledge that you have deserved those punishments I have, or shall bring upon you (compare xvii. 20, xxxviii. 22, and see the note upon Jer. ii. 9).

Ver. 36.] This relates to that solemn sentence, confirmed by an oath, whereby God irreversibly doomed the rebellious Israelites to perish in the wilderness, and to enter into the land of promise (Numb. xiv. 22, &c.).

Ver. 37. I will cause you to pass under the rod.] I will take an exact account of you, as a shepherd does of his flock, and will sever between the good and the bad, between the sheep and the goats (see xxxiv. 17). The expression alludes to the custom of the shepherds who number their cattle by striking every one of them with a rod (see Lev. xxvi. 92, Jer. xxviii. 13).

I will bring you into the bond of the covenant?] I will make you sensible that I have not forgotten my promises to your fathers, though you have forgotten your obligations to me, and the engagements implied in your entering into covenant with me. The words may be rendered, "I will bring you into the discipline of the covenant;" the Hebrew verbsasan and asar being of promiscuous significance; and then the sense will be, I will revenge upon you the "quarrel of my covenant" (Lev. xxvi. 35), and assert my authority over you, by bringing you under chastisement, in order to your correction (see Amos iii. 2).

Ver. 38. I will purge out from among you the rebels.] I will separate the righteous from the wicked (see ver. 37), in order to destroy the latter, as I did the rebellious Israelites in the wilderness (Numb. xiv. 29, 30). Compare Ezek. xi. 21, xxxiv. 17, 20, Dan. xii. 1, Amos ix. 9, 10, where it is expressly said, that only those "shall be delivered, who are written in the book" of the living.

I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn;] See the note on ver. 33. The word there will I require your offerings, and the firstfruits of your oblations, with all your holy things.

41 I will accept you with your sweet savour, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen.

42 And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers.

43 And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed.

44 And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God.

45 ¶ Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

46 Son of man, set thy face toward the south, and drop thy word toward the south, and prophesy against the forest of the south field;

47 And say to the forest of the south, Hear the word of the Lord; Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree: the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces from the south to the north shall be burned therein.

48 And all flesh shall see that I the Lord have kindled it; it shall not be quenched.

49 Then said I, Ah Lord God! they say of me, Dost he not speak parables!

(Num. xv. 20), and, in general, the first of all the ripe fruits, Num. xviii. 12, 13 (compare xlv. 30 with this text). This was computed to amount to the sixtieth part of the whole produce (see Ezek. xlv. 13). The prophet here expresses the Christian worship by those religious oblations, which were proper to his own time; as the other prophets frequently described the state of the Christian church by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service (see Isa. xix. 19, lvi. 7, lx. 7, lxvi. 23). And even the primitive Christians brought oblations out of the first-fruits of their increase for the support of God's ministers and service, out of which the elements of the eucharist, and the love-feast which followed it, were provided; as appears from several testimonies of the ancient fathers, particularly of Irenæus (lib. iv. cap. 32, 34), who generally interpret those words of Christ (Matt. v. 23), "It thou bring thy gift to the altar," &c. of the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Ver. 41. I will accept you with your sweet savour.] This is mentioned in opposition to the sweet savour of their offerings to idols (ver. 25).

When I bring you out from the people.] Or, as it may better be translated, "When I have brought you out of the people," &c. (compare xi. 17, xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 24, xxxviii. 8).

I will be sanctified in you!] I will procure honour to my name by the wonderful works, whether of justice or mercy, which I will show towards you (compare xxviii. 22, 25, xxxvi. 23, xxxviii. 23, xxxix. 27).

Ver. 42. Ye shall know that I am the Lord.] An epiphonema often used in this prophet by way of conclusion of some severe denunciation (see vi. 7); but in this and the forty-fourth verse, and some other places, added after the promises of grace and favour by which God makes his power known unto the world, as well as by his judgments (see xxxvi. 23, xxxviii. 23).

When I shall bring you [or, shall have brought you] into the country.] See ver. 5.

Ver. 43. There shall ye remember your ways.] The prophets suppose that the conversion and restoration of the Jews shall be accompanied with a general repentance, and a deep remorse for their former misdoings (see xvi. 61, and the note there).

Ye shall loathe] See vi. 7, xvi. 63, xxxvi. 31.

Ver. 44.] When I have exerted my power in your deliverance, moved thereto not by any deserts of yours, but purely out of regard to my own honour, and the promises made to your fathers (see xxxvi. 22).

Ver. 46. Set thy face toward the south.] Direct thy looks and thy speech (see iv. 7, vi. 2) towards the land of Israel, and particularly towards Jerusalem, which lay southward of Chaldea (see i. 4, xxi. 2).

Drop thy word toward the south.] The gift of prophecy is compared to rain, or the dew of heaven, which makes everything fruitful (see Deut. xxxii. 2).

The forest of the south field.] By the "forest of the south field" is meant Jerusalem; the word forest being taken metaphorically in the prophets for a city; because its stately buildings resemble tall cedars standing in their several ranks (compare Jer. xxii. 14, xxii. 7, Zechar. xi. 1).

Ver. 47. I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green— and every dry tree.] Fire is often taken in a general sense for God's severe judgments (compare xix. 13, xxxii. 21, 31, xxxviii. 8), but it may here particularly denote the destruction of Jerusalem by fire; which the text saith shall devour both the green trees and the dry; i. e. the righteous as well as the wicked (see xxvi. 3). The righteous are elsewhere compared to green and flourishing trees, and the wicked to dry and withered ones, such as are only fit for the fire (see Ps. i. 3, Luke xxiii. 31, John xv. 5, 6).

All faces from the south to the north shall be burned.] The destruction shall reach from one end of the land to the other (see xxii. 2, 4).

Ver. 49. They make this an argument for disregarding what I say, that I use so many similitudes and metaphorical expressions, that they cannot discover my meaning (compare, xii. 9). Whereupon God commands him in the next chapter to speak the same thing in plain terms.
1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
2 Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy sword toward the holy places, and prophesy against the land of Israel,
3 And say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of his sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.
4 Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore shall my sword go forth out of his sheath against all flesh from the south to the north :
5 That all flesh may know that I the Lord have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath: it shall not return any more.
6 Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins; and with bitterness sigh before their eyes.
7 And it shall be, when they say unto thee, Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt answer, For the tidings: because it cometh: and every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble, and every spirit shall faint, and all knees shall be weak as water: behold, it cometh, and shall be brought to pass, saith the Lord God.
8 ¶ Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
9 Son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord; Say, A sword, a sword is sharpened, and also furnished:
10 It is sharpened to make a sore slaughter: it is furnished that it may glitter: should we then make mirth? it cometh as the noise of a whirlwind against the housetops.
11 And he hath given it to be furnished, that it may be handled: this sword is sharpened, and it is furnished, to give it into the hand of the slayer.
12 Cry and howl, son of man: for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the princes of Israel: terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people: smite therefore upon thy thigh.
13 Because it is a trial, and what if the sword concern even the rod? it shall be no more, saith the Lord God.
14 Thou therefore, son of man, prophesy, and smite thine hands together, and let the sword be very often affect them with dreadful apprehensions; especially when they concerned their own people (see Jer.xxxiii.9, Dan.viii.28, Hab.iii.10).

Before their eyes.] Before the eyes of the elders of Israel (mentioned xx.1), or of the Jewish captives, who could not but be touched with a tender sense of the calamities ready to befall their brethren in Judæa.

Ver. 7. Every heart shall melt.] Men’s hearts and strength shall fail them for fear (see vii.17).

Ver. 10. Should we then make mirth?] Men that are hardened in sin are apt to laugh at God’s judgments, and at those who give warning of them. This may be applied to those who speak peace unto the people, “when there was no peace” (xiii.10).

It cometh as the rod of my son, as every tree.] It makes no distinction between the sCEPTRE and common wood; between the branches of the royal family, descended from David and Solomon, whom I honoured with the title of being my sons [2 Sam. vii.14, Ps.lxxxix.20] and the meanest of the people (see ver. 12—27, xix.11, 14).

Ver. 11. The hand of the slayer.] Of the king of Babylon, the executioner of God’s judgments upon Judæa (ver.10).

Ver. 12. It shall be upon my people,—upon all the princes of Israel:] Both princes and people shall be involved in one common destruction. Concerning the princes of Israel, see the note upon xxiii.6.

Smile therefore upon thy thigh.] Use all the outward expressions of grief and mourning (compare ver.6,14,17, vii.11, xxxix.19).

Ver. 13. It is a trial.] As all great calamities are styled (Job xviii.19, 2 Cor. vii.15, 2); Heb. xi.36).

What if the sword concern even the rod?] The sceptre and royal family (see ver.10).

It shall be so more, saith the Lord] See ver.27.

Ver. 14. Smite thine hands together.] See Num. xxiv.10, and ver.12 of this chapter.

Let the sword be doubled the third time.] The expression may import, first, the slaughter made at the siege; then those that were slain at the taking of the city: in which number may be reckoned the sons of doubled the third time, the sword of the slain: it is the sword of the great man that are slain, which entereth into their privy chambers.

15 I have set the point of the sword against all their gates, that their heart may faint, and their ruins be multiplied: ah! it is made bright, it is wrapped up for the slaughter.

16 Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left, whithersoever thine face is set.

17 I will also smite mine hands together, and I will cause my fury to rest: I the Lord have said it.

18 ¶ The word of the Lord came unto me again, saying,

19 Also, thou son of man, appoint thee two Zedekiah, as also the chief priests and principal officers of state, who were taken and put to death immediately afterward (see ver. 14, and 2 Kings xxv. 7, 18—21), to these may be added, in the third place, those who were slain with Godliah (Jer. xlii. 2—3). But perhaps the expression, “Let the sword be doubled a third time,” may mean no more than if the prophet had said, “Let the stroke be repeated twice and thrice,” i. e. oftentimes. So that phrase is used Job xxxiii. 29, “All these things worketh God twice and thrice with man,” where our translation very fitly expresses the sense oftentimes. A form of speech much like those elsewhere used, “For three transgressions and for four,” Amos i. 3. “Give a portion to seven, yea, also to eight,” Eccles. xi. 2.

Into their privy chambers.] Whither they went to hide themselves (see 1 Kings xxii. 25).

Ver. 15. I have set the point of the sword] The word bekath, translated the point, is to be found but in this one place of the bible, and so is variously rendered by interpreters. Dr. Castell understands it of the destruction made by the sword, from the use of the word in the Ethiopic language.

It is made bright.] The Hebrew reads here and ver. 10, “It is made like lightning;” the same metaphor which we read in Virgil, Æn. iv.

...Vaginique cripit enseem Fulmineum.

“He drew his sword, which did like lightning blaze.”

It is wrapped up for the slaughter.] Or rather, “It is sharpened for the slaughter,” as the Chaldee translates mehutath, which is derived from the noun net, signifying an iron pen or stillette.

Ver. 16. Go thee one way or other.] The words are directed to the sword, implying that God hath given it a large commission to go through the land without any restraint (see xiv. 17).

On the right hand, or on the left.] Either to the south, or to the north (ver. 4). Those two quarters of the world being expressed in the Hebrew language by the right and left (see the note on xvi. 40).

Ver. 17. I will also smite mine hands together.] To express my just indignation at their provocations (see ver. 14, xxi. 13).

I will cause my fury to rest.] See note on v. 13.

Ver. 19. Appoint there two ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come:] God foreshows his prophet that the king of Babylon, coming with his army into Syria, and finding that the Ammonites had entered into a confederacy with Egypt, as well as Zedekiah, he was in doubt against which of the two people he should first make war, and committed ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come: both twain shall come forth out of one land: and choose thou a place, choose it at the head of the way of the city.

20 Appoint a way, that the sword may come to Rabbath of the Ammonites, and to Judah in Jerusalem the defended.

21 For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination: he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked in the liver.

22 At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem, to appoint captains, to open the mouth in the slaughter, to lift up the voice with shouting, to appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort.
23 And it shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight, to them that have sworn oaths: but he will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken. 24 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have made your iniquity to be remembered, in that your transgressions are discovered, so that in all your doings your sins do appear; because, I say, that ye are come to remembrance, ye shall be taken with the hand. 25 ¶ And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, 26 Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be thine: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. 27 I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him. 28 ¶ And thou, son of man, prophesy and say, To appoint captains;] Whose office it was to encourage the army to fall upon their enemies, and destroy them (see Jer. 1. 15). To cast a mount;] See Jer. xxxii. 24.

Ver. 23. 24. ¶ It shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight.¶ The king of Judah and his courtiers will despise all these preparations of war, though directed against them, as if they were grounded upon the false arts of divination; whereas it is indeed God himself that directs the march of the Chaldean army to revenge the perjury which Zedekiah and his counsellors were guilty of, in breaking that solemn oath of fealty which he made to the king of Babylon (see xxvii. 15, 15). He will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken.] Nebuchadnezzar will remember Zedekiah's breach of his oath, and revenge himself by taking the city, and making him and his subjects prisoners of war.

Ver. 24.] Because your sins cry to heaven for vengeance, ye shall fall into the hand and power of the king of Babylon.

Ver. 25. ¶ And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel.] The words are directed to Zedekiah, whom the prophet calls profane and wicked, chiefly with respect to his breaking that solemn oath uttered in the name of God, whereby he had engaged himself to be tributary to the king of Babylon (see xvii. 19). "With God is no respect of persons:" in like manner, when the prophets speak to kings in the name of God, they lay aside those titles and expressions of respect which are otherwise due to the regal dignity (see 1 Sam. xiii. 8, 1 Kings xviii. 15, 2 Kings iii. 13, 14). Whose day is come, whose iniquity shall have an end.] The day of whose calamity is near at hand, when the Lord will make his people's iniquity shall receive their just doom (compare vii. 6, xxx. 3, xxv. 9).

Ver. 26. Remove the diadem, and take off the crown.] The words crown and diadem, are equivalent, and put to signify the kingly ornaments of dignity (see Isa. xlv. 3). Indeed the crown is elsewhere taken for the emblem of sovereignty, and the diadem or mitre for the proper ornament of the priesthood, and so the Chaldee paraphrase expresses the sense of the verse in these words, "Remove the mitre from Seraijah the chief priest, and I will take away the crown from Zedekiah the king." But I conceive this sense does not so well agree with the design of the place, where the judgment threatened is spoken only of Zedekiah.

Ver. 27. ¶ I will overturn—it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is.] After that Zedekiah is deprived of his regal authority, there shall be no more kings of that family till Christ come, the king so often foretold and promised, who in due time shall "reign upon the throne of his father David," and "of whose kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke i. 32, 33). After the captivity, some of the priests of the Assanomaran race did assume the style and title of kings: but they not being of the tribe of Judah, could have no just right to that honor. Until he come whose right it is.] In this sense the LXX. understand the word Shiloh, Gen. xlix. 10, translating it there, 'It shall be called Shiloh, a name which is equivalent to Shiloh, whose name is, as the learned P. Fagius hath observed in his notes upon the Targum of that text.

Ver. 28. ¶ Thus saith the Lord God concerning the Ammonites.] They insulted over the calamities of their brethren the Jews, for which they are often reproved very severely by the prophets, and threatened with the like judgments (see xxvi. 2, 6, Zeph. ii. 8, 10).

Ver. 29. ¶ Whiles they divide a lie unto thee.] While the scorners and pretenders to divination foretell nothing but happy events (see xiii. 23, xxii. 29). To bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain.] To add thee to the number of those who are slain in Judah (ver. 14, 15), and make thy condition like theirs.

Of the wicked, whose day is come.] See ver. 25.

Ver. 30. ¶ Shall I cause it to return?] See ver. 4, 5. I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created.] Thou shalt not be carried captive, but shalt be destroyed in thine own land (see ver. 32).

Ver. 31. I will blow] Compare xxii. 20—22.

Ver. 32. ¶ No more remembered.] See xxv. 10—
CHAPTER XXII.

1 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 2 Now, thou son of man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city? yea, thou shalt shew her all her abominations.

3 Then say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; The city sheddeth blood in the midst of it, that her time may come, and maketh idols against herself to defile herself. 4 Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed; and hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made; and thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years: therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries.

5 Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous and much vexed.

6 Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their power to shed blood. 7 In thee have they set light by father and mother: in the midst of thee have they dealt by oppression with the stranger: in thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow.

8 Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my sabbaths. 9 In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood: and in thee they eat upon the mountains: in the midst of thee they commit lewdness.

10 In thee have they discovered their fathers nakedness: in thee have they humbled her that was set apart for pollution.

11 And one hath committed abomination with his neighbour's wife; and another hath lewdly defiled his daughter-in-law; and another in thee hath humbled his sister, his father's daughter.

12 In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood; thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God.

13 ¶ Behold, therefore I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee.

14 Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?

15 And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee.

16 And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself in the sight of the heathen, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

17 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 18 Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross: all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are even the dross of silver.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Be—

Took their mother-in-law to wife, which St. Paul calls "such fornication as is not named among the gentiles." 1 Cor. v. 1.

Ver. 12. Taken gifts to shed blood; The judges have taken bribes, not only to pervert justice, but even to take away the lives of the innocent.

Ver. 13. I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain I have expressed mine indignation at these unjust practices (see xxii. 14, 17).

Ver. 14. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?

Ver. 15. And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee.

Ver. 16. I the Lord have spoken it.

Ver. 17. And will consume thy filthiness out of thee. I will purge thee "in the furnace of afflictions," and take that method to consume thy dross, and put an end to thy idolatrous practices (compare ver. 18, 19, &c. xxiii. 27).

Ver. 18. Instead of being mine inheritance, and under my peculiar care and protection, thou shalt be cast out among the heathen, and there eat the fruit of thine own ways, and receive the just reward of thy wickedness. The margin of our bibles reads, "Thou shalt be profaned in thyself," &c. Which I think expresses the sense much better; taking the verb translated in the same sense, wherein it is used vii. 24, and xxv. 3. of this prophecy; i.e. Thou shalt no longer enjoy the privileges of a city called by my name, and set apart for my residence, but shalt be laid open as common ground, to be profaned by infidels (compare Isa. xlvi. 6).

Ver. 18–20.] Their filthiness may fitly be compared to the mixture of dross and baser metals with cause ye are all become dross, behold, therefore I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.

20. As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you.

21. Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.

22. As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you.

23. ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

24. Son of man, say unto her, Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.

25. There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey; they have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things; they have made her many widows in the midst thereof.

26. Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.

27. Her princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain.

28. And her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar, seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken.

29. The people of the land have used oppression, and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully.

30. And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none.

31. Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: Their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, said the Lord God.
CHAPTER XXIII.

1 The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,
2 Son of man, there were two women, the daughters of one mother:
3 And they committed whoredoms in Egypt; they committed whoredoms in their youth; there were their breasts pressed, and there they bruised the teats of their virginity.
4 And the names of them were Aholah the elder, and Aholibah her sister: and they were mine, and they bare sons and daughters. Thus were there names; Samaria is Aholah, and Jerusalem Aholibah.
5 And Aholah played the harlot when she was mine; and she doted on her lovers, on the Assyrians her neighbours.

6 Which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers, all of them desirable young men, horsemen riding upon horses.

7 Thus she committed her whoredoms with them, with all them that were the chosen men of Assyria, and with all on whom she doted: with all their idols she defiled herself.

8 Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt; for in her youth they lay with her, and they bruised the breasts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her.

9 Wherefore I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the Assyrians, upon whom she doted.

10 These discovered her nakedness: they took her sons and her daughters, and slew her with the sword; and she became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

CHAP. XXIII.

ARGUMENT.—The idolatries of Samaria and Jerusalem are here represented under the metaphor of the lewd practices of two common harlots: for which crimes God denounces severe judgments against them both. The same metaphor is here made use of, which was pursued at large in the sixteenth chapter (see the argument there).

Ver. 2.] Countries are commonly represented as mothers of their people, and the inhabitants as their children: so the "daughters of Syria" signify the inhabitants of that country (xvi. 57). Thus Samaria and Jerusalem are described in this chapter as sisters, the offspring of the same land or country (compare xvi. 16, Jer. iii. 7, 8, 10).

Ver. 3.] They committed whoredoms in Egypt; they learned to commit idolatry there (see xx. 7, 8). It has already been observed, that idolatry is often represented as spiritual adultery (see xvi. 15, &c. and see the note upon xx. 9).

They committed whoredoms in their youth.] The time when the Israelites were in Egypt, or were lately departed out of it, is called their youth in the prophets, because that was the time when God first owned them for his people (see ver. 8, 19, xvi. 8, 22, 60, Jer. ii. 2, Hos. ii. 15).

There were their breasts pressed.] "There they served idols, and there they corrupted their ways," as the Chaldee paraphrase expresses the sense. The scripture commonly calls idolatrous churches and nations by the name of harlots; and, in like manner, honours those who preserve their allegiance to God pure and undefiled, with the title of chaste wives, or virgins (see 2 Cor. xi. 2, Rev. xiv. 4, xlix. 7, xxii. 2).

Ver. 4.] The word Aholah signifies, Her tent or tabernacle: Aholibah doth, My tent or tabernacle is this. These two different appellations imply, that Samaria had indeed a tabernacle or place for public worship, but of her own devising, viz. the cities of Dan and Beth-el, where the golden calves were set up; whereas God's tabernacle first, and afterward his temple, was placed in Jerusalem. He placed his name there, or chose it for the place of his peculiar residence (1 Kings viii. 29). Why Aholah is called the elder sister, see the note on xvi. 46.

Ver. 5. Aholah played the harlot when she was mine.] After she had lived in covenant with me, and attended upon my service and worship all the time of the judges, and of David and Solomon, she fell off from my service, and was the first that established idolatry by a law, and consented to Jeremiah's wicked device of setting up the golden calves. She doted on her lovers; i. e. Her foreign allies, whose idolatries she was fond of, and hoped by that means to procure their friendship and assistance (see the note on xvi. 53, 37).

On the Assyrians her neighbours.] The king of Assyria was a very potent prince, and thereupon his alliance was courted both by the kings of Israel and Judah (see 2 Kings xv. 29, xvi. 7, and ver. 12 of this chapter).

Ver. 6. Which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers.] As women are apt to fall in love with comely young men well mounted and richly clothed; so the Israelites were enamoured with the state and bravery of the Assyrians, and thought them secure if they could but procure their alliance and friendship; and in order to it embraced their idolatries.

Horsemen riding upon horses.] Horses were scarce in Judea, which made the Jews apply themselves to the neighbouring countries for troops of horse in any hostile invasion (see Isa. xxx. 16, xxxii. 2, xxxvi. 8).

Ver. 7. Thus she committed her whoredoms.] "She defiled herself with her idols," as the sense is more plainly expressed at the end of the verse.

Ver. 8. Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt; She added new idolatries to those she had formerly committed (see ver. 3).

Ver. 9.] God made these very Assyrians the executioners of his judgments upon the ten tribes: many of them being carried away captive by Pul, king of Assyria (1 Chron. v. 25, 26), afterward by Tiglath-pileser (2 Kings xv. 29), and at length the whole country was subdued and depopulated by Shalmaneser (2 Kings xvi. 6). The kings of Babylon were likewise styled kings of Assyria (see 2 Kings xxii. 20, 2 Chron. xxxii. 11). Lovers mean the same with allies, those whose friendship and assistance the Jews coveted, by complying with them in their idolatries (see xvi. 57).

Ver. 10. They took her sons and her daughters.] They carried her and her children away captive, stripped and bare (compare ver. 29, and xvi. 57, 58). Slew her with the sword.] Compare ver. 47, and xvi. 40. Those that were not led captive were slain in the field of battle, or in the siege of Samaria, 2 Kings xvi. 5.

She became famous among women.] The Hebrew
CHAPTER XXIII.

11 And when her sister Abihail saw this, she was more corrupt in her inordinate love than she, and in her whoredoms more than her sister in her whoredoms.

12 She doted upon the Assyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed most gorgeously, horsemen riding upon horses, all of them desirable young men.

13 Then I saw that she was defiled; that they took both one way.

14 And that she increased her whoredoms; for when she saw men penetrated upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans penetrated with vermilion.

15 Girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity.

16 And as soon as she saw them with her eyes, she doted upon them, and sent messengers unto them into Chaldea.

17 And the Babylonians came to her into the roads, "She became a name among women:" as she had been formerly "renowned among the heathen for her beauty" (xvi. 14); so now she was everywhere talked of as a remarkable instance of God's vengeance, and set forth for an example to other cities and nations, to deter them from the like abominations (see ver. 48, and xvi. 41).

For they had executed judgment! See ver. 24.

Ver. 11.] Jerusalem was so far from taking warning by the judgments inflicted upon Samaria, that she advanced to greater degrees of idolatry (see ver. 14, xvi. 47, 51, Jer. iii. 8, and the notes upon those places).

Ver. 12.] Compare ver. 1. The king of Judah.

Ahaz, entered into a confederacy with the king of Assyria, hoping for relief from his power and the bravery of his army, and serving his idols to that end (see 2 Kings xvi. 7, 11, 2 Chron. xviii. 16, 23).

Ver. 13. They took both one way.] Both of them were like common harlots, impudent in their idolatries, and irreclaimable (compare Jer. iii. 13).

Ver. 14.] These were probably the pictures of those defiled heroes whom the Chaldeans worshiped in Babylon; such were Bel, Neba, and Merodach, mentioned Isa. xlv. 1, Jer. l. 2.

Ver. 15. Girded with girdles upon their loins.] A girdle was a mark of dignity, and worn as such by princes and men in authority (see 1 Sam. xviii. 4, Isa. xxii. 21).

In dyed attire upon their heads.] The Chaldeans, and afterward the Persians, wore a sort of turbans upon their heads, with different degrees of ornaments, according to their different qualities.

Ver. 16.] These images pleased her so much, that she sent to Babylon to learn the manner how their idols were to be worshipped (see ver. 40, 41, and xvi. 17). This probably relates to those times when a correspondence was maintained between the cities of Babylon and Jerusalem, after that Nebuchadnezzar had conquered Judæa, and made it a tributary kingdom, in the beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim (see 2 Kings xxiv. 1, Dan. i. 1, 2, and the notes upon Jer. xxii. 19).

Ver. 17. The Babylonians came to her into the bed of love.] The metaphor of representing idolatry by the inordinate lust of adultery is still carried on.

Her mind was alienated from them.] She quickly bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom, and she was polluted with them, and her mind was alienated from them.

18 So she discovered her whoredoms, and discovered her nakedness: then my mind was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her sister.

19 Yet she multiplied her whoredoms, in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt.

20 For she doted upon their paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

21 Thus thou calledst to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy tents by the Egyptians for the paps of thy youth.

22 ¶ Therefore, O Abihail, thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them against thee on every side; 23 The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa, and all the Assyrians grew weary of these too, as low women are of their former gallants, and look out for new ones. She broke her league and covenant with them, as St. Jerome very well expresses the sense; meaning that covenant which Jehoiakim made with Nebuchadnezzar, to be his tributary (compare ver. 16, 22, 29); and was afterward renewed by Zedekiah (see xvii. 15).

Ver. 18. So she discovered her whoredoms.] The sense might better be expressed, "After she had discovered," &c. the sense being still continued with the foregoing verse.

Then my mind was alienated from her.] As she, by her idolatries, had broken all the bonds of duty and allegiance whereby she was engaged to me, a sin often compared to a wife's disloyalty towards her husband: so I withdrew my love and affection from her, and resolved to give her a bill of divorce, as the prophet Jeremy expresses it, and not own her any more as mine, as I had cast off her sister Samaria (compare Jer. iii. 8, vi. 8, Hos. ii. 2).

Ver. 19.] Though she was fond of new idolatries, she did not forget her old ones, even those which she had learned in Egypt (see ver. 3).

Ver. 20. So she doted upon their paramours.] Upon the idols of Egypt, and the impure rites which accompany their idolatrous worship (see the notes upon xvi. 26). This may relate to the time when Zedekiah entered into a new confederacy with Egypt (see ver. 21, and xvii. 15): which made the people fond of admitting the Egyptian idolatries.

Ver. 22. I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated.] I will execute my judgments upon thee by those very Babylonians, whose alliance and idolatries thou hast been so fond of (see ver. 9): but since hast broken the league thou madest with them, contracting a new one with Egypt, and thereby hast provoked them to revenge thy perniciousness (see ver. 17).

Ver. 23. The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, &c.] The inhabitants of the several provinces of the Babylonish monarchy. Pekod is mentioned as a province of Babylon, Jer. l. 21. St. Jerome upon the place understands these three words, Pekod, Shoa, and Koa, in an appellative sense, to denote so many titles or degrees of honour, as much as to say, governors, princes, and great men. In which sense the two former words, Pekod (or Pekud) rians with them: all of them desirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses.

24 And they shall come against thee with chariots, wagons, and wheels, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler and shield and helmet round about: and I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee according to their judgments.

25 And I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee: they shall take away thy nose and thine ears; and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and thy residue shall be devoured by the fire.

26 They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy fair jewels.

27 Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee, and thy whoredom brought from the land of Egypt: so that thou shalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more.

28 For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hastatest, into the hand of them from whom thy mind is alienated:

and Shoa, are confessedly taken in scripture; and Koa is supposed to be derived from the verb kaangs, which signifies printing marks in the flesh (Lev. xix. 29), and it was the custom of great men to distinguish themselves from their inferiors by such marks on their skins (see Lea, Scripture, De Legib. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 14, sect. 1).

All of them desirable young men,] as their riches and bravery made them appear amiable in your eyes, when you first courted their alliance (ver. 12), so they shall appear in the same splendid equipage, when they come to invade your country, and to besiege your city; but then their gallant appearance shall strike a terror and consternation into you.

Ver. 24. They shall come against thee with chariots, &c.] A like description of warlike preparations may be seen xxvi. 10, Jer. xviii. 3, Nah. iii. 2, 3. Chariots are mentioned both by sacred and profane writers, as of principal use in the ancient way of fighting. I will set judgment before them, &c.] I will deliver thee into their power, as the ministers of my justice, who shall make thy punishments bear a correspondence with thy guilt (see ver. 45).

Ver. 25. I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee:] They shall punish thee with that fury, with which a man in the rage of jealousy shall treat a wife that hath been unfaithful to him (compare xvi. 35).

They shall take away thy nose, &c.] As husbands, in that case, would not let women defor med, whose beauty had been too pleasing to strangers; so shall the Chaldeans deface all the glorious and ornaments of Jerusalem; and after they have slain and carried captive its inhabitants, shall set the city on fire, and reduce it to a heap of ashes (compare xvi. 41).

Ver. 26.] See ibid. ver. 37, 38.

Ver. 27. Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee.] These severe judgments shall effectually deter thee from idolatry, and make thee abhor the least approaches towards it (see xxii. 15). Accordingly we find, that, after the captivity, the Jews never returned to their former idolatrous practices.

Thy whoredom brought from—Egypt:] Where 29 And they shall deal with thee hatefuly, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare: and the nakedness of thy whoredoms shall be discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

30 I will do these things unto thee, because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and because thou art polluted with their idols.

31 Thou hast walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give her cup into thine hand.

32 Thus saith the Lord God; Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large: thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in decision; it contained much.

33 Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria.

34 Thou shalt even drink it and suck it out, and thou shalt shew the sherdsof, and pluck off thine own breasts: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

35 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back, therefore bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

36 ¶ The Lord said moreover unto me; Son of man, wilt thou judge Aholah and Aholibah? yea, declare unto them their abominations;

37 That they have committed adultery, and blood is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery, and have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them.

38 Moreover this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same way, and have profaned my sabbaths.

39 For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house.

40 And furthermore, that ye have sent for men to come from far, unto whom a messenger was sent; and, lo, they came: for whom thou didst wash thyself, paintedst thy eyes, and deckedst thyself with ornaments,

Ver. 37.] They have committed adultery with their idols, as it follows, and have slain their children in sacrifice to them (see xxi. 21).

Ver. 38. They have defiled my sanctuary, &c.] By coming within the precincts of it, polluted with idolatry (see the following verse, and xvii. 8).

Ver. 39.] The words may be expounded of their setting up idols in the very temple, and worshipping them there (see 2 Kings xxi. 4).

Ver. 40. Ye have sent for men to come from far, &c.] See ver. 16. Their courting the alliances of foreign nations, by complying with their idolatries, is set forth under the representation of the several arts which harlots use to recommend themselves to new lovers (compare Isa. livii. 9, Hos. vii. 13).

For whom thou didst wash thyself.] A custom generally practised by women before the time of their nuptials (see Ruth iii. 3).

Paintedst thy eyes.] Or, "thy face," as the phrase is translated 2 Kings ix. 30 (see note upon Jer. iv. 30).

Ver. 41. And satest upon a stately bed, and a table prepared before it.] The expressions denote their sitting down with idolaters and partaking of their sacrifices: the words altar and table are used promiscuously in the prophets (see Mal. i. 7), because all sacrifices were feasts made of offerings dedicated to God's service; so that he was properly the enter-tainer, and those that did partake of the sacrifices were his guests, that did eat at his table, in token of their being in covenant and friendship with him.

What was consumed upon the altar was God's mess or portion, and is therefore called the "bread of God" (see xlvii. 7, Lev. xxi. 6), and the "food of the Lord" (Lev. iii. 11). The remainder of the sacrifices his guests were entertained with, either by themselves, as in peace-offerings, or else by their priests, as in sin-offerings (see Mr. Mede's discourse of the Christian sacrifice, chap. 7). The Jews, as well as the Romans, lying upon beds or couches at their meals (see Is. xxi. 7). So did other eastern nations (see Esther i. 6).

Thou hast set mine incense.] See xvi. 18.

Ver. 42. A voice of a multitude being at ease was heard at these meetings: all sorts of expressions of joy were heard at these meetings: such as music and dancing, which usually accompanied idolatrous festivals (see Exod. xxxix. 6, 18, 19).

Sabeans] The Sabeans. The word is translated drunkards in the margin: the word saba in the Hebrew, signifies to drink to excess, from whence comes the participle sebaim, drunkards, which comes very near in sound to the word Sabaim in the text. Stra-bo, in his tenth book of Geography, p. 471, speaking of the rites of Bacchus, mentions the word saba as used among others in the Bacchanal processions: which he supposes may have been derived, as well as several of their musical instruments, from the Barbarians, by which the Greeks denote the eastern countries. To the same purpose we find in Hesychius, Σαβαῖος, Σεβάζμενος. The prophet persist in comparing the idolatries of the Jews to the practices of lewd women, who prostitute themselves to all comers, even those of the meanest condition. Such were the Sabeans, that came from the wilderness: i.e. from Arabia, called the Desert, where dwelt the posterity of Seba, mentioned Gen. x. 7. These were probably some of those idolatrous people dwelling in the wilderness, whom Jeremiah mentions, ix. 30, who polled the corners of their heads in honour of some idol whom they worshipped (see the note upon that place).

Which the Sabeans put upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads.] 1. u! Upon the hands and heads of these two lewd women, Aholah and Aholibah (see ver. 45). Bracelets and crowns were ornaments proper to brides (see xvi. 11, 12); and were likewise presented by lovers to their mistresses. Crowns were likewise worn at public festivals, and times of rejoicing (see 1 Sam. xxxv. 10): whereupon the Hebrew phrase is translated here and elsewhere by the LXX. σάβα φυλακά, "a crown of rejoicing;" an expression probably taken from hence by St. Paul, I Thess. ii. 19.

Ver. 43.] The words import, that it was time for her to leave off her ill courses, that age and experience might sufficiently convince her of the follies of them; but withal they imply, that age and time seldom correct ill habits. The word her is taken collectively in this and the following verse, as so to include both the sisters. So the singular number is used, Ps. xii. 7: "Thou shalt preserve him from this generation for ever," where our interpreters rightly observe in the margin, that the word him signifies every one of them.

Ver. 44.] Both Samaria and Jerusalem defiled themselves with the idolatries of all the heathen round about them (compare ver. 7, 17).

Ver. 45. The righteous men, they shall judge them.] By righteous or just men some understand the Babylonians, who, though a wicked and idolatrous people, were the executioners of God's justice upon a nation.
46 For thus saith the Lord God: I will bring up a company upon them, and will give them to be removed and spoiled.

47 And the company shall stone them with stones, and dispatch them with their swords; they shall slay their sons and their daughters, and burn up their houses with fire.

that had sinned against a clearer light and greater convictions. So Nebuchadnezzar and other heathen princes are called God's servants, as being instruments of his providence. But the expression may in a more proper sense be understood of the prophets, as foretold by the judgments God would inflict upon Samaria and Jerusalem; such as Hosea, Amos, Jeremiah, &c. The prophets are said to execute those judgments which they foretell: so Ezekiel saith of himself, that "he was sent to destroy the city" (xliii. 3); i.e. to prophesy its destruction. To the same sense we read, Hos. vi. 5, "I have hewed them by my prophets, I have slain them by the words of my mouth" (see notes upon Isa. vi. 10, Jer. i. 10, v. 14).

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Again in the ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, write thee the name of the day, even of this same day: the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day.

3 And utter a parable unto the rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Set on a pot, set it on, and also pour water into it:

4 Gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with the choice bones.

CHAP. XXIV.

Argument.—By the figure of a boiling pot is shown the destruction of Jerusalem and its inhabitants: and by Ezekiel’s being forbidden to mourn for his wife is signified, that the calamities of the Jews shall be so astonishing, as to be beyond all expressions of sorrow.

Ver. 1. In the ninth year.] Of Jehoiachin’s captivity (see i. 2).

Ver. 2.] See Jer. lii. 4, 2 Kings xxv. 1.

Ver. 3. Utter a parable unto the rebellious house.] Add this emblem or parable concerning a boiling pot to the rest thou hast delivered to them: though they seem resolved not to give heed to what thou deliverest, either in plain words or figurative expressions (compare xviii. 12, xx. 40).

Set on a pot, &c.] The destruction of Jerusalem is represented by a boiling pot or caldron, both by Jeremiah, 1. 13, and by Ezekiel, xi. 3.

Ver. 4. Even every good piece.] Meaning the chief of the citizens, who should be destroyed together with the city (see xi. 3).

Ver. 5. Take the choice of the flock.] This belongs in sense to the former verse; so the LXX. translate the words, joining them with the foregoing sentence; "With the choice bones taken out of the flock."

Burn also the bones under it.] The bones of those who have been unjustly slain in the midst of the city (see xi. 7); whose blood cries for vengeance against it, and kindles God’s anger like fire.

Make it boil well.] To denote the city’s being set on fire (see ver. 10, 11).

Ver. 6. Woe to the bloody city.] See xi. 6, xvi. 30, xxiii. 3, xxiii. 37.

Whose scum is therein.] Whose filthiness is not purged out of it (see ver. 13).

Bring it out piece by piece.] In a presumptuous manner, and with a high hand she shed it, as the Chaldee paraphrase expresses the sense: she was impudent and beneficed in her cruelties: she did not seek to cover or excuse them.

She poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust.] The words allude to the command of the law, Lev. xvii. 13, that they cover the blood of any beast or other living creature which was slain with dust; which precept was not only intended to prevent their eating of blood, but also to give men a sort of horror or aversion to the sight of bloodshed.

5 Take the choice of the flock, and burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them see the bones of it therein.

6 ¶ Wherefore thus saith the Lord God: Woe to the bloody city, to the pot whose scum is therein, and whose scum is not gone out of it! bring it out piece by piece; let no lot fall upon it.

7 For her blood is in the midst of her: she set it upon the top of a rock; she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;

8 That it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance; I have set her blood upon the top of a rock, that it should not be covered.

48 Thus will I cause lewdness to cease out of the land, that all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness.

49 And they shall recompense your lewdness upon you, and ye shall bear the sins of your idols; and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.
CHAPTER XXIV.

9 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the bloody city! I will even make the pile for fire great.
10 Heap on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh, and spice it well, and let the bones be burned.
11 Then set it empty upon the coals thereof, that the brass of it may be hot, and may burn, and that the filthiness of it may be molten in it, that the scum of it may be consumed.
12 She hath warried herself with lies, and her great scum went not forth out of her: her scum shall be in the fire.
13 In thy filthiness is lewdness: because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.
14 I the Lord have spoken it; it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord God.
15 ¶ Also the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

Ver. 5. I have set her blood upon the top of a rock.] Her punishment shall be as notorious in the sight of the world as her sin was.

Ver. 9, 10.] The inhabitants shall be the materials prepared by their sins to be consumed like fuel in the fire.

Ver. 10. Spic[e] it well.] The expression imports that the Chaldeans shall be as much set upon destroying the city and inhabitants, as hungry people are greedy of devouring meat well spiced and dressed.

Let the bones be burned.] The words denote an utter destruction, that the fire shall be so fierce as to consume the very bones as well as the flesh put into the caldron.

Ver. 11.] After an entire riddance of the inhabitants, the city itself shall be set on fire, and the place and its wickedness be consumed together in the flames.

Ver. 12. She hath warried herself with lies.] The word te'wim, never met with but in this place, is commonly derived from awen, which signifies trouble or vanity, and is a word frequently applied to idols, as particularly when Beth-el is stiled Beth-aven, upon the account of the golden calf there set up, Hos. iv. 15. For these reasons I understand the expression here, "She hath warried herself with lies," of the people's multiplying their idolatries; idols being elsewhere called lies, and seeking relief sometimes from one idol, sometimes from another, but all in vain, (see xvi. 29, 30, xxiii. 16, 19, 40).

Her great scum went not forth out of her.] All the admonitions I gave her by my prophets, availed nothing to the purging her from her idolatries and other wickedness; so that now the fire must purge and consume her and her sins.

Ver. 13. In thy filthiness is lewdness.] Thou hast shown thyself shameless and incorrigible in thine idolatries (compare xxiii. 29, 35).

Because I have purged thee, &c.] I did what was requisite on my part towards thy conversion, but thou refusedst to comply with those frequent calls and exhortations I gave thee (see note on Jer. xxxi. 18); and therefore my spirit shall not strive with thee any longer, but I will proceed to execute my judgments upon thee.

16 Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke: yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down.
17 Forbear to cry, make no mourning for the dead, bind the tire of thine head upon thee, and put on thy shoes upon thy feet, and cover not thy lips, and eat not the bread of men.
18 So I spoke unto the people in the morning: and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded.
19 ¶ And the people said unto me, Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us, that thou doest so?
20 Then I answered them, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 21 Speak unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will profane my sanctuary, the excellency of your strength, the desire of your eyes, and that which your soul pitieth; and your sons and your daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword.

22 And ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your lips, nor eat the bread of men.
23 And your tares shall be upon your heads,

Till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.] See note v. 13, viii. 18.

Ver. 14.] See xxiii. 24.

Ver. 16. The desire of thine eyes] Thy wife, the object of thy love and thy affections (see ver. 15.)

Ver. 17. Bind the tire of thine head upon thee.] Use the ordinary dress upon thine head; whereas in the time of mourning it was customary sometimes to shave the head (see Lev. xiii. 45, Jer. vii. 29, xvi. 6); sometimes to cast dust upon it (see Josh. vii. 6, 1 Sam. iv. 19). The priests were particularly forbidden to uncover their heads in the time of mourning (see Lev. x. 6).

Put on thy shoes] Going barefoot was another expression of sorrow (see 2 Sam. xv. 30).

Cover not thy lips.] Covering the lips or face was another token of mourning (see Lev. xiii. 45, Mic. iii. 7, 2 Sam. xv. 30, Jer. xiv. 4).

Eat not the bread of men.] Partake not of the mourning feasts that relations use to prepare for the funerals of their friends (see the note on Jer. xvi. 5, 7). Such were the iviilera and parentalia among the Greeks and Romans.

Ver. 18.] My wife died in the evening, and the next morning I declared what commands God had laid upon me, not to make any outward show or sign of mourning upon that occasion (compare xxiii. 22).

The evening was the beginning of the day according to the Jews' reckoning (see Gen. 1, 5, Lev. xxii. 32).

Ver. 19. Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us.] They enquire by way of derision and contempt what these signs mean (compare xii. 9, xvii. 12, xx. 49).

Ver. 21. I will profane my sanctuary.] I will deliver my temple into the hands of the heathen, and they shall profane and destroy it (see vii. 19, 20). That temple wherein you placed your glory, and thought my residence there your greatest protection (compare ver. 25, and see Ps. lxxviii. 61, xxvi. 6, cv. 4, cxxii. 8).

The desire of your eyes.] "The beauty of holiness," as the temple is often called, whose destruction will affect you with a most tender compassion.

Your sons and your daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword.] Whom ye left behind you in and your shoes upon your feet: ye shall not mourn nor weep; but ye shall pine away for your iniquities, and mourn one toward another.

24 Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign: according to all that he hath done shall ye do: and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

25 Also, thou son of man, shall it not be in the day when I take from them their strength, the joy of their glory, the desire of their eyes, the city, when ye were carried captives: or who were left by the famine and pestilence (see v. 12, xxi. 47).

Ver. 23. Ye shall not mourn nor weep: These terrible judgments shall strike you with astonishment, and such a grief as is too great to be expressed by words or actions: according to the verse of the poet, "Cure leves loquentur, ingentes stupent."

Ye shall pine away for your iniquities: Ye shall waste away by a lingering grief, and by a silent lamentation over each other’s calamities (see iv. 2, 17, Lev. xxvi. 39).

Ver. 24. Ezekiel is unto you a sign: His actions foreshow you what shall be your condition (compare iv. 3, xii. 6). The holy writers in several places speak of themselves in the third person (see Exod. vi. 26, 1 Sam. xii. 11, Matt. ix. 9). So that this is an argument of very little force, when it is urged against Moses being the author of the Pentateuch.

When this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord: Comparing the prediction with the event, will convince the most obstinate, that the immediate hand of God is in the judgments which are come upon you (see vi. 7, and compare John xiii. 19, xiv. 29, xvi. 4).

Ver. 25.] When I shall take from them all that is dear and valuable to them; their temple, an emblem of my special residence among them, and protection over them, whose beauty and magnificence was their peculiar glory, and the most grateful object of their sight; together with their sons and daughters, whereon they placed their affection (see ver. 24).

Ver. 26.] See xxxiii. 21, 22.

Ver. 27. In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him which is escaped: From this time to the time when the news comes of the city’s being taken, thou shalt not prophesy any more to thine own people; but then will I give thee a new commission to speak (see xxxiii. 22), and that not by signs, as thou dost at present, but with freedom and plainness; the event so exactly answering thy predictions, shall give a new authority to what thou speakest (see iii. 20, xxix. 21, and compare Eph. vi. 19).

Thou shalt be a sign unto them: They shall then be convinced, by experience, that thou didst fore-show by thy actions and behaviour all that should befall them. And this will likewise convince them of my foreknowledge and providence.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against the Ammonites, and prophesy against them;

3 And say unto the Ammonites. Hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God; Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the

CHAP. XXV.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains God’s judgments against the Ammonites, Edomites, and Philistines, for their hatred against the Jews, and insulting over them in the time of their distress. Archbishop Usher (in his annals ad A. M. 3419) and Josephus (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 11) place these events five years after the destruction of Jerusalem.

Ver. 2.] See note on vi. 2.

Ver. 3.] The Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites, though related in blood to the Jews, yet bore a constant hatred towards them, which they took all opportunities to show, when the Jews were under any distress, and particularly at the time of their general captivity, and the destruction of their city and temple. For this they are often reproved by the prophets, and threatened with the like or severer judgments, and particularly the Ammonites (see the note on xxi. 25).

Ver. 4. I will deliver thee to the men of the east. land of Israel, when it was desolate; and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity:

4 Behold, therefore I will deliver thee to the men of the east for a possession, and they shall set their palaces in thee, and make their dwellings in thee: they shall eat thy fruit, and they shall drink thy milk.

By the “men of the east” must be meant the Chaldeans (see xxi. 19, 20). Ammon is likewise reckoned among these countries, which God foretold by Jeremy should be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon (see Jer. xxxv. 21). By the east country is commonly meant Arabia in scripture, as hath been observed in the notes upon Isa. xi. 14, but Syria and Chaldea, and the countries beyond it, are likewise called the east (see Gen. xi. 2, Numb. xxiii. 7, Isa. ii. 6). Chaldea, indeed, lay northward of Judæa and the adjacent countries (see l. 4); but within lying with a point towards the east, the Chaldeans and their confederates may not improperly be reckoned among the men of the east; just as Cyrus is sometimes described as coming from the east, and sometimes from the north (Isa. xli. 25), with respect to his forces, that consisted both of Medes that lay northward, and Persians that lay eastward of Babylon.

Shall drink thy milk.] Milk was the chief sustenance of those people, whose riches consisted chiefly in their stocks of cattle. Hence the Scytlans are called...
5 And I will make Rabbah a stable for camels, and the Ammonites a couching-place for flocks: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

6 For thus saith the Lord Go\(\text{p}\); Because thou hast clapped thine hands, and stamped with the feet, and rejoiced in heart with all thy despite against the land of Israel;

7 Behold, therefore I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and will deliver thee for a spoil to the heathen; and I will cut thee off from the people, and I will cause thee to perish out of the countries: I will destroy thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

8 ¶ Thus saith the Lord Go\(\text{p}\): Because that Moab and Seir do say, Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen;

9 Therefore, behold, I will open the side of Moab from the cities, from his cities which are on his frontiers, the glory of the country, Beth-jeshimoth, Balul-leon, and Kiriataim,

10 Unto the men of the east with the Ammonites, and will give them in possession, that Galactophagi, by Homer, Iliss. iii. and Galactopota by other writers. The LXX. render the sense very well, "Shall drink or swallow thy fitness:" the word heleb signifying not only milk, but likewise the fattest or choicest parts of any flesh or fruits. So it is used Gen. xiv. 18, "Ye shall eat the fat of the land?" and Ps. lxxxvi. 16, where our translation reads, "The finest of the wheat," it is in the Hebrew, "The fat of the wheat." Ver. 9. Because thou hast clapped thine hands, and stamped with the feet.] Gestures that sometimes signify grief and indignation (see vi. 11): but are likewise used to express our joy and satisfaction (compare Job xxvii. 23, Jer. xlviii. 27, Lam. ii. 15).

With all thy despite] See ver. 3.

Ver. 8. Moab and Seir do say.] Seir is the same with destroying cities, and from hence to possess themselves of the best of his country. Some translate the middle of the verse, "from the cities, even from Ar, his [city] upon his frontiers." Ar was the coast or "border of Moab" (Deut. ii. 12).

The glory of the country.] The best part of all the country of Moab; the Hebrew word is teb\(\text{b}\), frequently spoken of Judea, as being in many respects the glory of all lands (see xxv. 4).

Balul-leon.] See Num. xxxii. 38, Josh. xiii. 20, Jer. xlvii. 25. Balul-leon is called Beth-leon, in that place of Jeremy, and more fully Beth-balul-leon, Josh. xiii. 17, i. e. the house or "temple of the idol Moen," by which Bishop Cumberland understands Menys or Osiris, the great deity of the Egyptians; in the first book and the second chapter of his treatise concerning Sanchioniathan's Phoenician History.

Ver. 10. Unto the men of the east] See ver. 4.

The Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations.] May make no figure among their neighbours, their strength being entirely broken.

Ver. 12.] The Idumeans, being the posterity of Esaun, bare an ancient grudge against the Jews, upon the account of their ancestor's losing his right of primogeniture, and the subduing of Edom by David afterward (2 Sam. viii. 14). Upon both these accounts they took hold of all opportunities of venting their spite towards the Jewish nation, particularly see 2 Chron. xxvi.17. For this their behaviour, they were in former times reproved by Amos, i. 11, and afterward by Obadiah, ver. 10, and by Ezekiel in this place, and xxxv. 5. The ill will that they showed towards them at the time of their captivity, was very remarkable, as appears by those pathetic words of Ps. cxxxvii. 7, "Remember the children of Edom, O Lord, in the day of Jerusalem; how they said, Down with it, down with it, even to the ground."

Ver. 13. Stretch out mine hand upon Edom.] See xxxv. 17, Jer. xlix. 17, 18, Zechar. ix. 9, Mal. i. 3. I will make it desolate from Teman.] Teman is a noted place in Idumea (see Jer. xlix. 7, Amos i. 12); to which Dedan is joined, ver. 8 (compare Is. xxxii. 13, 14). The Dedanites were originally Arabs, the posterity of Dedan, Abraham's grandson; but they seem afterward to have been incorporated with the Idumeans (see the note upon that place of Jeremiah).

Ver. 14.] The Jews themselves, whom the Edomites have so often insulted, shall be instruments of my vengeance upon Edom, and shall require the wrongs they have received by subduing Idumea, which they did under the conduct of Judas Maccabaeus (see 1 Macc. v. 3, 2 Macc. x. 10, 17; compare Jer. xlix. 2). And afterward the high-priest Hieronimus made an entire conquest of this country (see Dr. Prideaux, par. ii. p. 367).

Ver. 15. The Philistines have dealt by revenge.] The Philistines, being borderers upon the Jews, were their ancient enemies from the very time of the judges downward, more particularly in the time of Ahaz (see 2 Chron. xxvii. 18).

Ver. 16. I will stretch out mine hand upon the 16 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines, and I will cut off the Chaldehims, and destroy the remnant of the sea-coast. [Philistines.] I will subdue them by Nebuchadnezzar (see ver. xxv. 20, xlvii. 1). [I will cut off the Chaldehims] The Chaldehims, or Cherechims, are the same with the Philistines, or a tribe of that people (see 1 Sam.xxx.14, Zeph.ii.5, and the notes upon Jer. xlvii. 4).

17 And I will execute great vengeance upon them with furious rebukes; and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall lay my vengeance upon them. [Destroy the remnant of the sea-coasts.] The same who are called the remnant of the Philistines, "Amos i. 8, "the remnant of Ashdod," Jer. xxv. 20, and "the remnant of the country of Caphtor," Jer. xlvii. 4 (see notes upon these last two places).

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, because that Tyrus hath said against Jerusalem, Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people: she is turned unto me; I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste:

3 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus, and will cause many nations to come up against thee, as the sea causeth his waves to come up.

CHAP. XXVI.

Argument.—This and the following chapter, with part of the twenty-eighth, foretell the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, who took it after a thirteen years' siege (as Josephus relates out of Philostratus, and the Phoenicians' Annals: see his Antiq. lib. x. cap. 11, ad fin. lib. i. contr. Appion. p. 1046) and in the thirty-second year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, according to the Babylonish account (see the note on xxix. 17). By reason of which hard service, "every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled," as our prophet speaks, xxix. 15. The same calamity is foretold by Isaiah, chap. xxiii. This siege forced the inhabitants to remove their effects into an island half a mile distant from the shore, where they built another city, called New Tyre. The learned Dr. Prideaux, in his Connex. of Script. Hist. par. i. p. 91, 484, hath observed, that this prophecy of Ezekiel, as well as the former one of Isaiah, was fulfilled in the destruction of old Tyre, a city that stood upon the continent, and which Nebuchadnezzar utterly destroyed; though he grants some expressions in both prophecies are applicable only to the last siege of that city, when it was conquered by Alexander the Great.

Ver. 1. In the eleventh year, in the first day of the month.) The particular month not being named, some supply the word fifth (as the word fourth is supplied, 2 Kings xxv. 3), and understand it of the month following the taking of Jerusalem, at whose desolation Tyre rejoiced (ver. 2). But, as Archbishop Usher observes, ad A. M. 3416, the fifth month belongs to the twelfth year of Jehoiachin's captivity. So we may more probably understand the expression of the first month of the year, as "the year of Evil-merodach's reign" (2 Kings xxv. 27), is rightly understood by our interpreters to be the year "when he began to reign;" so "the tenth day of the month" is necessarily to be understood of the first month, xl. 1 of this prophecy. And the inhabitants of Tyre may very well be supposed to insult over Jerusalem at any part of the time of her siege, which they saw must inevitably end in the taking of that city.

Ver. 2. She is broken that was the gates of the people.) There was a great confidence of people to Jerusalem from all parts at the solemn feasts of the year, as well of Jews as proselytes (see John xiii. 20).

She is turned unto me.) Her wealth is come into my stores (compare Isa. ix. 5).

I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste.) Tyre was a noted market for all sorts of trade: so when Jerusalem was taken and sacked, the spoil of the city was carried thither for sale, and, probably, several of the inhabitants being made captives, were sold there for slaves, a traffic the Tyrians dealt in very much (xxvii. 13). This interpretation may be confirmed by comparing it with Joel iii. 4—6, where the prophet upbraids the Tyrians for making merchandise both of the persons and substance of the Jews, when they came into their hands. To the same purpose we read, Mace. iii. 41, that when "Tyre came with great forces to subdue the Jews, the merchants of the country took silver and gold, and came into the camp, to buy the children of Israel for slaves."

Ver. 3. The Chaldeans and their confederates (compare Jer. xxxiv. 1, li. 27), whom the prophet compares to the waves of the sea, which come up with an irresistible force (see Jer. li. 42). Armies are elsewhere represented by an inundation, that carries all before it (see Isa. viii. 7, Dan. ix. 20, xi. 22).

Ver. 4. 5.) I will make an entire riddance of her buildings, so that not so much as any dust or rubbish of them shall be left (compare ver. 12), and nothing shall be seen but the rocks upon the sea-shore, in the place where the city formerly stood. Nebuchadnezzar quite demolished old Tyre, and the stones and rubbish of it were afterward made use of by Alexander to carry on a causeway from the continent to the island where New Tyre stood, by which means he took that (see Dr. Prideaux, ubi supra). This latter city is since so decayed, that there are no remains of it left, but a few huts for fishermen to hang out their nets a drying upon the rocks, as it is related by travellers that have been upon the place (see Maudrell's Tra-
CHAPTER XXVI.

7 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring upon Tyre Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, a king of kings, from the north, with horses, and with chariots, and with horsemen, and companies, and much people.

8 He shall slay with the sword thy daughters in the field: and he shall make a fort against thee, and cast a mount against thee, and lift up the buckler against thee.

9 And he shall set engines of war against thy walls, and with his axes he shall break down thy towers.

10 By reason of the abundance of his horses their dust shall cover thee: thy walls shall shake at the noise of the horsemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots, when he shall enter into thy gates, as men enter into a city wherein is made a breach.

11 With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets: he shall slay the people by the sword, and thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground.

12 And they shall make a spoil of thy riches, and make a prey of thy merchandise: and they shall break down thy walls, and destroy thy pleasant houses: and they shall lay thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water.

13 And I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease; and the sound of thy harps shall be no more heard.

14 And I will make thee like the top of a rock; thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon; thou shalt be built no more: for I the Lord have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God to Tyre; Shall not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee?

16 Then all the princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes, and put off their broidered garments: they shall clothe themselves with trembling; they shall sit upon the ground, and shall tremble at every moment, and be astonished at thee.

17 And they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and say to thee, How art thou destroyed, that was inhabited of seafaring men, the renowned city, which wast strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants, which cause their terror to be on all that haunt it!

18 Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall; yea, the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.

19 For thus saith the Lord God; When I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited; when I shall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee;

20 When I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time, and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old, with them that go into the prince and rich merchants of Sidon, Carthage, and other maritime cities, that maintained a trade with Tyre, and got great wealth by that means; they "whose merchants are princes." as Isaiah speaks of the merchants of Tyre, xxiii. 8 (compare ver. 2, 6, 10 of that chapter); they shall express a deep sense and concern for her misfortunes (compare xxvii. 82, xxxii. 10. Rev. xviii. 11, 17, 19.

Shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes.] Such was the behaviour of the king of Nineveh at the time of his solemn humiliation (Jonah iii. 6).

They shall clothe themselves with trembling.] They shall put on the habit of mourners, and sit upon the ashes, and clothe them with ashes, and sit upon the ashes to console the condition (see Job li. 13, compare vii. 17.

Ver. 17.] Tyre is called "the strength of the sea," Isa. xxiii. 4, being strong at sea, both by its situation and the strength of its naval forces, upon which account it was formidable to all that had any trading upon the sea.

Ver. 18. Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall.] See ver. 15. St. Jerome translates it, "Now shall the ships tremble," &c. i.e. all seafaring men (compare xxvii. 29, 30, Isa. xxiii. 14.

The isles—shall be troubled at thy departure.] When thy people shall be carried captive (see Isa. xxiii. 27.

Ver. 19.] Thy walls being demolished, the sea shall come up and cover thy ruins (see ver. 12), or else the prophet compares the destruction of Tyre to a shipwreck (see xxiii. 20.

Ver. 20. When I shall bring thee down, &c.] When thou shalt be "thrust down into hell," as our Saviour speaks concerning Capernaum, Luke x. 15, and brought to utter desolation, like cities which have been long ago buried in ruins and oblivion (compare xxxii. 18, 24.

And I will set glory in the land of the living;]
down to the pit, that thou be not inhabited; and I shall set glory in the land of the living; 21 I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord God.

The nearest resemblance of heaven that could be found upon earth: yet, even then, as it follows— Ver. 21. I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more.] Thou shalt be left in utter ruins and desolation, and a terrible example of my vengeance. The word balaithoth, which our interpreters translate terrors, is generally joined with words importing utter destruction, and so the LXX. understood it here, and in other places of this prophecy (see xxvii. 36, xxviii. 15, and compare Ps. lxxii. 19, Isa. xvii. 14).

Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again.] An expression denoting utter destruction (see Ps. xxxvii. 36, and compare ver. 6, 11).

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, 2 Now, thou son of man, take up a lamentation for Tyrus; 3 And say unto Tyrus, O thou that art situate at the entry of the sea, which art a merchant of the people for many isles, Thus saith the Lord God; O Tyrus, thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty. 4 Thy borders are in the midst of the seas, thy builders have perfected thy beauty.

The borders of the Tyrians were the islands of Chittim, where the Tyrians were extensively engaged in the coasting trade, in the commerce of the seas, and in the shipping of all the vessels of war and commerce of the Tyrians. The Tyrians were called Chittim; they were the Tyrians, and these Tyrians were the Tyrians of Chittim, and the Tyrians of Chittim are the Tyrians of Syria. The Tyrians were called Chittim; they were the Tyrians, and these Tyrians were the Tyrians of Chittim.

5 They have made all thy ships boards of fir trees of Senir: they have taken cedars from Lebanon to make masts for thee. 6 Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; the company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of Chittim. 7 Fine linen with broidered work from Egypt was that which thou spreadest forth to be thy sail; blue and purple from the isles of Elishah was that which covered thee.

This sense the Chaldee follows. The isles of Chittim. The isles of Chittim are the countries lying upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea (see Jer. ii. 10).

Ver. 5.] The decks of thy ships were made of fir, fetched from mount Hermon, called anciently Shenir (see Deut. iii. 9). Ver. 6. The Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory. Ver. 7. Fine linen with broidered work from Egypt, fetched from the coast of the Mediterranean sea (see Jer. ii. 10).

The decks of thy ships were made of fir, fetched from mount Hermon, called anciently Shenir (see Deut. iii. 9). Fine linen with broidered work from Egypt, fetched from the coast of the Mediterranean sea (see Jer. ii. 10). Fine linen was one of the principal commodities of Egypt (see 1 Kings xii. 26, Prov. xvi. 16, Isa. xix. 8); and was a habit used by persons of the best quality (see Gen. xlii. 42, Esther viii. 15); which shows to what an excess of vanity the Tyrians were come, to use such costly manufactures for sails to their ships.

Suetonius, in his life of Caligula, cap. 37, reckons this among several instances of that emperor's extravagance, that he furnished his pleasure-boats with costly sails, and other expensive ornaments. Blue and purple from the isles of Elishah (see Exod. xxv. 4, Jer. x. 9). The common clothing of the Tyrians was of these kinds, which were brought from the islands of the Egean sea, particularly Co's, famed 8 The inhabitants of Zidon and Arvad were thy mariners: thy wise men, O Tyrus, that were in thee, were thy pilots.

9 The ancients of Gebal and the wise men thereof were in thee thy calkers: all the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.

10 They of Persia and of Lud and of Phut were in thine army, thy men of war: they hanged the shield and helmet in thee; they set forth thy rampartedness.

11 The men of Arvad with thine army were upon thy walls round about, and the Gammadims were in thy towers: they hanged their shields for purple among heathen authors. Elishah denotes the countries upon the coast of Greece; a part of Peloponnesus retains the name of Ellis among the Greek writers.

Ver. 8.] Thou madest use of the people of other cities and countries, to undergo the service office of being mariners or rowers, whilst thy own citizens pretended to the skill of steering thy ships, and professed the art of being pilots. Zidon was a famous seaport town, the mother of Tyre (see the note on Isa. xxvii. 12); and Arvad, the same with Arpad or Arphad (2 Kings xvii. 33, Isa. x. 9, Jer. xlix. 29), called Arada by the Greek and Latin authors, was an ancient and town in the neighbourhood of Tyre.

Ver. 9. The ancients of Gebal—thy calkers! Thou employedst the ancients of Gebal for calling thy ships, as being remarkably skillful in that trade; Gebal was a province of Phoenicia near Tyre (see Ps. lxxviii. 8, 1 Kings v. 15). The LXX. interpreters suppose it the same with the city Byblos, with whom agree Eusebius and St. Jerome, De Loc. Hebræis. So the Septuagint renders the word in the forementioned text, 1 Kings v. 18. Dr. Grabe, indeed, does there, by way of emendation, read τῷ ἐν τῇ θεσείᾳ, in the text, and place δάκαρ, the reading of the Alexandrian MS. in the margin; but that learned person did not then remember, that that very word was translated in the same manner in this place of Ezekiel.

10. They of Pirasia and of Lud and of Phut] Thy citizens being all given to trading, thou madest use of foreign soldiers for thine army when thy city was besieged. Lud and Phut are two nations elsewhere mentioned together (see xxx. 5, Jer. xlv. 9). Our interpreters understand by them in these two places, the people of Libya and Lydia. But Phut and Labim being mentioned as distinct people, Nah. iii. 9, Phut probably signifies some part of Africa near Egypt; and Lud, or Ludim, the Abyssinians. These people, though Africans, are joined with the Persians, xxxviii. 5.

They hanged the shield and helmet in thee.] In thy garrisons, which they kept in time of peace.

Ver. 11. The men of Arvad (see ver. 8) with thine army were upon thy walls] They defended thy walls when they were besieged by the king of Babylon's army (see note upon xxxvi. 8, 9).

The Gammadim were in thy towers.] It is very uncertain what people are here meant by this name. Our learned Mr. Fuller supposes them people of Phoenicia (see his Miscellaneis, lib. vi. cap. 3). Ludolphus conjectures they were Africans, in his Comment. in Histor. Ethiop. lib. i. cap. 22. The Chaldee paraphrase takes them to be Cappadocians. The Vulgar Latin renders the word Pygmites; but if we should grant there were such a people as Ludolphus takes a great deal of pains to prove there were, yet they would not be fit to make use of for soldiers.—

Gammadims: Dr. Spence thinks they were images of the tutelar gods, like the lares among the Romans; and were not above a cubit in length (see his additions to the books De Legib. Hebræis).

They have made thy beauty perfect.] See ver. 3.

Ver. 12. Tarshish was thy merchant] Tarshish probably signifies a part of Spain, called by the Greek and Latin authors Tartessus, situate not far from the place where Cadiz now stands; famous of old for Hercules's pillars, being the utmost boundary of the ancient navigation. It comes from thence to signify any merchant who traded in the Mediterranean sea (see the note upon Isa. ii. 16). The commodities here mentioned, which these merchants traded in, being the product of Spain, confirms this exposition.

Ver. 13. Javan, Tubal, and Meshech.] By Javan is to be understood Greece, in which sense Alexander is styled king of Javan or Greece (Dan. viii. 21). So the LXX. translate it here, and in that place of Daniel. And all Greece, except Peloponnesus, was anciently called Jonia. Tubal, and Meshech, are names usually joined together in scripture. Bochart supposes them to be the same with those people afterward called Moschi and Tibareni, whose habitation was near the Euxine sea.

They traded the persons of men] in buying and selling slaves in the markets. The Hebraic reads, "In the land of men;" the word nechoseth, soul, sometimes signifies a slave (compare Numb. xxxv. 5, 1 Chron. v. 21, Rev. xviii. 13). In which sense some understand the word, Gen. xit. 15.

Vessels of brass in thy market.] Critics observe that the word nechoseth, commonly translated brass, does likewise signify steel; and so it is rendered by our interpreters, Ps. xviii. 34, "a beam of steel is broken by my arms." And we may very well understand it so here; for the Chaldeans, a people so called from their steel manufactures, lived near Pontus, in the neighbourhood of the Moschi and Tibareni; for which reasons steel is called the northern iron," Jer. xv. 12.

Ver. 14.] By Togarmah, Bochart understands Cappadocia: the LXX. read the word ὀμησαῖς (Gen. xiv. 14), which comes near in sound to Trogmos, or Trocaea, a part of Cappadocia.

Ver. 15. The men of Dedan were thy merchants.] The same learned person distinguisheth this Dedan from that mentioned ver. 20. This latter was of Abraham's posterity, whereas Dedan here spoken of was derived from that Dedan mentioned Gen. x. 7, the son of Raamah, or R hegma. The posterity of this Dedan is probably placed near the Persian gulf, where there was a city called afterward R hegma; and so is fitly joined with many islands or countries lying upon the sea-coast, which are usu-

Vol. III.—73
16 Syria was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of the wares of thy making: they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple, and brodered work, and fine linen, and coral, and agate.

17 Judah, and the land of Israel, they were thy merchants; they traded in thy market wheat of Minnith, and Pannag, and honey, and oil, and balm.

18 Damascus was thy merchant in the multitude of the wares of thy making, for the multitude of all riches; in the wine of Helbon, and white wool.

19 Dan also and Javan going to and fro usually called islands, in the Hebrew phrase (see the note on Isa. xi. 11). Many isles were the merchandise of thine hands.) Those countries exported thy manufactures, "the wares of thy making," as they are called in the following verse; and, by way of return for them, brought thee in ivory, and other rarities from India, whither they traded. They brought these, for a present, says our translation, or rather by way of price or return for the commodities exported. The noun exscheor commonly signifies a present or gift, but it is near in sound to the word nescar, that signifies a price or reward; and words of such near affinity are often used in a promissive sense (see the note upon Jer. xxiii. 39, xx. 37, xxix. 7, and xxxvi. 15 of this prophecy).

Ver. 16.] The Syrians imported into thy haven precious stones, and all sorts of curious apparel, in lieu of which they carried abroad the wares of thy own making.

Ver. 17. They traded in thy market wheat of Minnith, &c.] Those were the commodities which the Jews imported to Tyre, chiefly the necessary provisions for food; the Tyrians having none of their own growth, the Jews supplied them therewith from their own, or the neighbouring countries (see 1 Kings v. 9, 11, Ezra iii. 7, Acts xii. 39).

Wheat of Minnith.] This was a place belonging to the Ammonites (see Judg. xi. 33), noted for excellent wheat, great quantities of which the Jews brought to Tyre.

Pannag.] A word never elsewhere to be found; supposed by some to be the name of a place; by others more probably taken for some rich ointment or gum.

Balz.] For which Gilead was famous (see Jer. vii. 22). There were balsam-trees about Jericho too, which Josephus describes, Antiqu. lib. iv. cap. 6, and De Bello Jud. lib. v. cap. 4, though some doubt whether that balsam were the same with the balm of Gilead.

Ver. 18. Helbon.] Helbon is supposed the same part of Syria which is called Chalybontis by Ptolemy. The same place which is now called Aleppo. White wood.] The word issochar is never met with but here, and Judg. v. 10, where our translation reads "white assces." Bochart explains the word here, a simply name of a bright purple colour, from the Arabic use of it. So purpureus in Latin is used for a bright colour in Virgil, Æn. i. 4 "Lumeneque juventa purpureum." The LXX. and Chaldee render it wool from Milletus, a place famous for that commodity. The wool was dyed purple at Tyre, as appears from Virgil, Georg. lib. iii.

Ver. 19.] Dan also and Javan going to and fro] ped in thy fairs: bright iron, cassia, and calamus, were in thy market.

20 Dedan was thy merchant in precious clothes for chariots.

21 Arabia, and all the princes of Kedar, they occupied with thee in lambs, and rams, and goats: in these were their riches.

22 The merchants of Sheba and Raamah, they were thy merchants: they occupied in thy fairs with chief of all spices, and with all precious stones, and gold.

23 Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, the merchants of Sheba. Asshur, and Chilmad, were thy merchants.

By Dan St. Jerome understands the town which was afterward called Cessaren Phillipp, belonging to the tribe of Dan, which was near Tyre; whereas Javan, which likewise traded with Tyre, lay farther off. This is the sense of the words, if we follow the common translation; but Bochart thinks the words might be better translated, "Dan also and Javan coming from Uzal occupied in thy fairs," to distinguish this Javan, which he supposes to be in the southern part of Arabia, from Greece, more commonly called by that name (see ver. 13). In conformity to this interpretation, the copies of the LXX. which we have now, read from Asel; though St. Jerome informs us, that the former part of the verse was wanting in the Septuagint, and supplied from Thoedotius's translation.

Bright iron [i. e. steel]—and calamus.] Bochart confirms the foregoing interpretation from hence, that those of Javan are said to deal in aromatic gums, which are known not to grow in Greece, but in Arabia.

Ver. 21.] This is probably to be understood of the posterity of that Dedan, who was Abraham's grandson (see ver. 15, and xxv. 13).

Ver. 21. Arabia, and all the princes of Kedar, they occupied with thee] The Hebrew reads, "They were the merchants of thy hands;" i. e. they took off thy manufactures (see ver. 15) in exchange for cattle, in which their substance did chiefly consist (see Isa. ix. 7). Kedar is a country in Arabia, often mentioned in scripture, which received its name from Kedar, Ishmael's son, who settled there (Gen. xxv. 13).

Ver. 22. The merchants of Sheba and Raamah.] These were people of Arabia Felix, dwelling near the Persian gulf (see ver. 15, and xxii. 42). They traded in the rich products of their own country, which were spices, precious stones, and gold (compare 1 Kings x. 2, 11, Ps. lxxii. 15, Isa. ix. 6). Bochart places Pobit, so famous for gold, in Arabic Felix (see his Plaeg. lib. xi. cap. 27).

Ver. 23. Haran, and Canneh, and Eden.] Haran is the place where Abraham dwelt when he came out from Ur of the Chaldees (Gen. xi. 31); called Charax by the Romans, and noted for the defeat of Crassus. Canneh some suppose to be the same place that is called Calneh, Amos vi. 2, 14, Hosea, i. 3, 9, a city near Ephraim, which received its name from Ctesiphon, a noted city situate upon the river Tigris. Eden is joined with Haran, 2 Kings xix. 12, as it is here. Huetius supposes Paradise was called the garden of Eden, from the name of the country where it was placed, which was where the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates meet (see his tract De Situ Paradisi, cap. 2, n. 7).

The merchants of Sheba.] There were two Shebas, as there were two Dedans; one descended from 24 These wore thy merchants in all sorts of things, in blue clothes, and broidered work, and in chests of rich apparel, bound with cords, and made of cedar, among thy merchandise.

25 The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee in thy market; and thou wast replenished, and made very glorious in the midst of the seas.

26 Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters; the east wind hath broken thee in the midst of the seas.

27 Thy riches, and thy fairs, thy merchandise, thy mariners, and thy pilots, thyAskers, and the occupiers of thy merchandise, and all thy men of war, that are in thee, and in all thy company which is in the midst of thee, shall fall into the midst of the seas in the day of thy ruin.

28 The suburbs shall shake at the sound of the cry of thy pilots.

29 And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships, they shall stand upon the land;

30 And shall cause their voice to be heard against thee, and shall cry bitterly, and shall cast Raamah (Gen. x. 7), the other from Jockshan, Abraham's son (Gen. xxv. 3). As the twenty-second verse is explained of the former, so the latter may be understood here: they were both habitants of Arabia. Chilmed.] Both the Chaldee and LXX. explain this by Carmania.

Ver. 24. In chests of rich apparel.] The word in the original translated chests, is ginge, which is elsewhere rendered treasures (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, Esther iii. 9). From which word the Latin gaza is derived.

Bound with cords, and made of cedar.] Carefully packed up in chests of cedar, to give these clothes a fine scent, and preserve them from putrefaction.

Ver. 25. The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee in thy market.] Ships of Tarshish signify sometimes in scripture any trading or merchant ships (see the note on Isa. ii. 16). And here I take in this general sense: the prophet, having already reckoned up the principal countries which traded with Tyre, now adds, in comprehensive terms, that all merchant-adventurers sung or spake great things of her riches, or as the word sharoth may be rendered, "They ruled or governed in thy markets."

In the midst of the seas.] See ver. 4.

Ver. 26. Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters.] The prophet compares the condition of Tyre besieged by the enemy, to a ship overset by the winds, and just ready to sink under water (see the like comparison, Isa. xxxiii. 23). Great numbers are sometimes signified by "great waters" (see Ps. xviii. 16, cxliv. 7. Jer. lii. 42).

The east wind hath broken thee.] As the violence of the east wind occasions many shipwrecks in the sea (see Ps. lxxviii. 7); so the Chaldee army, compared elsewhere to an east wind, shall ruin thy strength and glory, and leave thee like a wreck cast upon the shore (compare xvii. 10, xix. 12).
CHAPTER XXVIII.

1. The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying.
2. Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord God; Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God:
3. Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee:
4. With thine wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures:
5. By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thine riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches:
6. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God;
7. Behold, therefore I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations; and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.
8. They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas.
9. Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man, and no God, in the hand of him that slayeth thee.
10. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Thou art set to be the terrible of the heathen, the vanity of Israel.

CHAP. XXVIII.

ARGUMENT.—In this chapter the prophet denounces God’s judgments against the king of Tyre, for his pride and insolence: he likewise foretells the destruction of Zidon, and that the judgments threatened upon those and other heathen countries, Ammon, Moab, &c. shall in the end turn to the benefit of God’s people.

Ver. 2. The prince of Tyrus.] Whose name was Ithobalus, according to the Phoenician annals, extracts from which may be seen in Josephus, lib. i. Contra. Appollon, p. 1046. I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas.] Some princes have been so extravagant as to affect divine honours: this seems to have been the temper of this vain man. The words are an insolent boast of self-sufficiency, as if he had said, I fear none, nor stand in need of any: I am seated in a place of impregnable strength: the seas surround me, that no enemy can assault me. So they represent the excessive pride and carnal security of this prince, who trusted in his own strength, and forgot his dependence upon God. The same crime was in like manner punished in the king of Egypt (xxxi. 3), and afterward in Nebuchadnezzar himself (Dan. iv. 30, 31). So Babylon is represented as ascribing self-sufficiency to herself, and saying in her heart, I am, and there is none else beside me (Isa, xlvi. 10.) In the midst of the seas. See xxvii. 4.

Ver. 3. Yet thou art a man, and not God.] A weak, mortal man: an unequal match for the king of Babylon’s forces (see ver. 9, and Isa. xxxii. 3). Ver. 3.] The fame of Daniel’s wisdom was quickly spread over Chaldea, upon his being advanced to several posts of honour and dignity by Nebuchadnezzer (see Dan. ii. 45). Queen Nitocris, who was Belshazzar’s mother, gives Daniel a great character for his wisdom and other accomplishments (Dan. vii. 11, 12). So here the prophet, in an ironical manner, upbraids the vain boasts which the prince of Tyre made of his wisdom, and the policy of those about him, as if it exceeded the endowments of Daniel, so famous, though a young man, for his skill in the several parts of knowledge, and the arts of government. The Phoenicians, of whom the Tyrians were a colony (see the note on Isa. xxviii. 12), valued themselves for their wisdom and ingenuity, as being the inventors of navigation, of letters, and sciences (compare Zech. iv. 2). Ver. 4.] They skill in navigation and trade has increased thy wealth (see ver. 5, and Zech. ix. 3). Ver. 10. Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised.] The Babylonians, who by their conquests have made themselves terrible to all the countries round about them (see xxx. 11, 12). They shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom.] They shall deface and destroy everything which thou valuest as ornamental, or useful (compare ver. 12). Ver. 9.] Mortality will certainly convince thee of thy folly in pretending to divinity (compare xxxii. 19). So Plutarch tells us of Alexander, that he vainly affected to be thought Jupiter’s son, and next in honour to Bacchus and Hercules; yet when he saw the blood run out of a wound he had received, which at the same time gave him much pain, he confessed that was not such blood as Homer said issued from the immortal gods (ibid. ii. De Alexandri Fortuna). Ver. 10. Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised.] Thou shalt die by such a remarkable judgment as God usually inflicts upon notorious offenders: thou shalt come to the same end as befalls the other enemies of God and of his truth (compare xxxii. 18, xxxii. 19, 21, 29, 24). Circumcision being the rite which distinguished God’s people from the heathen, uncircumcised is equivalent in sense to wicked or profane. So the Chaldee paraphrase renders it here, “Thou shalt die the death of the wicked,” and to the same purpose again, xxxii. 18. In the same sense we are to understand that expression, Lev. xxvi. 41, “If their uncircumcised heart be humbled,” and those of Jeremiah, vi. 10, “Their ear is uncircumcised:” and ix. 26, “The horse of Israel is uncircumcised in their heart.” Ver. 12. Take up a lamentation.] See xxvi. 32. Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty.] In thine own opinion thou art the

and the jasper, the sapphire, the emerald, and the rets and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that thou wast created.

14 Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so: thou wast upon the holy perfect pattern of wisdom, and all other excellences (compare ver. 7): the expression is taken from vessels and other repositories, which, when they are full, used to be sealed up in order to the preserving what is contained in them (see Deut. xxxii. 4.

Job xiv. 17). The LXX. and Vulgar Latin render the former part of the verse, "Thou art the seal of likeness;" i.e. Thou art the image of God, or an exact impression taken from that great copy. The following verse shows that the expression alludes to Adam, when he was first created, and came pure even from the hands of his Maker. And then the following words in this verse are to be translated, " Full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty:" an exact description of the state of innocence. The word tacitum is translated pattern, xliii. 10, of this prophesy, and so it signifies, Exod. xxx. 32, to which sense the Targum there explains it: but our transliteration renders it composition.

Ver. 19. Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God: As thy situation was pleasant, so thou wast plentifully supplied with everything that could contribute to make thy life pleasant and happy. A state of paradise does in common speech denote a condition every way complete and happy (see Isa.
il. 3). But this expression, as well as the whole context, alludes to the complete happiness which Adam enjoyed in Paradise before his apostasy and fearful fall.

every precious stone was thy covering:) Like a great prince or monarch, thy crown was adorned with the choicest jewels, and thou wast arrayed with royal robes, enriched with gold and precious stones of all sorts. The stone probably alludes to the precious stones which were placed in the high-priest's breast-plate, as the next verse alludes to the cherubims over the mercy-seat. Accordingly the LXX.
enlarge the number of the stones here mentioned from nine to twelve, and place them in the same order in which they are ranked, Exod. xxviii. 17, &c.

Thy taborets and—pipes was prepared in thee [or, for thee] in the day that thou wast created.) The highest expressions of joy, such as are the sounding of all sorts of musical instruments, ushered thee into the world, according to the usual practice at the birth of great princes: and ever since thou hast been brought up in the choicest delicacies, which a royal palace or a luxurious city could furnish (see xxvi. 13, Isa. xiv. 11).

Ver. 14. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth;) Anointing is the ceremony wherewith kings are inaugurated; so the prophet compares the prince of Tyre to a ruling or principal cherub, one of the chief of the angelical order, who attend upon God in heaven, and are represented by the cherubims in the temple overshadowing the mercy-seat. To this spirit St. Jerome translates it, "The extended cherub that covereth:" i.e. whose wings were stretched out to cover the mercy-seat (see Exod. xxv. 20); reading memuchak instead of minshawk. The words allude to the high advancement of Satan in heaven before his fall, where he was placed in one of the highest orders of angels, such as were nearest in attending upon the divine majesty. So Isaiah's description of the fall of the king of Babylon does plainly allude to the downfall of Satan out of heaven (ISA. xvi. 12, &c.).

Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God.) The temple is often styled God's holy mountain (see xx.
14); and now, after having the place of God's peculiar residence, is now and then put for heaven itself (see Ps. xi. 4, xviii. 6, Jonah ii. 7). So the phrase denotes, that this prince might be compared to the cherubims overshadowing the mercy-seat, or the angels who stood before the throne of God, typified by the cherubims in the temple: the expression still alluding to the high station of Satan before his apostasy.

Thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire:) Thy dominion was in the upper region of the sky, where hillstones and lightening are formed; or, as Tertullian paraphrases the expression (lib. ii. contr. Marcion. cap. 10). Inter gemmanes siderum radios demoratus: "Thou hast thy abode among glittering stars," as the angels are sometimes called (see Job. xxxviii. 7, Isa. xiv. 15).

The words may allude to the sparkling stones of Aaron's breast-plate: so they agree with what goes before, ver. 13, 14. See Dr. Moro's Synopsis Prophet. book ii. ch. 10.

Ver. 15. An exact description of the angelical purity in which the devil was created, and in which he continued, till, being lifted up with pride, he fell from his first estate.

Ver. 16. Thy skill in trading hath degenerated into violence, cheating, and extortion: for which I will degrade thee from the honour of being nearly related to me, as my minister, and the executor of my commands, by which thou didst resemble the dignity of the angelic order (see ver. 14).

Ver. 17. Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty;) Compare ver. 9, 13, xxxi. 10. So the devil was "lifted up with pride" upon the account of his perfections (see 1 Tim. iii. 6).

Thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brilliance;) That height of glory and authority to which I had advanced thee has perverted thy judgment, and made thee abuse thy wisdom to craft and deciet (see ver. 16). I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee;) I will make thee a spectacle to other princes; expose thee to a miserable object before their eyes;
that thou mayest be an example to them to deter them from the like practices (see xvi. 41. xxii. 49, xxxii. 14).

Ver. 16. Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries, &c.; thy traffick; therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee.

19 All they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be a terror, and never shall thou be any more.

20 § Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, set thy face against Zidon, and prophesy against it.

22 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Zidon: and I will be glorified in the midst of thee: and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have executed judgments in her, and shall be sanctified in her.

23 For I will send into her pestilence, and blood into her streets; and the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her by the sword upon her.

The word melkida does sometimes signify a palace, in which sense it is probably taken, Amos viii. 13, where our translation renders it the king's chapel. Thus Bishop Patrick understands it, Exod. xxv. 8, where the English reads, "Let them make a sanctuary," but it may probably mean a palace: for God commanded himself to be served and attended upon in the tabernacle, as a king is in his court. The cherubims were his throne, the ark his footstool, the altar his table, and therefore called by that name, xiii. 22, Mal. i. 7, the priests his attendants, and the shew-bread and sacrifices his provisions. Thus the word may most probably be taken here to this sense: That since their palaces and stately buildings are filled with the iniquity and injustice which they have practised in their trade and commerce, therefore God will utterly destroy them by Nebuchadnezzar, who reduced the whole city to a heap of ashes and rubbish, which Alexander afterward made use of to make a bank or causeway, by means of which he assaulted the new city of Tyre, and took it (see Dr. Prideaux, per. I. p. 484). If we follow the common translation, it imports a denunciation of God's judgments for filling their idolatrous temples with riches and presents gotten by injustice. So God often punishes the contempt of religion, in general, in those who are mistaken in their own way of worship.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt be a terror. See xxvi. 21.

Ver. 21. Set thy face against Zidon. Direct thy face and thy speech towards Zidon (see vi. 2); and foretell its destruction by the king of Babylon (see xxxii. 39, Jer. xxv. 22, xviii. 4). Tyre and Zidon were neighbours, and partakers of the same fate, both in prosperity and adversity. Zidon was afterward utterly destroyed by Oechus, king of Persia.

Ver. 22. I will be glorified in the midst of thee. I will make my power and justice known by the judgments I will execute upon thee. In the same sense God saith, Exod. xiv. 17, "I will get me honour upon Pharaoh:" where the word in the original is the same.

And shall be sanctified in her. God is said to be sanctified in those, for whose preservation or destruction he exerts his power in a remarkable manner (compare ver. 25, and see xx. 41).

Ver. 23. The pestilence, which often accompanied on every side; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

24 § And there shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn of all that are round about them, that despised them; and they shall know that I am the Lord God.

25 Thus saith the Lord God; When I shall have gathered the house of Israel from the people among whom they are scattered, and shall be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen, then shall they dwell in their land that I have given to my servant Jacob.

26 And they shall dwell safely therein, and shall build houses, and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when I have executed judgments upon all those that despise them round about them; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God.
CHAPTER XXIX.

1 In the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt:

3 Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

4 But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

5 And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers: thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered: I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

6 And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the Lord, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

7 When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest, and mangled all their joints to be at a stand.

8 ¶ Therefore saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

was sent upon this expedition on purpose to be destroyed, thereupon mutinied against him, and set up Amasis for their king.

I will bring thee out into the wilds of thy rivers,

By this is metaphorically expressed his undertaking a foreign expedition: the expression alludes to the nature of a crocodile, who is not confined to the water, but useth to come upon the land, where he is frequently taken.

Ver. 5. I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness. Thy army shall be despoiled, and fall in the deserts of Libya and Cyrene: Apries himself did not perish there; but the king and people being like head and body, whatsoever calamity befalls either part, is common to both. So the king of Assyria is said to be involved in that destruction which consumed his army, Isa. xxx. 38. Apries himself was afterward strangled in his palace at Saïs, by Amasis, that overcame him.

Thou shalt not be brought together. Their bones or carcasses shall not be brought together in order for burial (see Jer. viii. 2, xxv. 33).

I have given thee for meat. See xxxix. 17.

Ver. 6. Because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel. The expression alludes to the canes or reeds that grow on the bank of the river Nile: on which if a man leaned, they broke, and the splinters ran into his hand (compare 2 Kings xviii. 21). The prophets often upbraided the Jews with their vain confidence in Egypt, which would certainly disappoint them (see Isa. xx. 5, 6, xxx. 3, 5, &c. xxxi. 3, Jer. ii. 30).

Ver. 7. When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder: Or, "their arm." The king, who was Zedekiah's considerable, came with a great army to raise the siege of Jerusalem; but durst not engage a battle with the Chaldeans, but in a little time retired again into his own country, treacherously leaving Zedekiah, whom they had engaged to rebel against Nebuchadnezzar: whereby they became the occasion of his own and his people's ruin (see xvii. 13, Jer. xxxvii. 5, 7).

At a stand. Or, "to shake," as men do when they are tottering and ready to fall. The Hebrew verb hamandalath signifies properly to stand, but it is probably here taken in the same sense with the verb hamandalath: words of a near sound being often taken one for the other (see the note on xxviii. 15).

Ver. 8.) See xiv. 17. This is to be understood of Nebuchadnezzar's conquest of Egypt, who, taking 9 And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the Lord; because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it.

10 Behold, therefore, I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.

11 No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years.

12 And I will make the land of Egypt desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waste shall be desolate forty years: and I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

13 ¶ Yet thus saith the Lord God; At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were scattered:

advantage of Amasis's revolt against Apries, overran that country, and made a prey of the whole kingdom (see ver. 10, and xxiii. 13).

From the tower of Syene unto the border of Ethiopia. If we follow this translation, we must understand the word Cush, rendered here Ethiopia, of Arabia, as it is often taken (see the note on Jer. xiii. 23); for Syene was the border of Egypt towards Ethiopia (see Pliny's Nat. Hist. lib. v. cap. 9), which lay westward of Egypt, as Arabia did eastward. But the words may be translated thus, "From Migdol to Syene, even to the borders of Ethiopia" (compare xxx. 5, 9). Migdol was a town near the Red sea, mentioned Exod. xiv. 2, Jer. xxiv. 1, xlv 14, so it lay at the entrance of Egypt from Palestine; whereas Syene was at the other end of the country upon the borders of Ethiopia. The parallel text, xxx. 6, confirms this interpretation, where our translation reads, "From the tower of Syene, they shall fall in it by the sword." but the sense would be much more perfect if we translate it, "From Migdol to Syene," &c.

Ver. 11. The intestine wars between Apries and Amasis, and the conquest of the whole country by Nebuchadnezzar, will make Egypt a desolation the greatest part of forty years, nor shall it recover its former settlement till those are ended (see xxx. 10, xxiii. 13; compare xxxv. 7).

Ver. 12. I will make the land of Egypt desolate Many of the Jews which fled into Egypt after the murder of Gedaliah, were involved in the common destruction of the country and its inhabitants (see Jer. xxiv. 27, 28).

In the midst of the countries that are desolate. Egypt shall have its share of calamities with its neighbours, who shall be a prey to Nebuchadnezzar, according to the prophecies of Jeremiah, ch. xxv. xlv., xlvii., &c. and of Ezekiel, ch. xxv., &c.

I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations. Some of them shall flee for refuge into foreign countries, and some shall be carried away captive by the Babylonians (compare Jer. xlvii. 10). This captivity of the Egyptians, though not taken notice of by Herodotus, is mentioned by Berosus in one of the fragments of history, quoted by Josephus, Antiq. lib. x. cap. 11, and published with notes by Scaliger, at the end of his Book of Tetrarchies. The spot in the text, on which the mark upon the place is very observable; viz. "The calamities that befell the Egyptians are passed over by Herodotus, because the Egyptian priests would not inform him of any thing that tended to the disgrace of their nation."

Ver. 14. And will cause them to return into the land of Pathros. That part of Egypt which is called Thebaids, as Bochart proves by several arguments (see his Pheleg. lib. iv. cap. 27), A base Kingdom, i.e. A tributary kingdom (see xiv, 14).

Ver. 15. Notwithstanding Amasis's shaking off the Persian yoke, Egypt was not able to keep up its former grandeur, but was entirely conquered by Cambyses, Cyrus's son, who made it a province to the Persian empire; and upon its revolting from under that government, it was finally subdued by Darius the Persian emperor, and has been governed by strangers ever since. "For on the falling of the Persian empire, it became subject to the Macedonians, after them to the Romans, after the Romans to the Saracens, then to the Mamelukes, and is now a province of the Turkish empire," as Dr. Prideaux observes, in his Connex. of Script. Hist. par. 1. p. 79.

Ver. 16. At the same time that the Jews put confidence in Egypt, they distrusted the promises and assistance of God, and forsook him, to comply with the idolatries of their allies; whereby to recommend themselves to their protection (see ver. 7, Isa. lvii. 8, 9, Jer. ii. 18, 36, Hos. xii. 1).

Ver. 17. The following prophecy is related here, not with respect to the order of time (for there is near seventeen years' distance between the date of the foregoing prophecy and this), but because both prophecies relate to the same subject, viz. the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, which fell out this year: the city of Tyre having been taken by him the year before, after thirteen years' siege. Concerning which event, Dr. Prideaux hath observed, that the chronology of the Phoenician Annals (the extracts of which may be seen in Josephus, lib. i. contr. Apion.) exactly agrees with the time the prophet Ezekiel assigns for the taking of Tyre (see his Con. of Script. Hist. par. 1. p. 92, 93).

Ver. 18. Nebuchadnezzar — caused his army to serve a great service against Tyre. The siege lasted thirteen years, as hath been already observed; till the nor his army, for Tyre, for the service that he had served against it:

10 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army.

heads of their soldiers became bald with continual wearing of their helmets, and the skin was worn off their shoulders with carrying earth to raise mounds and fortifications against it (see xxvi. 5).

Yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus.] Before the town came to be closely besieged, the inhabitants had removed their effects into an island about half a mile distant from the shore, and there built another city, called New Tyre, which was afterward besieged and taken by Alexander the Great (see the argument to ch. xxvi.); so that there was nobody left there when Nebuchadnezzar's army took the city.

Ver. 19. He shall take her multitude, and take her spoil.] He and his army shall have the advantage of the captives and spoil of Egypt, which they shall utterly pillage and lay waste (see ver. 10, 12, and xxi. 12).

Ver. 20. Because they wrought for me, saith the Lord: The destruction of cities and countries is a work of God's providence, for the effecting of which he makes use of kings and princes as his instruments. Upon this account he calls Nebuchadnezzar his servant (Jer. xxv. 9), "because he wrought for him," as it is here expressed; i.e., executed his judgments upon Tyre, and the other cities and countries which God delivered into his hand.

Ver. 21. In that day.] This phrase frequently denotes in the prophets not the same time which was last mentioned, but an extraordinary season, remarkable for some signal events of Providence (see the note on Isa. iv. 2). In this sense it is to be understood here.

Will I cause the horn?] The word horn signifies strength, from whence it comes to denote prosperity, or a flourishing condition (see 1 Sam. ii. 1, Job xvi. 13); and if it is applied to express kingly power and majesty (see Ps. lxxxix. 22, xliii. 19, xxxvii. 17). So here it signifies, that after the destruction of God's and his church's enemies, denoted by Tyre, Egypt, and other oppressors of the Jews (see the note on xxxviii. 17), the kingdom and state of the Jews should again flourish under the Messias, as it is more clearly foretold, ch. xxxiv., xxxvii. (compare likewise xxxvi. 25, 26).

I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midst of them:] When thy prophecies are made good by the event, this shall add a new authority to what thou speakest (see xxiv. 27).

CHAPTER XXX.

1 The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God: Howl ye, Woe worth the day!

3 For the day is near, even the day of the Lord is near; a cloudy day; it shall be the time of the heathen.

4 And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt, and they shall take away her multitude, and her foundations shall be broken down.

5 Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia, and all the mingled people, and Cush, and the men of the land that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword.

6 Thus saith the Lord; They also that uphold Egypt shall fall; and the pride of her power

CHAP. XXX.

See the Argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 2. Howel ye,] The prophet directs his speech to the Egyptians (compare Isa. xiii. 6).

Ver. 3. The day is near, &c.] The time of God's vengeance (see vii. 12).

4 A cloudy day:] When the calamities that are coming upon Egypt shall make everything look dark and dismal (see ver. 18, xxxii. 7, 8, xxxiv. 12, Joel ii. 2, Amos v. 18).

It shall be the time of the heathen:] Of the punishment of the Egyptians and their allies (see ver. 4, 5, vii. 12). God's judgments upon particular places and nations, are an earnest of that general judgment, when he shall execute judgment upon all the ungodly (see the note upon Isa. xiii. 10).

Ver. 4. Pain shall be in Ethiopia;] See ver. 5, 9.

Her foundations shall be broken down.] Her strong forts and citadels (compare Isa. xvi. 7, Jer. i. 13).

Ver. 5. Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia.] The names in the Hebrew are Cush, Magi, Lud; who are mentioned together as the Egyptian allies, Vol. III.—74

Jer. xlv. 9 (see the note there, and compare Nah. iii. 9). Cush probably signifies Ethiopia here (see xxix. 10), as being joined with Phut and Lud; which were people of Africa. Phut is rendered Libya by our interpreters here, and in that place of Jeremy; but Phut and Lubim were a distinct people, as hath been observed upon xxvii. 10. Phut may denote some part of Africa near Egypt, and Lud probably signifies some part of the Abyssines' country.

All the mingled people.] All their auxiliaries. Compare Jer. i. 57. If we distinguish these from the men of the league which follow, they may mean that mixture of Carians, Ionians, and other nations lying upon the Mediterranean sea, which Apries got together to encounter Amasis, who, together with him, were deserted by these Ethiopian allies (see Dr. Prideaux, ubi supra, and the note on Jer. xxv. 20).

Cush.] The Cubii are mentioned in Ptolemy as a people of Naramis, a province of Egypt.

The men of the land that is in league.] The LXX. translate it, "The men of my league," or covenant; i.e., the Jews; many of whom, flying into Egypt, were destroyed there with the Egyptians (see the note on xxix. 13).
shall come down: from the tower of Syene shall they fall in it by the sword, saith the Lord God. 7 And they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted.

8 And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be destroyed. 9 In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships to make the careless Ethiopians afraid, and great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, lo, it cometh.

10 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon. 11 He and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain. 12 And I will make the rivers dry, and sell the land into the hand of the wicked: and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein, by the hand of strangers: I the Lord have spoken it. 13 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of Noph: and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt: and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt. 14 And I will make Pathros desolate, and will set fire in Zoan, and will execute judgments in No.

15 And I will pour my fury upon Sin, the strength of Egypt; and I will cut off the multitude of No. 16 And I will set fire in Egypt: Sin shall have great pain, and No shall be rent assunder, and Noph shall have distresses daily. 17 The young men of Aven and of Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities shall go into captivity.

18 At Tehaphneh also the day shall be dark of Egypt, a sort of their kings, where their sepulchres stood; one of which is still remaining: upon which account it is often mentioned in scripture (see Isa. x.ix. 3, Jer. ii. 16, xlv. 1, xlvii. 14). In Hesek it is called Aophys, xvi. 6, which comes near in sound to Memphis. This place was famous for the worship of Apis and Osiris: whereupon the prophet, in a particular manner, denounces destruction to the idolatry of that place. There shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt: it shall not have more a natural prince of the Egyptian race to rule over it, as formerly, but shall be subject to foreigners (see the note on xxix. 15). I will put a fear—in Egypt. Will make them faint-hearted, and not able to defend themselves (compare Isa. xix. 16, Jer. xlvii. 5). 14. I will make Pathros desolate (see xxix. 14. And will set fire in Zoan. Zoan, or Tanis, was one of the ancient cities in Egypt (see Numb. xiii. 20) and the metropolis of the kingdom in Moses's time (see Ps. lxxviii. 12, 43). And will execute judgments in No. Called “the multitude of No,” or Hammon No, in the next verse; and probably the same with the city Thebes, famous for its hundred gates (see the note on Jer. xlvii. 25). 15. And I will pour my fury upon Sin. It is generally agreed, that Sin is the same with Pelusium, one of the seven mouths of the Nile, which was commonly called the key of Egypt, as Suidas observes; and therefore was strongly fortified, that no enemy might gain admittance.

I will cut off the multitude of No. Or Hammon No, as the original reads. The name is generally supposed to be derived from Hammon, who was the Egyptian Jupiter. Mizarim, the son of Ham, was the founder of Egypt, which is called the “land of Ham,” Ps. cvi. 22. And this Hammon was probably either Ham himself, or one of his posterity advanced to divine honours. Plutarch informs us, in his book De Iside et Osiride, that Ammon in the Egyptian language was the same as Han in Greek (p. 534, edit. Francisci). 16. I will set fire in Egypt (see Ver. 8. Ver. 17.) Aven is the same with On, mentioned Gen. xii. 45, in aftertimes called Heliopolis, as our margin explains it here, because of a temple or image there dedicated to the sun (compare Isa. xix. 18, Jer. xlviii. 13). The word is so translated by the seventy interpreters, both here and Gen. xii. 45, who were ced, when I shall break there the yokes of Egypt; and the pomp of her strength shall cease in her; as for her, a cloud shall cover her, and her daughters shall go into captivity.

20 Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

21 And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first month, in the seventh day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

22 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will break his arms, the strong, and that which was broken: and I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.

very well acquainted with Egypt, and the principal places of it. Phil-beezeth was afterward, with very little variation, called Balastum, and so translated here by the LXX.

Ver. 18. At Tehaphnehes also the day shall be darkened.] Compare ver. 3. Tehaphnehes, elsewhere writ Tahapanes, is supposed to be the same place which was afterward called Daphne Pelusiac (see the note on Jer. xlii. 7).

When I shall break there the yokes of Egypt.] When I shall set those at liberty that are oppressed by the bondage of Egypt (compare xxxiv. 27).

A cloud shall cover her.] See ver. 3.

Ver. 21. I have broken the arm of Pharaoh.] I have broken his strength, so that he will never be able to recover his former power (compare Jer. xlvi. 25). It is usual for the prophets to speak of a thing future as if it were already accomplished (see note on Isa. xxi. 9).

Argument.—A continuation of the judgments denounced against Pharaoh and his kingdom; whose pride God humbles by putting him in mind of the dreadful fall of the king of Ninevah, much superior to him in power and greatness, whose ruin the prophet elegantly describes under the metaphor of a fair flourishing tree cut down and withered.

Ver. 2. Whom art thou like in thy greatness?] Thou pridwest thyself as if there never was any prince or king that could compare with thee.

Ver. 3. The Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon.] By the Assyrian, Archibishop Usher, ad A. M. 5378, and Dr. Prideaux, par. 1. p. 47, do most probably understand that king of Assyria, whom some call Chrysoiladas, others Saracens. It is of this king of Assyria, the words of the prophet Nahum are to be understood, iii. 18. In like manner Zephaniah joins the destruction of Assyria and the desolation of Nineveh together, ii. 13. Nabupolassar, the king 23 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

24 And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand: but I will break Pharaoh’s arms, and he shall groan before him with the gagings of a deadly wounded man.

25 But I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down: and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt.

26 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and disperse them among the countries; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

Ver. 22. And will break his arms,—and that which was broken.] The king of Babylon had before dispossessed the king of Egypt of all his new conquests, from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates (2 Kings xxiv. 7.): so that this part of his strength was already taken away, and never to be recovered; and now God threatens to destroy the remainder of his power, the kingdom of Egypt itself.

I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.] He shall have no more strength to defend himself, than a man hath to use his sword when his arm is broken.

Ver. 24. I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon.] The same promise God afterward made to Cyrus, Isa. xlv. 1 (compare Ps. xviii. 59).

He shall groan—with the gagings of a deadly wounded man.] His strength shall perfectly fail, as a man’s who is dying of his wounds.

2 Son of man, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and to his multitude; Whom art thou like in thy greatness?

3 ¶ Behold, the Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon, and Cypares, the king of Media, called by the names of Nebuchadnnesor and Assuerus in Tobit.xiv. 15, joining their forces together against him, besieged Nineveh, took it, and after having slain the king, utterly destroyed that great and famous city; and put an end to that part of the Assyrian empire. Nabupolassar having before possessed himself of the other part, which was properly called the Babylonian empire (see Dr. Prideaux, p. 45). In this remarkable catastrophe, the prophecies of Jonah, Nahum, and Zephaniah, foretelling the destruction of Nineveh, were fulfilled.

The king of Nineveh is compared here to a fair and tall cedar, such as grow in mount Lebanon (see the like comparison, Isa. x. 34, xxxvii. 24, Zech. xi. 3). The greatness of Nebuchadnnesor’s power and kingdom, is set forth under the same resemblance, Dan. iv. 10, &c.

His top was among the thick woods.] He overtopped all the other flourishing trees (compare xvii. 3, xii. 11).

Ver. 4.] As trees flourish by a river side (compare banon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and of an high stature; and his top was among the thick boughs.

4 The waters made him great, the deep set him up on high with her rivers running round about his plants, and sent out her little rivers unto all the trees of the field.

5 Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long because of the multitude of waters, when he shot forth.

6 All the fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations.

7 Thus was he in his greatness, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters.

8 The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him: the fir-trees were not like his boughs, and the eleusin-trees were not like the branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty.

9 I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied them.

xvii. 5), so the traffic of the several branches of the river Tigris, upon which Nineveh was situate, made that city and kingdom rich and populous, and she improved her wealth and stores among the neighbouring provinces (compare Nahum ii. 6).

Ver. 5.] He became greater than all the kings about him (compare Dan. iv. 11).

Ver. 6.] Several nations applied to him for protection, and thought themselves all and their concerns safe under his government (compare xviii. 29, Dan. iv. 12).

Ver. 8. The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him. He overtopped the goodly cedars, called in the Hebrew, "the cedars of God" (Ps. lxxx. 10): such fair ones as might be supposed to have grown in Paradise (compare xxviii. 13).

Ver. 9. So that all the trees of Eden.—envied him. "All the kings of the east envied him, and his greatness!" as the Chaldee paraphrast expresseth the sense.

Ver. 10. Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height. Because thy pride hath still increased with thy prosperity (compare xxviii. 17).

Ver. 11. Into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen. Or, "the mighty one of the nations," as the word gojim is rendered in the next verse. The word El, though commonly spoken of God, yet is sometimes applied to heroes (see xxxii. 21), sometimes to angels, as being mightly in strength, as Ps. lxxxix. 6. So God here saith, he delivered the Assyrians into the hand of Nabopolassar king of Babylon, who joining his forces with Cyaxares king of Media, his confederate, made themselves masters of Nineveh, and the king of Assyria, whose seat it was.

Ver. 12. And strangers.—have cut him off, &c.] Compare xxviii. 7, xxx. 11. The armies of the kings of Babylon and Media shall utterly destroy him and his empire, and leave him without life or strength, like a tree that is cut down, dried up, and withered.

Upo the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, &c.] As thelimbs of such a tree are broken by the fall, and those that rested under its shadow are frightened away, and have forsaken the place: so the Assyrian army lies slain here and there (compare xxxiii. 5, xxxv. 8), and those that lived under his protection and government withdrew their obedience from him (compare Dan. iv. 14).

Ver. 13.] As the birds sit upon the boughs of a tree cut down, and the beasts browse upon its branches; so his dominions shall be a prey to the conquerors: or his armies that are slain shall become meat to the birds and beasts (compare xxxix. 5, Isa. xviii. 6).

Ver. 14. To the end that none of the trees by the waters exalt themselves, &c.] Thy destruction shall be a warning to other kings and potentates, to deter them from prideing themselves in the time of their prosperity (see xxviii. 17).

For they are all delivered unto death.] Whatever distinction there is between them and the inferior sort, death shall make them all equal (see Ps. lxxxii. 7) and particularly to Egypt, and those other countries against which God hath denounced his judgments, the same fate is allotted which this Assyrian monarch has already undergone (see xxiii. 18, &c.).

Ver. 15. In the day! This and the following verse are an elegant description of that constellation that seized the king of Assyria's allies at the suddenness of his downfall: the same metaphor being still pursued.

I caused a mourning: I covered the deep for him.] The sense might better be expressed thus: "I covered the deep with mourning:" for when two verbs are joined together in the Hebrew, one is usually taken in the sense of a noun, or an adverb. The deep that nursed up this fair tree (ver. 4), is described as mourning at its downfall. The great waters were stayed.] As if the streams had stopped their usual course on purpose to lament his fate.

I caused Lebanon to mourn for him.] The forest of Lebanon, and all the stately trees in it, sympathized CHAPTER XXXII.

He went down to the grave I caused a mourning; I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed; and I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him.

16. I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit: and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth.

With his misfortunes; i.e. all his confederates and allies.

Ver. 16. The nations to shake] See xxvi. 15.

When I cast him down to hell [or the grave], &c.] See xxxii. 18, 21, Isa. xiv. 15.

All the trees of Eden—all that drink water [see ver. 14], shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth.] The deceased princes, confederates to the Assyrians, described here as so many stately trees and cedars, shall feel some mitigation of their calamities, when they see thee brought down as low as themselves (compare xxxii. 31, Isa. xiv. 8—10, a place exactly parallel to this).

Ver. 17. They also went down to hell [or the grave] with him.] His allies underwent the same fate with himself, and were cut off in the common destruction (see xxxii. 20, &c.).

That dwell under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.] Or, the nations (see ver. 11), his auxiliaries (see xxx. 8, xxxii. 21), who lived under his protection in several countries and provinces (compare Lam. iv. 20).

Ver. 18. To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness?] The prophet now applies himself to the king of Egypt: q. d. Wilt thou still boast thyself, as if no prince were thine equal (see ver. 2)? yet thou shalt undergo the same fate with this fair flourishing cedar, the king of Assyria (see ver. 14, and compare xxxii. 19).

Thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised, &c.] See xxviii. 10, xxxii. 19, 20.

This is Pharaoh and all his multitude.] The judgment that befell the king of Assyria here described, is an exact representation of the destruction that remains for Pharaoh and his people; the word is commonly denoted the same as to signify or represent, especially in prophecies, parables, and such like figurative descriptions (see xxxiv. 31, xxxvii. 11, Gen. xii. 26, Exod. xii. 11, Matt. xiii. 19, xxvi. 26.)

CHAPTER XXXII.

And it came to pass in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying.

2. Son of man, take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt, and say unto him, Thou art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art as a whale in the seas; and thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers.

3. Thus saith the Lord God; I will therefore spread out my net over thee with a company of many people; and they shall bring thee up in my net.

4. Then will I leave thee upon the land, I will cast thee forth upon the open field, and will cause all the owls of the heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee.

5. And I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, and fill thy valleys with thy height.

6. I will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimmest, even to the mountains; and the rivers shall be full of thee.

Chap. XXXII.

Argument.—A continuation of the same subject, and a farther description of the lamentable destruction of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar; the prophet illustrating the dreadfulness of his fall by a poetical description of the infernal mansions appointed for tyrants and oppressors, where Pharaoh is to have a place allotted for him.

Ver. 2. Take up a lamentation for Pharaoh] See note on xxii. 2.

Thou art like a young lion of the nations.] Thou art like a beast of prey, devouring far and near (see xix. 3, 6, xxxviii. 18).

Thou art as a whale in the seas:] By the word tannim, we may fitly understand a crocodile, as hath been observed upon xxix. 3, and the description that follows of this creature agrees very well to a crocodile, but cannot be applied to a whale.

Ver. 3. They also went down into hell with him unto them that be slain with the sword; and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.

Ver. 4. To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness? The prophet now applies himself to the king of Egypt: q. d. Wilt thou still boast thyself, as if no prince were thine equal (see ver. 2)? yet thou shalt undergo the same fate with this fair flourishing cedar, the king of Assyria (see ver. 14, and compare xxxii. 19).

Thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised, &c.] See xxviii. 10, xxxii. 19, 20.

This is Pharaoh and all his multitude.] The judgment that befell the king of Assyria here described, is an exact representation of the destruction that remains for Pharaoh and his people; the word is commonly denoted the same as to signify or represent, especially in prophecies, parables, and such like figurative descriptions (see xxxiv. 31, xxxvii. 11, Gen. xii. 26, Exod. xii. 11, Matt. xiii. 19, xxvi. 26.)
EZEKIEL.

7 And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.

8 All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God.

9 I will also vex the hearts of many people, when I shall bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known.

10 Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them; and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee.

12 By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, the terrible of the nations, all of them; and they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed.

13 I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters; neither shall the Even to the mountains:] The mountains shall be wet with it, as well as the lower grounds, ver. 5 (compare Isa. xxxiv. 3).

Ver. 7. 8. I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark:] These metaphors denote the downfall of states and governments; kings and rulers being figuratively expressed by the sun, moon, and stars (compare Isa. xiii. 10, xxxiv. 4, Joel ii. 31, Rev. vi. 12—14). God's judgments upon particular countries being earnest of a general judgment, they are described in such terms as if the whole frame of nature were dissolved.

And set darkness upon thy land:] Everything shall look dark and dismal (see xxx. 3).

Ver. 9.] When thy exiles shall be dispersed into foreign countries (see xxix. 12), and relate the miserable circumstances of thy destruction, it shall cause great and consternation in all that hear it (see the following verse).

Ver. 10.] See xxvi. 16, xxvii. 35, xxx. 9.

Ver. 12. The terrible of the nations:] See xxviii. 7.

Ver. 13. I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters:] Or, "that they be no more beside the great waters," as Noldius translates the phrase, p. 615. The horses shall be consumed in the war, and the other cattle that used to feed in the meadows by the side of the Nile (see Gen. xli. 2), shall be destroyed or driven away as a prey (see xxix. 8, 11).

[Neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more,—then I will make their waters deep, &c.] Or, "I will make their waters clear," for so the Hebrew word is taken xxxiv. 15. Following this translation, the verse may be interpreted to this sense: There being an entire destruction both of man and beast in Egypt (see xxix. 11), and none passing through it, it shall be like the waters of a river which are never disturbed, but run pure and clear like oil.

Ibid. and ver. 14. Neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts, &c.

Here is a transition from a proper sense to a metaphorical one; the prophet in the second verse compared the disturbances the Egyptians gave their foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them.

14 Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, saith the Lord God.

15 When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be destitute of that wherewith it was full, when I shall smite all them that dwell therein, then shall they know that I am the Lord.

16 This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her: the daughters of the nations shall lament her: they shall lament for her, even for Egypt, and for all her multitude, saith the Lord God.

17 ¶ It came to pass also in the twelfth year, in the fifteenth day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, wait for the multitude of Egypt, and cast them down, even her, and the daughters of the famous nations, unto the nether parts of the earth, with them that go down into the pit.

19 Whom dost thou pass in beauty? go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised.

20 They shall fall in the midst of them that neighbours to troubling and fouling of waters; in allusion to which metaphor he saith here, that when Egypt is made desolate, and the number, both of men and beasts, diminished by their wars and confusions, then their neighbours will enjoy such quietness, as a river does that smoothly glides along, and never hath its streams fouled or disturbed.

Ver. 16. This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her:] This is the substance of a lamentation which may be properly used to bewail the calamities of Egypt (see ver. 2).

The daughters of the nations shall lament her:] i. e. The people of the neighbouring countries: so the "daughters of Zion" and of Babylon signify the inhabitants of those cities. The expression alludes to the mourning women, whose profession it was to lament at funerals (see note on Jer. ix. 17).

Ver. 17. Fifteenth day of the month:] Of the twelfth month (see ver. 1). The LXX. understand it of the first month, as that indefinite expression is probably understood, xxvi. 1.

Ver. 18. Wait for—Egypt:] See ver. 2, 16.

Cast them down,—and the daughters of the famous nations.] The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them; see xiii. 3, where Ezekiel saith, "he was sent to destroy the city;" i. e. to foretell its destruction. In the same sense we are to understand the expression here of casting down Egypt; i. e. foretelling its ruin, together with God's judgments upon other famous kingdoms in that part of the world, which are reckoned up in the following verses, and called here the "daughters of the nations;" concerning which expression see the explanation.

Unto the nether parts of the earth:] The expressions denote utter destruction, and are parallel to those elsewhere used of being brought down to hell, to the grave, or into silence (compare xxxi. 14, Isa. xiv. 15).

Ver. 19.] What reason hast thou now to prefer thyself before others! since thou shalt undergo the same fate with the worst of them (see the note on xxviii. 10).

Ver. 20. They shall fall in the midst of them that are are slain by the sword; she is delivered to the sword; draw her and all her multitudes.

21 The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him; they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword.

22 Assur is there and all her company: his graves are about him; all of them slain, fallen by the sword:

23 Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit, and her company is round about her grave: all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused terror in the land of the living.

24 There is Elam and all her multitude round about her grave, all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet they have borne their shame with them that go down to the pit.

25 They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword; though their terror was caused in the land of the living, yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit: he is put in the midst of them that be slain.

26 There is Meschech, Tubal, and all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they caused their terror in the land of the living.

27 And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell with their weapons of war: and they have laid their swords under their heads, but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though slain by the sword;] They do not die the common death of all men," as Moses speaks, Numb. xvi. 29, but are cut off by an extraordinary judgment from the hand of God himself.

Draw her and all her multitudes.] Carry her and her people away to the grave, like so many carcases which are buried without any solemnity. The words are spoken to the Babylonians, the executioners of God's judgments upon Egypt.

Ver. 21.] Here follows a poetical description of the infernal regions, where the ghosts of deceased tyrants, with their subjects, are represented as coming to meet the king of Egypt and his auxiliaries (see xxx. 8), upon their arrival to the same place. Hell signifies here the state of the dead (compare xxxi. 16, 17; Isa. xiv. 9, &c. and see the notes there).

They are gone down, &c.] These warriors, famous in their time for their exploits, have undergone the same fate with other men of blood, and are gone down to the grave by violent deaths (see ver. 19).

Ver. 22. Assur is there and all her company.] The Assyrians, both king and people, whose destruction is represented in the foregoing chapter.

His graves are about him.] The Egyptians lie buried in the same place with them. The masculine and feminine genders are promiscuously used in the following verse. The masculine referring to the prince, whose objects were the deceased heroes, he likened to the nation or country to which they belonged.

Ver. 23. Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit.] Compare xxvi. 20, Isa. xiv. 15.

Her company is round about her grave.] Like lesser graves placed round the monument of a person of great quality: or the words may import that death has made them equal (compare ver. 24, 25).

All of them slain, &c.] See ver. 20.

Which caused terror in the land of the living.] Though they were a terror while they were alive to their neighbours (see xxvi. 17).

Ver. 24. There is Elam.] Which was conquered by Nebuchadnezzar (see Jer. xlix. 34, and the notes there).

Yet they have borne their shame.] They have been shamefully subdued, and lost their lives and glory together, as Assur did before them (ver. 22).

Ver. 25. They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain] Elam and her people have a place among the deceased princes and potentates. The word bed is used for the grave, Isa. lvii. 3, and may, perhaps, in both places, allude to the costly monuments or sepulchres which need to be erected for persons of great quality. Mittah, a word of the same sense, is used for a bier or coffin, 2 Sam. iii. 31.

Her graves are round about him.] About those of the king of Egypt, and his people.

Ver. 26. There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude.] Who are threatened by God with a terrible destruction (see xxviii. 2, &c.). But they seem to be mentioned here by way of prelude, or anticipation, as the critics call it; for the destruction threatened to Meshech and Tubal was not to come to pass till several ages after this prophecy against Egypt was fulfilled, as may be gathered from several expressions in that prophecy. It is usual in the prophets to speak of what is to come, as if it were already past, as hath been observed elsewhere. So the country of Goshen is called "the land of Rameses," Gen. xlvii. 11, which yet had that name from the city Rameses, built in aftertimes by the Israelites (see Exod. i. 11). By the same figure Hosea is called "the mountain of God," Exod. iii. 1. Concerning Meshech and Tubal, see the note on xxviii. 13.

Ver. 27. They shall not lie with the mighty.] They shall not lie among those heathen heroes who died a natural death, and are laid in their graves with pomp and magnificence (compare this verse with Isa. xiv. 18, 19).

Which are gone down to hell [or the grave; see ver. 21] with their weapons of war.] The prophet may possibly represent the future state of these tyrants and warriors, according to the popular notions received in the world, and describe their condition in the other life suitably to the character they bore in this. So Virgil describes his heroes in the Elysian fields (Aenid, lib. vii.).

"Quae graia currit Armorumque fuit vivis,—sequitur tellure reperton."

They have laid their swords under their heads.] Who were carried to their graves in state, and had their achievements and other ensigns of honour affixed to their monuments for perpetuating their memory. It has been the custom of all ages to adorn the sepulchres of heroes with their swords and other trophies of war (see 1 Macc. xiii. 19). So Virgil describes Misenus's tomb (Aenid. vi. —

"Ingenii mole sepulchrum

Imponit, suaque arma vira.

But their iniquities shall be upon their bones.] Their death shall carry in it plain tokens of their sins, and of God's vengeance pursuing them for their cruelty.
they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living.

28 Yea, thou shalt be broken in the midst of the uncircumcised, and shalt lie with them that are slain with the sword:

29 There is Edom, her kings, and all her princes, which with their might are laid by them that were slain with the sword; they shall lie with the uncircumcised, and with them that go down to the pit.

30 There be the princes of the north, all of them, and all the Zidonians, which are gone down with the slain; with their terror they are ashamed of their might; and they lie uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword, and bear their shame with them that go down to the pit.

31 Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted over all his multitude, even Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword, saith the Lord God.

32 For I have caused my terror in the land of the living; and he shall be laid in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that are slain with the sword, even Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, When I bring the sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman:

3 If he seeth the sword come upon the land, he bloweth the trumpet, and warneth the people;

4 Then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head.

5 He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.

6 But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand.

7 ¶ So thou, O son of man, have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me.

8 When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

9 Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

10 Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; Thus ye speak, saying, If set him for their watchman.] Such watchmen were placed upon the turrets of their city walls, to give notice of the enemies' approach (see 2 Sam. xviii. 24, 25, 2 Kings ix. 17. Isa. xxi. 5).

Ver. 3. When he seeth the sword.] When he spies the enemy marching against it (see ver. 2).

Ver. 4. His blood shall be upon his own head.] His destruction is owing to himself (see xviii. 13. Acts xviii. 6).”

Ver. 5. He that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.] Shall save his life from the danger that threatens it. In like manner, he that takes warning by the prophet's admonition shall preserve himself from the judgments threatened against sinners (see ver. 10).

Ver. 6. He is taken away in his iniquity.] See lii. 18.

Ver. 7—9.] See lii. 17—19.

Ver. 10. If our transgressions—be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?] Thou hast threatened that we shall "pine away in our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?

11 Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

12 Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth.

13 When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it.

14 Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right;

15 If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die.

16 None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him: he hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live.

17 ¶ Yet the children of thy people say, The way of the Lord is not equal: but as for them, their way is not equal.

18 When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committh iniquity, he shall even die thereby.

19 But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby.

20 ¶ Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal. O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways.

21 ¶ And it came to pass in the twelfth year of our captivity, in the tenth month, in the fifth day of the month, that one that had escaped out of Jerusalem came unto me, saying, The city is smitten.

22 Now the hand of the Lord was upon me in the evening, afore he that was escaped came; and had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning; and my mouth was opened, and I was no more dumb.

23 Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel speak, saying, Abraham was one, and he inherited the land; but we are many; the land is given us for inheritance.

25 Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Ye eat with the blood, and lift up your eyes toward your idols, and shed blood: and shall ye possess the land?

26 Ye stand upon your sword, ye work abominations, and felt a sensible impulse of the prophetic spirit (see i. 3).

And had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning: 3 God has given no commission to speak in his name unto the people, which I had not done before near the space of three years (compare xxiv. 1). And the destruction of the city, which I had so often foretold, being now brought to pass (which at that time you would not believe, see xi. 3, xii. 22), gave an indisputable authority and credit to my words (see note on xxiv. 27).

24. They that inhabit those wastes of the land: They that are left behind in the land that is now wasted with fire and sword (see ver. 27, and xxxvi. 4). Abraham was one, and he inherited the land: If Abraham, being but a single person, with his family, had the whole country of Juea given to him (see Gen. xiii. 15), there is much greater reason to conclude that God will preserve the possession of it to us, who are a numerous part of Abraham's posterity. These men spake after the vain manner of the Jews, who fondly presume that they have a right in all the promises made to Abraham (see Matt. iii. 8, John vii. 33, Rom. ix. 7). The title of one is elsewhere given to Abraham, as being singled out from the rest of his family to be the original or head of the Jewish nation (see Isa. li. 2, Mal. ii. 15, Heb. xi. 12).

25. Ye eat with the blood: Which was forbidden several times in the law, as being a rite the heathens used in the sacrifices they offered to idols (whose worship is reviled in the very next words), as Dr. Spencer proves at large, De. Legib. Hebraei. lib. ii. cap. 11, who brings many arguments to show that the Hebrew phrase nadt haddan, should be translated "near the blood;" in allusion to the idolatrous 3 d 2
EZEKIEL.

27 Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts to be devoured, and they that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence.

28 For I will lay the land most desolate, and of her strength shall cease; and the mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through.

29 Then shall they know that I am the Lord, when I have laid the land most desolate because of all their abominations which they have committed.

And also, thou son of man, the children of rite of pouring the blood of the slain beast into a vessel or pit, and then eating part of the sacrifice just by it.

30 Lift up your eyes toward your idols; See xviii. 6.

And shed blood; See ix. 9., xxii. 6, 9.

28. Ver. 26. Ye stand upon your sword; You make your "strength of the law of justice," according to the character given of ungodly men, Wisd. ii. 11. Dr. Spencer, in the forecited place, thinks that the expression alludes to a custom of the heathens, who put the blood of their sacrifices into a vessel or pit, in order to call up and consult evil spirits, and then stood with their swords drawn to keep the demons off from doing them any harm.

Ye defile—his neighbour's wife; See Wisd. ii. 6, xxi. 11.

27. Ver. 27. That they are in the wastes (see ver. 24) shall fall by the sword; The three judgments here mentioned, together with famine, are often threatened as the last and finishing strokes of God's vengeance upon the Jewish nation (see v. 12, 17, vii. 12, xiv. 21, Jer. xv. 3.

That they be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence; Compare Judg. vi. 2. The caves here mentioned were a sort of strong-holds formed by nature in the rocks, or cut out under the tops of mountains: they were so large, that men might secure themselves, their families and their goods, in them. 1 David is said to "abide in strong-holds, and remain in a mountain in the wilderness of Ziph," 1 Sam. xxii. 14. Such was the cave of Adullam, where David had his residence for some time, and was there resorted to by his relations (1 Sam. xxii. 1), and at another time by his principal officers (2 Sam. xxi. 15). [Such a cave is mentioned by Dio, called Ceria, belonging to the Gete, whither they fled, and carried their moveables, for fear of Crassus, lib. ii. ad ejus.

28. Ver. 28. I will lay the land most desolate; See Jer. xiv. 2, 6, 22, and xxxvi. 34, 35 of this prophecy.

The pomp of her strength shall cease; All that riches and magnificence wherein they pleased themselves, as that which gave them strength and reputation in the eyes of the world (see vii. 21): or the phrase may denote the beauty and glory of the temple, which they looked upon as their chiefest strength and protection (see xxiv. 21).

The mountains—shall be desolate; See vi. 2.

Ver. 29. That I am the Lord; See vi. 7.

Ver. 30. The children of thy people (those of the captivity) still are talking against thee, &c. Or rather "of thee" as the LXX. rightly render it; "for thy people still are talking against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord.

31 And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness.

32 And, lo, then art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not.

33 And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

with their mouth they shewed much love," as it follows in the next verse.

By the walls and in the doors] Both in their public places of concourse, and in their private meetings.

Come—and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord.] These were such as "drew nigh to God with their mouths, but their hearts were far from him:" as Isaiah describes their hypocrisy, xxiv. 13.

Ver. 31. They come unto thee as the people cometh.] Or, as disciples flock to their teachers. So the Chaldee paraphrase explains it.

They sit before thee as my people.] See viii. 1.

For with their mouths they shew much love.] "They make loves," or "jestes," as our margin reads out of the Hebrew; which some interpreters understand, as if they ridiculed the prophet's words, or turned them into burlesque, so the Vulgar Latin renders it; In canticum oris sui vertunt. But by comparing this with the following verse, where the same word magabil is spoken of a song or musical tune, we may rather understand the phrase to this sense, That they were delighted with the prophet's harmonious voice, or taking eloquence, but would not make the proper use of what he said for the correcting their evil manners.

Ver. 32.] They come to hear thee for their entertainment, not for their edification, as many go to hear famed preachers. St. Augustine tells us, that he himself was such an auditor of St. Ambrose, before he was converted (Confess. lib. v. cap. 13). Studiae audibam disputationem in publico, non attentione qua debuit, sed tanquam explorator facundiae ejus, utrum convenirem famae suae.—Verbis ejus suspendebam intentum, rerum autem incuriosum et contemptor astabam. "I heard him diligently when he discoursed in the congregation, but not with that application of mind which I ought to have done; but I came rather out of curiosity to know whether his eloquence was answerable to that opinion the world had of him. I was very attentive to his style, and charmed with the sweetness of his delivery, but had little value or concern for the subject he treated of."
CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
2 Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flock?
3 Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock.
4 The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.
5 And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd; and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered.
6 My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them.

7 ¶ Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord;
8 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely because my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock;
9 Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord;
10 Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.

The magistrates have not taken care to relieve the needy, and defend the oppressed. The priests and the prophets have not been diligent in giving the people proper instructions, in reducing those that are in error, or in comforting the disconsolate.

Neither have ye brought again that which was broken.] Ye have not given ease to the afflicted and miserable. A metaphor taken from surgeons binding up wounds (compare Isa. lxvi. 1).

Neither have ye brought again that which was driven away.] Or, "which was gone astray," as the word middakath is translated, Deut. xxix. 1. Ye have not sought by good instructions to reduce those that have been seduced into error; or to reclaim those that are ready to be lost and perish in their sins (compare Matt. ix. 36, xviii. 11).

With force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.] You have tried to reduce them to their duty by the rough methods of cruelty and compulsion, not by the gentle way of reason and argument. In like manner the methods of instruction and good example are particularly recommended to the pastors of the Christian church, 1 Pet. v. 3, 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.

Ver. 5.] By reason of these neglects of the governours, the whole frame of the government is dissolved, and my people are scattered here and there: some are fled for refuge into foreign countries (see Jer. xi. 11) others are carried captives by their enemies, who, as so many beasts of prey, have spoiled and devoured them (compare Isa. liv. 9, Jer. xii. 9).

Ver. 6. My sheep wandered through all the mountains.] As sheep, when there is nobody to look after them, wander from one mountain and hill to another; so my people have been forced to leave their habitations, and fly to any place where they might hope for protection (compare vii. 16, and see the note upon Jer. iii. 10).

None did search or seek after them.] Their rulers took no care of my people while they had power and authority: and now I have displaced them for their misdemeanours, and there is nobody left whose office it is to take any farther care of my people (see ver. 10).

Ver. 8. Will require my flock at their hand.] I will require a severe account of their kings and princes, their priests and prophets, of the damage my people have sustained through their ill-management;
Lord God; Behold, I judge between cattle and 18 cattle, between the rams and the he goats.

17 And as for you, O my flock, thus saith and I will deprive them of that honour and pre-eminence which they have made such ill use of, as I have already displaced Zedekiah, and the princes, priests, and others, that were in authority under him.

Ver. 12. So will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver out of all places] I will bring them home from their several dispersions, whither they have been driven in the dark and dismal time of the destruction of their country, and their own captivity (compare xxx. 3).

Ver. 13.] This prophecy may in some degree have been fulfilled in the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity; but seems still to look farther, even to the general restoration of the whole nation; which most of the prophets foretell shall come to pass in the latter days (compare xi. 17, xx. 41, xxviii. 25, xxxvi. 24, xxxvii. 21, xxxviii. 8, xxxix. 27).

Ver. 14. Upon the high mountains] See vi. 2. There shall they lie in a good fold.] The expressions denote plenty and security (compare Isa. lv. 10, Jer. xxxiii. 12, Hos. ii. 18, Zeph. iii. 13).

Ver. 16. I will seek that which was lost.] The Messias, whom I will set over them (see ver. 23), shall faithfully discharge all the offices of a shepherd towards them, which their former pastors have neglected, ver. 4 (compare Isa. xi. 11, lx. 1, Matt. xv. 24, xviii. 11, John x. 11).

I will destroy the fat and the strong.] Those that oppress and domineer over the weak (see ver. 20, 21); compare xxxix. 15, Amos iv. 1.)

I will feed them with judgment.] Or, with discretion; i.e. I will deal with each of them according to their deserts, and make a distinction between the fat and lean cattle (see ver. 18, 20).

Ver. 17. Between cattle and cattle, between the rams and the he goats] The Hebrew runs thus, "Between the same cattle, and the cattle of rams and he goats;" between the weak and the strong cattle, i.e. between the rich and the poor, as the Chaldee paraphrase explains the sense upon ver. 20. Ver. 18.] This reproof may fitly be applied to those great persons who take no care that the poor may enjoy the benefit of their superfluities; but rather let them be thrown away and perish, than they will be at the trouble of seeing them disposed of for the good of those that want.

Ver. 21. Thrust with side and with shoulder.] In parsimony of this comparison, the oppressors of the weak are commonly styled in scripture by the names of oxen, bullocks, rams, and he-goats (see Ps. xxii. 12, lxviii. 31, Dan. viii. 3, 5).

Ver. 23. I will set up one shepherd over them,—even my servant David.] The Messias is often described under the character of a shepherd, both in the Old and New Testament (see the note on ver. 16). And the title may be applied to him with respect to his office of king, as well as that of priest and prophet (see the note on ver. 2). He is elsewhere styled by the name of David, as being the person in whom all the promises made to David were fulfilled (see Isa. liv. 3, 4, Jer. xxx. 9, Hos. iii. 5). [The expression may likewise allude to David's first employment, which was that of a shepherd.]

He shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd.] This prophecy was remarkably fulfilled when Christ, by the preaching of the gospel, "gathered in one the children of God which were scattered abroad" (John xvi. 32, Eph. i. 10), among whom were many of "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. x. 6). But it will receive a further completion at the general conversion of the Jews, when "the time will come that they shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Matt. xxviii. 37). And this signal event will usher in or complete the "fullness of the gentiles" (see Rom. xi. 12, 15, 25, 32).

Ver. 24. I the Lord will be their God.] I will renew my covenant with them, and receive them again into my protection (see ver. 30, xxxvii. 27, Lev. xxv. 16, and note on Jer. xxx. 20).

My servant David] See note on xxxvii. 22.

Ver. 25. I will make with them a covenant of peace.] As I will be at peace with them, so I will give them the blessings of outward peace, and will protect them.
CHAPTER XXXV. 597

And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid.

29 And I will raise up for them a plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more.

30 Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people, saith the Lord God.

When I have broken the bands of their yoke;] The same expression which is used concerning the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt (Lev. xxvi. 13, Jer. ii. 20). Their final restoration being represented as the greater deliverance of the two (see Jer. xxiii. 7, 8).

And delivered them] See Jer. xxv. 14.

Ver. 25. They shall no more be a prey] See ver 25.

They shall dwell safely;] See Jer. xxiii. 6.

Ver. 26. A plant of renown;] The Messias is often described under the name of the branch; and the rod or shoot growing of the stem of Jesse (see Isa. iv. 2, xi., lii. 2, Jer. xxii. 5, Zech. iii. 8, vi. 12).

No more consumed with hunger] But shall be blessed with plenty of all things (see ver. 26, 27, and xxxvi. 20).

Neither hear the shame of the heathen] By whom they were reproached, as if their God had cast them off (see xxxvi. 3, 6, 15).

Ver. 30.] See ver. 24.

Ver. 31.] These words, at the conclusion of the chapter, explain the metaphor which runs through the whole: that what was said of a flock and its shepherds, is to be understood of men and their governors; and especially of God's people, whom he takes care of, as a shepherd does of his flock (see xxxvi. 38, Ps. lxxxi. 2).

1 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against mount Seir, and prophesy against it,

3 And say unto it, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will stretch out mine hand against thee, and I will make thee most desolate.

4 I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

5 Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred, and hast shed the blood of the children of Israel by the force of the sword in the time of their calamity, in the time that their iniquity had an end:

6 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood shall pursue thee; saith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee.

7 Thus will I make mount Seir most desolate, and cut off from it him that passeth out and him that returneth.

8 And I will fill his mountains with his slain

CHAP. XXXV.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet reneweth his former denunciations of judgments upon the Edomites (see xxxv. 12), as a just punishment for their insulting over the calamities of the Jews.

Ver. 2. Mount Seir.] See vi. 2. Mount Seir is the same with Idumea (see Deut. ii. 5).

Ver. 4. I will lay thy cities waste.] See ver. 9.
men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers, shall they fall that are slain with the sword.

9 I will make thee perpetual desolations, and thy cities shall not return: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

10 Because thou hast said, These two nations and these two countries shall be mine, and we will possess it; whereas the Lord was there:

11 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will even do according to thine anger, and according to thine envy which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them; and I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.

Whereas the Lord was there: They did not believe that God had placed his name there, had chosen it for a place of his peculiar residence, and would never quite relinquish his property in it (see xxvii. 25).

Ver. 11. I will make myself known among them. I will make my people see that I have not quite cast them off, by my avenging their quarrel upon thee.

Ver. 12. That I am the Lord. See vi. 7. They are laid desolate. See note on ver. 10.

Ver. 13. Ye have boasted against me: As if I were not able to make good my promises towards the Jews, or to assert my right in Judea (see ver. 10).

Ver. 14. When I shall restore other countries, conquered by the king of Babylon, to their former posterity, thou shalt lie waste and desolate. The Edomites never recovered their country, after the Nabataeans had expelled them out of it (see Dr. Prideaux, in the place above cited).

Ver. 15. All Edum. The expression is like that of Isaiah, "whole Palestina," Isa. xiv. 29, i.e. all the several tribes and divisions of it.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 Also, thou son of man, prophesy unto the mountains of Israel, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord:

2 Thus saith the Lord God; Because the enemy hath said against you, Aha, even the ancient high places are ours in possession:

3 Therefore prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Because they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side, that ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen, and ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are an infamy of the people:

4 Therefore, ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, to the desolate wastes, and to the cities that are forsaken, which became a prey and desolation to the residue of the heathen that are round about.

5 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Surely the high places of the earth," Deut. xxxii. 13, i.e. taking possession of the fortresses or places which command the rest of the country.

Ver. 3. Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers. Your calamities have made you become a proverb, by-word, and a reproach among the heathen round about you, according to the threatenings of the prophets denounced against you (see Deut. xxvii. 37).

Ver. 4. To the residue of the heathen. To these heathens that are left, after the general desolations threatened upon the neighbouring countries, Moab, Edom, Ammon, &c. (compare ver. 36, Jer. xxv. 30, xlvii. 4).
in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen, and against all Idaunia, which have appointed my land into their possession with the joy of all their heart, with despightful minds, to cast it out for a prey.

6 Prophesy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury, because ye have borne the shame of the heathen:

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I have lifted up mine hand, Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

8 But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come.

9 For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown:

10 And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be built:

11 And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will setle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

12 Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and

Ver. 5. In the fire of my jealousy] In that fervent zeal and concern that I have for my own honour, which is blasphemed among the heathen (see xxxv. 12, 13, compare xxxviii. 19, xxxix. 25).

Which have appointed my land] See xxxv. 12.

Ver. 6.] See xxxiv. 29, xxxv. 12, 13.

Ver. 7. I have lifted up mine hand.] I have solemnly sworn (see xx. 5, &c.).

Ver. 8. For they are at hand to come.] This may have an immediate aspect upon the Jews’ return from Babylon, when they were restored to the possession of their own country. If we suppose the words to relate to the general restoration of the nation, the longest distance of time that the things of this world can extend to, is but as a moment in respect of eternity (compare Heb. x. 37, Phil. iv. 5).

Ver. 10. The wastes shall be built.] Compare ver. 33. This may likewise have been in some measure fulfilled at their return from Babylon (compare Isa. lviii. 13, lix. 4).

Ver. 11. I will multiply upon you man and beast.] As God in his judgments threatens to cut off man and beast from them (see xiv. 15): so here he promises to replenish it with both (compare Jer. xxxii. 27, xxxiii. 12).

And will do better unto you than at your beginnings.] In bestowing upon you the blessings of the gospel; the promises of which were made first to the Jews and to their children (Acts ii. 39). The words may likewise imply, that God would give them a more lasting and secure possession of their land than ever they had before (see the following verses).

Ver. 12. Men to walk upon you.] O mountains or land of Israel (ver. 8).

Ver. 13. Thou land devourestr up men.] The neighbouring people raised this ill character upon the land of Judæa, because of the severe judgments of the thou shalt do more henceforth bereave them of men.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations:

14 Therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord God.

15 Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou hear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God.

16 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman.

18 Wherefore I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it:

19 And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries; according to their way and according to their doings I judged them.

20 And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land.
21 ¶ But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

22 Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

23 And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

24 For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

25 ¶ Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

26 A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away being often taken impersonally. By their evil practices they wrought a scandal upon my name, and gave occasion to the heathen to say, See what profane wretches these are who call themselves by the name of God's people, whom he hath justly expelled out of their country which he had given them. The Chaldee paraphrase understands the words to this sense: "If these are God's people, why does he suffer them to be turned out of the land which he made the place of his own especial residence! why does he not continue to protect them?" But the former sense agrees better with the scope of the text, and with St. Paul's application of it to the Jews of his own time, Rom. ii. 24, and with what follows, ver. 31.

Ver. 21. I had pity for mine holy name.] "I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted among the heathen," as the prophet speaks, xx. 9.

Ver. 22. I do not this for your sakes.] The promises I make in your favour in the following verses, are not owing to any desert of yours, but purely to vindicate my own honour (see ver. 32, and compare Deut. xii. 2, 5, Ps. cxi. 5, Ps. cxxv. 4).

Ver. 23. I will sanctify my great name, &c.] I will give illustrious proofs of my power and goodness, and vindicate my honour from the reproaches with which it has been blasphemed among the heathen, upon the occasion of your evil doings.

The heathen shall know that I am the Lord.] The return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity was taken notice of by the heathens, as a signal instance of God's providence towards them (see Ps. cxxvi. 2); and their general conversion will be a much more remarkable proof of my fulfilling the promises made to their fathers; so that the heathens themselves will be forced to take notice of it (see xxxvii. 25). It will be an effectual argument to convince infidels that your nation, and the rest of the true Israelites, are the only church of God, and professors of his truth (see Zech. viii. 23).

When I shall be sanctified in you] When I shall "sanctify my name," as it is expressed in the former part of the verse, and make my power and goodness known to the world (see the notes on xx. 41, xxviii. 22).

27 And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

28 And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

29 I will also save you from all your uncleannesses: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you.

30 And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

31 Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

32 Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.
CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones,

2 And caused me to pass by them round about: and, behold, there were very many in the open valley: and, lo, they were very dry.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest.

4 Again he said unto me, Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.

5 Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

6 And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

7 So I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

8 And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.

9 Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

Ver. 4. O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.] A prophetic and lively representation of that voice of the Son of God, which "all that are in the graves shall hear" at the last day, "and shall come forth out of them" (John v. 25, 29).

Ver. 5. I will cause breath.] The "breath of life," as it is expressed, Gen. ii. 7 (compare Ps. civ. 30).

Ver. 7. As I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking.] Such a noise, or commotion, as we may suppose the bones of a human body would make upon their meeting together again, after having been severed one from another.

Ver. 9. Prophesy unto the wind.] Or rather, "to the breath," meaning that vital principle which unites body and soul together, and is mentioned as distinct from the four winds in the following words.

Come from the four winds, O breath.] The words figuratively represent the restoration of the Jewish nation from the several countries whither they were dispersed over the world, expressed by their being.

3E
EZEKIEL.

16 So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

17 And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.

18 And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these?

19 Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

19 * And the sticks whereon thou wastest shall be in thine hand before their eyes.

20 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

21 And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one house of Israel.

Ver. 16. An exceeding great army.] To signify the great numbers they will amount to, when they return from their several dispersions, and unite into one body. They are elsewhere styled "a remnant," but that is in comparison of the whole nation (see notes upon Isa. iv. 2, x. 22, xxvii. 12, 13).

Ver. 17. Join them one to another into one stick.] A rod or sceptre is an emblem of power (see Ps. cx. 2); so the joining these two rods or sticks together, denotes uniting the two kingdoms under one prince or governor (see ver. 22).

Ver. 18. Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these? Ezekiel foretold many things by signs, and the Jews were very inquisitive into the meaning of them; though sometimes their curiosity proceeded rather from a secret contempt of the prophet and his predictions, than a real desire of information (see xii. 9, xviii. 12, xx. 49, xxxiv. 19).

Ver. 19. Which is the hand of Ephraim.] Of which he is the head (see ver. 16).

They shall be one in mine hand.] I will make them one nation, and appoint one king to rule over them, the Messiah (see ver. 22).

Ver. 20. Thou shalt place the sticks or rods thus joined together before their eyes, as a visible token or pledge of the truth of what I enjoin thee to speak to them in the following words.

Ver. 21.] See xx. 24, xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 21, xxxix. 25.

Ver. 22.] I will make them one nation.] They shall not be divided any more into separate kingdoms; the consequence of which was their setting up separate ways of worship, and espousing separate interests (compare Isa. xi. 13). It has been already observed, that the prophecies which foretell of the general restoration of the Jews, join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that blessing.

One king shall be king to them all.] The Messiah, who is that one shepherd and prince that shall rule over them all as one nation (see xxxiv. 23, 24, com-king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all:

23 Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, where they have sinned, and will cleanse them, so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

24 And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall all have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them.

25 And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your pared with Luke i. 32, 33. The Messias is described as king of the Jews in most of the prophetic of the Old Testament, beginning with that of Gen. xlix. 10, concerning Shiloh. From David's time he is commonly spoken of as the person in whom the promises relating to the perpetuity of David's kingdom were to be accomplished. This was a truth unanimously owned by the Jews (see John i. 49) to which our Saviour bore testimony before Pontius Pilate, when the question being put to him, Art thou a king? he made answer, Thou sayest the truth; for I am a king: thus those words should be translated, for St. Paul alluding to them, calls them a good confession, 1 Tim. vi. 13. The same truth Pontius Pilate himself asserted in that inscription which he providentially ordered to be written upon the cross (see John xix. 19, 22): so that the chief priests impiously renounced their own avowed principles, when they told Pilate that they had no king but Caesar (ibid, ver. 15).

Ver. 23. Neither shall they defile themselves any more] See note upon xxxvi. 25.

Nor with their detestable things.] Or, "abominations," as the word shikkuth is elsewhere translated, and commonly applied to idols (see xx. 7, 2 Kings xxiii. 13, Dan. ix. 27).

Nor with any of their transgressions.] This expression comprehends in it, their being touched with a hearty compunction for their great sin of rejecting and crucifying the Messias, their king and Saviour (see Zech. xii. 10).

And will cleanse them.] See xxxvi. 20, 25, 28.

fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever: and my servant David shall be their prince for ever.

26 Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.

27 My tabernacle shall also be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

28 And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.

Walk in my judgments.] See xxxvi. 27.

Ver. 25.] A promise often repeated in this prophecy (see ver. 12, 21, and the note on xxviii. 25).

Ver. 26.] See xxxiv. 23. The words may likewise be understood in a spiritual sense, that God will be reconciled to them through Christ, and admit them into that covenant of peace, of which he is the mediator, and therefore is called "our peace," Eph. ii. 14. And then the following words, "It shall be an everlasting covenant with them," may fitly be explained of the gospel, being such a covenant as shall never be abolished, or give way to any new dispensation (compare Isa. lv. 3, Jer. xxxii. 40).

Ibid, and ver. 27.] God's placing first his tabernacle, and then his temple among the Jews, was a pledge and token of his presence among them, and protection over them (see Lev. xxvi. 11, 12, and the note upon xl. 16 of this prophecy). And here he promises new and more valuable tokens of his presence among them, by the graces of his Holy Spirit, and the efficacy of his word and sacraments (compare 2 Cor. vi. 16); and perhaps will vouchsafe them some extraordinary appearance of the divine majesty (see xliii. 4, 5, 7, Zech. ii. 5).

I will be their God, &c.] See xi. 20.

Ver. 29.] The conversion of the Jewish nation, and their being restored to their former state of favour and acceptance with God, will be a work of providence taken notice of by the heathens themselves, who shall join themselves to the Jews, as the church of God and temple of truth (see xxxvi. 23).
hold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:
4 And I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords:
5 Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them; all of them with shield and helmet:
6 Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands; and many people with thee.

By Gog and Magog may most probably here be meant the Turks, who were originally natives of Tartary, called Turkeston by the eastern writers; and whose language is derived from that of the Tartars. The land of Canaan hath been, for several years, in the possession of the Turks: several texts in Ezekiel foretell the Jews’ settlement in that country again; and some of the expressions in this and the following chapter intimate, that the people called here by the name of Gog, and their allies, will attempt to recover it again out of the hands of the Jews, its rightful owners: they probably occasion the war and victory here spoken of. But this is what cannot be positively affirmed; only thus much one may venture to say, that since the whole strength of Europe was so unsuccessful in their attempts to recover that land out of the hands of the infidels in the holy war, it looks as if God had reserved that work to some farther time of his own appointment, when that country should be the scene of some extraordinary event of providence. We may further observe, that the second see, mentioned Rev. ix. 13, xi. 14, is by many learned men understood of the Turkish empire; and in consequence of that interpretation, the putting an end to that tyranny, will be an introduction to some extraordinary changes in the Christian part of the world.

The chief prince of Meshech and Tubal] The king or head of all those northern nations which lie upon the Euxine sea (see the notes upon xxvii. 13). The Turk is called “the king of the north” in Daniel, xi. 40, as several commentators interpret that place. The LXX. interpreters take the word ῥόσα, commonly translated chief, for a proper name; so they render the sentence thus, “The prince of Rosia, Meshech, and Tubal.” Rosha, taken as a proper name, signifies those inhabitants of Scythia, from whence the Russians derive their name and origin.

Ver. 4. I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws.] I will disappoint all thy designs, and turn thee about as easily as a fisherman masters a great fish, when he hath once fastened the hook into his jaws (see xxix. 4).

And I will bring thee forth.] The sense would be plainer, if the words were thus translated, “After I have brought thee forth,” &c. In which sense the copulative ενα is sometimes used (see Noldius’s Concordance, p. 291).

Horses and horsemen.] See ver. 15.

Ver. 5. Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them.] Their allies, Ethiopia and Libya, are called Cush and Phut in the Hebrew, and are joined together as allies, xxx. 5 (see note there). Persians are joined in like manner with Africans, xxviii. 10.

All of them with shield and helm:] So the Libyans, or people of Phut, are described, Jer. xlvii. 9, as “handling the shield;” i.e. being remarkable for their great and large shields, as Zenophon relates of them (Cyroped. lib. vii.).

7 Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them.

8 ¶ After many days thou shalt be visited: in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste; but it is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them.

9 Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee.

Ver. 6. Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters.] Gomer is joined with Magog, Gen. x. 2, and probably signifies Guta, Phrygia, and Bithynia, which, with Cappadocia, denoted by Togarmah, comprehends all the northern parts of Asia Minor, which border upon the Euxine sea (see the meaning of Togarmah explained in the note upon xxvii. 14).

Many people with thee.] Those of Cilicia, Pamphilia, and other nations inhabiting Asia Minor.

Ver. 7. Be thou prepared.] The prophet ironically encourages Gog, and his allies, to make this attempt, and muster all his forces together, that God may gain the greater honour by their signal defeat (see ver. 16, and compare Jer. xlvi. 2, 3, 14, li. 12).

Be thou a guard unto them.] Let them rely upon thy prowess and conduct as their leader.

Ver. 8. After many days thou shalt be visited:] This judgment shall be inflicted by God upon thee (compare Isa. xx. 6), after a succession of many generations: “In the latter years,” or days, as it follows here, and ver. 16, i. e. towards the end of the world (compare Dan. viii. 28) particularly the expression of “latter days,” or years, is used to denote the times of the general restoration of the Jewish nation (see Deut. iv. 30, Jer. xxx. 24, Hos. iii. 5).

Thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword.] The land is put for the people of the land, who are said to be “brought back from the sword,” as they are elsewhere styled a remnant; i.e. those that should survive after the hardships they had suffered in their several dispersions, and the judgments that should fall upon the disobedient, in their return home (see the notes upon xx. 34, 38, and upon xxii. 19). And upon this account, Jeremiah xxxii. 2, may be best explained to this sense, “The people that were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness.” The whole chapter relates to the general conversion and restoration of the Jews; and the prophet speaks in that verse of the favours God would show to those that should escape the severe judgments that should destroy the disobedient in their passage home to their own country, called the desert, or wilderness, by Isaiah, xl. 3, and by Ezekiel, “the wilderness of the people,” or nations, xx. 35 (see notes upon that place).

Gathered out of many people.] See xxxiv. 13.

Against the mountains of Israel, [see xxxvi. 1. 4] which have been always waste.] Or rather, “altogether waste,” as the LXX. rightly translate it. And they shall dwell safely all of them.] Or, “And they have dwelt safely all of them;” the future tense being often put for the proter-perfect. The sense is, that after the return of the people of Israel into their own country, and their having lived there for some time in peace and safety, this enemy will think to take advantage of their security, and fall upon them unexpectedly (compare ver. 11).
10 Thus said the Lord God; It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought:
11 And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates,
12 To take a spoil, and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land.
13 Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey?

Ver.9. Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm; A comparison elsewhere made use of to express the devastations which attend a destroying army (see xiii. 11, Isa. xxviii. 2).
10 Thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land; Thou shalt overspread the land like a dark cloud, which makes every thing look melanochly and dismal (see xxx. 3, Jer. iv. 15).
11 To the land of unwalled villages; A description of a people that live securely without any apprehension of danger (compare Jer. xlix. 31).

To them—that dwell safely; According to the promise often repeated in the prophet, that "in those days Israel should dwell safely, and none should make them afraid" (see xxxiv. 28, Jer. xxiii. 6, and note there).

12 To turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited; Judaea is described as a country which lay desolate before the Jews' return into it (see xxxvi. 34, 35). After it had been for some time rehiabited, Gog and his associates designed to fall upon it with all their forces; in that sense "to turn the hand" is taken, Isa. i. 25 (see note there).

In the midst of the land; In the navel of the land, as the Hebrew reads, i.e. in Jerusalem, because that stood near the middle of the holy land, and likewise was situate upon a rising ground, which the Hebrew metaphorically expresses by the navel (see budg. ix. 37).

13 Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish; These were people that dealt much in trade: the two former dwelling in the east, the latter often sailing from the Spanish coasts into the eastern parts: they are mentioned xxxii. 12, 15, 20, 22, as having commerce with Tyre, which bordered upon Judæa. These merchants, as soon as they heard of this intended invasion, came into Gog's camp as to a market, to buy both persons and goods which should come into the conqueror's power (see note upon xxxvi. 2).

With all the young lions thereof; The Targum understands it of their kings, i.e. their chief merchants, who are described as so many princes, Isa. xxiii. 8, and are called lions, because of the injustice and cruelty with which they used to plunder the merchants of commerce (see xxviii. 16). But the LXX. translate the word kephirim, towns or villages; in which sense it is taken, Neh. vi. 2, and in other places.

Ver. 14. In that day; At that remarkable time, when God shall bring again the captivity of Israel and Judah, so often spoken of by the prophets (see the note upon Is. iv. 2).

When my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it? As soon as the news of their being settled in their own country comes to thy knowledge, thou wilt certainly make preparations to invade them.

Ver. 15. Out of the north parts; See ver. 6.

All of them riding upon horses, &c; The character here given of this people, may properly be applied to the Turks, the chief strength of whose armies consists in their cavalry, and the great numbers of them that they bring into the field, as the writers of the Turkish history observe; compare Rev. ix. 16, which place several interpreters expound of the Turks. We may not improbably apply those words of the prophet Zechariah to the event here spoken of, xliii. 4, "I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness; and will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah."

Ver. 16. As a cloud to cover the land; See ver. 9. That the heathen may know me; This signal victory over Gog and his associates, shall be a means of bringing infidels to give glory unto me (compare xxiv. 21, and see the note upon xxxvi. 29).

Ver. 17. Art thou he? The words would be more significant if they were translated "Art thou not he?" A sense which he, the particle of interrogation, often imports (see note upon xx. 4).

Of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants—which prophesied in these days many years; Or, and years. The prophet is speaking here of some of these old prophets (see God's people) that will be subdued by the immediate hand of heaven, which victory should make way for glorious times of peace and prosperity. This enemy is said to be foretold "of old by the prophets;" and it is therefore probably described under the names of such nations as were the chief enemies to the Jews in the particular times of each prophet. Such we may suppose the Assyrian to be, spoken of by Isaiah, xiv. 24, 25, and by Micah, v. 5. The same enemy may probably be intended under the name of Tyre (see the note on xxviii. 24); of Egypt (see note upon xxix. 21, and compare Isa. xi. 15 with Zech. x. 11); of Moab (see Isa. xiv. 10); of Edom (see Isa. xxxiv. 6, lxiii. 1, Joel iii. 20, Obad. ver. 18, 19); and under the name of Leviathan, Isa. xxvii. 1. To these we may add the Chaldean people, who are represented to be a great and general destruction of God's enemies before the day of judgment, or consummation of all things.

Such are Ps. cx. 5, 6, Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, xxxiv. 1, &c, lxvi. 16, Jer. xxx. 7, 10, Joel iii. 9, 14, Obad. ver. 15, &c, Zech. xil. 1, xiv. 1, &c. Zechariah lived, indeed, after Ezekiel's time, but a great while before the coming of the Messiah, and his prophecies were commonly practised in their expressions here used, of "old time," and "which prophesied in those days [and] years," plainly imply, that the prophets of Israel, when prophesied in those days many years that I would bring thee against them?

18 And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face.

19 For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel;

20 So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground.

21 And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother.

22 And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone.

23 Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord.

there was to be a succession of many ages between the publishing those prophecies and this event foretold by them; and therefore seem to look beyond the times of Antichus Epiphanes, to which some expositors apply this place of Ezekiel (see note xxxix. 9).

Ver. 18. My fury shall come up in my face.] An expression taken from human passions, which cause the blood to fly up into the face. So Isaiah describes Almighty God as "burning with anger, his lips being full of indignation, and his tongue as a consuming fire," xxx. 27 (see note upon that place).

Ver. 19. For in my jealousy.] See xxxvi. 5, xxxix. 25. In that day there shall be a great shaking.] Great changes and alterations in kingdoms and governments are expressed in Scripture by "shaking of heaven and earth, the sea and the dry land" (see Heb. xii. 11; Gen. xvi. 7, 21; 22, 28; xliii. 26) and by earthquakes (Rev. vi. 12, xi. 13, xvi. 8).

Ver. 20. So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, &c.] Every part of the creation shall bear its share of this calamity, as if there were a confusion of the whole frame of nature (compare Jer. iv. 24, &c. Hos. iv. 5). The prophets often describe God's judgments upon particular countries or persons as if it were a dissolution of the whole world, because his particular judgments are an earnest of the general judgment (see his notes upon Isa. xiii. 10).

The mountains shall be thrown down, &c.] These expressions may probably be meant of walls, towers, and other fortifications, which are dismantled and demolished in the time of war (compare Jer. lii. 25).

Ver. 21. I will call for a sword against him] I will appoint a sword to destroy him (compare xiv. 17). God's decrees are expressed by his speaking the word, and giving out his command. So he is said to "call for a dearth upon the land of Canaan," Ps. cv. 16. Throughout all my mountains.] See ver. 8.

Every man's sword shall be against his brother.] God often destroys his enemies by intestine quarrels among themselves, and making them executioners of his judgments upon each other (see 2 Chron. xxvii. 7, Judg. vii. 22, 1 Sam. xiv. 20).

Ver. 22. I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood.] Or, "I will plead with him" (see xxvii. 8). God pleads with men by his judgments, which are a manifest token of the vengeance due to their sins (see Isa. lvii. 21; Jer. xxx. 31). Pestilence is joined with blood here, as it is xv. 17, xiv. 10, xxviii. 23.

And I will rain upon him—an overflowing rain, and great hailstones.] God shall as plainly show himself in the destruction of these his enemies, as when he consumed Sodom and Gomorrah by fire and brimstone from heaven (Gen. xix. 24), and discomfited the armies of the Canaanites and Philistines by tempests of thunder and hail (see Josh. x. 10. 1 Sam. viii. 10, compare Ps. xi. 6, Isa. xxiv. 6, xxx. 30, and see xlix. 11 of this prophecy).

Ver. 23. Thus will I magnify myself.] Compare ver. 16, and see note upon xxxvi. 23.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 Therefore, thou son of man, prophe西 against Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will break the arm of Meshech, and Tubal: And I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee, and will cause thee to come up from the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel: And I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand.

At the Argument of the foregoing chapter. 1 Ver. 1. O Gog, the chief prince] See xxxviii. 2. Ver. 2. I will turn thee back.] See ibid. ver. 4. And leave but the sixth part of thee.] So the word skisha, or shishah, as it is read with a different termination, signifies, xlv. 13. Others render it, hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand.

4 Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee; I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured.

5 Thou shalt fall upon the open field: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

"I will strike thee with six plagues," viz. those mentioned xxxviii. 22. And will cause thee to come up from the north parts, &c.] The words may be better translated, "After I have caused thee to come up from the north parts, and have brought thee upon the mountains of Israel," see a like construction, xxxviii. 4.

Ver. 3. I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand.] "There shall be no might in thy hand," as Moses 6 And I will send a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell carelessly in the isles: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

7 So will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel; and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more: and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, the Holy One in Israel.

8 ¶ Behold, it is come, and it is done, saith the Lord God; this is the day whereof I have spoken.

9 And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth, and shall set on fire and burn the weapons, both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the handstaves, and the spears; and they shall burn them with fire seven years:

10 So that they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forests: for they shall burn the weapons with fire: and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God.

threatens the Israelites, Deut. xxviii. 32. Thou shalt not be able to use thy weapons to any purpose.

Ver. 4.] See ver. 17, and xxxviii. 27.

Ver. 6. I will send a fire on Magog; I will consume him by fire and brimstone out of heaven (see xxxviii. 22). Fire doth likewise signify the fierceness of God's judgments (see note upon xxx. 8).

Among them that dwell carelessly in the isles.] The inhabitants of the sea-coast which dwell securely, and think no harm can come upon them. The expression relates to the "merchants of Tarshish," and others mentioned xxxviii. 13. All countries lying upon the sea-coast are called islands in the Hebrew language.

Ver. 7. So will I make my holy name known] See ver. 21, and xxxviii. 16, 23.

I will not let them pollute my holy name any more.] The words in the Hebrew run thus, "I will not pollute my holy name any more;" i.e. I will not suffer it to be polluted, as the verbs active often signify only permission (see the note upon xiv. 9). The sense is, I will not suffer my name to be dishonoured any more, nor let it be said among the heathen, that the Lord is not able to rescue my people out of the hand of their enemies.

Ver. 8. It is come, and it is done.] The time appointed for this great destruction is come, and it is the last and finishing stroke of God's justice upon the enemies of his church and truth (compare Rev. xvi. 17, xxii. 6).

This is the day whereof I have spoken.] "By my servants the prophets," xxxviii. 17.

Ver. 9. And shall set on fire and burn the weapons, &c.] In token of an entire conquest, and that such a lasting peace should ensue that there should be no more need of warlike preparations (compare Ps. xlv. 9).

Seven years.] The burning the weapons of war must be the consequent of a complete victory: so that the "seven years" here mentioned cannot be meant, as some would understand them, of those terrible conflicts which the Jews had with Antiochus Epiphanes, from the 143d or 145th year of the era Seleucidarum (according to the different computations of the beginning of that persecution; see 1 Mac. xi. 39, 40), to the 151st year of the same era, when Nicanor was slain (1 Mac. vii. 1, 45). Nor is that true which this opinion supposes, viz. that Nic- canor's death put an end to the troubles of the Jews;

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the sea: and it shall stop the noses of the passengers: and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude: and they shall call it The valley of Hamon-gog.

12 And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them, that they may cleanse the land.

13 Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them; and it shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord God.

14 And they shall sever out men of continual employment, passing through the land to bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it: after the end of seven months shall they search.

15 And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seedeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the burners have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog.

for after that "there was great affliction in Israel, the like whereof had not been since the time that a prophet had not been seen among them," as the same writer informs us, 1 Mac. ix. 27. So that this passage of Ezekiel's prophecy must necessarily be expanded of some other event.

Ver. 10. So that they shall take no wood out of the field.] The quantity of these weapons will afford sufficient fuel for all that time. They shall spoil those that spoiled them. The same measure they dealt to others, shall be measured out to them again (compare Isa. xiv. 2, xxiii. 1, Rev. xiii. 10, xviii. 6).

Ver. 11. The valley of the passengers on the east of the sea.] i.e. The sea of Gennezareth, as the Chaldee paraphrase explains it. In the Hebrew language all lakes are called by the name of seas. The same is called the eastern sea (xliv. 16), to distinguish it from the Mediterranean, called the "great sea westward," Jesh. xxiii. 4. The valley near this sea or lake is called "the valley of the passengers," because it was a great road by which the merchants and traders from Syria and other eastern lands went into Egypt.

It shall stop the noses of the passengers.] Or, "the passengers shall stop their noses," viz. to avoid the smell of so many carcases: the transient is often taken in a passive or impersonal sense, as hath been observed upon Isa. xlv. 18.

Ver. 13. All the people of the land shall bury them.] See note on the following verse.

It shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified.] Or, "the day that I shall be glorified, shall be to them [a day] of renown;" i.e. a remarkable day of joy and gladness (see ver. 21, 22).

Ver. 14. To bury with the passengers those that remain.] The latter part of the sentence may more clearly be translated thus, "even burners with the passengers, [to bury] those that remain," &c. For the passengers or searchers are distinguished from those whose office it is to bury the dead, in the following verse.

After the end of seven months shall they search.] All the people shall be employed seven months in burying the dead (ver. 13), and after they are ended, particular persons appointed for that purpose, shall make their search.

Ver. 15. Then shall he set up a sign by it.] A stone or some other mark of distinction, that men may 16 And also the name of the city shall be Hamonah. Thus shall they cleanse the land.

17 ¶ And, thou, son of man, thus saith the Lord God: Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood.

18 Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams, of lambs, and of goats, of bullocks, all of them fatlings of Bashan.

19 And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken, of my sacrifice which I have sacrificed for you.

20 Thus ye shall be filled at my table with horses and chariots, with mighty men, and with all men of war, saith the Lord God.

21 And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them.

22 So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward.

23 ¶ And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniavoid passing over them (see the Excerpts out of Dr. Pocock’s Miscellany Notes, in the Synopsis upon Luke xi. 44).

Ver. 16. And also the name of the city shall be Hamonah.] This is probably meant of a city that should be afterward built near this valley, and called Hamonah, signifying a multitude, to perpetuate the memory of such a transaction.

Ver. 17. Speak unto every feathered fowl, &c.] It was the custom for persons that offered sacrifice to invite their friends to the feast that was made of the remainder (see Gen. xxxiv. 54, 1 Sam. ix. 13). So here the prophet, by God’s command, invites the beasts and fowls to partake of the sacrifice of his enemies’ slain.

Gather yourselves—to my sacrifice! The slaughter of God’s enemies is called a sacrifice, because it is offered up as an atonement to the divine justice (compare this verse with Isaa. xxxiv. 6, Zeph. i. 7, Rev. xix. 17).

Upon the mountains of Israel.] Where this great army was to be destroyed (see ver. 4).

Ver. 18. Of rams, of lambs.] Of all ranks and kinds, who shall be brought like beasts to the slaughter (compare Ps. lxviii. 31, Isaa. xxxiv. 6, Jer. l. 27, li. 40).

Ver. 19. And drink blood till ye be drunken.] Or be filled, or satisfied: for so the Hebrew raqch usually signifies (see Cant. v. 1, Jer. xxxi. 14, 25, Hag. i. 6): and the Greek verb διακόμισθαι is taken in the same sense, John ii. 10, and so I conceive it should be understood, 1 Cor. xi. 21, where the apostle, re-proving the abuse of their love-feasts, saith, “One quity: because they trespassed against me, therefore hid I my face from them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies: so fell they all by the sword.

24 According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

25 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name;

26 After that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwell safely in their land, and none made them afraid.

27 When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies’ lands, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations;

28 Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen: but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there.

29 Neither will I hide my face any more from them: for I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God.
that the city was smitten, in the self-same day the hand of the Lord was upon me, and brought me thither.

CHAP. XL.

Argument.—The general Argument to the following chapter.

God having forsaken the city and temple of Jerusalem, and given them up to destruction, for the idolatries and other sins committed there: in this and the following chapters, he sheweth to the prophet, in vision, the model or plan of another temple, of the same dimensions with that built by Solomon; as Villalpandus, and other learned men, with great probability, suppose. David had the pattern of that temple, which Solomon was to build, revealed to him by God (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 19): as Moses had the model of the tabernacle represented to him by a vision, while he was in the mount (Exod. xxv. 40). And here the plan of Solomon's temple is again discovered to Ezekiel, who, foretelling the destruction of this temple by the Chaldeans, shows how highly it was valued by the Jews when he calls it, "the excellency of their strength," and "the desire of their eyes" (xxiv. 21). They looked upon it as the honour, glory, and safeguard of their nation. This lying in ruins at the time of this vision, the Jews had need of being comforted, instructed, and humbled upon that occasion; they would not have cared for the thoughts of returning home, were there no promise made of restoring the temple, as well as their commonwealth; the temple being the pledge of God's presence among them. Moses's ritual law, and the Mosaic rites have been adapted to the manners of the gentiles, where they lived, if the expectations of a new temple, to which most of its rites were fitted, had not restrained their propensity to idolatry; and they would have been dispersed beyond measure, as they were afterward, upon sight of their second temple, if the prophet had plainly foretold, that their new temple should fall short of the glory of the old one; they were therefore to be encouraged to the observation of their law, with the hopes of returning to rebuild their temple, which should be finished after the plan of that of Solomon.

We cannot suppose any exact model of Solomon's temple remaining, which might be transmitted to those that returned from the captivity; for it was above seventy years from the destruction of the first temple to the finishing of the second, in the sixth year of Darius (Ezra vi. 15). During which interval, the ancient priests must all be dead; and those that were younger priests could have but confused and very imperfect ideas of it. To direct them, therefore, in the dimensions, parts, order, and rules of their new temple, is one reason why Ezekiel is so particular in the description of the old. And, no doubt, but Zerubbabel's temple was accordingly conformable to that of Solomon, in figure, disposition of parts, and order of the whole fabric and service. If in state or magnificence there was some variety; that is to be imputed to the necessity of their circumstances, and doth not imply any essential alteration.

However, the building being found inferior to the model here prescribed, the first discovery of which was a sensible mortification to the ancient men that had seen the first temple (Ezra iii. 12), it was natural for the Jews of former ages, that studied the style of prophecy, to conclude, as many of the Jewish writers of later times have done, that Ezekiel's temple had a further view, and the chief intent and design of it was that to be fulfilled under the Messias. Whatever was august and illustrous in the prophetic figures, and not literally fulfilled in or near their own times, those things were justly thought to belong to the days of the Messias; but as for minor circumstances, there is no more necessity of giving them a place in the spiritual application of a prophecy, than in the explication of a parable. The temple, and the temple-worship, was a proper figure of Christ's church, and of the spiritual worship to be instituted by him: and the notions of the Jews were to be raised by degrees to a farther and higher meaning, hereafter to be completed, without destroying their obligations to the statutes and ordinances God enjoined for the present.

There was the more reason for Ezekiel's keeping to the figure of Solomon's temple, in speaking of the times of the Messias, because Solomon was a type of the Messias chiefly in this respect, that he was to build a house for the name and worship of God, according to Nathan's prophecy (2 Sam. vii. 13, 14); several parts of which prophecy are applied to Christ in the New Testament (see Heb. i. 5, Luke i. 32); this exposition of that place receives a farther confirmation from hence, that other prophets foretold the same thing concerning the Messias. Beside those passages in Ezekiel which are under our present subject, Zecha-
In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel, and set me upon a very high mountain, by which was as the frame of a city on the south.

And he brought me thither, and, behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed: and he stood in the gate.

And the man said unto me, Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, bims, no visible glory; but four of the four-and-twenty courses of the priests returned from Babylon (see Ezra ii. 36, 39).

Upon the whole we may conclude that the general scope of Ezekiel's temple is, by giving a promise of restoring Solomon's, to preserve the Jews from defiling themselves with idolatry during their captivity; and when the time of that should be expired, to encourage them to go home, and rebuild their temple, and observe the laws and ordinances prescribed by Moses, for performing God's worship there, which yet was never to be equal to Solomon's in every respect, before the Messiah should come, who should supply its deficiencies, and whose church should resemble Solomon's temple in symmetry and beauty, in firmness and duration, in a regular, orderly, and decent worship of the true God, and in the manifestation of the divine presence, at first by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, and ever since by the inward assistances, comforts, and protection of the same Spirit.

The fortieth chapter contains a description of the two outward courts, with the chambers thereto belonging, together with the porch of the temple.

Ver. 1. Five and twentieth year.] See i. 2.

In the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, i.e. The first month, called here the "beginning of the year," which in the ecclesiastical computation was the month Nisan. The word month, likewise taken indefinitely, signifies the first month, xxvi. 1.

In the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten, Zedekiah's reign commenced from Jehoiachin's captivity, in the eleventh year of whose reign the city was destroyed (Jer. Hi. 5, 6). So the fourteenth year after the destruction of the city must be coincident with the twenty-fifth of Jehoiachin's captivity.

The hand of the Lord was upon me.] See i. 3.

Ver. 2. In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel.] See note upon viii. 3.

Set me upon a very high mountain.] The expression points out Mount Moriah, whereon the temple was built, which is here called "a very high mountain;" because it represents the seat of the Christian church, foretold by the prophets that it should be "established upon the top of the mountains" (see Isa. ii. 1. Mic. iv. 1, compared with Rev. xxi. 10).

By which was as the frame of a city on the south.] Mount Moriah lay southward of the hill of Zion, or the city of David, though both of them lay northward in respect of the lower part of the city, which from the times of Solomon was most commonly called by the name of Jerusalem (see Ps. xlvii. 2. Isa. xiv. 13, and Dr. Lightfoot's Geographical Description of Jerusalem, ch. 22). So the words describe the situation of the temple on the south side of mount Zion: which with all its courts, buildings, and walls encompassing the courts, and the whole area, or holy mountain (see xlii. 20), resembled a and set thine heart upon all that I shall shew thee; for to the intent that I might shew them unto thee art thou brought hither: declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.

And behold a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the reed, and an hand breadth: so he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

There came he unto the gate which looketh city for bigness. So Taci tus (lib. v. Hist.) describes the temple built as like a citadel for strength and largeness.

Or we may suppose that the prophet being brought by the Spirit from Chaldea into the land of Israel, which lay southward of Babylon (see i. 4), might see placed just before his eyes a representation of the city and temple, standing upon an eminence, both in respect of their natural situation, and that the prophet might take a better view of them: for it appears from xviii. 10, &c., that he had a view of the holy city which was to be restored, as well as of the temple.

Ver. 3. There was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass.] Or burnedish or polished brass, as we read i. 7. Dan. x. 6, that is, of a bright or flaming colour. This seems to be an inferior angel, because he is distinguished from the divine glory, or the Logos appearing in the Shechim, xliii. 8 (compare ix. 3).

With a line of faze in his hand, and a measuring reed.] The use of the line was to measure the land of Israel, and of the reed, to take the dimensions of the buildings in and about the temple; as also to set out several portions of land belonging to the sanctuary and city, to the prince and people (see xlv. 1, &c. xlii. 3, &c.).

He stood in the gate.] Probably the north gate, being the first entrance the prophet may be supposed to have arrived to, as he came from Chaldea, which lay northward of Judea (see the note upon ver. 2).

Ver. 4. Son of man.] See note upon ii. 1.

Behold with thine eyes—declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.] Compare xliii. 10, xlv. 5.

The temple now represented, was partly designed to assure the people that their temple should be restored, and to serve them partly as a model, by which they should rebuild it at their return from captivity. The Jewish writers do confirm this opinion, when they tell us, "That the children of the captivity, who returned from Babylon, followed the platform of that temple, which Ezekiel described, as far as their circumstances would allow" (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 10).

Ver. 5. A wall on the outside of the house round about.] A wall went round the whole compass or square of the holy mountain whereon the temple was situate, to separate the holy ground from that which was profane (see xlii. 20).

In the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the reed, and an hand breadth.] The prophet explains what sort of cubit he means in the following delineation of the temple: viz. such one as consists of six hand-breadths, or one hand-breadth over the cubit used in Chaldea, where he now lived (compare xlii. 8, xliii. 15.) This is the measure of a scripture cubit, generally agreed to be equivalent to the eighth of a foot and a half of our measure (see Bishop Cumberland, of Scripture Weights and Measures, p. 36, &c.).

He measured the breadth—and the height, one reed.
The breadth or thickness of the wall was equal to the height of it.

Ver. 9. This came he unto the gate which looketh toward the east. The temple being placed toward the west part of the holy mountain, as the sanctuary was at the west end of the temple (see the note upon viii. 16), this was the first gate that led to it. This gate opened into the first court, or the court of the people (see ver. 19), and is called the king's gate, 1 Chron. ix. 18, as being built by king Solomon.

Went up the stairs. Which consisted of seven steps, as the Septuagint expressly mentioned (compare ver. 22, 26).

And measured the [one] threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad, &c. He went up the stairs, that he might more easily measure the upper lintel, as well as the lower threshold. The word σφήν, translated threshold, signifies the lintel, or upper part of the door-case, as well as the threshold properly so called, or lower part of it. The plural σπίπποι comprehends both: see xli. 16, Isa. vi. 4, and the Septuagint translate it there ὑποπόσφια, the lintel. Some understand the word here of the two side-posts, in which sense it is used, Amos ix. 1.

Ver. 7. Every little chamber was one reed long and onethree reeds broad, &c. The wall of the courts were chambers, three on each side, ver. 10. These the angel measured, and they were of equal dimensions, each one reed square, with a passage of five cubits breadth between them.

The threshold of the gate by the porch of the gate within was one reed. The inward threshold at the farther end of the porch looking into the first court, was of the same size with the outward one, ver. 6, (compare ver. 15).

Ver. 8. He measured also. Or, “He even measured” &c., for the words seem to be a repetition of what was said in the latter part of the seventh verse; so the Vulgar Latin understood it, and therefore omits the whole verse; and the Septuagint in the Alexandrian copy, published by Dr. Grabe, join the two verses in sense together (see the like repetitions, ver. 11, 12, 16, xli. 11).

Ver. 9. This was a portico beyond the little chambers, which looked inward, i. e. into the first court; it was eight cubits wide, and the two side-posts were two cubits thick, which made up the ten cubits mentioned ver. 11. The word vel, translated post, is the same in sense with mezvkh (xli. 10), which properly signifies the side-post that supports the lintel (see Exod. xii. 22).

Ver. 10. The little chambers of the gate eastward. Or, “The little chambers of the eastern gate,” which he has been hitherto describing; and the form of which is here repeated. These rooms were for the use of the porters that took care of the several gates that led to the temple (see 1 Chron. ix. 18, 23, 24, xxvi. 12, 13, 18).

Ver. 11. The breadth of the entry. See ver. 9.

The length of the gate thirteen cubits. By “the length of the gate,” Villalpandus understands the height, which he supposes to have been two reeds, or twelve cubits and a half high; for he reckons every reed to consist of six ordinary cubits, and a fourth part over, which, in the common computation of full numbers for fractions, may be called thirteen cubits. Bern. L’Amy, in his book De Tabernaculo Paderisi, explains the expression of the breadth of the walls on each side of the gate, which he supposes to be six cubits and a half; and so the LXX. interpreters may be thought to understand the words, who translate the Hebrew [value 1] by ἔπος, breadth.

Ver. 12. The space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and—on that side: there was a border, or a rail, which enclosed a cubits’s space before each chamber.

The little chambers were six cubits. See ver. 7.

Ver. 13. He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits. Measuring the arch of the gate from north to south, it was in breadth five and twenty cubits; which L’Amy thus computes, the breadth of the gate ten cubits, the breadth of both the side-walls thirteen cubits, and two cubits for the space or border on each of the side chambers: ver. 12.

Door against door. The door to each chamber exactly answered the door on the opposite side.

Ver. 14. He made also posts of three score cubits. The angel described or made a delineation of the height of the columns or pillars, which were to support the rooms or stories over the arch of the gate, and these were in height sixty cubits: the whole building being divided into three stories, like those described xliii. 6. The height of each story is thus computed by Villalpandus (par. ii. lib. v. cap. 16). That the pillars of the lower story were twenty cubits high; those of the second fifteen; and the uppermost twelve; the remainder being allowed for floors and the roof. The word posts in this verse signifies pillars (compare xlii. 6).

Even unto the post of the court round about the gate. Villalpandus, and several interpreters, suppose there is an ellipsis in the words, which they
15. And from the face of the gate of the entrance unto the face of the porch of the inner gate were fifty cubits.

16. And there were narrow windows to the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and likewise to the arches: and windows were round about inward: and upon each post were palm trees.

thus supply: "And there was one measure" to the pillars of the court, and of the gate round about: which makes the sense run plain and easy: compare xlii, where there is the same ellipse.

Ver. 15.] The whole length of the porch, from the outward front (compare xli. 21, 25), unto the inner side, which looks into the first court (ver. 17), was fifty cubits: which may be thus computed: twelve cubits for the thickness of the wall at each end (ver. 6), eighteen for the three chambers on each side (ver. 7), and ten cubits for the spaces between the chambers: allowing the same space between the chambers on each side, and the two walls (ibid.). Villalpandus observes the just proportion between the breadth and length of the gate: the length being double to the breadth (ver. 13). The same he tells us was observed between the breadth of the colonnades of the outward court, which was fifty cubits; and the contents of the whole area, which was a hundred (see the note on ver. 19).

Ver. 16.] And there were narrow windows to the little chambers. Every one of these little chambers (ver. 7) had a narrow window to it, towards the inside of the gate, where the passage was; and so there was over the side-posts or fronts, placed at the entrance of every chamber. By narrow or closed windows, some understand windows with lattice-work, to let in the light: but the phrase seems equivalent to that which is more fully expressed, 1 Kings vi. 4, by "open and narrow windows;" i. e. as the margin of our bibles doth very well explain it, "broad within" [to disperse the light] and "narrow without."

Likewise to the arches.] By windows to the arches, Villalpandus understands the stone itself brought into figures of net-work, and made in the shape of a lattice. The word translated arches, doth likewise signify a porch, or entrance, and so the Vulgar Latin here translates it; and then the sense is, that there were windows over every door: compare ver. 31, 34, with ver. 37, where the same sense is expressed in the two former verses, by arches, aelami in the Hebrew; and in the latter, by posts, or fronts, aelai.

Windows were round about.] A repetition of what was said in the former part of the verse (see ver. 10).

Upon each post were palm trees.] A palm tree was carved upon the chapter of each side-post, or front (see ver. 20).

Ver. 17. Then brought he me into the outward court. There were two courts belonging to Solomon's temple: the outward for the people, the inward for the priests. It is probable, that Solomon built only the inner court (see 1 Kings vi. 26, compared with vii. 64); and that the outer court was built after his time, whereas it is called "the new court," 2 Chron. xx. 5. After which time, there is particular mention of the "two courts of the house of the Lord," 2 Kings xxvi. 5. A third court, called "the court of the gentiles," was afterward added by Herod, when he rebuilt the temple.

The "great court," mentioned 2 Chron. iv. 9, as distinct from the court of the priests, Dr. Lightfoot explains of the holy mountain, or area, where the temple stood, which Solomon enclosed with a wall, and separated it from common ground; so that text, 1 Kings vii. 15, "The great court round about was with three rows of hewed stones," &c. is to be understood only of this enclosure, according to his opinion (see his Description of the Temple, ch. 10, 18).

There were chambers.] These chambers were over the cloister, and supported by it (see ver. 14, and xlii. 8). They might be for the use of the priests; and likewise to be store-houses for etches and offerings (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 12).

Thirty chambers were upon the pavement.] The number of them Villalpandus thus divides:—towards the east and west, seven on a side, answering one another; on the north and south sides, eight a-piece, abating one chamber, both on the east and west side, for the thickness of the walls or arches which supported those two gates, which he supposes to be higher than the north and south gates.

Ver. 18.] The pavement by the side of the gates over against [or equal to] the length of the gates was the lower pavement. The breadth of this pavement, that lay on the side of the gate, was equal to the length of the whole porch or gate, which was fifty cubits, ver. 15. This will plainly appear, if we consider, that the area of the outward court contained a hundred cubits, ver. 18. So the porticoes, or cloisters, cutting the area in right angles, by the gate placed in the middle of the court, the pavement belonging to each side of the gate, or cloister, must be just half that dimension, viz. fifty cubits. The word gates, in the plural number, seems to be used for the singular, as it implies the whole building, consisting of upper rooms, as well as the lower passage (see the note upon ver. 14). The word umanum, which our translators render "one," might be translated commas, and so be equal, answerable, or the same proportion (see Nolius, p. 525); and so it is used i. 20, iii. 8, xlv. 7, xviii. 13, &c. This was called the lower pavement, in respect of the several ascents which were still to go up, the nearer you came to the temple (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 20). Villalpandus explains the lower pavement by way of distinction to the upper rooms, or chambers, placed over them, for the use of the priests, or as store-rooms for the service of the temple.

Ver. 19. He measured the breadth from the forehead of the lower gate unto the forehead of the inner court without, an hundred cubits eastward. That is, unto the lither side of the gate which faced the inner court. He measured the whole space of ground between the west front of the lower gate to the front of the upper gate, which leads into the eastern inner court, and found it a hundred cubits; the same was the space between the south front and north front: so the court was exactly square (see ver. 23, 27, 47). The expression is elliptical: as if he had said, there were a hundred cubits from west to east, and from north to south. There were two gates belonging to the porch, or passage, that led to the inner court; the first was eastward, looking towards the outer court, which is here meant; the other looked westward into the inner court. The gate at the east end forefront of the lower gate unto the forefront of the inner court without, an hundred cubits eastward and northward.

20 ¶ And the gate of the outward court that looked toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.

21 And the little chambers thereof were three on this side and three on that side; and the posts thereof and the arches thereof were after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

22 And their windows, and their arches, and their palm trees, were after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east; and they went up into it by seven steps; and the arches thereof were before them.

23 And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east; and he measured from gate to gate an hundred cubits.

24 ¶ After that he brought me toward the south, and beheld a gate toward the south: and he measured the posts thereof and the arches thereof according to these measures.

of the outer court is called the lower gate, for the same reason as the pavement is called the lower pavement, ver. 19, because there was still an ascent, as you went from one court to the other. The expression of the "inner gate without," is explained in the note upon xlvii. 2.

Northward.—The Septuagint join this word to the following verse, and render the sentence thus: "And he brought me to the north, and beheld the gate looking to the north in the outer court."

Villalpandus explains the nineteenth verse to this sense; that the outer court consisted of seven squares, a hundred cubits each: the first place directly before the court of the priests, and of the same dimensions with it: the others extended on the north and south sides of the outer court, and likewise commensurate with the sides both of the inner court and of the temple, each of which contained one hundred cubits. By which description it must contain a square of three hundred cubits on the east part, and two hundred cubits both on the north and south side (consult Villalpandus's Delineation of the Temple).

Ver. 20, 21.] The whole model was the same with that of the east gate (see ver. 9, 10, 13, 15, 16).

Ver. 22. By seven steps;—See ver. 6.

The arches thereof were before them. Or, at the entrance of them. The Septuagint render the word λίθας, "before them," as if it meant the same with εἰ πενεμίθ, within, or inward (xliii. i). This sense is followed by most expositors, to denote that the arches were within, or at the top of the stairs; but the phrase may probably mean the same with κατ' αποτέλεσμα, "suitable to them," i.e. to those of the east gate (see the following note).

The words might be translated more plainly thus: "And the gate of the inner court was proportionable," or answerable, "to the gate that was towards the north and towards the east." The expression is elliptical, as that of ver. 19, and the full import of it is, that the north gate of the inner court did exactly answer this north gate of the outer court, described ver. 20, 22. And in like manner the east gate of the inner court answered the east gate of the outward court. The word νεος, translated "over against," signifies here suitable, or proportionable; in which sense it is used xli. 10, Gen. ii. 18, "I will make him a help, κενεγθαύ, suitable to him:" so an equivalent expression, "before him," is used in describing the house which Solomon built, I Kings vii. 6, where our margin expresses the sense very properly: "The porch was according to them;" i.e. answerable to them, or of the same proportion with them (see the note upon xliii. 4). So the Greek preposition κατατόμη may most probably be understood, Rom. iv. 17, κατατόμη κατά τον χάραν, not before, but "like unto him whom he believed," even God; to this sense, that Abraham is a father of many nations, in like manner as the God in whom he believed, is the Father of gentiles as well as Jews; as it is said in the foregoing chapter, ver. 29.

Ver. 24—30.] The twenty-third verse is to be read in a parenthesis, where the prophet having shown the exact correspondence between the gates of both courts, he proceeds in the three following verses to describe the south gate of the outer court, by the same dimensions he had before given of the east and north gate. He takes no notice of the western gate of the outer court, because it joined to the eastern gate of the inner court, which he describes ver. 32.

Ver. 27. There was a gate in the inner court toward the south.] The south gate in the inner court was exactly parallel to the south gate in the outer (see ver. 25).

From gate to gate.—See ver. 19, 23, 47.

Ver. 27, 28.] Villalpandus, and those of his opinion, who maintain, that the outer court enclosed the inner on the east, north, and south sides, explain these words to this sense, that the prophet was conducted from the south gate of the outer court (ver. 24) to the south gate of the inner court, which was over against it, and so into the inner court itself.

Ver. 28, 29.] After he had measured the inner court, he took the dimensions of the south gate itself, and the chambers thereto belonging, and found them of the same dimensions with the former.

Ver. 30.] Length is here taken for height, as before, ver. 11. The words express the dimensions of
And he brought me into the inner court toward the east: and he measured the gate according to these measures.

And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, were according to these measures: and there were windows therein and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

And the arches thereof were toward the outward court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

And he brought me to the north gate, and measured it according to these measures:

And the little chambers thereof, the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

And the posts thereof were toward the outer court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

And the chambers and the entries thereof those arches, which were between the several little chambers, between each of which there was the space of five cubits (ver. 7).

Ver. 31. The arches thereof were toward the outer court.] Or, "were like [those of] the outer court;" for the preposition el is sometimes taken in this sense (see Noldus, p. 69). If we understand it according to the common interpretation, that the arches or fronts (see the note on ver. 16) of the inner court looked toward the outer, it is a confirmation of Villalpandus's opinion, that the outer court surrounded the inner (see note upon ver. 19).

The going up to it had eight steps.] Whereas in the outer court the ascent had but seven (ver. 25, 26). The fifteen psalms, from the hundred and twentieth, called "Songs of Degrees," or Ascents, are supposed to have been sung upon some of these steps, or ascents.

Ver. 32—37.] The east and north gate had the same dimensions with the south gate, described ver. 25, 29, 31.

Ver. 34. The arches thereof] What is expressed here by arches, is signified by posts, or fronts, ver. 37 (see notes upon ver. 10, 16).

Ver. 35.] The chambers mentioned ver. 36, were near the entrance of the north gate, where they washed the legs and entrails of the burnt-offering, and marble tables were placed there for that purpose. See Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, ch. 35. According to this exposition, the word gates stands for the singular number, as ver. 15. But that learned writer, in another chapter, that they washed the sacrifices on the south side of the court of the priests, as well as on the north side, when the sacrifices were more numerous than the north side could well contain; so he understands the word gates as comprehending both north and south gates; and confirms this interpretation from the placing of the lavers, which were designed for that use, and were set five in that side of the house, and five on the left (1 Kings vii. 39).

Ver. 39, 40.] Those expositors, who by the word gates in the foregoing verse understand both the north and south gates, render the sense of these two verses perspicuously thus: "In the porch of one gate (viz. that on the south) were two tables on this side, and two tables on that side, &c. And at the outer side of the step of the entrance of the north gate were two tables:" which interpretation agrees very well with what follows, ver. 41, "Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side." But they that understand these verses to be only a description of the north gate (on which side of the altar the sacrifices were commonly killed), suppose that two tables were on each side, as you came into the porch of that gate, and two on each side of the inner part of the gate that looked towards the altar.

Ver. 39. The sin-offering and the trespass-offering.] It is no easy matter to ascertain the difference between a sin-offering and a trespass-offering. Dr. Outram (lib. 1, c. 15, De Sacrificiis) is of opinion that a trespass-offering implied an injury done to another, as well as a breach of God's law. Dr. Lightfoot hath accurately related the sense of the Jewish writers upon this subject, in his Temple Service, ch. 8, sect. 2, 3.

Ver. 43. Within were hooks, an hand breadth, fastened round about.] Within the gate or entrance on the north side of the inner court, were iron hooks, for the hanging up of the beasts that were to be sacrificed, in order to the flaying off their skins (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 35).

Upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.] Or, they laid the flesh of the offering. Upon those marble tables the priests laid the flesh of the slain beasts, and there cut it in pieces, and fitted it for laying upon the altar (see Lev. i. 6).

Ver. 44. Without the inner gate were the chambers of the singers in the inner court.] On the farther side of the inner gate, as you come into the inner court (compare ver. 40), were the chambers of the singers, who constantly attended upon the service of the temple (see 1 Chron. vi. 31, 32).

Which was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south.] These chambers were placed at the north-east corner of the inner court, and so had their prospect towards the south.

One at the side of the east gate, having the prospect toward the north.] They had likewise chambers on the south-east corner of that court, which had the was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south: one at the side of the east gate having the prospect toward the north.

45 And he said unto me, This chamber, whose prospect is toward the south, is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the house.

46 And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the altar: these are the sons of Zadok among the sons of Levi, which come near to the Lord to minister unto him.

1 Afterward he brought me to the temple, and measured the posts, six cubits broad on the one side, and six cubits broad on the other side, which was the breadth of the tabernacle.

2 And the breadth of the door was ten cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side; and he measured the length thereof, forty cubits: and the breadth, twenty cubits.

3 Then went he inward, and measured the post of the door, two cubits; and the door, six cubits; and the breadth of the door, seven cubits.

CHAP. XLI.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a description of the measures, parts, chambers, and ornaments, of the temple itself.

Ver. 1.] By the posts are meant the piers or door-cases on each side of the entrance (see xl. 9, 45); these were six cubits thick on the north and south sides. Rochob, translated breadth, sometimes signifies thickness (see ver. 9, 12, of this chapter, and xl. 5); the same thickness had the upper lintel over the door; for so Villalpandus rightly explains the Hebrew word ohel, which we render tabernacle. That word sometimes signifies a covering, and so it is rendered by our translators, Exod. xxvi. 7, and is to be understood in the same sense, Exod. xxxvi. 14, where our English reads, "For a tent over the tabernacle," but it should be translated, "For a covering over the tabernacle," to which sense the LXX. translate it in both places. In this signification it may not be unfitly applied to the upper lintel, which is a kind of covering to the door; and thus it is generally understood by the rabbins upon this place.

Ver. 2.] The breadth of the door was ten cubits.] The entrance itself being ten cubits broad, and the wall on each side five cubits, makes the breadth of the house itself to be just twenty cubits, as it is expressed in the latter part of the verse, which was the same in Solomon's temple, 1 Kings vi. 2.

He measured the length thereof, forty cubits.] The length of the first sanctuary, as distinct from the inward, or the holiest of all, which was twenty cubits in length (ver. 4), and made the whole structure sixty cubits long: wherein it agreed with Solomon's temple, 1 Kings vi. 2, 17.

Ver. 3.] From the outward sanctuary he went forward towards the holiest of all, and measured the thickness of the partition-wall, called "the veil of the temple," Matt. xxvii. 51, to be two cubits, the entrance itself six cubits, and the breadth of the wall on each side of the door seven cubits: compare xl. 48, where "the breadth of the gate" is taken in the same sense: the breadth of the wall, thus computed, making up fourteen cubits, and being added to the breadth of the entrance itself, makes up twenty cubits; the breadth of the inner sanctuary, as it is set down in the following verse.

And measured the post of the door, two cubits.] Maimonides, in Beth-abhekrah, saith, that in the first temple there was a wall between the sanctuary and most holy place of the thickness of a cubit: but in the second temple, instead of a wall there were two veils made, one towards the most holy place, and the other towards the outward sanctuary, leaving a space between them of the thickness of a cubit.

4 So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits: and the breadth, twenty cubits, before the temple: and he said unto me, This is the most holy place.

5 After he measured the wall of the house, six cubits: and the breadth of every side-chamber, four cubits, round about the house on every side.

6 And the side-chambers were three, one over another, and thirty in order; and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side-chambers round about, that they might have bit, where the wall was supposed to stand in Solomon's temple.

Ver. 4.] So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits; it was an exact cube of the same dimensions in length, breadth, and height (see 1 Kings vi. 20). Before the temple.] The words should rather be rendered, "According to the [breadth of the temple]." The Hebrew word el-gene, before, is prominence used with ner-gene, which signifies of the same size," or proportion (see the note on xl. 23); and so it is used 2 Chron. iii. 8, where the text, speaking of this subject, runs thus in the Hebrew, "He made the most holy house, the length thereof before the face of the breadth of the house:" where our translation very properly expresses the same sense, "According to the breadth of the house." In the same sense the phrase is used, 1 Kings vi. 3. So the sense here is, that the breadth of the inner sanctuary was equal to the breadth of the outer part of the temple, which is said to be twenty cubits, ver. 2.

Ver. 5.] After he measured the wall of the house, six cubits.] The thickness of the wall from the foundation, the first story of the side-chambers (see ver. 8).

The breadth of every side-chamber, four cubits.] The side-chambers upon the lowermost floor were five cubits in breadth (1 Kings vi. 6). Therefore Villalpandus understands these words of the thickness of the buttresses, which supported these side-chambers.

Ver. 6.] The side chambers were three.] They were three stories high (see 1 Kings vi. 6). Thirty in order.] As in Solomon's temple, according to Josephus's description of it (Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 3, sect. 2), and built "round about the house on every side;" as it is expressed in the foregoing verse; to which the text in the first book of Kings agrees, vi. 5. The Talmudists increase the number to eight-and-thirty, placing fifteen on the north side, fifteen on the south, and eight on the west side of the temple (see Cod. Middoth. cap. 4). The supernumerary chambers being probably added in latter times.

They entered into the wall which was—for the side chambers round about.] At five cubits' height from the ground, the wall or the buttresses which supported these outward chambers (see ver. 5), abated of their thickness one cubit, and there was a rest or ledge of one cubit's breadth, on which the ends of each story were fastened (see 1 Kings vi. 6, 10).

But they had not hold in the wall of the house.] They were not fastened into the main wall of the house, but rested on the outside of the wall, where it grew narrower; which is meant by migrevoth, the narrowest rests; or rebatements, which we read 1 Kings vi. 6.
CHAPTER XII.

holding, but they had not held in the wall of the house. 7 And there was an enlarging, and a winding about still upward to the side chambers: for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst. 8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the foundations of the side chambers were a full reed of six great cubits. 9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side chamber without, was five cubits: and that which was left was the place of the side chambers that were within. 10 And between the chambers was the wide-ness of twenty cubits round about the house on every side. 11 And the doors of the side chambers were toward the place that was left, one door toward the north, and another door toward the south: and the breadth of the place that was left was five cubits round about. 12 Now the building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits. 13 So he measured the house, an hundred cubits long; and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, an hundred cubits long; 14 Also the breadth of the face of the house, Hebrew, are to be distinguished from the side-chambers mentioned in the foregoing verses; they mean, probably, the chambers of the inner court, described xl. 44, 45. Between these and the temple was left a space of twenty cubits. The temple stood in an area of a hundred cubits square (ver. 14), and was seventy cubits wide (ver. 12); to which adding the five cubits of their breadth, mentioned ver. 9, and the twenty cubits of this verse, makes up just a hundred cubits.

Ver. 11. The doors of the side chambers were toward the place that was left.] Or, "towards the void space:" the doors of the lower rooms opened into this void space before the chambers (ver. 9). Or it may be understood of the two doors on the north and south sides, which opened on the top of the staircase into the upper rooms (see ver. 7). The breadth—was five cubits] See ver. 9.

Ver. 12. The building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad:] Bernard L' Amy seems to give the clearest account of this difficult place (lib. vi. cap. 11, n. 2). He understands this word batin, translated building, of a wall or enclosure, as it is used, xl. 5, which ran along the outside of the priests' court, commencing from the west side of the temple, which was seventy cubits from north to south, and extended in length, from east to west, ninety cubits; cubits shorter than the whole area itself (see the following verse), and enclosing a void space of five cubits' breadth, which lay between the side-chambers and the enclosure; so he explains those words, "The wall of the building was five cubits thick round about" (compare xlii. 10). Which void space he understands by "the separate place," in this verse, and the place which was left, ver. 11.

Seventy cubits broad:] This was the breadth of the temple at the west end, and the buildings adjoining to it, which the above mentioned author thus computes: the breadth of the oracle twenty cubits; the thickness of the side-walls six cubits on each side; the side-chambers six cubits on each side (see the note upon ver. 8); thickness of the outer-walls of those chambers five cubits on each side; a walk or gallery of five cubits before those chambers (see the note on ver. 9), and the utmost wall enclosing the whole building, five cubits. Those that differ from him, as to some of those particulars, make up either side of the temple, by making an allowance for the stairs, and for conveyances to carry off the water. 13.] The whole temple, with the porch and walls, was in length a hundred cubits, from east to 3 r 2. and of the separate place toward the east, an hundred cubits.

15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the galleries thereof on the one side and on the other side, an hundred cubits, with the inner temple, and the porches of the court;

16 The door-posts, and the narrow windows, and the galleries round about on their three stories, over against the door, ceiled with wood round about, and from the ground up to the windows, and the windows were covered;

17 To that above the door, even unto the inner house, and without, and by all the wall round about within and without, by measure.

west, which may be thus computed: the thickness of the wall of the east porch five cubits: the passage through the porch eleven cubits; the wall between the porch and the temple six cubits; the outward sanctuary forty cubits: the partition-wall two cubits; the holiest of all twenty cubits; the thickness of the wall of those chambers at the west end of the holy place five cubits; and outer wall of those chambers five cubits.

Ver. 14.] The whole front of the house eastward was a hundred cubits, which some expositors thus compute: the breadth of the temple twenty cubits; the thickness of the outward walls twelve cubits; the side-chambers eight cubits (of these dimensions they explain the letter part of the fifth verse of this chapter); the walls of those chambers five cubits on each side; the breadth of the void space five cubits on each side; and the twenty cubits round about the house (ver. 10). Others compute the sum a different way, by making different allowances for the outward buildings, and the several passages from one part of the temple to the other.

Ver. 15. He measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it.] Noldius translates this sentence more clearly thus: "And he measured the length of the building which was before the separate place, [and] that which was behind it," or opposite to it; by which he understands the north and south porches: the east and west sides having been measured before, ver. 12, 14 (see his Concordance, p. 104). The phrase ei-jere, translated here "over against," is rendered before in our English version, xiv. 4.

The galleries thereof on the one side and on the other side, an hundred cubits, with [or and] the inner temple.] As the temple, and the area wherein it stood, made a square of a hundred cubits; so the courts and buildings thereto belonging were of the same dimensions (see xl. 19, 47). By the galleries are meant the side-chambers, described ver. 6, 7 (compare the following verse).

With the inner temple.] Called the "inner house," ver. 17, and xlii. 15, to distinguish it from the courts and buildings which were about it.

Ver. 16. The door-posts, and the narrow windows.] He measured likewise the thickness of the walls on each side of the porch (see xiv. 45), and the thickness of the door-cases, at the entrance into the temple xli. 1, as also the narrow windows belonging to the three stories of chambers, which were placed on the outside of the temple (see ver. 6, and xl. 16).

Over against the door, ceiled with wood round about.] Or, answerable to which was the door ceiled with wood." The doors of the little chambers exactly answered one another, as those belonging

18 And it was made with cherubims and palm trees, so that a palm tree was between a cherub and a cherub; and every cherub had two faces;

19 So that the face of a man was toward the palm tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion toward the palm tree on the other side: it was made through all the house round about.

20 From the ground unto above the door were cherubims and palm trees made, and on the wall of the temple.

21 The posts of the temple were squared, and the face of the sanctuary; the appearance of the one as the appearance of the other.

22 The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corner to the porch did, xl. 13. The word neged, "over against," signifies likewise answerable, or proportionable (see note on xl. 23. Door signifies every door (see note upon ver. 9).

From the ground up to the windows.] He measured from the ground up to the windows of the temple, which were placed above the side-chambers.

The windows were covered;] Either because the side-chambers jetting out beyond the main wall of the temple, hindered their being seen in the inner court; or else they were covered on the inside with curtains drawn before them.

Ver. 17.] This verse may best be explained by joining it to what went before, to this sense: that the windows were made in exact proportion, both over the porch and through every part of the temple, and the buildings adjoining to it. The inner house may mean only the first or outward sanctuary in this verse, as it is distinguished from the porch and outer buildings, expressed by the word without (compare ver. 15): for it is generally supposed that there were no windows in the inner sanctuary. But Yeillapandus explains the words "even unto the inner house," in an exclusive sense, as if he had said, As far as the inner house; and by the "walls round about," understands the north and south walls of the temple (Par. ii. lib. iv. cap. 34).

Ver. 15.] On the inside of the house the walls were adorned with carved work of cherubims and palm-trees, as Solomon's temple was, 1 Kings vi. 20. The cherubims and palm-trees were placed alternately; and, according to the different way of counting them, you might reckon a palm-tree placed between two cherubims, or a cherubim placed between two palm-trees.

Ibid. and ver. 19.] The cherubims had four faces or appearances (see l. 10); but only two of these appeared in the carved work; the two other faces, viz. that of an ox and an eagle, being supposed to be hid behind the carved surface of the wall. Ver. 20. Unto above the door.] "Up to the windows," as it is expressed, ver. 16, "up to the ceiling," as the Septuagint explain it.

Ver. 21. The face of the sanctuary;] i.e. The entrance into the inner sanctuary (compare xlv. 13). The lintels, or door-posts, both of the temple and inner sanctuary, were not arched, but square, with a flat beam or upper lintel laid upon the top of the side-posts; compare 1 Kings vi. 13, where the margin translates the word webingim, four-square.

Ver. 22. The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits;] The Septuagint add, by way of explication, "And the breadth thereof (two cubits);" that it might be four-square, as Moses's altar of incense was, Exod. xxx. 2. The altar here

CHAP. XLII.

ARGUMENT.—A description of the priests' chambers, and their use, and the dimensions of the holy mountain whereon the temple stood.

Ver. 1. Then he brought me forth into the outer court, &c. The angel now brings the prophet out of the inner court by the north gate, into some chamber or building, which looked towards the south side of the temple, and faced the wall or enclosure that compassed the north side of the inner court and temple, mentioned xl. 12, 15. Some suppose this to be a building distinct from all the parts of the temple hitherto described.

The words of the seventh and ninth verses imply, that it was a distinct building from the outer court.

Into the chamber that was over against the separate place, and—before the building] Or, "Before the separate place, and before the building": for the preposition urged is used in both parts of the sentence. Chamber is put for chambers (see ver. 4, and xl. 9).

25 And there were made on them, on the doors of the temple, cherubims and palm trees, like as were made upon the walls; and there were thick planks upon the face of the porch without.

26 And there were narrow windows and palm trees on the one side and on the other side, on the sides of the porch, and upon the side chambers of the house, and thick planks.

cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit; and their doors toward the north.

5 Now the upper chambers were shorter: for the galleries were higher than these, than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.

6 For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground.

7 And the wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the utter court on the fore-part of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

8 For the length of the chambers that were in the utter court was fifty cubits: and, lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits.

9 And from under these chambers was the entry on the east side, as one goeth into them from the utter court.

10 The chambers were in the thickness of the wall of the court toward the east, over against the separate place, and over against the building.

11 And the way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were toward the north, as long as they, and as broad as they: and all their goings out were both according to their fashions, and according to their doors.

12 And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south was a door in the head of the way, even the way directly before the wall toward the east, as one entereth into them.

13 ¶ Then said he unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers, which are before the separate place, be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the Lord shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat-offering, and the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering; for the place is holy.

14 When the priests enter therein, then shall they go in the head of the way.
CHAPTER XLII.

they not go out of the holy place into the utter court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

15 Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about.

16 He measured the east side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

Shall they not go out of the holy place into the utter court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister? They shall not go into the court of the people in their priestly vestments, but shall lay them upon some of these chambers; the priestly garments were only to be used in the time of their ministration, as appears from Exod. xxix.
43, and is further confirmed from this verse, and xlii. 19. Josephus asserts the same, De Bello Jud.
lib. vi. cap. 15.

The Christian church followed the practice of the Jewish, in this as well as in many other customs; the testimony of St. Jerome, in his Commentary upon xlv. 19 of this prophecy, plainly proves, that the clergy of that age wore a distinct habit from the laity, at the time of their performing the public office of religion. "Religio divina alterum habitum habet in ministerio, alterum in sua vitamine communii."

And that this was the practice of the early ages of the church, may be probably concluded from the testimony of Polyèrates, a writer of the next age to the apostles, who tells us, that St. John wore an ornament upon his head resembling the mitre, with a plato upon it, which was worn by the Jewish high-priest (see Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. v.
cap. 24). And in the next age, Pontius, the writer of St. Cyprian's life and martyrdom, acquaints us, that the bishop's seat in the church used to be covered with white; "Sedile erat fortuito linteo stratum, ut et sub iuct passionibus episcopatus honore frueretur;" and it can hardly be imagined, there should be a peculiar dress for the bishop's seat, and none for the bishop himself.

And shall approach to those things which are for the people. The words should rather be thus translated, "And shall come into the court belonging to the people;" the outer court, mentioned at the beginning of the verse.

Ver. 15. The inner house.] The "inner house" denotes the temple, as it is distinguished from the courts about it (compare xli. 15).

He brought me forth toward the gate. The gate that opened into the first court (see xli. 6).

Ver. 16.] This and the following verses contain the measures of the holy mountain, or area, upon which the temple stood, which is described to be an exact square, consisting of five hundred reeds in measuring on each side of it. We may observe, that the "heavenly Jerusalem," represented to St. John, Rev. xxi. 16, is likewise described as four-square, that figure being an emblem of solidity. And Ezekiel's vision, as well as St. John's, is designed in its mystical sense, to represent the regularity and strength of Christ's church and kingdom (compare with this verse xl. 47, xli. 13, 14, xlv. 2, xlvii. 20).

Capellus is of opinion, that instead of "five hundred reeds," we ought to read "five hundred cubits:" he supposeth the word amnathis, cubits, wanting in the present reading of the text, to have been rejected as spurious by the correctors of the Hebrew copies, by reason of its affinity with melath, a hundred; and the word bonith, reeds, substituted in its place. This emendation he justifies from the autho-ry of the Septuagint, who read cubith in the seventeenth and twentieth verses; which reading St. Jerome acknowledges to have been in the Greek copies in his time. He confirms it likewise from the parallel text, xlv. 2; which he thinks, according to the rules of grammar, should be expanded of cubits.
And he further argues, that the Jews themselves formerly understood this text of cubits; because they are generally of opinion, that the temple stood in an area or square, containing five hundred cubits on every side (see Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, ch. 2); whereas, according to the present reading, the whole compass of the area will amount to three miles and a half, according to the same author's computation; which is more than half the circuit of the whole city of Jerusalem in its most flourishing condition (see the Excercita out of Capellus's Triplex Delineatio Templi, in the first volume of the Polygnot Bible).

Whereas the angel is said to measure the east side of this square round about; and so of the other three sides: we need not from hence conclude, that the whole compass of the ground was measured four times over; for the phrase round about often signiifies, in this prophecy, only from side to side, or from one end to another (see xl. 14, xli. 16). The words therefore only import, that the angel continued measuring from one side to the other, till he had gone over the whole compass of the area.

Ver. 20. It had a wall round about.] To defend it from being invaded or profaned (compare Rev. xxi.
17). The wall was five hundred cubits every way (see ver. 16), as it composed the length and breadth of the temple, and its courts; see the same expression, xl. 47.

To make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.] By the sanctuary is here meant the whole compass of ground which was the precinets of the temple, elsewhere called the "holy mountain" (see xlvii. 12). In comparison of which, Jerusalem itself, though upon several accounts styled "the holy city," was esteemed but as profan ground (see xlvii. 15).
CHAPTER XLIII.

1 Afterward he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the east:
2 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and his voice was like a noise of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory.
3 And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city: and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar; and I fell upon my face.
4 And the glory of the Lord came into the house by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east.

ARGUMENT.—The glory of the Lord is represented as returning to the temple, where God promises to fix his habitation, if the people repent, and forsake the sins which made him depart from them. Then the measures of the altar, and the ordinances relating to it, are set down.

Ver. 1.] The eastern gate of the priests' court, which was just before the temple (compare ver. 4, and xliv. 1, xlv. 1).

Ver. 2. Behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east:] The word behold is an expression of joy and admiration: as if the prophet had said, “Behold a wonderful and joyful sight!” Afterward it is represented as quite forsaking the city, and removing to a mountain on the east side of the city (x. 23), and now it returns by the same way it departed.

His voice was like a noise of many waters:] Great and terrible (compare i. 24, Rev. i. 15) either to signify the dreadfulness of God’s judgments, or the efficacy of his commands, who calls things into being by speaking the word.

The earth shined with his glory:] The rays of his glory, like the sunbeams, enlightened the earth (compare x. 4, Isa. vi. 3, Hab. iii. 4).

Ver. 3.] See ix. 3, 5. The prophets are said to do those things which they foretell shall come to pass (see notes upon xiii. 10, xxiii. 54, Jer. i. 10).

Ver. 4.] See ver. 1, 2, and xliv. 2.

Ver. 5. So the spirit took me up;] See iii. 12, 14, viii. 3, xxxvii. 1, xl. 2.

Brought me into the inner court;] Carried me from the gate that enters into it, into the middle of it, just before the temple.

The glory of the Lord filled the house:] That glory, or symbol of the divine presence, which I saw coming from the east (ver. 10), entered into the temple, and settled there, as it did when it was finished by Solomon (1 Kings viii. 10, 11).

Ver. 6. I heard him speaking:] With a great and mighty voice (ver. 2).

The man stood by me:] See xl. 3.

Ver. 7. The place of my throne, and the place of the sole of my foot;] The sense would be plainer, if the beginning of the verse were thus rendered, “This is the place of my throne,” &c. The cherubims were God’s throne, from whence he is said to dwell or “sit between the cherubims,” and the ark was his footstool (see Ps. xcix. 1, 5).

Where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever:] He means the promise formerly made with regard to the tabernacle and temple (see Ps. lxxviii. 16, cxxxii. 14); which is to be understood as those were, under the condition of their obedience (see ver. 9); and to be eminently fulfilled in Christ, in whom all the promises of the Old Testament are to have their final accomplishment. Zechar. prophesies of the Messias (vi. 12), that he should build the latter temple shall be greater than that of the former.” There was no visible Shechinah, or glory, appeared in the second temple, till the Lord, “whom they expected, came to his temple” (Mal. iii. 1); i. e. till the Messias, who was “the brightness of his Father’s glory,” appeared there, and made it an illustrious figure of that true church, or temple of believers, where he would continue his presence for ever (see 2 Cor. vi. 16).

No more defile,—by their whoredoms:] By idolatry, often described in scripture, and particularly by this prophet, under the metaphor of fornication (see ch. xvi., xxviii.). The captivity had that good effect upon the Jews, that they scarce ever after relapsed into idolatry. The entire destruction of idolatry is likewise often mentioned as a blessing reserved for “the latter days,” when the Jews shall be converted, and “the fulness of the gentiles” come into the church (see note upon Isa. i. 30).

Nor by the carcasses of their kings in their high places:] Idols are called carcasses, because they are without life and motion, and likewise upon the account of their being hateful and loathsome in the sight of God (see Lev. xxvi. 30, Jer. vi. 18). They are called “the carcasses of kings,” because they were set up, and the worship of them encouraged, by the idolatrous kings of Judah, who erected high places for that purpose near Jerusalem, in the very sight and view of the temple (see 2 Kings xxiii. 13). By this means the temple itself was sanctified by those that my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger.

9 Now let them put away their whoredom, and the caresses of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

10 ¶ Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern.

11 And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the going out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write came directly from the worship of idols, to attend upon God's service in the temple (see ch. xxiii. of this prophecy, 38, 39).

Ver. 8. In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds.] Their kings still advanced to greater degrees of idolatry, in setting up altars and images for their idols in the temple itself, and the courts before it (see v. 11, viii. 6, 15, 2 Kings xvi. 14, xxi. 4, 5, 7).

And the wall between me and them.] The margin gives a plainer sense, "For there was but a wall between me and them."

Ver. 9. See note upon ver. 7.

Ver. 10, 11. Show the house to the house of Israel, &c.] The words, if understood as spoken to the Jews of that age, imply, that the house here described, with the whole platform of it, and the ordinances relating to it, might be a model for them to imitate, as far as they were able, when they should return to their own country, and rebuild their temple (see the general preface before ch. xI.). The same saunt rodz or description, when duly considered, would be a proper inducement to make them sensible of their former deviations from God's worship, and touched with deep remorse for those sins, which provoked him to deprive them of the honour of his residence among them, and the benefit of his ordinances (see ver. 7, 8). But we may probably suppose, that the words may have a farther view, and import, that the model of God's temple, here set forth, is but a pattern of things, as in the heavens, and the earth, 39, 40, and a type of that pure church "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone;" which we may hope God will, in due time, everywhere restore. And in the mean season, it is the duty of all good Christians, according to their abilities, to inform themselves and others, what is the pattern, form, and fashion, of this true church of God, in order to reform all those deviations which have been made from it.

Let them measure the pattern.] In order to build their new temple by it, when they shall return from captivity, as far as their abilities will reach (see the general preface before the fortieth chapter). For the same purpose the prophet is commanded to write it in their sight, in the following words, form, and fashion, of this true church of God, in order to reform all those deviations which have been made from it.

Ver. 11. And if they be ashamed.] Or, "And that they may be ashamed:" so the particle im is often used (see Noldius, p. 90).

Ver. 12. Upon the top of the mountain] Where-upon the temple stood (see xl. 2).

The whole limit—shall be most holy.] See xliii. 20.

Ver. 13. The cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth.] See xl. 5.

The bottom shall be a cubit.] The bottom signifies the basis or foundation (see ver. 14); this shall be a it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.

12 This is the law of the house: Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.

13 ¶ And these are the measures of the altar after the cubits: The cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth; even the bottom shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the edge thereof round about shall be a span: and this shall be the higher place of the altar.

14 And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits and the cubit in height, and a cubit over in breadth; the parts above the lower settle being contracted, and growing narrower by the breadth of a cubit (see the following verse). This lower ledge or settle about the altar had a border of the height of a span, or half a cubit (see ver. 17), to keep the blood that was poured out at the foot of the altar from running upon the pavement; but it was conveyed away into two holes at the south-west corner of the altar, and so into a sink or common-sewer under ground.

This shall be the higher place of the altar.] The Hebrew reads, "The back of the altar," which imports, that this basis was the protuberance of the altar, or the widest part of it; the Hebrew word gab, signifying any part that sticks out, and is used for the eye-brows, the protuberance of a hill, or such like eminence.

Ver. 14. From the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits.] The altar was made narrower as it came nearer to the top; these narrowings or in-benchings are called here settles. The word is מַרְחִיק in the Hebrew, which is elsewhere used for a court; because the priests trod on these settles, as they and the people did in the courts before the temple. From the foundation to the lower of the two settles here mentioned, the text saith, was to be two cubits; which seems to contradict the words in the verse before, "the bottom shall be a cubit." This difference in expression Dr. Lightfoot thus reconciles, in his Description of the Temple, ch. 34, that the foundation, or flat upon the ground, was but a cubit high; but then there arose a slope of another cubit's height, which was thicker than the compass of the altar just above it; so that from the ground to the top of the rising was two cubits: and thus he reconciles the description here given with that of the Talmud, which reckons five cubits from the lower settle to the higher; whereas the prophet counts but four in the following words.

The breadth one cubit.] The breadth of this lower settle, or border, was one cubit, which made that part of the altar which was above it narrower, by a cubit on every side of the square, than that part which was nearer the foundation.

From the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.] Dr. Lightfoot, in the same place, assigns this reason, why the upper settle is here called the greater, because the upper settle, though it was less in compass (being narrower by two cubits on every side of the square), yet was larger in breadth; the lower settle rising with a leaning slope, as was observed before, which took up a considerable part of its breadth, and made the walk upon it not so large as that upon the upper.

Ver. 15. So the altar shall be four cubits.] i. e. From the upper settle, which makes the altar ten breath one cubit; and from the lesser sette even to the greater sette shall be four cubits, and the breath one cubit.
15 So the altar shall be four cubits; and from the altar and upward shall be four horns.
16 And the altar shall be twelve cubits long, twelve broad, square in the four squares thereof.
17 And the settle shall be fourteen cubits long and fourteen broad in the four squares thereof; and the border about it shall be half a cubit; and the bottom thereof shall be a cubit about; and his stairs shall look toward the east.
18 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord God; These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, to erect burnt-offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon.
19 And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, which ap-cubs high, the same height with that made by Solon, 2 Chron. iv. 1. The fourteenth verse reckons six cubits to the upper settle, and here are four cubits added to the top of the altar. The dimensions of the altar as expressed in the Talmud, as Dr. Lightfoot observes in the place above cited; who farther remarks, out of the Jewish writers, that within two cubits of the top, or the place where the heart was, there was another narrowing, or bench, of a cubit's breadth, where the priests stood to officiate.

The altar is twice mentioned in this verse under two different names; the first hard, that is, "the mountain of God," being so called, as some rabbins think, in opposition to the idolatrous altar built up on high places; the second ariel, that is, "the lion of God," having that name given to it, because it devoured and consumed the sacrifices offered upon it (see Isa. xxix. 1).

From the altar and upward shall be four horns.]
To be added at each corner, as was Moses's altar, Exod. xxvii. 2. These were squares of a cubit on each side, and hollow in the middle; and into these cavities some of the blood of the sacrifices was put (see ver. 20). They arose from the uppermost bench, where the priest stood to officiate.

Ver. 16.] The upper part of it shall be an exact square, reckoning from the second settle, which is properly called the altar, and distinguished from the bottom or foundation (see ver. 15).

Ver. 17. The settle shall be fourteen cubits long and fourteen broad] This is to be understood of the lower settle, which was two cubits wider than the upper part of the altar, as appears by the description already given.

Half a cubit; or "a span," as it is expressed, ver. 13. The bottom thereof shall be a cubit above.] A cubit wider than the lower settle (see ver. 13).
His stairs shall look toward the east.] God forbade his priests to go up by steps to his altar, Exod. xx.
26, which is usually expounded, that he would not have his altar set upon a great ascension, in imitation of the heathen high places; yet Solomon's altar was ten cubits high (2 Chron. iv. 1), which necessarily required some ascent for the priests to go, that they might officiate on the top of it: and in this place there is express mention of stairs to go up to the altar here described, being of the same height with Solomon's. The Jews tell us, that since the law prohibited stairs or steps, the ascent to the altar was by a gentle rising, which they call kibbesh, of thirty-two cubits in length, and sixteen in breadth; the landing-place being upon the upper bench or walk, next the hearth or top; of which mention hath been already made in the notes upon ver. 16. See Dr.
Lightfoot in the forecited place, and Dr. Prideaux's Connex. of Scrip. His. par. i. where there is a draught of the altar, and the ascent to it, which very much helps to explain the description here given of it.

This ascent is directed to be placed at the east side of the altar, that they, who went up, should look towards the west, and upon the temple, and should turn their backs to the rising sun, in opposition to the rites of those idolaters who worshipped the rising sun (see note upon xlii. 10).

Ver. 18. To sprinkle blood] See Lev. i. 5, iii. 8.
Ver. 19. Thou shalt give to the priests the Levites
See notes on xl. 45, xlv. 15.

A young bullock for a sin-offering.] To consecrate the new altar therewith, and the persons who were to offer sacrifice upon it (compare xlv. 18, 19, Exod. xxix. 10, 12, and ver. 36).

Ver. 20. Four corners of the settle.] The word settle may signify both the settles, as the singular number elsewhere stands for the plural (see note upon xlii. 9).

Ver. 21. He shall burn it] Or rather, "It shall be burnt," as the LXX. rightly express the sense;
the verb transitive being often used for the impersonal (see the note upon Isa. xlv. 18).

In the appointed place] In some place appointed for that purpose, within the precincts of the holy mountain. The temple itself is called the inner house, xlii. 15, xliii. 15, to distinguish it from the erior courts and precincts thereof. The body of the bullock, whose blood was to sanctify the altar, was to be "burnt without the camp," by the order of the law, Exod. xxix. 14.

This was the first day's sacrifice; the ceremony of consecration being to last seven days (see ver. 26).

Ver. 22.] This is over and above the sacrifices of consecration, prescribed Exod. xxix. 1. Some other rites are prescribed in the following ordinances, that differ a little from those ordained by Moses (see note upon xlvii. 4).

Ver. 23. A ram out of the flock] Called the "ram of consecration," Exod. xxix. 31, Lev. viii. 22.

These sacrifices were to be repeated every one of the seven days of the consecration (see ver. 25).

Ver. 24. The priest shall cast salt upon them.]
Every sacrifice was to be salted with salt (Lev. ii.
13).
CHAPTER XLIV.

1 Then he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary which looketh toward the east; and it was shut.

2 Then said the Lord unto me; This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

3 It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

CHAP. XLIV.

Argument.—The chapter begins with a description of the glory of God returned into the temple; then follows a proof of the people for suffering idolatrous priests to profane the temple by ministering there; and ordinances are set down relating to the deportment of God's true priests, and the maintenance due to them.

Ver. 1. He brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary. From the altar to the gate belonging to the court of the priests that leadeth to the outward court of the temple (compare ver. 27, and ch. vi. 1). All the courts were reckoned holy ground, and called sometimes by the name of the temple (see John viii. 20, Acts xxii. 25).

It was shut. After that day the glory of the Lord had entered that way (xliii. 4); to signify that the divine presence would never forsake the temple any more.

Ver. 2. This shall be shut, it shall not be opened. It shall not stand open continually, as it formerly did, but only at certain seasons (see ver. 3, and xlvii. 1); and that out of respect to the divine glory, which made its entrance into the temple that way, where it had now taken up its fixed residence (see xliii. 7), not to depart any more by the east gate of the temple, as it formerly did (see note on xliii. 4).

Because the Lord hath entered in by it. That is, the glory of the Lord, as it is expressed xliii. 2, 4. The glory of God is himself, and is often called by the name of the Lord, or the God of Israel (see Exod. xxiv. 10, Isai. vi. 1, 5).

Ver. 3. It is for the prince. Solomon placed his seat at the entrance into the inner court before the altar of the Lord (2 Chron. vi. 13), and here the prince seems to have had his place in aftertimes, whenever he came to worship at the temple (see 2 Chron. xxxii. 13, xxxiv. 31). Not far from which place a seat was placed for the high-priest, as may be gathered from Elie's seat, mentioned 1 Sam. ii. 9, and from whence the high-priest pronounced the blessing after the service was ended (see Excles. i. 20, and Lighthouse Temple Service, ch. 36). Some understand by the prince, the high-priest; which title does very properly belong to the Messiah, who is both king and priest, and hath the style of prince given him, xxxiv. 23. But in the parallel place to this (xlii. 2, 3, 8, 9), the word prince is opposed to the people: and other ordinances are there laid down, which cannot be fitly applied to the Messiah.

For which reason, I conceive the word must be taken here in its usual sense, to denote the chief governors of the Jews, such as were Zerubbabel and Nehemiah after the captivity.

He shall sit in it to eat bread. To eat part of the peace-offerings which are to be provided at his charge (see xlii. 2). Bread stands for all sorts of entertainments (see Gen. xlii. 31); and particularly for a religious feast made of the remainder of a sacrifice (Gen. xxxii. 54).

By the way of the porch. See xlii. 8.

Ver. 4. Then brought he me the way of the north gate. The east gate being shut, ver. 1.

The glory of the Lord filled the house. There was no door into the house on that side, but I could see the brightness of the divine glory shining through the windows (see xlii. 3, 5).

I fell upon my face. See i. 28.

Ver. 5. Behold with thine eyes. See xl. 4, xliii. 2.

Mark well the entering in of the house. The word laws is here to be repeated, to this sense, That the prophet should admonish the people of the laws relating to the admitting certain persons into the temple, or the courts of it, and suffer none that are un-the house of Israel. Thus said the Lord God; O ye house of Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations, 7 In that ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers, uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh, to be in my sanctuary, to pollute it, even my house, when ye offer my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have broken my covenant because of all your abominations.

8 And ye have not kept the charge of mine holy things: but ye have set keepers of my charge in my sanctuary for yourselves.

9 ^ Thus saith the Lord God; No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor unceremonised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary, of any stranger that is among the children of Israel.

10 And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols; they shall even bear their iniquity.

11 Yet they shall be ministers in my sanctuary, having charge at the gates of the house, and ministering to the house: they shall shay the burnt-offering and the sacrifice for the people, and they shall stand before them to minister unto them.

12 Because they ministered unto them before their idols, and caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity; therefore have I lifted up mine hand against them, saith the Lord God, and they shall bear their iniquity.

13 And they shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor to come near to any of the holy things, in the most holy place: but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed.

14 But I will make them keepers of the charge of the house, for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein.

15 ^ But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from me, they shall come near to me to minister unto me, and they shall stand before me to offer unto me the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God: 16 They shall enter into my sanctuary, and they shall come near to my table, to minister unto me, and they shall keep my charge. 17 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that when they enter in at the gates of the inner court, they shall be clothed with linen garments; and no wool shall come upon them, whilst they minister in the gates of the inner court, and within. 18 They shall have linen bonnets upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins; they shall not gird themselves with any thing that causeth sweat. 19 And when they go forth into the utter court, even into the utter court to the people, they shall put off their garments wherein they ministered, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments; and they shall not sanctify the people with their garments.

20 Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long; they shall only poll their heads. 21 Neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court. 22 Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away: but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that had a priest before. 23 And they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean.

24 And in controversy they shall stand in judgment; and they shall judge it according to Levi, who are priests (compare Deut. xvii. 9, xviii. 1, xxiv. 8). The sons of Zadok.] See xl. 40, xliii. 19. To offer unto me the fat and the blood.] See ver. 7. Ver. 16.] The foregoing verse expresses their ministering at the altar, and offering sacrifice there: this denotes attendance upon God's service within the temple: the principal part of which was burning incense there upon the altar placed in the temple for that purpose: which mystically implied the offering up the prayers of the people to God. This altar of incense is called here the table of the Lord, as it is xlii. 22 (see the note there). Ver. 17. At the gates of the inner court.] The court just before the temple, where the altar of burnt-offering stood, ver. 27 of this chapter.

They shall be clothed with linen garments.] The ephod, breeches, mitre, and girdle, which was the habit of the ordinary priests, were all of fine linen, contrived for "glory and beauty" (Exod. xxix. 40), fine linen being the habit of persons of the greatest quality (see note upon xxvii. 7). And within.] Or, "in the house," or temple itself, as Noldius translates the word bayetha, n. § 29.

Ver. 18. With any thing that causeth sweat.] With a woollen girdle, which may make them sweat, during their laborious services about the altar, and make their garments smell offensively. But the Chaldee paraphrase renders it thus: "They shall not be girt about their loins, but be girt upon (or about) their heart; i. e. they shall not wear girdles about their middle, or under their arm-pits, either of which may cause them to sweat, but shall wear them about their breasts. So St. John describes our Lord appearing in the habit of a high-priest, and "girt about the paps with a golden girdle," Rev. i. 13.

Ver. 19. When they go forth.] See note on xlii. 14. They shall not sanctify the people with their garments.] By the rules of the law, things immediately dedicated to God's service did convey some degree of holiness to common things that touched them: so the altar "sanctified the gift" that was laid upon it (see Lev. vi. 27, Matt. xxvii. 13). Thus some sort of holiness might be derived to the garments of the people by touching those of a priest: which God would have prevented, to keep up an exact difference between the holy and profane (ver. 23).

Ver. 20. Neither shall they shave their heads.] This prescription is implied in those words of the law, Lev. xxvi. 3, especially according to the translation of the Septuagint, who render the sentence, "Thou shalt not shave thyself with baldness [to make baldness] upon thy head for the dead." They, indeed, understand it as an expression of mourning for the dead, which agrees with the sense of the parallel texts, Lev. xix. 27, 28, Deut. xiv. 1. But the words in the original contain a general prohibition, and consequently include the times of mourning as well as other seasons. St. Jerome upon the place does with great probability suppose, that the Jewish priests were forbid to shave their heads, thereby to distinguish them from several of the heathen priests, particularly the Egyptian priests of Isis and Serapis, who had their heads shaved and uncovered; which was a ceremonial rite, and therefore proper to be used in the worship of the heathen gods, who were no better than dead men (see Baruch vi. 31). Learned men have observed, that many other Jewish laws were made in opposition to the funeral rites observed in the heathen worship.

Nor suffer their locks to grow long.] It is the opinion of Dr. Spencer (Leg. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 25), and Schindler, that this law is likewise taken out of the same chapter of Leviticus, at the tenth verse; where our translation renders the original, "He shall not uncover his head," But the Chaldee paraphrase translates the words, "He shall not nourish the hair of his head;" which sense several interpreters follow, letting the hair grow long and neglected being a sign of mourning, as well as shaving it close to the head.

Ver. 21.] During the time of their ministerial, (see ver. 17.) This law is likewise taken from Lev. x. 9, 10. And the reason of the prohibition is there given that they might "put a difference between holy and unholy, between clean and unclean," i. e. that they might be able exactly to determine the cases relating to legal uncleannesses: many of which had a great deal of niceness in them, by reason of the variety of circumstances (compare ver. 23 of this chapter).

Ver. 22.] This law we find in Lev. xxi. 13, 14. But it is there spoken of the high-priest only, here it is applied to all the priests in general.

Ver. 24. And in controversy they shall stand in judgment.] The priests were to determine all controversies relating to the law, as well the judicial as the ceremonial part of it, which were brought before them (see Deut. xvii. 8, 9), and the "people were to seek the law at their mouths" (Mal. ii. 7), i. e. to inquire of them what was the purport and my judgments: and they shall keep my laws; and my statutes in all mine assemblies; and they shall hallow my sabbaths.
25 And they shall come at no dead person to defile themselves: but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband they may defile themselves.
26 And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days.
27 And in the day that he goeth into the sancti-mary, unto the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin-offering, saith the Lord God.

meaning of it, and to stand to their determination.
And when the supreme judicial power was placed in the Sanhedrin, the majority of that court consisted chiefly of such as had the chief stations among the priests (see Acts iv. 5, 6).

They shall keep my laws—in all mine assembles:] As well upon the solemn festivals, and the assemblies proper to them (see Exod. xii. 16), as on the ordinary sabbaths.

They shall hallow my sabbaths.1] Whereas the priests before the captivity profaned them, and neglected to perform the divine worship prescribed upon them (see xxii. 20).

Ver. 23. They shall come at no dead person to defile themselves:] Whosoever touched a dead body became legally unclean (Num. xix. 11), and thereby was unqualified to attend upon God's worship in the temple (see Lev. xxii. 3), upon which account the priests were forbidden to contract such a defilement, unless for their nearest relations (Lev. xxi. 1—5), which prohibition is here renewed.

Ver. 26.] His uncleanness continued for seven days by the forecited law (Num. xix. 11), and the priests were to reckon to him seven days more, before he was to be admitted into the sanctuary.

Ver. 27.] Unto the inner court.] See ver. 17.
He shall offer his sin-offering:] He shall offer a young bullock for a sin-offering (see Lev. iv. 13).

Ver. 28.] Their ministry in my sanctuary, mentioned in the foregoing verse, and the perquisites thereto belonging, shall be to them instead of lands and cities, of which they shall not have any share, as the other tribes (see Deut. x. 9, Josh. xiii. 14); excepting the portion allotted to them in the beginning of the following chapter.

Ver. 29. They shall eat the meat-offering.] They shall have their share of it, after God's part hath been consumed upon the altar (see Lev. vi. 18, 29, vii. 6).

Every dedicated thing—shall be theirs.] Whateever men dedicate to God, the use of it shall accrue to the priests: if it be a living creature, it shall be killed, and the priest shall have the benefit of it: if it be a piece of land, it shall belong to the priests (see Lev. xxvii. 27, 28, Numb. xviii. 14).

Ver. 30. The first of all the first-fruits of all things, and every oblation] The words translated "firstfruits" and "oblations," are in the Hebrew bicevrim and trumah. The former imports the first ripe, or best of the fruits, while they were growing in the fields (compare Exod. xxii. 10, with Numb. xviii.
13); the latter denotes an oblation out of the product of the ground, after it was made fit for use: as out of the corn, after it was threshed and laid in heaps in the floor or granary: and so of oil and wine, after they were pressed and fitted for spending. These oblations are by some authors, particularly by Mr. Selden in his Treatise of Tithes, ch.
2, esteemed to amount to the sixtieth part of the whole produce. Schindler rates the bicevrim at the lowest proportion to be the sixtieth part, and compares the trumah at the fiftieth. Dr. Comber supposes the bicevrim to amount to a hundredth part, and the trumah as a medium to be the fiftieth (see his Treatise of Tithes, par. i. ch. 2, and notes on xlv. 13).

Ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough:] The first dough that you bake of the new corn every year shall belong to the priests, in the same proportion to be observed here, as in other first-fruits, viz. a sixtieth part [see Numb. xv. 20.]

That he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house:] That the priest, whose office it is to bless the people in God's name (see Numb. vi. 23, Deut.
x. 8), may procure a blessing upon thee from him, according to the promise he hath made of blessing those with an extraordinary degree of plenty, who conscientiously pay their tithes and offerings, as grateful acknowledgments to God, the giver of all good things (see 2 Chron. xxxi. 10, Prov. iii. 9, 10, Mal. iii. 10; compare Deut. xxvi. 13—15).

Ver. 31.] A command given to all the Jews,
Exod. xxii. 31, and more particularly to the priests,
Lev. xxvii. 8.

CHAPTER XLV.

1 Moreover, when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation

ARGUMENT.—The several portions of land appointed for the sanctuary, the city, and the prince; together with ordinances concerning the provisions for the ordinary and extraordinary sacrifices.

unto the Lord, an holy portion of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty

Ver. 1. When ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation] The land was divided by lot in the first division of it under Joshua, and is appointed to be divided so in the partition of it, as it here follows (see xxvii. 14, 22): a particular share of which was to be God's portion, as an acknowledg-

28 And it shall be unto them for an inheritance:
I am their inheritance: and ye shall give them no possession in Israel: I am their possession.
29 They shall eat the meat-offering, and the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering; and every dedicated thing in Israel shall be theirs.
30 And the first of all the first-fruits of all things, and every oblation of all, of every sort of your oblations, shall be the priest's: ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, that he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house.
31 The priest shall not eat of any thing that is dead of itself, or torn, whether it be fowl or beast.
CHAPTER XLV.

5 And the five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, for a possession for twenty chambers.

6 ¶ And ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

7 ¶ And a portion shall be for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward:

For twenty chambers.] Most commentators understand this of several rows of chambers, or ranges of buildings. The LXX. read ḫεν ἐκστασίαν, "cities to inhabit:" such cities as were allotted to them by Moses, Numb. xxxv. 2. The copies of the Septuagint probably read, Ṣαρίας τασσεθή, instead of the present rendering, Ἦσσιν λαοκοκοθ, 2 and 3 being easily put one for another. [These twenty chambers with apartments and storerooms, were for the use of the Levites. See 1 Chron. xxvi. 26, 33, 2 Chron. xxxii. 11, 12, Neh. x. 38, 39.]

Ver. 6. Ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against [or, by the side of; see xlvii.] the oblation of the holy portion:] Thus must run parallel in length with the holy portion, though but half its breadth: by which means these three portions made an exact square (see xlviii. 20), as you may see in the following draught.

NORTH.

The Tribe of Judah's Portion from west to east.

The Priests' Portion, 25,000 long.

Ver. 3. Of this measure] See note upon ver. 1. In it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.] Both the outerward sanctuary and the in-wards, or holiest of all, together with the courts adjoining, shall be placed in the centre or middle of it (see xlviii. 10).

Ver. 4. It shall be a place for their houses.] The priests were divided into four-and-twenty courses (1 Chron. xxiv.), who performed the public worship by turns; so the houses were for them to live in, who were not in their course of waiting. An holy place for the sanctuary.] See xlviii. 10.

Ver. 5. And the five and twenty thousand of length.] The French translation renders the sense plainer thus, "There shall be other five-and-twenty thousand," &c. (see xlviii. 13). This appears to be the true sense of the place, because else there will be wanting ten thousand in breadth to make an exact square of twenty-five thousand (see the following verse). The Levites, being very numerous (they were reckoned thirty-eight thousand in David's time, see 1 Chron. xxiii. 3), had as large a piece of ground allotted to them as belonged to the temple, and the whole priestly order. The word other is, upon a like occasion, supplied by our interpreters, xlviii. 8.

SOUTH.

It shall be for the whole house of Israel.] The capital city, to which all the tribes shall resort upon the solemn festivals, and shall have twelve gates, according to the number of the tribes of Israel (xlviii. 31).

Ver. 7. A portion shall be for the prince on the one side, &c.] One half of the prince's portion was to lie on the west side of the three portions laid out for the priests and sanctuary, the Levites and the city: and the other half lay on the east of it, and it lay parallel to them in breadth, from north to south.

The length shall be over against one of the portions, and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

8 In the land shall be his possession in Israel: and his princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Let it suffice you, 0 princes of Israel: remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your exactions from my people, saith the Lord God.

10 Ye shall have just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part from the west border unto the east; I think the words may be translated more plainly thus: "And the length shall be answerable to every one of these portions, both on the west border and the east;" i.e. it shall run parallel with them, both on the east and west side. The word leumnah, translated over against, signifies likewise parallel, or answerable, as it hath been observed in verse 18. The word ephah, one, signifies each one or every one, and is understood so in this text by Noldius, p. 755, and the phrase, "from the west border to the east," is equivalent to that expression which often occurs in the sacred text, "from small to great," which is very properly rendered, "both small and great."

Ver. 8. In the land shall be his possession in Israel.] Or, "this shall be his possession of land in Israel: for the particle la, in hebrewets, is sometimes the note of the genitive case; particularly the eighteenth and nineteenth verses of this chapter. Or, "as for land, this shall be his possession in Israel."

My princes shall no more oppress my people:] As they formerly did: for which they are severely reproved (see xix. 6, 7, xxxi. 27, Jer. xxii. 17).

Ver. 9. Let it suffice you.] This is a reproof of the oppressions of the former kings, and their chief officers (see note upon xlv. 6).

O princes of Israel!] This is to be understood of such princes as the Jews afterward had of the Asmonean race: for there were no more princes to reign of the tribe of Judah till Christ came (see xxxi. 27).

Ver. 10. Ye shall take care that there be no deceit in private trade: ye shall provide just measures both for buying and selling, both dry things and liquid (see the following verse).

Ver. 11. The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure.] The ephah was the measure of dry things, as the bath was of liquid: the homer was about ten bushels, which amounts to about eighty gallons in liquid things.

The ephah the tenth part of an homer.] We must distinguish the word homer or homer, writ with a cheth in the Hebrew, and omer, writ with an ain. The ephah is said here to be the tenth part of a homer, whereas the "omer is but the tenth part of an ephah," Exod. xvi. 36.

Ver. 12. The shekel shall be twenty gerahs.] This is made the standard of the shekel (Exod. xxx. 13), which confutes the common opinion, that the weights of the sanctuary were double to those of common use. Bishop Cumberland computes a gerah to be equivalent to an Attic obolus, consisting of almost eleven grains of silver. The shekel is usually valued at two shillings and sixpence of our money; but the same learned author supposes it to be in value but two shillings and four-pence farthing of our money and a little over (see his treatise of Scripture Weights and Measures, p. 104, &c.).

Twenty shekels, shall be your maneh.] Maneh is the same with the Greek μηνη and the Latin mina, being both derived from it. A maneh, or mina, consists of sixty shekels, i.e. thirty ounces of silver (see ibid. p. 125): which reckoning every shekel at two shillings and sixpence value, amounts to seven pounds ten shillings. The dividing the maneh into twenty, twenty-five, and fifteen shekels, supposes there were coins of these several values, which taken altogether, are to be of the same weight with the mina.

Ver. 13. This is the oblation that ye shall offer.] The Hebrew word, translated oblation is נאום, which is always distinguished from the loccurn, or first-fruits, and signifies the portion belonging to the Levites out of the fruits of the earth when they were gathered in (see xxlv. 30). For which reason, St. Jerome, upon the place, supposes the following words to express the proportion the people ought to pay the Levites out of the increase of their ground; which, by their rabbles, was determined to amount to at least a sixtieth part; in which determination they probably followed the rule laid down in this verse (compare ver. 11). This sense is likewise favoured by the Chaldee paraphrase: after which separation, a tenth part was to be paid out of the remainder. The portions allotted to the priests and Levites were not intended only for their own maintenance, but likewise to make a constant provision for those sacrifices, both ordinary and extraordinary, which were appointed by the law (see Mal. iii. 10).

Ver. 14. Concerning the ordinance of oil, a bath of oil.] Or, "concerning the ordinance of oil, even the bath of oil." The cor, and the homer, are mentioned as containing the same quantity; so a bath is the tenth part of a cor, as an ephah is the tenth part of a homer; and the tenth part of a bath of oil is the hundredth part of a cor, which amounts to about six pints of our measure, according to Bishop Cumberland, p. 137.

Ver. 15. One lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred.] This offering is enjoined, besides setting apart the first-born for the use of the priests and Levites (Numb. xviii. 14), for making provision for the daily burnt-offering (Numb. xxxviii. 3, and for burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, or sacrifices of thanksgiving, that were to be made upon proper occasions (see xliii. 27).

Out of the fat pastures of Israel.] This implies, that these lambs were to be of the best and fattest of their kind (see Mal. i. 8, 14), as all other tithe and things dedicated to God were to be (see Numb. xviii. 12).
a meat-offering, and for a burnt-offering, and for peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord God.

16 All the people of the land shall give this oblation for the prince in Israel.

17 And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall prepare the sin-offering, and the meat-offering, and the burnt-offering, and the peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

18 Thus saith the Lord God: In the first month, in the first day of the month, shall take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary;

19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court.

For a meat-offering:] These words relate to the thirteenth and fourteenth verses. The meat-offering, which might be more properly translated the bread-offering, being made with fine flour mingled with oil (Lev. ii. 5, 9).

To make reconciliation for them:] This effect is ascribed to the burnt-offerings, as well as to those which are properly sacrificed for sin [see Lev. i. 4].

Ver. 16. For the prince] The marginal reading is, "with the prince," which makes the plainer sense; i.e. the prince shall join with the people in making these oblations; whereas those that follow, in the next verse, are to be at the sole charge of the prince.

Ver. 17. In the new moons.] Or, "even in the new moons," as the particle you often signifies. Meat-offerings and drink-offerings were always joined with burnt-offerings [see Numb. xxviii. 5, 7]. The particular sacrifices which the prince was to provide upon the sabbaths, and other festivals, are specified, xli. 4, 11.

How he shall prepare the sin-offering:] 1. e. Provide it. Concerning the sin-offering, see xl. 39.

To make reconciliation] See ver. 15.

Ver. 18. Take a young bullock—and cleanse the sanctuary:] The words are directed to the prince, who is commanded, on the first day of the new year (which, according to the ecclesiastical computation, began with the month Nisan, and answers to our tenth of March; see Exod. xii. 2;) to provide a bullock for a burnt-offering, to cleanse the temple from any defilement it may have contracted, by the people's offering their sacrifices, or coming into any of the courts belonging to it, while they were under any legal pollution [see Lev. xvi. 19].

Without blemish:] Whatever was offered to God was to be perfect, without blemish, and the very best in its kind [see note upon ver. 15, and Lev. xxii. 20].

Ver. 19. The priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering:] Of the bullock which was offered for a sin-offering [see xliii. 19]. The office of the priest is here distinguished from that of the prince: the prince was to provide the sacrifices, and the priest was to offer them.

20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.

21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

22 And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin-offering.

23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt-offering to the Lord, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering.

24 And he shall prepare a meat-offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

25 In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the feast of the seven days, according to the sin-offering, according to the burnt-offering, and according to the meat-offering, and according to the oil.

Put it upon the posts] Upon the lintels, or the door-posts of the house [see xlii. 21].

Upon the four corners] See xliii. 14, 20.

Upon posts of the gate] See xlvi. 1.

Ver. 20. For every one that erreth:] There were particular sacrifices appointed for sins of ignorance, whether of private persons, or of the whole congregation [see Lev. iv. 13, 27].

So shall ye reconcile the house:] Cleanse it from any pollution it may have contracted through the ignorance of any of the common people [see ver. 15].

Ver. 22.] See ver. 17.

Ver. 23. Seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt-offering:] Moses, in some places, speaks of the feast of unleavened bread, which lasted seven days, as distinct from the day wherein the passover was to be eaten [see Lev. xxvii. 5, 6]; which is agreeable to the injunction of this and the foregoing verse; and the words may be easily reconciled with those texts, which include the whole solemnity within the compass of seven days, by supposing the passover to be early in the evening, on the fourteenth day, "between the two evenings," as the Hebrew text hath it, Exod. xii. 6. Immediately after which ceremony was over, they reckoned the fifteenth day to begin; for they reckoned their days from one evening to another [see Lev. xxiii. 32].

Seven bullocks, and seven rams:] Seven was a number often used in religious rites: most of the feasts, under the law, continued seven days; and this number of sacrifices seems to be derived from patriarchal institution, because such a custom prevailed where Moses's law was not known [see Numb. xxiii. 1, 2, Job xlii. 8].

A kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering:] This was the sin-offering most commonly prescribed [see Numb. xxviii. 15, 22, 30, xxix. 5, 11, 16, 19, &c.]

An hin of oil for an ephah:] For each ephah of fine flour. A hin was the sixth part of an ephah or bath; which contains one gallon and two pints, according to Bishop Cumberland, in the forecited place.

Ver. 25. In the seventh month:] When the feast of tabernacles was kept [see Lev. xxvii. 34].
CHAPTER XLVI.

1 Thus saith the Lord God: The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened.

2 And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priests shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate: then he shall go forth: but the gate shall not be shut until the evening.

3 Likewise the people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate before the Lord in the sabbaths and in the new moons.

4 And the burnt-offering that the prince shall offer unto the Lord in the sabbath day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish.

5 And the meat-offering shall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat-offering for the lambs as he shall be able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

6 And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish.

7 And he shall prepare a meat-offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

8 And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 ¶ But when the people of the land shall come before the Lord in the solemn feasts, he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate in the same place, as it is prescribed in the following verse.

Ver. 3] During the continuance of the tabernacle, they that would offer any sacrifice were required to bring it to the "door of the tabernacle of the congregation," and there "lay their hands upon the head of it" (Lev. 1. 3, 4); and under the temple they came to the north or south gate of the temple-court, according as the sacrifice was to be slain on the north or south side of the altar, and there presented their sacrifice (see Dr. Lightfoot's Temple, ch. 34). Here the inner porch of the east gate is assigned for their station, who came to present themselves before the Lord upon the solemn festivals, and they were to come no farther into the inner court.

Ver. 4] It was the prince's part to provide sacrifices for the sabbaths and other festivals (see xliv. 17). This was a new ordinance, whereupon the number of the beasts that were to be offered, and the proportions of the meat and drink-offerings, are different here from those prescribed in the law: as will appear by comparing the fourth, sixth, seventh, and fourteenth verses of this chapter with Num. xxviii. 9, 11, 12, 15.

Ver. 5. The meat-offering] See xlv. 3. As he shall be able to give.] The margin reads from the Hebrew, "according to the gift of his hand," i.e. as much as he shall think sufficient (see the same expression, Deut. xvi. 17).

Ver. 6. He shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate.] See ver. 2. To go in at the eastern gate was the privilege of the prince and the priests only: the people were to enter in by the north or south gates, as it is said in the following verse.

Ver. 7. He that entereth in by the north gate to worship, shall go out by the way of the south gate.] The words imply the reason why the people were not to come in at the east gate, because there being no passage or thoroughfare out of the temple westward; if they had entered in at the east gate, they must have returned back the same way they came in, which would have been turning their back upon God, and the place of his residence (see the note upon viii. 16).

Dr. Spencer mentions this as a rule in the Talmud, that "they who come within the holy mount, should enter in by the way of the right hand, and go out by-whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

11 And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meat-offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt-offering or peace-offerings voluntarily unto the Lord, one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, as he did on the sabbath day: then shall he go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the Lord of a lamb of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord.

15 Thus shall they shall the lamb, and the the left:" understanding the right hand of the northern part of the temple, and the left hand of the southern: so he is of opinion that God designed to take away that superstitions distinction between the several gates of the temple, by commanding that every one should go out the opposite way to that by which he came in, whether it were towards the north or south (see lib. iv. De Lex. Hebr. cap. 8).

Ver. 10.] He shall pay the same attendance upon God's worship with the people, since all men are equal in the sight of God.

Ver. 12. When the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt-offering] The foregoing verses gave orders about the sacrifices the prince was enjoined to offer upon solemn days: this gives directions concerning the free-will-offerings (concerning which, see Lev. xxii. 18, 21).

One shall then open him the gate] When the service is performed he shall go back the same way (see ver. 8); and the porter shall shut the gate after him, because it may not stand open upon ordinary days (ver. 1).

Ver. 19.] The daily evening sacrifice is generally supposed to be here implied, according to prescription of the law, Numb. xxviii. 3, 4, and both together called by the name of "the daily sacrifice," Dan. viii. 11, 12. The daily oblation seems to have been provided at the joint charge of prince and people (see xlv. 16, 17).

Ver. 14. The sixth part of an ephah.] In Numb. xxviii. 5, the proportion required is the "tenth part of an ephah, and the fourth part of a hin of oil." By a perpetual ordinance] So the law of the pass-over is called a "perpetual ordinance," Exod. xii. 17, and likewise ordinances about the first-fruits, Lev. xxvii. 14. The Hebrew word olam is used in each of those places: but that does not always denote perpetuity in a strict sense, but only a remarkable period or succession of years; accordingly the Jews themselves divide the duration of the world into three olams, or ages: that before the law, that under the law, and the times of the Messiah.

Ver. 17. It shall be his to the year of liberty.] So the year of jubilee is called by the name of liberty. Lev. xxv. 10, because it freed both men's persons from the service of their masters, and their estates from any engagements, by which the right of them was transferred from their proper owners.

After it shall return to the prince.] Or to his heirs, if he be dead.

But his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.] Or, his inheritance shall belong to his sons, it shall be theirs: so as not to be alienated.

Ver. 15. The prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression.] As Ahab did, 1 Kings xvil. 16 (compare xlv. 8).

Be not scattered every man from his possession.] lest being turned out of their own, they be forced to wander up and down the country for a livelihood.

Ver. 19. Through the entry.] The entry or private passage (see xli. 9) led to the priests' chambers, which were on the north side of the inner court, and are described, xl. 44, 46.

On the two sides westward.] Or, on their sides westward: i. e. there was an enclosure on the west sides of these chambers: if we follow the sense of the English translation, we may suppose a walk or way between these western buildings, which divided them into two rows, or equal parts (see ch. xlii. 4).

Ver. 20. Where the priests shall boil the trespass-offering and the sin-offering.] See xlii. 13, xlv. 29.

The flesh of the sacrifices which were to be eaten was to be boiled, except the flesh of the passover (see 2 Chron. xlv. 10). So it is taken notice of as a piece of daintiness, and an over nice palate in the sons of Eli, that they would not have the flesh which came to their share sodden, but roasted (1 Sam. ii. 15).

Where they shall bake the meat-offering.] According to the directions given Lev. ii. 4, 5.

Ver. 21. That they shall not go into the court.] The flesh of these sacrifices, and the remainder of the meat-offering, was accounted most holy (see Lev. vi. 17, 29, vii. 6): and consequently did con-
CHAPTER XLVII.

ARGUMENT.—The vision of the holy waters issuing out of the temple, and the virtue of them: together with a description of the several bounds of the holy land, which is to be indifferently shared between the Israelites and the proselytes that sojourned among them.

VER. 1. Unto the door of the house.] The door of the temple, which is described, xli. 2.

Waters issued out from under the threshold eastward.] There was a great quantity of water necessary for the uses of the temple, for washing the bodies of those that officiated, as well as the sacrifices which they offered. This was conveyed in pipes under ground from the fountain Etam, as Dr. Lightfoot observes from the rabbins, and from Aristobulus, an eye-witness (see his Temple, ch. 23). These waters gave occasion to the vision here related.

The forefront of the house stood toward the east.] The inward sanctuary being placed toward the west (see note upon viii. 16).

From under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar.] This is spoken with respect to those that come out of the temple, and direct their faces eastward. For then the south side is on a man's right hand. These waters were conveyed, by the right side of the altar, into a room they call the well-room (see Dr. Lightfoot, in the footnoted place.)

VER. 2. Then brought he me out of [or by] the way of the gate northward.] The east gate being shut (see xlvii. 1). The prophet in this vision is led to the north gate of the inner court.

Led me about the way without unto the utter gate] out unto the utter gate by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the waters were to the ankles.

Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the He led me into the outward court, and so on till he came to the outmost north wall that encompassed the whole mountain of the Lord's house (see xlii. 20).

By the way that looketh eastward.] When the prophet was come quite through all the courts, and is on the outside of the outermost, he is directed to come from the north gate towards the east gate.

There ran out waters on the right side.] On the south side (see ver. 1). These were the spare waters not used in the service of the temple, which were conveyed away by the east part of the mountain, and by degrees increased its stream till it became a river, and fell at last into the Dead sea (see ver. 8, 10, and compare Joel iii. 18).

VER. 3.] The angel described with a line in his hand (xlii. 3), went on directly from the east gate before the holy mountain.

Ibid. and ver. 4.] The gradual rise of the waters represented in this vision, denotes the large effusion of the Spirit, which was very remarkable at the first publication of the gospel, and its wonderful increase from small beginnings; and will be so again, when God shall "pour the spirit of grace" upon the Jews, in order to their conversion (Zech. xii. 10, see the note upon Isa. lxi. 10). The supplies of grace are often represented in the holy writers under the metaphor of a river, and streams watering the dry and thirsty earth, both cleansing and making fruitful the ground where they pass. The metaphor is probably taken from the river that watered paradise (see Rev. xxii. 1, and compare Isa. xlv. 3, Zech. xiii. 1, xiv. 8, and see the notes upon Isa. xxx. 25).

VER. 6. Son of man, hast thou seen this?] Hast thou considered or taken notice of this vision now shewed unto thee (compare xlv. 4)? To see, often signifies... knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins.

5 Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over; for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

6 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me; and caused me to return to the brink of the river.

7 Now when I had returned, behold, at the bank of the river were very many trees on the one side and on the other.

8 Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed.

9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

10 And it shall come to pass, that the fishers shall stand upon it from En-gedi even unto Engeslim; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many.

11 But the miry places thereof and the marishes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt.

12 And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine.

13 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; This shall be is said, that "a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim:" which we knew was in the country of Moab (see Numb. xxv. 1). So these two places denote the whole extent of that lake, which the prophet saith shall be full of fish, still prosecuting the allegory begun in the foregoing verses.

To spread forth nets] These two towns shall afford convenience for the fishers to hang out their nets a drying (see xxvi. 5).

As the fish of the great sea] This lake for plenty of fish may compare with the Mediterranean sea, called "the great sea" here, and ver. 15, 19, xxvii. 28, and more distinctly described in Joshua by "the great sea westward," Josh. xxii. 4. Perhaps Christ may allude to this place, when he tells his disciples, he "will make them fishers of men," Matt. iv. 19.

Ver. 11.] By these unsound, rotten places, may be understood hypocrites; who shall receive no benefit by these healing waters, no more than some sort of marsh land can be made fruitful: but after all the care or culture that can be bestowed upon it, continues barren and unprofitable, which the Hebrew language expresseth by being "given to salt:" it is of no fruit, and its unfitness is equivalent to barrenness in that language (see Deut. xxix. 23, Ps. cvii. 34, Jer. xxvii. 6): so we read Judg. ix. 45, when Abimelech destroyed Shechem, he "sowed the ground whereon it stood with salt," to denote that it should never be cultivated or inhabited again.

Whose leaves shall not fade.] They shall be perpetually in a thriving condition, like the trees of paradise, never barren or withering: a proper emblem of the flourishing state of the righteous still bringing forth "fruit unto holiness," and whose "end is everlasting life" (see Ps. i. 3, Jer. xviii. 8).

It shall bring forth new fruit] It shall be constantly fruitful, not only once a year, as fruit-trees commonly are (compare Rev. xxii. 2).

The leaf thereof for medicine.] As the waters issuing from the sanctuary have a healing virtue (see ver. 8); so the leaves of the trees shall have the same quality. The expression alludes to the opinion commonly received among naturalists and physicians, that the leaves of several trees are medicinal.

Ver. 13. This shall be the border.] The borders described in the following part of this chapter shall be the border, whereby ye shall inherit the land according to the twelve tribes of Israel: Joseph shall have two portions.

14 And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another: concerning the which I lifted up mine hand to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance.

15 And this shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from the great sea, the way of Hethlon, as men go to Zedad;

16 Hamath, Berothah, Sibraim, which is between the border of Damascus and the border of Hamath; Hazar-hatticon, which is by the coast of Hauran.

17 And the border from the sea shall be Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus, and the north northward, and the border of Hamath. And this is the north side.

The limits or boundaries of your country. By the several cavities both of Israel and Judah, the several limits or borders belonging to the inheritance of each tribe were obliterated and forgotten; whereupon here is a new boundary and division made of the holy land, a full possession of which they might have expected to enjoy, if their sins had not prevented such a blessing. This may perhaps be the literal sense of the following part of the prophecy; though there is, without question, a mystical sense implied under this literal description (see note on xviii. 7, 30).

Joseph shall have two portions.] Upon Reuben’s forfeiting his birthright, the double portion belonging to the first-born accrued to Joseph’s two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim, according to Jacob’s own appointment (see Gen. xlviii. 5, 1 Chron. v. 1).

Ver. 14. Ye shall inherit it, one as well as another.] The ten tribes that are scattered abroad, as well as Judah and Benjamin (see xviii. 1, 7, 28, 27); who, together with some of the families of the tribe of Levi, made up the principal part of those who returned from the Babylonish captivity; from hence we may conclude that this prophecy relates to the general restoration of the Jews, an event often foretold in the prophecies of the Old Testament (see note upon xxviii. 25).

To give it unto your fathers: See xx. 5, 6.

The word fall is taken from the manner of their first acquiring the possession of the land, which was by lot, as it had formerly been, when they first took possession of it (see ver. 22, and xlviii. 29). By which means all controversies will be prevented, the lot referring all things to the divine designation and appointment (Prov. xvi. 33).

This land shall fall unto you for inheritance.] This land shall fall unto you, for inheritance, as the northern border of the land was to begin from the west point, on which side lay the Mediterranean sea (see ver. 10), and go on northward towards Hethlon, a place near Damascus (see xviii. 1); and so on forward to Zedad, mentioned Numb. xxxiv. 8.

Ver. 16. Hamath.] The places here mentioned were within this tract of ground. Hamath was the utmost point of the land northward, therefore called the entrance of Hamath,” and described as the opposite point to the river of Egypt (see 1 Kings viii. 65, Amos vi. 14): the other two towns were situated between Hamath and Hauran.

Hazar-hatticon, which is by the coast of Hauran.] Or, as our margin reads, “the middle villages” between Hamath and Hauran, a place lying eastward from Hamath, from whence that country was called Auranitis.

Ver. 17. The border from the sea shall be Hazar-enan.] Or, shall be to Hazar-enan, even the border of Damascus, and all the northern frontier, and the border of Hamath; i.e. that tract of land which is called the entrance of Hamath,” as was observed before. Your northern border shall be, as if a line were drawn from the Mediterranean sea, along by Hamath, and so to Hazar-enan (see Numb. xxxiv. 9); keeping along by the frontier of that part of Syria, called Syria of Damascus: so as to distinguish the northern boundaries of Israel from the southern limits of Syria.

Ver. 18. The east side ye shall measure from Hauran, and from Damascus, and from Gilead.] Damascus lay more northerly than Hauran, but the country called Auranitis might reach nearer it. Gilead was a large tract of ground that joined to mount Libanus, and was extended to the land of Zidon, king of the Amorites, as St. Jerome tells us in his book De Loci Hebraiciis: it is called the land of Gilead,” and reached unto Dan, Deut. xxxiv. 1.

From the border unto the great sea.] From the northern limits of the land of Israel (ver. 17), near Canna or Dan, where the river Jordan takes its rise, unto the Dead sea, or the lake of Sodom (see ver. 8).

Ver. 19. The south side southward, from Tamar even to the waters of strife in Kadesh, [to the river unto the great sea.] Compare xlviii. 28. The southern frontiers shall be from En-gedi, called Hazazon-tamar, 2 Chron. xx. 2 (see Dr. Lightfoot’s Description of the Land of Israel, ch. 6), to the waters of Meribah, or strife, in Kadesh (Deut. xxii. 52), and from thence to the river of Egypt. The river of Egypt riseth out of mount Paran, taketh its course to the east of the river of Egypt, and from thence falls into the Mediterranean, called the great sea,” ver. 10. See Gen. xxv. 18, Josh. xxiv. 47, 1 Kings viii. 65, Isa. xxxvii. 12, where the LXX. translate it, ἡν τῆς Βοτανίας, “to Rhinocorura,” near which it runs. This river seems to be the same with Sihor, mentioned Josh. xiii. 3, though that name be commonly understood to signify the Nile (see notes upon Jer. ii. 18).

Ver. 20. The west side also shall be the great sea from the border.] i.e. From the south border, mentioned in the foregoing verse; so ver. 18, “from the border,” means the northern border, mentioned ver. 17.

Till a man come over against Hamath.] Or rather, “Till a man come to Hamath,” for so the particle had-nocah signifies (see Noldus, p. 657): till you be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1 Now these are the names of the tribes. From the north end to the coast of the way of Hethlon, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus northward, to the coast of Hamath; for these are his sides east and west; a portion for Dan.

2 And by the border of Dan, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Asher.

3 And by the border of Asher, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Naphtali.

4 And by the border of Naphtali, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Manasseh.

5 And by the border of Manasseh, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Ephraim.

CHAP. XLVIII.

ARGUMENT.—This last chapter contains a description of the several portions of land belonging to each tribe: together with the portions allotted to the sanctuary, city, suburbs, and princes: as also the measure and gates of the new city.

Ver. 1. From the north end to the coast of the way of Hethlon.] As the description of the limits, or boundaries of the land, began on the north side (xlvii. 15, &c.), so the portion of that tribe, to whom the most northern lot fell, is first named, which is Dan. These are his sides east and west;] These are the boundaries belonging to that tribe, from the east point near mount Libanus and Gilead, to the west point, which is bounded by the Mediterranean sea (see xlvii. 15, &c.).

Ver. 2.] All along from the south side of Dan, measuring from east to west, shall the share of Asher be.

Ver. 7.] From the first verse to the seventh, the situation of seven of the twelve tribes is described, which were placed on the north side of the holy portion, the length of Judea, from north to south, being divided into twelve equal parts (see xlvii. 14); beside the allotment for the holy portion, and for the princes; and the city and temple being placed where they stood formerly, there must be seven shares on the north side of that allotment, and but five on the south side; for Jerusalem did not stand in the middle of the holy land, but more towards the south, as may appear to any one that consults the map of Judea.

But for the fuller explaining this difficulty, we may reasonably conclude, that Judah's portion lay nearest to that which was allotted for the priests and sanctuary, to be a barrier and defence to them against the invasion of Gog and Magog, or any other enemies.

6 And by the border of Ephraim, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Reuben.

7 And by the border of Reuben, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Judah.

8 ¶ And by the border of Judah, from the east side unto the west side, shall be the offering which ye shall offer of five and twenty thousand reeds in breadth, and in length as one of the other parts, from the east side unto the west side: and the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it.

9 The oblation that ye shall offer unto the Lord shall be of five and twenty thousand in length, and of ten thousand in breadth.

It is the opinion of some learned men, that so particular a description of the several portions allotted to each tribe relates to the Jews' settlement in their own country after their conversion; several passages in the prophets looking that way (see the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh chapters of this prophecy); but without laying too great a stress upon this opinion, we may fairly suppose some mystical sense contained under this description. The twelve tribes denote the pure Christian church in the New Testament (see Luke xxii. 30, Rev. vii. 4, &c.) Twelve is a hieroglyphical number in the same book, denoting the true church, built upon the doctrine of the twelve apostles (see Rev. xii. 1, xxi. 14). By the same analogy, the number of "a hundred and forty and four thousand," Rev. vii. 4, xiv. 1, signifies the church of pure Christians, who continue steadfast in the apostolical doctrine, twelve being the square root, out of which that number arises: so this division of the land among the twelve tribes, may imply, that all true Christians shall be equally sharers in the privileges of the gospel.

Ver. 8. By the border of Judah,—five and twenty thousand reeds] Next to the border of Judah, which runs in length from east to west, shall be the offering ye shall set a apart for the service of God (xiv. 1). The word reeds is not in the original, either here or in that text; and we may more probably understand the measure of both places of cubits (see note there).

In length as one of the other parts [arc from the east side unto the west] which was likewise five and twenty thousand, according to the dimensions of the holy portion set down, xlv. 1, 6. For the oblation was to be four-square, consisting of five and twenty thousand, multiplied by five and twenty thousand (see ver. 20 of this chapter).

Ver. 9.] This shall be set apart for the sanctuary, and the most holy place, and the priests' houses (see xlv. 3, 4).
10 And for them, even for the priests, shall be this holy oblation; toward the north five and twenty thousand in length, and toward the west ten thousand in breadth, and toward the east ten thousand in breadth, and toward the south five and twenty thousand in length: and the sanctuary of the Lord shall be in the midst thereof.

11 It shall be for the priests that are sanctified of the sons of Zadok; which have kept my charge, which went not astray when the children of Israel went astray, when the Levites went astray.

12 And this oblation of the land that is offered shall be unto them a thing most holy by the border of the Levites.

13 And over against the border of the priests the Levites shall have five and twenty thousand in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand.

14 And they shall not sell it, neither exchange, nor alienate the first-fruits of the land: for it is holy unto the Lord.

15 ¶ And the five thousand that are left in the breadth over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be a profane place for the city, for dwelling, and for suburbs, and the city shall be in the midst thereof.

16 And these shall be the measures thereof; the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred.

17 And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

18 And the residue in length over against the oblation of the holy portion shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion: and the increase thereof shall be for food unto them that serve the city.

19 And they that serve the city shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel.

20 All the oblation shall be five and twenty thousand thousand by five and twenty thousand; ye shall offer the holy oblation four-square, with the possession of the city.

21 ¶ And the residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the possession of the city, over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation, toward the east border, and westward over against the five and twenty thousand toward the west border, over against the portions for the prince; and it shall be the holy oblation; and the sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof.

22 Moreover from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of that which is the prince's, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, shall be for the prince.

23 As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side Benjamin shall have a portion.

24 And by the border of Benjamin, from the east side unto the west side, Simeon shall have a portion.

25 And by the border of Simeon, from the east side unto the west, Issachar a portion.

26 And by the border of Issachar, from the east side unto the west, Zebulun a portion.

27 And by the border of Zebulun, from the east side unto the west, Gad a portion.

28 And by the border of Gad, at the south side southward, the border shall be even from Tamar unto the waters of strife in Kadesh, and to the river toward the great sea.

29 This is the land which ye shall divide by lot unto the tribes of Israel for an inheritance, and these are their portions, saith the Lord God.

30 ¶ And these are the going out of the city

Rev. xxi. 16, a square figure being the emblem of perpetuity, strength, and solidity (compare xlii. 16, 20.)

A great part of the wisdom of the eastern nations was wrapped up in hieroglyphical emblems and numbers. The symbols of Pythagoras are a remarkable instance of this sort of ancient learning. This method God hath thought fit to make use of to discover some mysterious truths in his word: such as perhaps he thinks not convenient to be more clearly revealed till its proper time and season: intending by such obscure hints to encourage men's searching into the more abstruse parts of the scriptures, and to show that all human knowledge may be made subservient to divine.

The text before us, compared with its parallel in the forty-second chapter of this prophecy, and in the Revelation, plainly shows that a square is an emblematical figure. In like manner the number twelve is a sacred number, as I observed upon ver. 7, and the learned Mr. Potter, in his book of the Number 666, hath with great acuteness reconciled the twelve thousand furlongs, the measure of the New Jerusalem in the Revelation, with the measures of Ezekiel here, by interpreting them of solid measures, and extracting the root of each of them.

With the possession of the city.] Or, the land assigned to the city, which was a square of five thousand cubits; and being added to the portion of the priests and Levites, made their twelve thousand to be five and twenty thousand in breadth (see ver. 10, 15.)

Ver. 21. The residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other. The prince's part shall be extended both on the east and west side of the several allotments belonging to the priests, the Levites, and the city. The particular extent of the prince's portion is not here specified, but it is computed by some to contain above four times as much as those allotments (see note upon ver. 22.)

Over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation.] The particle el-pene, translated "over against," is rendered before in the parallel text, xlv. 7, and thus interpreted makes the sense clearer: the words then importing, that the prince's portion ran along eastward and westward, like a frontier before the holy portions (see the forementioned scheme).

Over against the portions for the prince, &c.] Our translation hath rendered the latter part of this verse very imperfectly: which should be thus translated: "Beyond those [or joining to these] portions (so leummath signifies, see ver. 13,) shall be that belonging to the prince: and this shall be the holy oblation, and the sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof." The last part of the sentence is only a recapitulation of what is said more at large, ver. 5.

Ver. 22. Moreover from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city.] The words might be more plainly translated thus, "Moreover beyond the possession of the Levites, and beyond the possession of the city"—to this sense: that the possession belonging to the priests and Levites (see ver. 11,) and the city, were bounded on the east and west side with the prince's portion: so those lay in the middle, and this beyond them. The Hebrew particle mius signifies beyond, in several places: examples of which may be seen in Noldius, p. 564.

Between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, shall be for the prince.] The border of Judah was extended from east to west, next to the holy portion on the north side (see ver. 1, 8.) The portion of Benjamin lay from east to west next the allotment set apart for the city, on the south side (ver. 23, 25.) The several portions allotted for the priests, the Levites, and the city, extended only to the length of five and twenty thousand cubits from east to west: so that whatever ground ran in a parallel line eastward and westward beyond that boundary, even to the land's end, belonged to the prince: and supposing the whole country to be sixty miles in breadth (as St. Jerome reckons it from Joppa to Jordan, Epist. ad Dardam), and the holy portion, about seven miles square (see the note upon xlv. 1,) there will remain above six and twenty miles both on the east and west side for the prince's share (see the scheme placed at the forty-fifth chapter).

Ver. 23.] The portion assigned to Judah was situated next to the holy portion on the north side, (see ver. 1, 8,) The portion assigned to Benjamin lay next to the ground allotted for the city on the south side (see ver. 25.) All these allotments run from east to west in length, and from north to south in breadth.

Ver. 24—27.] In these verses the four remaining tribes have their allotments assigned them, lying on the south side of the holy portion. These appointments are not laid out with any regard to the division of the land made in Joshua's time; for here a platform of a new church and state is set forth.

Ver. 25.] This is a description of the southernmost borders of the land, extending by the south and west to the Mediterranean sea (see xlvii. 19).

Ver. 29.] See xlvii. 14, 22.

Ver. 30.] The same measures of the city are al-on the north side, four thousand and five hundred measures.

Ver. 31.] The same description is given of the gates of the New Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 12, 13, to signify that all true Israelites have their share in this heavenly city, and a right to enter into it (Rev. xxi. 14).
Ver. 35. Eighteen thousand measures:] See ver. 16.

Jerusalem, God shall dwell in a more glorious manner, and make it the place of his perpetual residence. So that every part of the city shall be honoured with evident tokens of the divine presence; and every member of it being dedicated to God's service, and becoming "a habitation of God through his Spirit," shall have some degree of the holiness of the temple, where God "had placed his name" (1 Kings viii. 29, compare with Rev. xxi. 22). This is in a lower degree fulfilled in all good Christians, who are called "the temples of the living God," 2 Cor. vi. 16, 1 Pet. ii. 5, and "a habitation of God through the Spirit," Eph. ii. 22.

THE BOOK OF

THE PROPHET DANIEL,

AND

THE TWELVE MINOR PROPHETS.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,

WILLIAM,

ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY;

PRIMATE OF ALL ENGLAND, AND METROPOLITAN; AND ONE OF HIS MAJESTY'S MOST HONOURABLE PRIVY-COUNCIL.

May it please your Grace,

Having had the honour to offer some former parts of my Commentary upon the Prophets to your Grace, I beg leave to lay this last and finishing part of my design at your Grace's feet, humbly entreating your favourable acceptance of my sincere endeavours to give what light I could to this important part of the holy writings.

The obscurity which is found in some passages of these prophecies, particularly in those of Daniel, hath exercised the thoughts of inquisitive men, in the foregoing ages of the church. But we, "upon whom the ends of the world are come," seem to have an advantage above those that went before us: forasmuch as it may be reasonably supposed, that the nearer the events foretold are to their accomplishment, the greater light several providental occurrences may afford to the predictions themselves.

The prophecy of Daniel is an undeniable proof of an overruling providence that "changes times and seasons," that removeth one government, and setteth up another. For what foresight was able so exactly to describe the orderly succession of the four great monarchies, but that of the Eternal Mind, whose "wisdom reacheth from one end to another mightily, and sweethly orders all things? Who declares the end from the beginning, and from ancient times things which are not yet come to pass: saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."

That holy prophet was adorned with such extraordinary endowments, as seldom are found in one person: being not only honoured with the gift of prophecy; but likewise advanced to bear rule over kingdoms, "by reason of that excellent spirit which was found in him:" this might afford me a proper occasion to draw a parallel between his and your Grace's accomplishments, which have qualified you to sustain the highest office in the church, and the greatest trusts in the state. But I shall forbear pursuing this subject, being well assured that your Grace takes greater satisfaction in performing worthy deeds, than hearing the report of them proclaimed by others: and shall combine with my hearty prayers, that your Grace may also resemble the felicity of Daniel, in enjoying a long and prosperous life here, and may then be translated to an endless happiness hereafter.

I am, may it please your Grace, Your Grace's most dutiful and obedient servant, WILLIAM LOWTH.

CONCERNING THE AUTHOR AND THE SUBJECT OF THE ENSUING PROPHECY.

The prophet Daniel was descended of the royal family of the kings of Judah: so that in the captivity of himself and his companions was fulfilled that prophecry of Isaiah, that the "king's issue should be eunuchs, or officers, to the king of Babylon" (Isa. xxxix. 7). The later Jews do not reckon Daniel among the prophets; but herein they contradict the sense of the more ancient ones, and particularly of Josephus, who calls him "one of the greatest of the prophets," and saith, "that he did not only foretell future things, which was common to him with other prophets, but also prefixed a time for their coming to pass" (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 12). Our Saviour's authority is decisive in this matter, who expressly calls Daniel a prophet, Matt. xxiv. 13, wherein he likewise spoke the sense of the Jews of that time. And if we consider the important subject of some of his prophecies, wherein he plainly points out the time of Christ's coming and sufferings, and the large extent of others of them, giving an account of the succession of four monarchies unto the end of the world, he may justly be reckoned among the first of that order. Daniel and St. John had both of them the honour of being persons greatly beloved by God and Christ (compare Dan. x. 11, with John xiii. 23); so the latter, in his Revelation, doth more distinctly unfold those events which the former foretold in general terms, as Mr. Mede has observed (see his works, p. 787).

This prophecy is writ partly in Hebrew, and partly in Chaldee: for which this reason may be assigned: that those parts of it in which the Babylonian empire was concerned were writ in their language, viz. from ii. 4, to the end of the seventh chapter; a great part of which was probably entered into their public registers (see a like instance, Esth. ii. 23).

St. Jerome tells us in the preface to his Commentary upon Daniel, that Porphyry had the boldness to affirm, that the prophecies of Daniel relating to the kings of Syria and Egypt (ch. xi.), were written after the times of Antiochus Epiphanes: this was plainly granting the truth of the matters of fact therein contained, as St. Jerome observes; and the falsity of his assertion clearly appears from hence, that this prophecy was translated into Greek a hundred years before Antiochus's time, and that translation was in the hands of the Egyptians, who had no kind of either for the Jews or their religion. Nay, farther, the prophecies of Daniel foretelling the great successes of Alexander (viii. 5. xi. 3), were shown to Alexander himself by the Jews, who thereupon obtained several privileges from him, as Josephus informs us, Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 8.

Daniel lived in great favour under Nebuchadnezzar and his successors in the Babylonian monarchy: his extraordinary merits continued him in the same degree of favour under Darius and Cyrus, the first two Persian monarchs: and, as Josephus observes (ubi supra), "he was the only prophet that enjoyed a great share of worldly prosperity." He must needs have lived to a great age, it being near seventy years from the date of his first prophecy (ii. 1) to that of his last (x. 1). Our learned chronologer, Bishop Lloyd, supposes him to have been carried into captivity, when he was about twenty years old: about ten years after we find him famed for his piety and wisdom, as appears from Ezek. xiv. 14, xxviii. 3. His last vision was in the third year of Cyrus (Dan. x. 1), at which time he was about ninety-four years of age, and it is not likely he lived much longer.

There need not anything be said concerning the three additions to Daniel, viz. The Song of the three Children, the History of Susannah, and of Bel and the Dragon: since they manifestly appear to have been the productions of Hellenists of later times, and accordingly are rejected as apocryphal, by St. Jerome, in the prefaces to his translation, and to his Commentary on Daniel, and by other ancient writers.

CHAPTER I.

1 In the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jerusalem, and besieged it.

CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—The first chapter gives an account of the captivity of Daniel, and his companions, together with the manner of their education under the king of Babylon.

Vol. III.—51

2 And the Lord gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, with part of the vessels of the house of God: which he carried into the land of

Ver. 1.] The prophet Jeremiah makes the first year of Nebuchadnezzar coincident with the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and from thence begins the date of the seventy years' captivity (see Jer. i. 11, xxv. 1); but here Daniel speaks of Nebuchadnezzar as king of Babylon in the third year of Jehoiakim. To this Shinar to the house of his god; and he brought the vessels into the treasure-house of his god.

3 And the king spake unto Ashpenaz the master of his eunuchs, that he should bring certain of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes;

4 Children in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace, and whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans.

5 And the king appointed them a daily provision of the king's meat, and of the wine which he drank: so nourishing them three years, that at the end thereof they might stand before the king.

6 Now among these were of the children of Judah, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah:

7 Unto whom the prince of the eunuchs gave names: for he gave unto Daniel the name of Belteshazzar; and to Hananiah, of Shadrach; and to Mishael, of Meshach; and to Azariah, of Abed-nego.

8 But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank: therefore he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself.

9 Now God had brought Daniel into favour

Ver. 4. Children in whom was no blemish, &c.] He was directed to make choice of such as had the best accomplishments both of body and mind, and were fit to give attendance in a king's court. The word yaladim, "children," is used in scripture of such as are past the years of childhood, as we now distinguish the parts of man's life. It is applied to Rehoboam's counsellors, 1 Kings xii. 8, who cannot be thought mere children, since Rehoboam himself was of an advanced age. Nor can we suppose Daniel and his companions less than twenty years of age at this time, as may be concluded from their being put into considerable posts in the government in a short time after (v. 48, 49).

The learning—of the Chaldeans.] Besides the study of politics and the art of war, the learning chiefly valued among them was astrology, or the knowledge of the heavenly motions, the interpretation of dreams, and architecture (see the notes upon ver. 17, 20).

The tongue of the Chaldeans.] The same was likewise called the Syrian language (see li. 4).

Ver. 5. A daily provision of the king's meat, &c.] In like manner it was a custom of the Persian kings to feed their domestics with the remainder of their own tables (see Atheneaus, lib. iv. cap. 10).

Ver. 7. Belteshazzar:] "According to the name of his god," as Nebuchadnezzar himself derives the word, iv. 5. So the name was derived from Bel, the chief god of the Chaldeans, and from the latter part of his name, which he gave himself from Nebu-chadnezzar, from Nebu (Nebuchadnezzar), and his own name from Nebo, another of their idols, mentioned Isa. xlv. 1, and Evil-merodach, his successor, was named from their idol Merodach, Jer. li. 2. It is probable that the other names imposed upon Daniel's companions, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, were derived from some of their idols. "Misael," a word derived from El, the name of the true God, may probably have been changed into Mesbach, because Sce was an idol worshipped by the Chaldeans (see the note upon Jer. xxvi. 20).

Ver. 8.] It was the custom of most nations, before their meals, to make an obligation of some part of what they ate and drank to their gods, as a thankful acknowledgment, that everything they enjoyed was their gift. These oblations were called prostheic; and libation, because the Romans' entertainment had something in it of the nature of a sacrifice. This practice generally prevailing, made Daniel and his friends look upon the provisions coming from the king's table as no better than meats offered to idols, and, by being so offered, to be accounted unclean and polluted (see Ezek. iv. 13, Hos. ix. 3, compare with Act. xiv. 19). [The portion of the king's meat.] The word in the Hebrew is path-bag: from whence Scaliger derives the word παθημα, mentioned in Atheneaus as a dish served up to the table.
and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs.

10 And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink: for why should he see your faces worse liking than the children which are of your sort? then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king.

11 Then said Daniel to Melzar, whom the prince of the eunuchs had set over Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, 12 Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us pulse to eat, and water to drink.

13 Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that are of the portion of the king's meat: and as thou seest, deal with thy servants.

14 So he consented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days.

15 And at the end of ten days their countenances appeared fairer and fatter than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat.

16 Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink; and gave them pulse.

17 ¶ And as for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams.

18 Now at the end of the days that the king had said he should bring them in, then the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar.

19 And the king communed with them; and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah: therefore stood they before the king.

20 And in all matters of wisdom and understanding, that the king enquired of them, he

Ver. 19. Therefore stood they before the king. They were in continual attendance in the king's court. So "Joseph stood before Pharaoh," Gen. xli. 46. The same expression is used of Eliphaz and Jeremiah, as God's servants and messengers. 1 Kings xvii. 1. Jer. xv. 19. and the Levites are said to "stand before the congregation, to minister to them." Num. xvi. 9.

Ver. 20. These words may be understood of those that employed themselves in the lawful search of natural causes and effects, and of the regular motions of the heavenly bodies. For when Daniel made intercession to the captain of the guard, that "the wise men of Babylon might not be slain" (ii. 24), we cannot suppose all of them were such as studied unlawful arts and sciences, since he himself was afterward made master or head over them (ii. 48): and if no part of the Chaldean learning might lawfully be studied, they that "would not defile themselves with the king's meat," would have refused to be instructed in that way of education which he had appointed, as St. Jerome observes upon ver. 5. In like manner, the wise men mentioned in Matt. ii. 1, called άστρολογοι in the original, may be supposed such as employed themselves in observing the motions of the heavenly bodies, and might reasonably suppose that the new star they had seen, in that region of the heavens which the astrologers appropriated to Judea, did portend the birth of that Prince whom the Jews expected should be born about this time, and had spread such an expectation over a great part of the world: as a learned prelate hath lately shown, in his Defence of Christiainity from the ancient Prophecies, ch. 1.

[Astrologers] The word in the Hebrew is Assaphim, which coming near in sound to the Greek άστρολογοι, hath made some conjecture that it was derived from the same. But the true derivation of it is of the Hebrew word teophim, "watch men," a name given to the prophets: or else from teophah, to hide, from whence the word sophia, "wisdom," saith he, "is according to her name, and she is not manifested unto many." (vi. 25). See the doctrine of it is of Coventry and Litchfield's Vindication, book i. ch. 1, sect. 2.5

Ver. 21.] Daniel lived to see the overthrow of the Babylonish monarchy by Cyrus: which made way for the fulfilling of Jeremiah's prophecy concerning the seventy weeks, in the return of the Jews found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm.

from their captivity; which was accomplished in the first year of king Cyrus (Ezra i. 1); for the accomplishment of which prophecy we find Daniel very solicitous, ix. 1, 2. This being so remarkable a year, the text takes notice that Daniel lived so long: but that he lived longer, at least till the third year of Cyrus, as appears from x. 1. The word unto, or until, does not always exclude the time following the period mentioned (see Ps. ex. 1, cxii. 8).

CHAPTER II.

I And in the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams, wherewith his spirit was troubled, and his sleep brake from him.

2 Then the king commanded to call the magicians, and the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans, for to shew the king his dreams. So they came and stood before the king.

3 And the king said unto them, I have dream'd a dream, and my spirit was troubled to know the dream.

4 Then spake the Chaldeans to the king in Syria, O king, live for ever: tell thy servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation.

5 The king answered and said to the Chaldeans, The thing is gone from me: if ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye shall be cut in pieces, and your houses shall be made a dunghill.

6 But if ye shew the dream, and the interpretation thereof, ye shall receive of me gifts and rewards, and great honour: therefore shew me the dream, and the interpretation thereof.

7 They answered again, and said, Let the king tell his servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation of it.

8 The king answered and said, I know of certainty that ye would gain the time, because ye see the thing is gone from me.

9 But if ye will not make known unto me the Ver. 4. Then spake the Chaldeans—in Syriac.] The ancient Chaldee and the Syran language were the same (see Gen. xxxi. 47, 2 Kings xviii. 26, Ezra iv. 7). This language is found in its greatest purity in the books of Daniel and Ezra. The Jews, in the time of their captivity, mixed several Hebrew words with the Chaldee language, and this is the Chaldee in which the Targums upon the law and the prophets are writ, and is called the Hebrew tongue in the New Testament. The language spoken in Antioch, and other parts of Syria, differs as a dialect from the two former, and, being written in a different character, is what we now call Syriac (see Bishop Walton, Prolegom., xiii. ad Bibl. Polyglot, and Dr. Prideaux's Connex. par. ii. p. 529, edit. 8vo).

The following part of the chapter from this verse is written in Chaldee, and so on to the end of the seventh chapter: the reasons of which see in the preface.

Ver. 6. Gifts and rewards.] Such as the king actually bestowed upon Daniel, after he had interpreted the dream, ver. 48 (compare v. 16).

Ver. 8. I know of certainty that ye would gain the time.] By importunately renewing your request that I would recollect my dream, you only protract the time, and delay the execution of the sentence pronounced against you, ver. 5. "Buying" or "redeeming the time" is a proverbial expression, denoting men's using their utmost endeavours to free themselves out of some imminent danger or difficulty: gaining time, being a considerable advantage to that purpose (see the following verse). In this sense St. Paul uses the phrase, Eph. v. 16, Col. iv. 5.

Ver. 9. There is but one decree for you.] The sentence of death already pronounced shall certainly be put in execution.

Ye have prepared lying and corrupt words] Ye-dream, there is but one decrees for you: for ye have prepared lying and corrupt words to speak before me, till the time be changed; therefore tell me the dream, and I shall know that ye can shew me the interpretation thereof.

10 ¶ The Chaldeans answered before the king, and said, There is not a man upon the earth that can shew the king’s matter: therefore there is no king, lord, nor ruler, that asked such things at any magician, or astrologer, or Chaldean.

11 And it is a rare thing that the king requireth, and there is none other that can shew it before the king except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh.

12 For this cause the king was angry and very furious, and commanded to destroy all the wise men of Babylon.

13 And the decree went forth that the wise men should be slain; and they sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain.

14 ¶ Then Daniel answered with counsel and wisdom to Arioch the captain of the king’s guard, which was gone forth to slay the wise men of Babylon:

15 He answered and said to Arioch the king’s captain, Why is the decree so hasty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel.

16 Then Daniel went in, and desired of the king that he would give him time, and that he would shew the king the interpretation.

17 Then Daniel went to his house, and made have only contrived foignd excuses to protract the time, in hopes that circumstances might possibly alter, and so you might escape punishment.

Ver. 11.] These Chaldeans undertook to foretell future events by their skill in the motions of the stars: and to explain dreams by some natural observations, such as are still to be seen in Artemidorus’s Oneirocritics. Or if they pretended to have correspondence with spirits, they were the demons of a lower rank, who could not impart to them things so much above the compass of ordinary knowledge (compare ver. 28, and v. 11).

Ver. 12.] He might in his rage and fury not think of sending for Daniel; which made Daniel try to get admission to the king (ver. 14, &c.), to prevent his own destruction, as well as that of the other wise men.

Ver. 13.] Though they had not been summoned with the wise men of Chaldea (see ver. 2).

Ver. 14. Then Daniel answered with counsel and wisdom to Arioch] With whom he was in favour (see i. 9). The Vulgar Latin translates the part of the sentence thus; Tunc Daniel requisiuit de lege et sententia, “Daniel enquired concerning the law and decree,” which the king had made for destroying the wise men. The word tenem, translated here wisdom, usually signifies an edict, or public decree, set forth by authority.

Ver. 16.] The king’s anger was now abated, and withal the providence of God was visible, in inclining the king’s heart to allow Daniel that favour which he had before denied to the magicians (ver. 8).

Ver. 18. That they would desire mercies of the God of heavens] The danger equally threatened Daniel and his friends, therefore it was fit they should join in prayer for the averting of it.

the thing known to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, his companions:

18 That they would desire mercies of the God of heaven concerning this secret; that Daniel and his fellows should not perish with the rest of the wise men of Babylon.

19 ¶ Then was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night vision. Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.

20 Daniel answered and said, Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are his:

21 And he changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding:

22 He revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him.

23 I thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers, who hast given me wisdom and might, and hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee: for thou hast now made known unto us the king’s matter.

24 ¶ Therefore Daniel went in unto Arioch, whom the king had ordained to destroy the wise men of Babylon: he went and said thus unto him; Destroy not the wise men of Babylon: bring me in before the king, and I will shew unto the king the interpretation.

25 Then Arioch brought in Daniel before the king in haste, and said thus unto him, I have Ver. 19. A night vision.] The same with a dream (see Job iv. 13, xxxii. 15).

Ver. 20. For wisdom and might are his.] His wisdom appears in ordering the great affairs of the world, and his might or power in bringing them to pass. To the same purpose Jeremy styles him, “great in counsel, and mighty in work,” Jer. xxxii. 19.

Ver. 21. He removeth kings.] The great changes of the world are brought to pass by removing kings, and translating their dominions to others: by raising some empires, and pulling down others. Of this, Nebuchadnezzar’s dream that was then revealed to Daniel was a signal instance: which contained the succession of the four great monarchies of the world. The prophet speaks of the disposal of governments as one of God’s prerogatives, and the means whereby he brings to pass the most considerable changes which are wrought in the world. The psalmist speaks to the same purpose, Ps. lxxv. 6, 7. This is a very good reason to persuade men to submit to such changes and revolutions being brought to pass by providence for great and wise reasons (see iv. 17, Jer. xxvii. 5, 6).

Ver. 22.] He knoweth the most secret things, while they yet lieth hid in their causes, and can discover and bring them to light (compare v. 11, 14).

Ver. 23. For thou hast now made known unto us the king’s matter.] See the note upon ver. 30.

Ver. 24. Destroy not the wise men of Babylon.] Some of them might probably employ themselves in laudable studies, and searches after knowledge (see the note upon i. 20). However, here was no just cause given for putting them to death.

Ver. 25. I have found a man—that will make known—the interpretation.] Daniel undertook to do it of his own accord (ver. 24), but this officer, ac-found a man of the captives of Judah, that will make known unto the king the interpretation.

26 The king answered and said to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof?

27 Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, shew unto the king;

28 But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days. Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these:

29 As for thee, O king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter: and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass.

30 But as for me, this secret is not revealed cording to the manner of courtiers, takes this opportunity of ingratiating himself to the king, as if the discovery of Daniel's abilities in this kind was owing purely to his diligence.

Ver. 27. Soothsayers.] This word is not met with before among the several sorts of pretenders to wisdom among the Chaldeans, mentioned ver. 2. The Chaldee word is gazerin, which some think answers the Latin aruspices; who pretended to foretell events by tokens found in the entrails of the living creatures which they sacrificed.

The Greek translation which St. Jerome tells us was Theodotion's, retains the Chaldee word, and reads χαρακτηρος, which shows he did not understand the true import of that original.

Ver. 28. But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets.] Daniel assumes nothing to himself, but gives the glory to God alone, whose knowledge, as he tells the king, infinitely exceeds that of all the wise men of Chaldea, and of the gods or demons which they consulted or worshipped.

Maketh known—what shall be in the latter days.] God only can certainly foreknow such events as depend upon contingent causes, and the determination of man's free-will (see Isa. xlii. 28, 29). The 'latter days' usually signify the times of the Messiah, called the 'last times,' or age of the world (see the note upon Isa. ii. 2); and so the expression may be understood here; for the prophecy contained in this vision reaches to the times when the 'kingdom of the Messiah' shall be set up (see ver. 44, and compare x. 14).

Ver. 30.] See ver. 28, 36. That this may be a means for myself and my three friends to gain an influence in your majesty, the better to promote the glory of God, and to do kindnesses to our brethren of the captivity. This is the sense of the words if we follow the common translation: but I take the marginal reading to be the better interpretation, 'But for the intent that the interpretation may be made known to the king.' The verb transitive is often used for the impersonal (see the note upon Isa. xlii. 18). Several instances of this kind are to be found in the book of Daniel: as iii. 4, iv. 16, 31, v. 20, xi. 21.

Ver. 31. Whose brightness was excellent.] Grotius acutely observes, that this image appeared with a glorious lustre in the imagination of Nebuchadnezzar, whose mind was wholly taken up with admiration of worldly pomp and splendour; whereas the same monachies were represented to Daniel under the shape of fierce and wild beasts, ch. viii., as being the great supporters of idolatry and tyranny in the world.

The form thereof was terrible.] The success which accompanied their arms made them feared and dreaded by all the world.

Ver. 32. This image's head was of fine gold.] The Babylonian monarchy was arrived to the height of glory under Nebuchadnezzar (see ver. 37, 38): who likewise improved and adorned the city of Babylon to such a degree, as to make it one of the wonders of the world: as Dr. Prideaux shows at large, Connex. par. i. p. 94, &c. So this empire might justly be compared to a golden head.

His breasts and his arms of silver.] The second monarchy of the Medes and Persians will be inferior to the first (see ver. 39) probably in respect of its continuance: the Babylonian monarchy, if we date its beginning from Ninius, having lasted about seven hundred years.

Ibid. and ver. 33. And his thighs of brass, his legs of iron.] These emblems denote the strength of the third and fourth monachies, and the irresistible force with which they subdued their adversaries. Iron and brass are the emblems of strength in the prophetical writings (see ver. 39, 40) iv. 15, vii. 19, Isa. xlv. 2, xlvii. 4.

Ver. 33.] See ver. 41, 42.

Ver. 34.] A very proper representation how the whole image was destroyed: viz. by a great stone's falling upon the feet of the image, and breaking them to pieces, whereby the whole image was overturned, and broken to pieces. In like manner the kingdom of Christ, a kingdom of God's own erecting (see ver. 45), shall break to pieces the fourth and last monarchy, in which the remains of the other three were comprehended: and shall at length put an end to all earthly rule, authority, and power, I Cor. xv. 24.

The Jews unanimously agree, that by the stone here meant the Messiah (see the authorities collected in the Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield's learned Defence of Christianity, p. 132).

Ver. 35. Became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors.] There was no sign or remainder left of their former greatness (compare Ps. i. 4, xxxvi. 10, Hos. xiii. 4). The same expression is used by Isaiah, xlii. 15, where speaking of the victory God will give to no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

36 \textit{This is} the dream: and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king.

37 Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

38 And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold.

39 And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth.

his church over its enemies, he saith, "Thou shalt thresh the mountains, and make the hills as clift:
thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall drive them away." The expressions in both places allude to the threshing-floors in the eastern countries, which were usually placed on tops of hills (see 2 Chron. iii. 1).

\textit{And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.} This denotes the advancement and increase of Christ's kingdom, but the nine and one half parts of it, which will not,
and may never, fill the whole earth: as if a stone by degrees should grow to a mountain. Thus Christ is described as "going forth conquering, and to conquer," Rev. vi. 2. Mr. Mede hath very judiciously observed (see his Works, p. 743), that this kingdom is described here under two states or forms; the one may be called by way of distinction the kingdom of the stone, the other the kingdom of the brass. The first commenced upon the erection of the fourth kingdom, while the statue continued on its feet; the other was to be manifest under its last and weakest state. Christ, the foundation of the church, is often described as a stone (see Isa. xxviii. 16, 17, 36.
Zech. iii. 9), and the church in its flourishing estate is represented as a mountain (see Isa. ii. 2; Ezek. xx. 40, Rev. xxi. 11).

Ver. 36. \textit{We will talk for the king.} An expression becoming the modesty of so good a man as Daniel: who allows his friends a share in the honour of interpreting the dream, because the interpretation was obtained by their joint prayers to God (see ver. 15, 20).

Ver. 37. \textit{A king of kings.} So Nebuchadnezzar is styled, Ezek. xxvi. 7, because he had kings for his vassals and tributaries: such were Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, the former kings of Judah (2 Kings xxiv.
1, 17). The same title was afterward given to Ar-

Ver. 38. \textit{And wheresoever the children of men dwell—hath he—made thee ruler over them all.} The great monarchs assumed to themselves the title of being lords of the world (see vi. 25, viii. 5): so the word \	extit{Oveka}, the "world," commonly signifies the 1, Acts xi. 29).

\textit{The beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven.} The Greek adds, "And the fish of the sea:" whatever ting subjects can claim, either in their possessions or in any perquisites thereto belonging, is all held of thee, as the supreme lord (compare Jer. xxvii. 7).

Ver. 39. \textit{Another kingdom inferior to thee.} See ver. 26.

And another—(see ver. 32) which shall bear rule over all the earth. The Grecian monarchy shall extend its conquests beyond the bounds of the preceeding empires, even to those parts of the east, which none of the Persian monarchs had ever attempted to subdue.

Ver. 40. \textit{And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron.} So it is represented as having great iron teeth, vii. 19. This fourth kingdom can be no other than the Roman empire. Some commentators, indeed, have reckoned the empire continued in Alexander's successors, as a distinct kingdom from that of the Medes and Persians: But it is manifest of this history of those times speaks of it as such:
and this notion plainly contradicts the description which Daniel gives of that kingdom, ch. viii. There the prophet represents the third kingdom as it was set up by Alexander, and continued under his successors, under the figure of a "goat having one great horn," and afterward, "four others which stood up in its stead" (ver. 20): and afterward expressly calls Alexander the first king (ver. 2), and farther tells us (xi. 4), that his kingdom shall be "broken and divided towards the four winds of heaven." They that want farther satisfaction, may see more proofs of this point in Mr. Mede's Dissertation upon this subject, p. 712 of his Works.

The reason why the Spirit of God takes notice of these monarchies rather than any others, is, because God's people were subjects to these monarchies as they succeeded one another; and in their succession, a line of time is carried on to the coming of Christ, who was to appear in the times of the fourth monarchy, and the countries belonging to it were to be the chief seat of Christ's kingdom: as Mr. Mede observes in the same Dissertation.

\textit{And as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise.} Or, "even as iron that break-th all things," it shall break in pieces and bruise all these.

Ver. 41. The ten toes of the image signify the ten kings, who were in aftertimes to divide this kingdom among themselves: denoted by the ten \textit{fingers} of this fourth beast, mentioned ver. viii. 7, compared with Rev. xvi. 12. This partition of the Roman empire will divide its strength, and by consequence be a diminution of its power.

Ver. 42. Or, brittle. The sense of the word is more fully explained in the following verse. Some interpreters explain them thus: That the chief power in these ten kingdoms shall be partly secular, and partly ecclesiastical: and the encroaching of the ecclesiastical power upon the secular, shall be the occasion of frequent clashings between them, to the weakening of both parties, and endangering their breaking to pieces.

Ver. 43. These ten kingdoms shall be a medley
CHAPTER III.

1 Nebuchadnezzar the king made an image of gold, whose height was three score cubits, and the breadth thereof six cubits: he set it up in the plain of Dura, in the province of Babylon.

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—The history of the miraculous deliverance of Daniel's three friends out of the fiery furnace, into which they were cast, because they refused to worship the golden image which king Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

44 And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever.

45 Forasmuch as thou savest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.

46 Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded of people of different nations, laws, and customs: and although the kings of the several nations shall try to strengthen themselves by marriage-alliances into one another's families, yet the different interests which they pursue will make them often engage in wars with each other, and thereby weaken the common strength.

Ver. 44. And in the days of these kings] During the succession of these four monarchies, and in the times of the last of them. Compare ver. 34, where the "stone cut out without hands," is said "to smite the image upon its feet," which part of the image denotes the fourth monarchy.

A kingdom, which shall never be destroyed:] The kingdom of Christ is described in scripture as an everlasting kingdom: not like the kingdoms of this world, subject to change and dissolution, but like the author of it, eternal and unchangeable (see vii. 14, 27).

It shall break in pieces] See ver. 34.

Ver. 45.] There should not have been a full stop placed at the end of the last verse, as our translation is commonly pointed: the particle forasmuch showing that the sense of this verse depends upon the foregoing words, as in ver. 40, 41. The words show the correspondence between the several parts of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and the event thereby signified: that as the "stone cut out without hands" overthrew the image, and broke it to pieces; so a kingdom of God's own erecting should put an end to all these earthly kingdoms.

The stone was cut out of the [or a] mountain without hands:] The phrase "without hands" denotes it to be an act of God's own immediate power, and brought to pass without the interposition of second causes (compare viii. 25). So the heavenly body we are to receive at the resurrection, is called "a building not made with hands," 2 Cor. v. 1. The same expression is used concerning the heavenly tabernacle, Heb. xii. 24, in opposition to buildings of human structure. In like manner, Christ at his coming into the world had a "body prepared for him" by the immediate operation of the Holy Ghost.

God hath made known] See ver. 28.

Ver. 46.] Doing reverence by prostration is not only an act of worship paid to God, but often given to kings and great men in the Old Testament, according to the custom of the eastern countries (see 2 Sam. ix. 6, xiv. 33). It was likewise an expression of reverence paid to prophets, on the account of the sanctity of their office, and not refused by them (see 1 Kings xviii. 7). Of this kind was probably the worship paid by the leper to Christ (Matt. viii. 2), whom he took for a prophet. But when other circumstances were added to it, which made it look like divine worship, then it was refused to be accepted, as in the case of St. Peter, Acts x. 25, and of the angel, Rev. xix. 10. The adoration here described seems to have been of the latter kind, being joined with offering incense, an act of worship peculiar to God alone (see Ezra vi. 10). For this reason it is highly probable that Daniel refused the honours offered to him, and put the king in mind that he should give God the glory, as we find he does in the following verse. Nebuchadnezzar seems in a sudden transport to have looked upon Daniel as having something more than human in him (see iv. 8); just as the barbarians thought of St. Paul, Acts xxviii. 6.

Ver. 47. A God of gods, and a Lord of kings.] Superior to all the gods or demons who are worshipped by men; the supreme governor of the world, and ruler of the kings and kingdoms in it (see ver. 21).

Ver. 48. Then the king made Daniel—ruler over the whole province of Babylon.] When the empire came under the government of the Medes and Persians, every province had a prince or ruler appointed over it (vi. 1). This might probably have been practised before, only afterward improved by the addition of three presidents over the rest (ibid. ver. 2, and v. 7).

And chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon.] See the note upon i. 20, and compare iv. 9, v. 11.

Ver. 49. Then Daniel requested of the king, &c.] That they might be assisting to him, and partners in honour with him, by whose joint intercession this secret was revealed (ver. 15).

But Daniel sat in the gate of the king.] He was a constant attendant at the king's court (see Esth. ii. 19, 21, iii. 2).
CHAPTER III.

2 Then Nebuchadnezzar the king sent to gather together the princes, the governors, and the captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counselors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, to come to the dedication of the image which Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.

3 Then the princes, the governors, and captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counselors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, were gathered together unto the dedication of the image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up; and they stood before the image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

4 Then an herald cried aloud, To you it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages, 5 That at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up: 6 And whoso falleth not down and worship-symphony, translated “dulcimer,” with συμφωνία. This some account for, by supposing that the traffic managed by the Phoenicians with Greece (see Ezek. xxvii. 28), and the transplanting of the Ionian and Chaldean colonies into Asia, which happened about an age after the destruction of Troy, brought these and other Greek words into the eastern parts of the world.

Ver. 1. Nebuchadnezzar—made an image] This image was set up probably in honour of Beli, whom Nebuchadnezzar worshipped as his tutelar deity; and called Daniel after his name (see i. 2, 14). The form of this image shows it to have been a very irregular figure, no man's height being above six times his thickness. This makes interpreters generally understand these sixty cubits of the height of the image and pedestal taken both together; and suppose the image to have been thirty-six cubits and the pedestal twenty-four. Diodorus Siculus, giving an account of the plunder Xerxes had taken out of the temples of Belus, mentions a statue of marly gold which was forty feet high, which Dr. Prideaux conjectures to have been this statue; and then the body of the image would hardly have been twenty-seven cubits high (see his Script. Connex. par. i. p. 100, 101).

The Greek interpreter supposes this remarkable story to have happened in the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign.

Ver. 2.] It seems a needless task to undertake an exact description of these several officers and commanders, who cannot be distinguished with any certainty. From the first word αναστατοράπανια, 4 princes, the word σατραπάς is derived, which is commonly taken for a word of Persian origin, but was probably first used among the Assyrians or Babylonians, and from thence derived into the Persian language.

Treasurers.] In the Chaldee, χηδαβραίνα, the same word with γιθίω, translated “treasurer,” Ezra i. 8, Z being often changed into D, in the Chaldee.

Ver. 3. And they stood before the image] They made their personal appearance, and showed themselves ready to perform the worship required of them.

Ver. 4. O people, nation, and language.] Whatsoever parts of the empire ye come from, and whatsoever language you speak (see ver. 29, and iv. 1). This form of speech was designed to set forth the largeness and extent of the Babylonish empire, which had subjects of so many different languages. The same phrase was afterward used under the Medes and Persians (see v. 12, 12, iii. 12, vili. 9).

Ver. 5. Some of the names of these musical instruments have a great affinity with the Greek words of the same signification: as the word καρνα, “the cornet,” with κίθρας; κίθρας, the “harp,” with κίθρας; πασελτίριν, the “psaltery,” with πασελτήριν; and Vol. III.—92

Ver. 6. Be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.] Burning offends was a punishment used among the Babylonians (see Jer. xxix. 22), and it may be in other eastern countries (see Ps. xli. 9).

Ver. 7. Paying divine honours to the images of defiled men was a piece of worship generally practiced among the Chaldeans, as well as other heathens (see Isa. xxxiii. 1, Jer. x. 2, 4, vii. 1).
over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego; these men, O king, have not regarded thee; they serve not thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

13 § Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury commanded to bring Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. Then they brought these men before the king.

14 Nebuchadnezzar spake and said unto them, Is it true, O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, do not ye serve my gods, nor worship the golden image which I have set up?

15 Now if ye be ready that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the image which I have made; well; but if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace; and who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?

16 Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, answered and said to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter.

17 If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king.

18 But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

19 § Then was Nebuchadnezzar full of fury, and the form of his visage was changed against Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego: therefore he spake, and commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated.

20 And he commanded the most mighty men that were in his army to bind Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, and to cast them into the burning fiery furnace.

so the word is rendered i. 2, and so it should be translated, Exod. xxxii. 4: "This is thy God, O Israel!" as the same words are rendered Neh. ix. 18. For Aaron certainly designed to worship the true God by the emblem of the golden calf, and accordingly "proclaimed a feast to the Lord," Exod. xxxii. 5.

Ver. 14, Is it true,] Or, "Is it on purpose!" so the word is used, Exod. xxi. 13.

Ver. 15. Now if ye be ready, &c.] The sentence is imperfect in the original, and is rightly supplied by our translators with the word well: see a like instance, Luke xiii. 9.

And who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?] Thus Nebuchadnezzar exalted himself above God Almighty, as Sennacherib had done before him (2 Kings xvii. 36), notwithstanding that he had before made an ample confession of the true God (ii. 47).

Ver. 16.] In so plain a case there is no room for deliberation: we have an answer ready at hand, "that we ought to obey God rather than man."

Ver. 17.] As we are firmly persuaded of his power to deliver us, so we trust in his mercy and goodness that he will deliver us out of this imminent danger. This they speak out of a well grounded hope, not from a certain foresight of being delivered: for such an assurance would have defeated the worth of their courage and constancy in despising the danger which threatened them.

Ver. 19.] He discovered in his looks the signs of his fierce anger against these three persons, whom he was incensed against, not only as guilty of disobedience, but likewise of the highest ingratitude towards him who had preferred them to places of trust and honour.

Ver. 25. And the form of the fourth is like the Son of God.] Like that of an angel (see ver. 28). Angels are called the sons of God, Job i. 6, xxxviii. 7.

Ver. 26. Ye servants of the most high God.] This miracle calls to the king's mind that confession he had formerly made of the true God (ii. 47).

Ver. 28. Blessed be the God of Shadrach, &c.] So Darius offers up his acknowledgments to the "God of Daniel" (vi. 36), looking upon him as superior to other gods, but not as the only true God.

Who hath sent his angel.] So Daniel ascribes his deliverance from the lions to an angel, vi. 22 (compare Acts xii. 11).

And have changed the king's word.] Have rendered his command of none effect, God himself having suspended the execution of it.

Ver. 29.] See ii. 5.
CHAPTER IV.

1 Nebuchadnezzar the king, unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you.

2 I thought it good to shew the signs and wonders that the high God hath wrought toward me.

3 How great are his signs! and how mighty are his wonders! his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation.

4 ¶ I Nebuchadnezzar was at rest in mine house, and flourishing in my palace:

5 I saw a dream which made me afraid, and the thoughts upon my bed and the visions of my head troubled me.

6 Therefore made I a decree to bring in all the wise men of Babylon before me, that they might make known unto me the interpretation of the dream.

7 Then came in the magicians, the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers: and I told the dream before them; but they did not make known unto me the interpretation thereof.

8 ¶ But at the last Daniel came in before me:

9 Whose name was Belteshazzar, according to the name of my god, and in whom is the spirit of the holy gods: and before him I told the dream, saying,

10 Thus were the visions of mine head in my bed: I saw, and beheld a tree in the midst of the earth, and the height thereof was great.

11 The tree grew, and was strong, and the height thereof reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth:

12 The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all: the beasts of the field had shadow under it, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh was fed of it.

13 I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed, and, behold, a watcher and an holy one came down from heaven:

14 He cried aloud, and said thus, Hew down of the wise men of Babylon can attain to (see ii. 11, v. 11, 14).

Ver. 9. (Belteshazzar, master of the magicians.)
See ii. 48, and the note upon i. 20.
Tell me the visions] Nebuchadnezzar tells the dream himself in the following words: so the meaning of this sentence must be, Tell me the dream, that is, the interpretation thereof: in which sense the conjunctive particle is often used (see the note on i. 3).
The Greek translate it thus, "Hear the visions of my dream, and tell me the interpretation thereof."

Ver. 10.] Princes and great men are often represented by fair and flourishing trees. So the king of Assyria is described, Ezek. xxxiii. 3, 18 (compare Isa. x. 34, Zech. xi. 2).

Ver. 12. The beasts of the field had shadow under it.] All the subjects of that large empire thought themselves safe under his protection (compare Ezek. xxiv. 23, xxxii. 6, Lam. iv. 20).

Ver. 13. Behold, a watcher and [or even] an holy one came down from heaven: The conjunctive copulative is used here by way of explanation (see ver. 9). The word "watcher" is understood of some principal angel: the angelical orders being described as always attending upon God's throne, to receive and execute his commands (see Ps. civ. 29, Matt. xviii. 10, and the notes upon Ezek. i. 11, 34). For the same reason they are called "the eyes of the Lord," Zech. iv. 10. In the fragments of that ancient book, called The Prophecy of Enoch, quoted in the Epistle of St.
DANIEL.

interpretation thereof, forasmuch as all the wise men of my kingdom are not able to make known unto me the interpretation: but thou art able; for the spirit of the holy gods is in thee.

19 ¶ Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, was astonished for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him. The king spake, and said, Belteshazzar, let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof, trouble thee. Belteshazzar answered and said, My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies.

20 The tree that thou sawest, which grew, and was strong, whose height reached unto the heaven, and the sight thereof to all the earth; 21 Whose leaves were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; under which the beasts of the field dwelt, and upon whose branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation:

and the demand by the word of the holy ones:) It is called "the decree of the most High," ver. 24. So the expression of the text is an allusion to the proceedings of earthly princes, who publish their decrees with the advice of their chief ministers. Thus God is described as summoning all the hosts of angels, and taking resolutions according to their advice, 1 Kings xxvii. 19, and Christ is represented as attended with angels and saints as his assessors at the day of judgment (see vii. 22 of this prophecy, 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3, i. Tim. v. 21, Rev. xx. 4). The words are capable of another sense; viz. that this sentence was pronounced at the request of those angels whom God had appointed to preside over the affairs of the Babylonish empire (see the note upon x. 19). Watchers and holy ones are here spoken of in the plural number, whereas the words are in the singular, ver. 13, which difference may thus be accounted for; that the sentence was pronounced at the joint request of many, but was to be put in execution by one single angel. See ii. 21.

And setteh up over it the basest of men.] This regards Nebuchadnezzar, either with respect to his present condition of desolation and degradation; or with respect to his useful office, however as despicable in the sight of God, as his high estate made him appear honourable in the eyes of men; and therefore was justly doomed to so low a degree of abasement: or else it may be understood of his wonderful advancement and restoration, after he had been degraded from his dignity, and sent to herd with the beasts of the field. God thereby asserting that pre-rogative of his, of "bringing low and lifting up," and "raising the beggar from the dunghill, to set him among princes" (1 Sam. ii. 8, 9, Psal. cxiii. 7, 8).

Ver. 15.] See ver. 8.

Ver. 19. Then Daniel—was astonished, &c.] Both at the surprising circumstances of the judgment denounced against the king; and likewise out of a tender regard and respect for his person, who had bestowed so many favours upon him.

The dream be to them that hate thee, &c.] The words are spoken by the figure called euphemismus, when we would avert an illomen from ourselves or friends, by wishing it may light upon our enemies. See a like instance, 1 Sam. xxv. 22, "So and more also do God unto the enemies of David." At the same time, Daniel expresses his duteful concern for the safety of the king's person and government. Jeremy had before advised the Jewish captives at Babylon to wish and pray for the prosperity of the government under which they lived, Jer. xxix. 7.

Jude, the angels are called 'EZEKHIEL, the Greek word which answers to Eir in the text; and some critics derive the Iris of the poets, whom they describe as the messenger of the gods, from the word Eir: though others take the word Eir to differ only in the Chaldean dialect from the Hebrew TSEIR, a "messenger." The word "holy one " denotes such of the angels who kept the temple, and were not seduced from their obedience when the evil angels fell (see viii. 13). In the same sense the word is taken, Jude, ver. 14, "The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints," or holy ones (compare Deut. xxxiii. 2, Zech. xiv. 5, i Thess. iii. 13).

Ver. 14. Let the beasts get away from under it, &c.] Let his subjects not rely on his protection (compare Ezek. xxxii. 12).

Ver. 15. Nevertheless leave the stump of his roots in the earth.] As when the root of a tree is still alive there is a possibility of its flourishing again: so there should still be hopes that the king may recover his former state and dignity (see ver. 26).

With a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field.] To denote that while Nebuchadnezzar was prospered by the reason, and lived among the beasts of the field, he was bound with fetters and chains, as madmen usually are (see Mark v. 4).

Ver. 16. Let his heart be changed from man's, &c.] Let him lose the use of his reason (see ver. 34, 36). Scaliger thinks this-madness of Nebuchadnezzar is obscurely hinted in a fragment of Abydencus, produced by Eusebius, Praep. Evang. lib. ix. cap. 41, where, having represented the king from the Chaldean writers to have fallen into an ecstasy, and to have foretold the destruction of that empire by the Medes and Persians; the author adds, that "immediately after uttering this prophecy he disappeared," which Scaliger expounds of his being driven from his kingly state and the society of men (see Scaliger's notes upon the Ancient Fragments, in the appendix to his work De Emendatione Temporum).

And let seven times pass over him.] That is, seven: so the expression is taken xi. 13, where the Hebrew reads, "The king of the north shall come at the end of times," that is, years. So the time, times, and a half, mentioned vili. 55, xii. 7, signify three years and a half; and are accordingly explained by thirty-five-twenty months, Rev. xi. 2, and by one thousand two hundred and sixty days, Rev. xii. 7, both which reckonings of time are equivalent to three years and a half.

Ver. 17. This matter is by the decree of the watchmen, 22 It is thou, O king, that art grown and become strong: for thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth.

23 And whereas the king saw a watchet and an holy one coming down from heaven, and saying, Hiew the tree down, and destroy it; yet leave the stump of the roots thereof in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts of the field, till seven times pass over him:

24 This is the interpretation, O king, and this is the decree of the most High, which is come upon my lord the king:

25 That they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field, and they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and they shall wet thee with the dew of heaven, and seven times shall pass over thee, till thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

26 And whereas they commanded to leave the stump of the tree roots: thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.

27 Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be accepted unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor: if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity.

28 ¶ All this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.

29 At the end of twelve months he walked in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon.

Ver. 22.] See ii. 38.

Ver. 23.] See ver. 16.

Ver. 26.] Heaven is put for God, as Matt. xxi. 27.

Ver. 27. Break off thy sins by righteousness, &c.] Become a new man. The Greek translates it, "Redeem thy iniquities by alms-deeds," mak- ing the sentence equivalent in sense to the following words: and it is true that righteousness is often taken for mercy (see Ps. xxxi. 2, xxiii. 9). Nor does this sense of the words favour the doctrine of merit, any more than those words of Solomon, Prov. xvi. 6. "By mercy and truth iniquity is purged," or expiated: as the Hebrew verb caphar properly signifies. To the same sense St. Peter adds, "Charity shall cover a multitude of sins," 1 Pet. iv. 8, viz. 'as it is a testimony of unfeigned repentance or conversion. Thus Salvan, descanting upon this text, and speaking of works of charity, as proper evidences of true repentance, saith of the sinner, Offerat cum compunctione, cum lacrymis; alter quippe obieta non prosunt; quia non pretio, sed affectu placent. "We ought to make such ob- lations with all the signs of true contrition, or else they will not be accepted; because it is not the value of the things themselves, but the disposition of the giver, which renders them acceptable" (Sal- vian, ad Eccles. Cathol. lib. i.).

It may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity:] God sometimes defers his judgments upon men's showing signs of repentance (see 1 Kings xxiv. 29).

Ver. 30.] Though Babylon was one of the oldest cities in the world, yet Nebuchadnezzar had very much improved, and made it one of the wonders of the world, upon account of the largeness and height of its new walls, the temple of Belus, his own palace, and the hanging gardens belonging to it; the banks of the river, and the canals made for the draining of it: all which were the works of this king, and an exact description of them may be seen in Dr. Prideaux's Script. Connex. par. i. p. 94, &c.

The words of Nebuchadnezzar here recited sa- vour of great pride and arrogance, and are therefore justly punished by that judgment pronounced upon him in the following verses (compare v. 20).

Ver. 31.] So Herod was struck immediately, because he gave not God the glory (Acts xii. 23).

Ver. 32.] At the end of seven years (see ver. 16) I recovered the use of my reason (ver. 36), and became sensible of my dependence upon God, and lifted up mine eyes to heaven in a devout acknowl- edgment of his sovereign majesty, whose dominion is over all (Ps. cxlv. 3).

Ver. 35.] The greatest monarchs, as well as persons of an inferior rank, are as nothing in his sight: and he disposes all things in heaven and earth by an irresistible power and authority (com- pare Isa. xli. 15, 17, xlv. 9).

Ver. 36.] Or, "The glory of my kingdom (for the particle in the word lilkar is used for the nominative case, see Gen. xlix. 16), mine honour, and com- tenance," or comeliness, "returned to me." The word sul is translated comeliness v. 6, vii. 28. 1 counsellors and my lords sought unto me; and I was established in my kingdom, and excellent majesty was added unto me.
37 Now Nebuchadnezzar praise and exalrecovered my former looks, was possessed of the same outward glory and majesty, and was honoured with the same attendance and retinue as I was before.

Ver. 37. All whose works are truth, &c.] Who and honour the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase.

CHAPTER V.

1 Belshazzar the king made a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand.

2 Belshazzar, whiles he tasted the wine, commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels which his father Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple, which was in Jerusalem; that the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, might drink therein.

3 Then they brought the golden vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God which was at Jerusalem; and the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, drank in them.

4 They drank wine, and praised the gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone.

5 ¶ In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palaces: and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote.

again, and sent them for a present to the church of Jerusalem (see Evagrius, lib. iv. cap. 17).

His father Nebuchadnezzar] Nebuchadnezzar was in truth his grandfather; for he was the son of Evil-merodach by Nitocris his queen: so he was grandson to Nebuchadnezzar: and thus the prophecy of Jeremy was fulfilled, that "all nations should serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his son, and his son's son," Jer. xxvii. 7. It is usual in scripture to call the grandfather, by the name of father (see 2 Sam.
xix. 7, 2 Kings viii. 36, compared with ver. 18; 2 Chron. xv. 16, compared with xi. 30; Zech. i. 1, with Ezra vi. 14).

Ver. 4.] They sang praises to their false gods, who were fitly represented by senseless images; and this they did by way of triumph over the God of Israel, the vessels of whose temple they brought forth as so many trophies of their victory (see ver. 29).

Ver. 5. In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand.] Next to murder, no sin is so remarkable punished in this world as that of sacrilege; as appears by innumerable instances taken out of the histories of all ages, of heathens and infidels, as well as Jews and Christians. For to profess a religion to be true, and yet to offer violence to the places and utensils dedicated to the service of that religion, is downright impiety, and argues a contempt of all religion. Remarkable examples of this kind in the heathen story are, the miserable end of the Phocens, who robbed the temple of Delphos, and were the occasion of that war, which was called from thence the holy war; an account of which may be seen in Petavius, Rationum Temporum. par. i.
p. 118: the destruction of the Geals in their attempt upon the same temple; and of Cencus, who plundered the temple of Jerusalem, and that of the Syrian goddess: these two last stories are very paricularly related by Dr. Prideaux, par. ii. p. 26, 262.

Grotius's note upon this place is worth observing:
"The heathens thought it a great impiety to convert sacred things to common uses: but now-a-days neither princes nor people think there is any harm in it:
and can we expect that God should not visit for these things?"

And wrote over against the candlestick] The Feast

CHAPTER V.

 Argument.—A judgment is denounced against Belshazzar, for his sacrilege, by a hand-writing upon the wall, which Daniel reads: importing the downfall of the Babylonish monarchy, and trans-

1. Belshazzar the king] This was the last king of the Babylonish race, and therefore must be the same who is called Nabonodus by Berosus, and Nabonodus by Josephus, Antiq. lib. x. cap.
11 (see this clearly proved by Dr. Prideaux, Script.
Connex. par. i. p. 114).

Made a feast] The king made a great feast to the principal officers and great men of his court, and was himself present at it. This feast was made at a time of public rejoicing, being an annual feast, when the whole night was spent in reveling: which season Cyrus took the advantage of to make himself master of the city, as Herodotus, lib.

i., and Xenophon, lib. vii. relate, and was foretold by Jeremy, li. 39, 57.

Ver. 2. The golden and silver vessels] These vessels were carried by Nebuchadnezzar into the temple of his own god (1, 2), and set apart, as it seems, for religious uses. So this farther profanation of them was contrary to the rules of their own religion, and may be supposed to have been done out of a drunken frolic by Belshazzar.

Without question the vessels and other furniture with which Solomon adorned the temple, were extraordinarily magnificent: since Nebuchadnezzar thought them worth carrying to Babylon, to furnish the temple he had built there for his god Belus, a structure that might be esteemed one of the wonders of the world (see Dr. Prideaux, ubi supra, p.
98). Some of these vessels were afterward carried in triumph to Rome by Titus, after he had conquered Jerusalem, as Josephus, an eye-witness, asserts (Bel. Jud. lib. vii. p. 1306, edit. Oxon.); afterward, when Genéricus sacked Rome, he carried these away with the rest of his booty; but when Justinian conquered Africa, he recovered them governs the world with equity and justice (compare Rev. xv. 3, xvi. 7).

Those that walk in pride he is able to abase.] Of which Nebuchadnezzar himself was a remarkable instance, ver. 30, 31, and v. 20.
6 Then the king's countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another.

7 The king cried aloud to bring in the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers. And the king spake, and said to the wise men of Babylon, Whosoever shall read this writing, and shew me the interpretation thereof, shall be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold about his neck, and shall be the third ruler in the kingdom.

8 Then came in all the king's wise men: but they could not read the writing, nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof.

9 Then was king Belshazzar greatly troubled, and his countenance was changed in him, and his lords were astonied.

10 ¶ Now the queen by reason of the words of the king and his lords came into the banquet house: and the queen spake and said, O king, live for ever: let not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed:

11 There is a man in thy kingdom, in whom is the spirit of the holy gods; and in the days of thy father, light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him; whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy father, the king, I say, thy father, made master of the magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans, and soothsayers:

12 Forasmuch as an excellent spirit, and knowledges, and understanding, interpreting of dreams, and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same Daniel, whom the king named Belteshazzar: now let Daniel be called, and he will shew the interpretation.

13 Then was Daniel brought in before the king. And the king spake and said unto Daniel, Art thou that Daniel, which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king my father brought out of Jewry?
of heaven; and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou, and thy lords, thy wives, and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them; and thou hast praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, thou hast not glorified.

24 Then was the part of the hand sent from him; and this writing was written.

25 § And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.

26 This is the interpretation of the thing: MENE; God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.

to that supreme Being, who hath an absolute disposal, not only of thy affairs (compare Jer. x. 23), but even of thy life itself.

Ver. 36.] The determinate number of years which God hath appointed for the continuance of thy reign and the Babylonish monarchy is finished. So God is said to “number the months” of man’s life, and to “appoint him bounds which he cannot pass,” Job xiv. 5. The word Mene is doubled in the foregoing verse, to show that the thing is certain, and established by God, as Joseph tells Pharaoh in a like case, Gen. xli. 32.

Ver. 27.] Wicked men are often compared to silver adulterated, and alloyed with baser metals, which makes it too light when weighed in the balances (see Jer. vi. 30, Ezek. xxii. 18). Such was Belshazzar when weighed in the scales of divine justice (compare Job xxxxi. 6, Ps. xlii. 10). The same comparison is used by Homer, when Hector’s fatal day approaches, Iliad, xxiii. and by Virgil at the death of Turnus, Aeneid, xii.

Ver. 28.] The verb parus, from whence Peres is derived, as an appellative, signifies to divide, or break: it is likewise the proper name of the Persians, who were to be sharers in the division of the Babylonish empire. Upharsin, in the twenty-fifth verse, is a particle of the verb paras; it literally signifies, And they divide it.

Ver. 29.] The king thought himself bound in honour to perform the promise he had made, ver. 16, which yet it is likely could not take effect at that unspeakable time of night: so the words might better be thus translated; “Then commanded Belshazzar, that they should clothe Daniel with scarlet—and should make a proclamation concerning him,” &c. The particle va is often put for the conjunction that (see Noldius, p. 312): so it is used in the second verse of this chapter.

Ver. 30.] He and all his nobles were slain together in the midst of their feasting and reveling, as Herodotus (lib. i.) and Xenophon inform us; the latter relates the story thus (Cyropæd. lib. vii.): “That two deserters, Gadata and Gobryas, having assisted some of the Persian army to kill the guards, and seize upon the palace, they entered into the room where the king was, whom they found standing up in a posture of defence; but they soon dispatched him, and those that were with him.” Thus the prophecy of Jeremy was accomplished, that Babylon should be taken at the time of a public feast, while “her princes and great men, her captains, her rulers, and mighty men, should be drunken, and should sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awaken” (Is. 30. 57).

Ver. 31. And Darius the Median took the kingdom. This Darius is said to be of the seed of the Medes (ix. 1): and is supposed by the most judicious chronologers to be the same with the Cyrus, the son of Astyages: him Cyrus made king of the Chaldeans, as being his uncle by his mother’s side, and his partner in carrying on the war against the Babylonians, and left him the palace of the king of Babylon, to live there whenever he pleased, as Xenophon relates, Cyropæd. lib. viii. Darius succeeding in the empire, being Cyrus’s gift, Ptolemay’s Canon supposes Cyrus to be the immediate successor of Nabonodas, or Belshazzar, and allots nine years to his reign; whereas Xenophon reckonds two of these years to Darius, and seven to Cyrus: ubi supra. The Chaldee paraphrase rendered here, “took the kingdom,” is translated possessest the kingdom, vii. 18, and means the same with succeeding in the kingdom.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Ir pleased Darius to set over the kingdom an hundred and twenty princes, which should be over the whole kingdom;

2 And over these three presidents: of whom Daniel was first; that the princes might give accounts unto them, and the king should have no damage.

3 Then this Daniel was preferred above the princes which were subject to the Medo-Persian empire. These were afterward enlarged to a hundred and twenty-seven by the victories of Cambyses and Darius Hystaspes (see Esth. i. 1).

Ver. 2. And over these three presidents; of whom Daniel was first.] He had been appointed one of the principal officers of state by Belshazzar, v. 29. Darius came not to Babylon, but tarried at Ecbatane in Media, whither he sent for Daniel, that he might
CHAPTER VI.

Daniel praying and making supplication before his God.

12 Then they came near, and spake before the king concerning the king's decrees; Hast thou not signed a decree, that every man that shall ask a petition of any God or man within thirty days, save of thee, O king, shall be cast into the den of lions? The king answered and said, The thing is true, according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.

13 Then answered they and said before the king, That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou hast signed, but maketh his petition three times a day.

14 Then the king, when he heard these words, was sore displeased with himself, and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him: and he laboured till the going down of the sun to deliver him.

15 Then these men assembled unto the king, and said unto the king, Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians is, That no decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed.

16 Then a king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions. Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee.

17 And a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den; and the king sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords; that the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.

Daniel's prayer and his fasting are mentioned, but the focus is on the decree that Daniel was not bound to obey. The king realizes the mistake and attempts to save Daniel, but the decree is unchangeable. Daniel's faith is tested, and he remains steadfast in his devotion to God. The king, in a moment of insight, realizes the power of Daniel's God and his own foolish mistake.

Acts i. 13 (see Bishop Pearson on that text, in his first Lecture upon the Acts).

Toward Jerusalem.) According to that petition in Solomon's consecration prayer (1 Kings viii. 45), "That if they were led away captive, and should pray to God towards the city which he had chosen, and the house which Solomon had built, then hear thou their prayer, &c. (compare Ps. v. 7, Jonah i. 4).

Three times a day.) Some learned writers tell us, out of Maimonides, that upon solemn days, such as were the third and fifth days of the week, the evening sacrifice was killed at half an hour after twelve; so the hour of prayer, which on other days was the ninth hour, or three in the afternoon, was then about noon; and the third hour of prayer must then be towards bed-time (see Thorndike on Religious Assemblies, ch. 8, and Dr. Pridaux's Dissertation, upon the Synagogue Service, par. i. book vi. of his Script. Conex.).

Ver. 13. That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah.) Compare v. 19. This is added to aggravate his fault, that one who is a foreigner, and brought hither a captive, should offer a public affront to the laws of the king, whose favour and protection he enjoys.

Ver. 14. Then the king,— was sore displeased with himself.) Having too late discovered that the princes, in procuring him to sign this decree, had no other aim but to take advantage of it to the prejudice of Daniel.

Ver. 16. Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee.) The words express the king's hopes and good wishes, but no certain persuasion (see ver. 20).

Vol. III.—83
CHAPTER VII.

ARGUMENT.—Daniel's vision concerning the four beasts, which an angel interprets of the four great monarchies, that were to continue successively unto the end of the world.

Ver. 1.] The prophet having related some remarkable passages concerning himself and his brethren in captivity, and given proofs of his skill in interpreting other men's dreams, proceeds to give an account of his own visions; and thereupon goes back to the first year of Belshazzar's reign, which was seventeen years before the history contained in the last chapter.

Ver. 2.] Denoting those commotions of the world, and that troublesome state of affairs, out of which empires and kingdoms commonly take their rise.

Ver. 3.] They took their rise from wars and commotions, which end in setting up the conqueror to be a great monarch over those whom he hath subdued (compare Rev. xiii. 1). The reason why these monarchies are represented by fierce and savage beasts, hath been observed in the note upon ii. 31.

3 And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another.

4 The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.

Ver. 4. The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I. Warriors, especially conquerors, are compared to lions for their strength and cruelty, and to eagles for their swiftness (see Deut. xxviii. 49, 2 Sam. i. 23, Jer. iv. 7, xlvi. 40, Hab. i. 8). And it was lifted up from the earth.] Or rather, "Wherewith it was lifted up from the earth," as the margin reads, the conjunction copulative sometimes supplying the place of a relative (see Noldius, p. 296). There was a stop put to the progress of its victories, by the frequent irruptions of the armies led by Cyrus and Darius, or Cyaxares, against the Babylonians, for twenty years together, before the final overthrow of that empire. See Dr. Prideaux's Script. Connex. from the first year of Nergilissar's reign, and so onwards.
CHAPTER VII.

5 And beheld another beast, a second, like to a bear, and it raised up itself on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it; and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh.

6 After this I beheld, and lo another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

7 After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it; and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.

And made stand upon the feet as a man, &c.] It became more tame and tractable.

Ver. 5. And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear.] This beast denotes the Persian empire, and its first beginning to advance itself and arrive at dominion. The margin reads, And it raised up one dominion; i.e. it made up one empire out of the joint powers of Media and Persia.

And it had three ribs in the mouth of it] The learned Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, in the Vindication of his Defence of Christianity, vol. i., chap. 2, sect. 3, explains these three ribs to be Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt. It is certain that Lydia was conquered by Cyrus, from the famous story of Cresus, the king thereof, whom he condemned to the fire: and as Egypt had been conquered by Nebuchadnezzar (see Ezek. xxix. 19), so it still continued tributary to Cyrus under the government of Amasis (see the additional notes upon Ezek. xxix. 13, and Xenoph. Cyropod. lib. viii., viii.).

Arise, devour much flesh.] Their success made them still more greedy of dominion.

Ver. 6. After this I beheld, and lo another, like a leopard.] This third beast denotes the Grecian empire, begun by Alexander, and continued in his four successors (see viii. 8, 22). The four wings signify the swiftness of its progress and victories (see ver. 5, of that chapter). A leopard is a creature of extraordinary swiftness, and jumps upon its prey, as naturalists observe.

And dominion was given to it.] By the swiftness of Alexander’s progress, and the victories he obtained by small forces, it appeared that providence gave him the empire of the world.

Ver. 7. Behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly;] And for that reason compared to iron, ii. 40. This must mean the Roman empire, as hath been fully proved in the note upon that place.

And it had ten horns.] It subdues all the nations who had been subjects of the former empires. The latter part of the sentence alludes to the fury of the wild beasts, who stamp upon that part of their prey which they cannot devour (compare viii. 7, 10). So those conquests which the Romans could not make use of themselves, they gave for a prey and spoil to their allies.

And it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.] In this it was different from all the beasts or empires before it; that its dominion was to be divided into ten kingdoms or principalities, signified here by ten horns, and by the ten toes of the image, ii. 41 (see ver. 23, 24 of this chapter, and the notes there).

8 I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things.

9 ¶ I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire.

10 A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened.

Ver. 8. There came up among them another little horn, &c.] See ver. 24, 25.

Eyes like the eyes of man.] Denoting great cunning and foresight.

A mouth speaking great things.] See the note upon ver. 25.

Ver. 9. I beheld till the thrones were cast down.] Or, rather, pitched down, or placed. So the Greek interpreter understands it, and the word in the text is used in the same sense in the Chaldean paraphrase upon Jer. i. 15, where our translation reads, “They shall set every one his throne.” The following words “And the Ancient of days did sit,” justify this translation. The thrones here mentioned import, first of all, the thrones of God and Christ (see ver. 13, 14); and then those of the saints, who shall be assessors with God and Christ at the day of judgment (see ver. 22, and Rev. xx. 4). The fourth monarchy being to continue till the consummation of all things, the general judgment is described in this and the following verses, wherein sentence was to pass upon this fourth beast, and an end put to its dominion.

The Ancient of days did sit.] The eternal judge of the world (see Rev. xvi. 6), he “that was from the beginning” (1 John ii. 14), who is elsewhere described “covering himself with light as with a garment” (Psal. cii. 2), and as a clear and unspotted brightness (1 John i. 5).

In this divine representation there is mention made of the hair of the head, as there is in that vouchsafed to Moses and the elders of Israel of the feet, Exod. xxiv. 10, yet we are not to suppose that in either place any determinate shape or figure like that of a man was represented (see Deut. iv. 15). The expressions only import that both the upper and the lower part of this divine Shechinah was of an amazing inexpressible brightness.

His throne was like the fiery flame.] God is described as coming to judgment in flames of fire, whereby the world and the wicked that are therein shall be destroyed (see Ps. l. 3, 1 Cor. iii. 15, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8, 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10). His throne is here described in the nature of a triumphal chariot, supported by angels, as so many fiery wheels (see Ps. lxviii. 17, civ. 3, 4, Ezek. i. 12—15).

Ver. 10. A fiery stream—came forth from before him.] Lightnings and streams of fire were his harbingers, to give notice of his speedy approach (compare Ps. l. 3, xviii. 3).

Thousand thousands ministered unto him, &c.] His retinue was an “innumerable company of angels” (see Deut. xxxiii. 2, Ps. lxviii. 17, Heb. xii. 22, Rev. v. 11).

The judgment was set.] The court, God as the supreme judge, and the saints as his assessors, made 11 I beheld then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake: I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame.

12 As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time.

13 I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him.

14 And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.

15 ¶ I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body, and the visions of my head troubled me.

16 I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things.

17 These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth.

18 But the saints of the most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever.

19 Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet;

20 And of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom their public appearance (see ver. 9). The expression alludes to the seats in the Jewish consistories, where the abbdith div, or president of the court, had his assistants sitting with him; or, as some think, to the ancient custom among the Jews for the princes, or heads of the tribes, to sit with the king in the courts of justice.

And the books were opened. The books both of God's laws and men's actions. The phrase is an allusion to the rolls and records belonging to courts of judicature (compare Deut. xxxii. 24, Ps. lxi. 8, Isa. lxv. 6, Mal. iii. 16).

Ver. 11. Because of the great words which the horn spake. See ver. 25. I beheld even till the beast was slain. The prophet here relates what was the final destruction of this fourth and last beast, and of that little horn belonging to it, and coming up after the rest of the horns (ver. 24). See Rev. xvii. 8, xix. 20.

Ver. 12. As to the first three monarchies, though the succeeding monarchy took away the dominion of that which went before, yet it was not done all at once, but by degrees: and the nations where those monarchies were seated, still had a being, though they changed their masters. Whereas the destruction of the last monarchy implied the putting an end to that empire, and to all other earthly governments: the kingdom of Christ being then immediately to take place (see ver. 13, 14, and ii. 34).

Ver. 15. Behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven. One in the shape and likeness of a man; but clothed with such ensigns of majesty, as showed him to be an extraordinary person (see the note upon Ezek. ii. 1, compare Rev. i. 13, xiv. 14); indeed, no less than the Messias, as the description of him that follows doth declare. The two foregoing verses having explained why the fourth beast was destroyed, this part of the vision declares by whom it was done, and shows to us Christ in his judicial capacity, and describes him by that title he often gives himself, the Son of man, in allusion to this place: particularly he alludes to this text, Matt. xxvi. 64, where he speaks of his coming in the clouds of heaven, by which expression he acknowledges himself to be the Messias here described; and gave a direct answer to the question there proposed to him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? (compare Mark xiv. 61, 62, Rev. i. 7). Whereupon they condemned him as guilty of blasphemy. A learned prelate, in his Defence of Christianity from the ancient Prophecies, p. 131, observes, that Ananti, the clouds, was a known name of the Messias among the Jewish writers, which shows that they understood this text as spoken of him.

And came to the Ancient of days. To signify that Christ received his kingdom from his Father (see Mat. xi. 27, xxviii. 18, John iii. 35, 1 Cor. xv. 27, Eph. i. 21, Phil. ii. 9, 10, Rev. v. 7, compare Jer. xxxi. 31).

Ver. 14. And there was given him dominion, and glory, &c. Upon the destruction of anticristh, the little horn of the fourth beast, the stone which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his first vision, was to become a great mountain (ii. 35); and then all the ancient prophecies are to be accomplished, which speak of the uninterrupted glory and universality of Christ's kingdom (see Ps. ii. 7, 3, viii. 6, cx. 1, Isa. ii. 2—4) ; and nothing in any of these prophecies of Christ's dominion will be illustrously displayed at the day of judgment, when all the world shall be summoned to appear before him (see Rom. xiv. 10—12).

His dominion is an everlasting dominion, &c. See ver. 27.

Ver. 15. I was grieved. The terrible appearance of this vision made an extraordinary impression upon my spirits (see ver. 28, vii. 27, x. 8).

In the midst of my body. The original reads, "In the midst of my sheath": a metaphor used by several heathen writers, who call the body the sheath of the soul (see Pliny's Nat. Hist. lib. vii. cap. 52, and Seneca, epist. 95).

Ver. 16. To one of the angels, who always attended upon the throne of God and Christ (ver. 9, 10); several angels are represented as attending upon Daniel's visions (see viii. 13, 16, x. 5, 6, 16, xii. 5, 6).

Ver. 17. These are four kings. Four kingdoms or monarchies: so the word king is used for kingdom. Isa. xxiii. 15 (see the note there).

Which shall arise out of the earth. Shall be of the earth, earthly, and have nothing of a heavenly spirit in them; whereas the kingdom of Christ is a heavenly kingdom, which the saints shall possess, as it follows.

Ver. 18. But the saints of the most High shall take the kingdom, &c. "Those earthly kingdoms being taken away," or destroyed, as the Greek adds by way of explication, the succeeding kingdom shall be that of Christ and his saints (see ver. 22). Instead of the "most High," the margin reads "high ones," from the Chaldee: sometimes the one true God is spoken of in the plural number, by way of eminence: see Josh. xxiv. 19, Eccles. v. 8, where it is in the Hebrew—He is holy Gods.

Ver. 20. Whose look was more stout than his fellows. Or, "his appearance was more excellent than three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows.

21 I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them;

22 Until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.

23 Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the his fellows." Though he was little at first, yet he afterward claimed a superiority above the other horns or principalities.

Ver. 21. The same horn made war with the saints.] So antichrist is described as making war with the saints, and overcoming them for a time (see Rev. xi. 7, 9, xiii. 7, xvii. 14).

Ver. 22. Until the Ancient of days came.] Came to judgment, ver. 9.

And judgment was given to the saints of the most High:] They were to sit in judgment with God and Christ (see the note upon ver. 9).

And the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.] The saints are described as reigning with Christ in his kingdom: 2 Tim. ii. 11, Rev. ii. 26, iii. 20, 21.

Ver. 23.] As being managed under different forms of government: having the form of a commonwealth at the beginning of its greatness, and afterward governed by kings and emperors: and in process of time being divided into ten kingdoms or principalities; and all of them under the direction of one spiritual head (see Rev. xvii. 13, and compare ver. 7 of the chapter).

Ver. 24. The ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise:] A horn is an emblem of strength, so it comes to signify power and authority (see Deut. xxxviii. 17, Ps. lxxxix. 17): and from whence it is applied to denote sovereignty or dominion (see vss. 21, 22, Rev. xvii. 12). These ten horns or kingdoms rose out of the dissolution of the Roman empire, which came to pass about the year of Christ 476. And it was divided into the following principalities or kingdoms, according to Mr. Mede (see his works, p. 661): 1. Britons. 2. Saxons. 3. Franks. 4. Burgundians. 5. Wisigoths. 6. Suevians and Alans. 7. Vandals. 8. Almonas. 9. Ostrogoths; succeeded by the Lombards, first in Panonia, and then in Italy. 10. Greeks.

The late learned Bishop Lloyd hath given the following list of the ten kingdoms which arose out of the dissolution of the Roman empire, and the time of their rise.

1. Huns, erected their kingdom in that part of Pannonia and Dacia, which from them was called Hungary, about A. D. 556.

2. Ostrogoths settled themselves in the countries that reach from Rhetia to Massia, even to Thrace, about 577, and afterward came into Italy under Alaricus in 410.

3. Wisigoths settled in the south parts of France, and in Catalonia, about 378.

4. Franks seized upon part of Germany and Gaul, about 314.

5. Vandals settled in Spain, afterward set up their kingdom in Africa, 407.

6. Suevians and Alans seized the western parts of Spain, 407, and invaded Italy, 457.

7. Burgundians came out of Germany into that part of Gaul, called from them Burgundy, 407.

fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.

24 And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings.

25 And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the

8. Herules, Rugians, and Thongrians, settled in Italy, under Dacior, about 476.

9 Saxons made themselves masters of Great Britain about the same time, 476.

10. Longobards, called likewise Gopipes, settled in Germany about Madgeburg, 583, and afterward succeeded the Heruli and Thuringi in Hungary, about the year 826.

And another shall rise after them:] The papacy took its rise from the same cause, but did not arrive at direct supremacy till the year 606, when pope Boniface usurped the title of Universal Bishop. Mr. Mede translates the words, "Another shall arise behind them; i. e. in an unperceived manner, so as the other kings were not aware of his growing greatness till he overtopped them."

And he shall be diverse from the first:] His authority will be ecclesiastical, yet so as to lay claim to temporal power too, and to assert a right of disposing of secular affairs.

And he shall subdue three kings:] Or, kingdoms, see ver. 17. Mr. Mede (p. 775, 779), explains these three kingdoms to be, 1. The exarchate of Ravenna, which Charlemagne recovered from the Lombards, and gave to the pope. 2. The kingdoms of the Greeks in Italy, of which the emperor Leo Isaurius was deprived by the popes Gregory the Second and Third: and, 3. The kingdom of the Franks, or German emperors: from whom the popes wrested the election and investiture of themselves and other bishops, and by degrees took from them all the jurisdiction they had in Italy; which was the occasion of grievous wars for several ages, between the popes and the emperor Henry IV. and his successors. See a brief account of those encroachments of the popes, and the disturbances which followed upon them, in Bishop Stillingfleet's Disc. of the Idolatry of the Church of Rome, &c. ch. 10.

Ver. 25. And he shall speak great words against the most High.] See ver. 8, 20, xi. 36. St. John plainly alludes to this text, Rev. xviii. 5, 6, where the beast is said to "open his mouth in blasphemy against God:" this he did by advancing his own authority above that of God's, and in derogation to his laws (compare 2 Thess. ii. 4): as also by setting up the worship of images, and other idolatrous practices, which the prophet Isaiah calls reproaching and blaspheming God, Isa. lv. 7.

And shall wear out the saints of the most High.] By raising wars and persecutions against them (see ver. 21, Rev. xvii. 6, xxviii. 24).

And think to change times and laws:] To alter governments and the constitutions (compare i. 21, 1 Chron. xxix. 30). This the papacy hath done by claiming a power to depose kings, and set up others in their stead: and not only to abrogate human laws, but likewise to dispense with divine ones.

And they shall be given into his hand (or power, see Rev. xiii. 7), until a time and times and the dividing of time.] Or "half a time," as the Hebrew most high, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given unto his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time.

26 But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

27 And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.

28 This is the end of the matter. As for me Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but I kept the matter in my heart.

CHAPTER VIII

1 In the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first.

2 And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass,

CHAP. VIII.

ARGUMENT.—This vision, as it is interpreted by the angel, foretells the succession of the Persian and Grecian monarchies, and how, during the latter, Antiochus Epiphanes should grievously persecute the Jews, profane the temple, and take away the daily sacrifice there offered: wherein he should be a type or figure of those horrible desolations which antichrist should make in the church of God.

Ver. 1.] The foregoing prophecy was written in Chaldee, being a farther explication of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, interpreted ch. ii. This vision that follows is written in Hebrew, because that part of it which relates to the time of Antiochus Epiphanes did chiefly concern the Jews.

A vision appeared unto me.—Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first.] Or, "in the beginning of Belshazzar's reign," (vii. 1): or the sentence may be translated, "After that which appeared to me before:" as the word botecchilah signifies, ix. 21.

Ver. 2. I saw in a vision.] When I was awake, and had the use of my bodily senses (see ver. 3; compare x. 4, 5).

I was at Shushan in the palace; (or, the palace; compare Ezech. i. 1), which is in the province of Elam; the province of Elam, or Persia, properly so called, was taken from Astyages king of Media by Nebuchadnezzar, according to the prophecy of Jeremiwhen I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river of Ulai.

3 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, there stood before the river a ram which had ten horns against Elam, xlix. 34. So it was subject to the king of Babylon when Daniel saw this vision; though afterward the viceroy of that country revolted to Cyrus, and joined with him in taking Babylon; as hath been observed in the note upon that place. Daniel's reading in the palace of Shushan, shows that he still continued in those posts of honour to which Nebuchadnezzar had advanced him (see ver. 27 of this chapter).

The river of Ulai.] This river divides Susiana from the province of Elam, probably so called (see Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 27); though Elam is often taken in a larger sense, as to comprehend Susians under it. It was usual for the prophets to see visions by river sides: of which Daniel gives us another instance, x. 4, and Ezekiel saw his first vision by the river Chebar (Ezek. i. 3); such places being proper for retirement and contemplation.

Ver. 3. Behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns:] Horns are an emblen of power and dominion (see vii. 24). So this ram with two horns denotes the kingship of Media and Persia united into one government. The Hebrew reads one ram: but the adjective one means no more than an article prefixed to a noun substantive; and so it is used x. 5, 1 Sam. i. 1. The ram was the royal ensign of the Persians, as Amm. Marcellinus observes (lib. xix.); and rams' heads with horns, the one higher, and the other lower, are still to be seen among the remains of the ruins of Persepolis, as Sir John Chardin takes notice in his Travels.
had two horns: and the two horns were high, but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last.

4 And I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward: so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great.

5 And I was considering, behold, an he-goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground: and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes.

6 And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power.

But one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last. To denote that the Persian kingdom, though it was of a later date, should overtop that of the Medes, and make a greater figure in the world, as it did from the times of Cyrus (see the note upon 51.11).

Ver. 4. I saw the ram pushing westward.] Persia lay eastward of Babylon: so all the conquests of Cyrus over Syria and the adjacent countries enlarged his dominions westward. But we may probably include under this head Cyrus’s conquests in the lesser Asia, particularly over Ciusasus, whereby he carried on his victories as far as the Ægean sea. And his successors were for some time masters of a great part of Greece, called the west in the following verse.

And northward.] In the conquests over the Iranians, Albans, those of Colchis and Armenia, and the adjacent countries.

And southward.] This chiefly relates to Cambyses’s conquests over Egypt and Ethiopia, together with those of Darins Hystaspes over India, whence Ahasuerus, king of Persia, is said to have reigned from India to Ethiopia, Esth. i. 1.

But he did according to his will.] Nobody being able to oppose him (see v. 19, xi. 3, 15).

Ver. 5. And as I was considering, behold, an he-goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth.] A he-goat was anciently the emblem of princes or great commanders: see Prov. xxx. 31. Isa. xiv. 9, Zech. x. 3, where the word translated chief and signifies in the Hebrew great goats.

The goat is described here as coming from the west, that is, from Greece, on the face of the whole earth; i.e. carrying all before him as he went: denoting thereby the uninterrupted success of Alexander the Great. A goat was the emblem, or arms, of Macedonia, as we now-a-days express it, ever since their king Caramus (see Justin’s Hist. Lib. viii.).

And touched not the ground.] Hereby is signified the swiftness of his conquests: for which he is here described as having four wings of a fowl,” vii. 6, having in eight years’ time conquered all the countries that lay between the Ægean sea and the river Hypanis in India (see Dr. Prideaux, par. i. p. 595).

And the goat had a notable horn between his eyes.

See ver. 21.

And I saw him come close unto the ram, &c.] He made a quick and furious onset upon the Medo-Persian empire, and utterly broke it in two engagements, the first at Issus, the second at Arbela. He cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him.] See vii. 7. This prophecy of Alexander’s success, Jaddus the high-priest showed to him when he came to Jerusalem, and thereby encouraged him to go on in his expedition (see Josephus, Antiq. lib. XI. cap. 5).

7 And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns: and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand.

8 Therefore the he-goat waxed very great: and when he was strong the great horn was broken, and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven.

9 And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land.

Ver. 8. The great horn was broken.] Alexander died in the height of his triumphs and prosperity (see ver. 21, 22).

And for it came up four notable ones] This the angel explains by four kingdoms standing up” instead of one (see ver. 22) (see likewise xi. 4). Dr. Prideaux (ubi supra, p. 557) shows, that this prophecy had its exact completion upon the partition of the Grecian empire after the battle of Ipsus, where Antigonus was killed. There were, indeed, partitions of it into provinces under the brother and son of Alexander; but this was a partition of it into kingdoms, among so many kings or independent governors, represented here by horns, and by heads, vii. 6. And these four kings were: 1. Ptolemy, king of Egypt, Lybia, Palestine, Arabia, and Celo-Syria, which may be called the southern part of the empire. 2. Cassander of Macedonia and Greece, which was the western part of it. 3. Lysimachus of Thrace and Asia, which was the northern part; and, 4. Seleucus of Syria, and the eastern countries.

From the description here given of the empire of Alexander and his four successors, it is plain that the prophet represents it as one and the same empire: and as the third in order of four great monarchies. For it is represented under the emblem of one and the same he-goat, having first one notable horn in its forehead, which is expressly called the first king, ver. 21, and afterward four growing up in the room of it. This is a confirmation of what is observed before upon vi. 40, that the fourth kingdom must be the Roman empire.

Ver. 9. And out of one of them came forth a little horn.] From one of these four successors of Alexander came forth Antiochus, afterward called Epiphanes, or Illustrious, by his flatterers, but was, indeed, “a vile person, to whom the honour of the kingdom did not belong,” as the angel gives his character, xii. 21, Domitius, his elder brother’s son, being the rightful heir.

This little horn belonging to the third head, o. monarchy, must not be confounded with the little horn belonging to the fourth, mentioned vii. 8, 30, although this here spoken of may be allowed to be a type or figure of the latter.

Which waxed exceeding great.] He took advantage of the youth of Ptolemy Philometor (see I Mace. i. 16) to seize the crown, and made himself master of Egypt, called the south in several places of the twelfth chapter of this prophecy.

The cast.] Towards Armenia and Persia (see the note on xi. 4).

The pleasant land.] Judea is so called by the holy writers, as being made choice of by God to place his people there, and to make it the seat of his peculiar residence (see Ps. xlviii. 2, Ezek. xx. 6, and compare
And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host of heaven and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them.

11 And he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down.

12 And an host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered.

13 ¶ Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?

14 And he said unto me, Unto two thousand three hundred and eighty years.

Ver. 12. And it cast down the truth to the ground.) He prospered so far in his attempts against the truth, as to suppress it for a time, and hinder the open profession of it, by the word of God, (compare ver. 21, xi. 29, 32.)

Ver. 13. I heard one saint.) The word saint is equivalent to angel (see iv. 13). What this saint or angel said is not expressed; no more than the words spoken by that illustrious person who appeared to Daniel, x. 5, are recorded.

And another saint said unto that certain saint.) Several angels are introduced in Daniel's visions: see ver. 15, 16, x. (see x. 10, 16, xii. 5, 6; and so in Zechar. i. 13, 14, ii. 2, 4. The word rendered here "certain saint," is translated in the margin, "the numberer of secrets," or "the wonderful numberer," and must mean a person of extraordinary rank, as being able to unfold those secrets which were hid from other angels: and is therefore justly supposed to mean the Son of God, called the "Wonderful Counsellor," Isa. ix. 6, as being acquainted with all God's purposes and designs (compare John i. 18). The participle meddler, "speaking," used hero twice with relation to this person, may denote him to be the Logos, or the Word of God.

How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, &c.) The words may be rendered more agreeably to the Hebrew thus; "How long a time shall the vision last, the daily sacrifice be taken away, and the transgression of desolation continue?" The "transgression of desolation," or "making desolate," is the same with the "abomination that maketh desolate," xi. 31, and applying the expression to the persecution raised by Antiochus, denotes the idol which he caused to be set upon God's altar, and there to be worshipped (see 1 Mac. i. 53, compared with xi. 8, 10). Ver. 14. The computation of time, in its obvious sense, contains something more than six years and four months, reckoning three hundred and sixty days to a year: and if we explain it with relation to the persecution set on foot by Antiochus, we must date it, not from the height of that persecution, when the daily sacrifice was actually taken away, but that continued but just three years (compare 1 Mac. i. 54, with iv. 29); but we must date the rise of it from those transgressions which occasioned the desolation (see 1 Mac. i. 11, &c.); and so we may reasonably suppose the two thousand three hundred and sixty days to commence some time before Antiochus's first invasion of Judea, and his pillaging the sanctuary, mentioned 1 Mac. i. 20—22, which invasion was above two years before the entire abolishing of God's worship in the temple, as appears from the twenty-ninth verse of the same chapter. But since it is generally agreed, that the persecution of Antiochus was a type, or an imperfect representation, of a greater desolation which antichrist should make in the church of God (compare ver. 13 here with xil. 11); it is the opinion of some learned men, that these two thousand three hundred days are a line of time that is to be extended to the end of the prophecy of antichrist; taking each day for a year, according to the genius of the prophetical writings (see Numb. xv. 34, Ezek. iv. 6); according to and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.

15 § And it came to pass, when I, even I, Daniel, had seen the vision, and sought for the meaning, then, behold, there stood before me as the appearance of a man.

16 And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision.

17 So he came near where I stood: and when he came, I was afraid, and fell upon my face: but he said unto me, Understand, O son of man: for at the time of the end shall be the vision.

18 Now as he was speaking with me, I was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground: but he touched me, and set me upright.

which sense the three years and a half, mentioned vii. 25, and the seventy weeks in the ninth chapter, are explained by most interpreters. According to this opinion these two thousand and three hundred days will be commensurate to the one thousand two hundred and ninety, or one thousand three hundred and thirty-five prophetic days, or years, mentioned xii. 11, 12, and then the sanctuary will be thoroughly cleansed, and God's indignation will come perfectly to an end, as it is expressed, ver. 19.

The phrase here translated "two thousand three hundred days," is in the original "two thousand three hundred mornings [and] evenings:" which is the Hebrew way of expressing a natural day (see Gen. i. 5). According to this way of speaking, Christ is said to be "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," Matt. xxi. 40; i.e. part of three natural days. And perhaps the phrase may be here used, in allusion to the daily sacrifice, which was to be offered every morning and evening: the taking away of which is here foretold.

Ver. 15.] Compare xii. 8.

Ver. 16.] The person who utters this voice seems to be the same who is called the "wonderful number," ver. 13, because he speaks as one that had authority over the angel Gabriel.

Ver. 17. When he came I was afraid.] Being struck with fear and astonishment (compare xiv. 2, Ezek. i. 28, Rev. i. 17).

Understand, O son of man.] This is a title given to none of the prophets but Ezekiel and David, who had more frequent converse with angels than any of the rest; and is given to the prophet here, either to put him in mind that he was but flesh and blood, that he might not be excited for having these heavenly visions imparted to him; or else it may be interpreted for a mark or title of honour, as implying something more than an ordinary man, even such a man that was highly favoured and beloved of God (see ix. 28, x. 11, and the note upon Ezek. ii. 1). At the time of the end: i.e. there is a precise time determined for the accomplishment of the vision, when it shall certainly be fulfilled (see ver. 19, and compare ix. 27, xi. 55, 36. Hab. ii. 3).

Ver. 18. Now as he was speaking with me. I was in a deep sleep.] As one that faints away, and falls into a swoon through fear and astonishment (see ver. 17). But he touched me, and set me upright.] See x. 10, Ezek. ii. 2.

Ver. 19.] Or, "To the last end of the indignation:" I will explain to thee the whole series of God's judgments upon his people to the end and conclusion of them (see xii. 8). God will not continue his anger for ever, but there is a fixed period appointed for it (see ver. 17).

Ver. 20—27.] See the notes upon ver. 3, 5, 8.

Ver. 22.] Four kingdoms shall be set up by Alexander's generals, who shall be of the same nation with him, although not of his posterity; nor shall they have that power or extent of dominion which he possessed (see x. 4).

Ver. 23. And in the latter time of their kingdom.] Greece was the chief province of this empire, from whence it had its original and its name: the bringing this country into subjection to the Roman power was a manifest indication of the declension of the third monarchy, and the advancement of the fourth; this empire was remarkably brought to pass when Alexander the Roman consul vanquished Perseus King of Macedon; and thereby brought all Greece under the power of the Romans: and this happened much about the time when Antiochus set up the abomination of desolation in the temple of Jerusalem (see Mr. Mede's Works, p. 534, and Dr. Prideaux, obi supra, ad. A. C. 169).

When the transgressors are come to the fill.] When many of the Jews shall be disposed to cast off the true religion, and embrace the gentile idolatries (see I Macc. i. 11, 13, 43, ii. 15, 16). God spares sinners for a time, to give them space for repentance, till their iniquities come to their full height, and are ripe for judgment (see Gen. xv. 16, Matt. xxiii. 32, I Thess. ii. 16). A king of fierce countenance, &c. One of a fierce and untractable temper, without pity or compassion, (compare Deut. xxviii. 50); one practised in craft and policy (see ver. 23): especially in the arts of inveigling men, and seducing them from their religion. This character may be justly applied to Antiochus Epiphanes: though in other respects he behaved himself so unaccountably, that he might more fitly be called Epiphanes the Madman, than Epiphanes the Illustrious, as Prideaux observes (see the Fragments of his twenty-sixth book; and Dr. Prideaux, par. ii. book iii. at the beginning). This makes some interpreters think that the character here given to Antiochus, more properly belongs to antichrist, whose type he was: an observation that may be applied to some other expressions in the following verses. Ver. 24. And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power.] He shall subdue Judea, Egypt, and several other countries (see ver. 9, xi. 4—19). It is added here, that he shall not effect this "by his own power:" which they that apply to Antiochus understand either, first, of the assistance which Eumenes, king of Pergamus, and his brother Attalus, gave him in keeping the kingly power he had usurped (see xl. 3 x. 2.
his own power: and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practise, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people.

25 And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many: he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand.

26 And the vision of the evening and the morning which was told is true: wherefore shut thou up the vision; for it shall be for many days.

27 And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it.

CHAPTER IX.

I In the first year of Darius the son of Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes, which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans;

2 In the first year of his reign I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet as in former times, and should so continue for seventy weeks of years, i.e. four hundred and ninety years; and then should be utterly destroyed for putting the Messiah to death.

Ver. 1.] See v. 31. This is the same person who is called Cyaxares, the son of Astyages, by the heathen historians, with whom Josephus agrees. His father Astyages had the name of Abasueus among the Jews, as appears by a passage in Tobit, xiv. 15, where the phant, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem.

3 If And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes:

4 And I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession, and said, O Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments:

5 We have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts and from thy judgements:

6 Neither have we hearkened unto thy servants the prophets, which spake in thy name to our kings, our princes, and our fathers, and to all the people of the land.

7 O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day; to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and unto all Israel, that are near, and that are far off, through all the countries whither taking of Nineveh is ascribed to Nebuchadnecesar and Assuerus, who were the same with Nebupolasasar, Nebuchadnecesar's father, and Assyages: Nebuchadnecesar being a name common to all the Babyloniai kings, as Pharaoh was to the kings of Egypt (see Dr. Prideaux's Script. Connex. ad A. C. 619).

We need not wonder to find the same persons called by such different names, especially in different countries: the scripture affords several instances of this kind: so Daniel was called Belteshazzar by Nebuchadnecesar, who changed the names of his three companions, i.e. Zerubabbel was called Sheb-bazzar, Ezra i. 8, Esther, Undassah, Esth. ii. 7.

Ver. 2. I Daniel understood by books) The several prophecies of Jeremiah are called so many books (see xxv. 13, xxix. 1). We may observe from hence, that the prophets studied the writings of those prophets who were before them, for the more perfect understanding of the times when their prophecies were to be fulfilled. The same they did by several of their own prophecies (see 1 Pet. i. 11, 12).

That he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem.) See Jer. xxv. 11, 12, xxix. 10. The seventy years mentioned both here and in Jeremy, are to be dated from the end of the third, or beginning of the fourth, year of Jehoiakim (compare Jer. xxv. 1, with Dan. i. 1): from which time to the first year of Cyrus, according to the scripture account, are just seventy years. These desolations began from the fourth year of Jehoiakim, when the city was taken by Nebuchadnezzar (see i. 1), at which time the king of Judah became tributary to the king of Babylon: and they were from time to time increasing, till the eleventh year of Zedekiah, when they were finally destroyed by burning the city and temple; after which time it continued desolate till the end of the captivity (2 Chron. xxxvi. 21).

Ver. 3. And I set my face unto the Lord God, I directed my face towards the place where the temple stood (see vi. 10).

To seek [him] by prayer and supplications.] The promises of God are generally conditional, and the promise of restoring the Jews' captivity after seventy years, had this condition particularly expressed in it, that they should call upon him, and pray unto him, and then he would hearken unto them, Jer. xxix. 12.

thou hast driven them, because of their trespass that they have trespassed against thee.

8 O Lord, to us belongeth confusion of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, because we have sinned against thee.

9 To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him:

10 Neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, or walk in his laws, which he set before us by his servants the prophets.

11 Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; therefore the curse is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against him.

12 And he hath confirmed his words, which he spake against us, and against our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil: for under the whole heaven hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem.

13 As it is written in the law of Moses, all

With fasting, &c.] The soul and body are so nearly related, that the humiliation of both is necessary to make our repentance complete (see James iv. 9, 10).

Ver. 4. And I made my confession,) Both acknowledging his justice and holiness, and my own and my people's iniquity. The better men are, the greater is the sense of their guilt, and the deeper is their humiliation (see Job xlii. 6, I Tim. i. 15).

Keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, &c.] The prophet does not insist upon any right the people had in those gracious promises made to their fathers, because the condition of their obedience, whenever it was not expressly mentioned, yet was tacitly implied (compare Neh. i. 5).

Ver. 5. Daniel uses the same confession that is prescribed in Solomon's consecration prayer, to be used by the Jews in the land of their captivity: with a promise subjunctive of a favourable answer, that God would make to their supplications, presented to him upon that occasion (see I Kings viii. 45-50, and compare Neh. i. 7, Ps. cvi. 6).

Ver. 7.] Some of the Jews were carried captive, or went voluntary exiles, upon foreseeing the calamities which were coming upon their country, into the neighbouring countries, of Edom, Moab, and Ammon (see the note upon Jer. xlii. 14): as others went down into Egypt (see Jeremiah xliii. xlv.). Those were not removed to such a distance from their own country, as those that were carried to Babylon.

Ver. 10. To walk in his laws, which he set before us] By Moses, and the succession of the prophets that followed him: who reinforced the law of Moses, and gave the people new instructions from God upon emergent occasions.

Ver. 11.] Those solemn denunciations of God's judgments declared against impenitent sinners, Lev. xxvi. Deut. xxviii. xxix. 20. The Hebrew Shenu-nah, is taken here for an imprecation, as it is used, Numb. v. 21, the forms of swearing or adjuration, implying an imprecation upon those that forswear themselves. For which reason the Hebrew alah signifies both swearing and cursing (see the note upon Jer. xxiii. 10).

Ver. 12. Against our judges] Judges here signify any princes or rulers (compare Job xii. 17, Ps. ii this evil is come upon us: yet made we not our prayer before the Lord our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand thy truth.

14 Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for the Lord our God is righteous in all his works which he doeth: for we obeyed not his voice.

15 For now, O Lord our God, that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast gotten thee renown, as at this day; we have sinned, we have done wickedly.

16 O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain: because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us.

17 Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake.

18 O my God, incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and 10, exlviii. 12, Prov. viii. 16). See Lam. i. 12, ii. 13, Ezek. v. 9.

Ver. 13.] A devout acknowledgment of God's justice and providence, in making his judgments exactly fulfil the threatening denounced many ages before by Moses [see Lev. xxvi. 14, &c. Deut. xxviii. 15, &c.].

Ver. 14.] The same expression is used by the prophet Jeremy in his threatenings against the Jews, xxxvi. 25, xliv. 27.

Ver. 15.] And now, O Lord our God, &c.] A form of supplication used in several places of scripture, whereby devout persons entreat God to continue his favours, by recounting his former mercies towards them [see Exod. xxxxi. 11, 13, Neh. ix. 10, Jer. xxxii. 20]. This the Latin tongue expresses by the word obsercatio: of which kind is that form of supplication used in our Litany, By the mystery of thy holy incarnation, &c., which some men's ignorance or prejudice hath misinterpreted, as if it were a sort of conjuration.

We have sinned, we have done wickedly.] The entire sense is, Although we have sinned, and are unworthy of the continuance of thy mercies, yet deal with us according to all thy righteousness, as it follows.

Ver. 16.] O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, &c.] The word righteousness is in many places of scripture equivalent to mercy [see 1 Sam. xii. 7, Ps. xxxi. 1, exlii. 1, Mic. vi. 6, and Dr. Hammond upon Matt. i. 19].

Thy holy mountain.] The temple (see ver. 20, and the note upon Isa. ii. 2).

Ver. 17.] For the sake of the Messias, known by the title of the Lord among the Jews [see Ps. ex. 1]: and called "Messiah the Prince," ver. 25 of this chapter. All God's promises are fulfilled in and for the sake of Christ, 2 Cor. i. 20. To this sense some interpret Ps. lxxx. 14, 16, "Behold, and visit this vine; and the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, even for the sake of the Son, whom thou madest strong for thyself:" expressed afterward by "the Son of man," ver. 18.

Ver. 19.] The seventy years of our captivity are near being expired (see ver. 2); therefore I beseech thee not to defer the accomplishment of the promise thou hast made to restore us to our own country, and the free exercise of our religion. So remarkable a turn of providence will very much redound to the honour of thy name [see Ps. lxix. 9, 10, cii. 15, 16].

Ver. 21. The man Gabriel.] The angel Gabriel appearing under the shape of a man (compare x. 16).

At the beginning.] Or "before" [see viii. 16]. The word batechillah signifies "before," viii. 1.

Being caused to fly swiftly.] The angels are commonly described as having wings, with respect to their appearance in a bodily shape, to signify their readiness to execute the divine commands [see Isa. vi. 2, Ezek. i. 11].

Touched me [see viii. 15, x. 10] about the time of the evening oblation.] There were three hours of prayer [see vi. 10], but the two most solemn seasons of it were at the time of the morning and evening oblation, that solemn service which was offered daily in the temple in the name of the whole nation [see viii. 11]. This service was performed at the third and ninth hours of the day, answering to our nine of the clock in the morning and three in the afternoon. Devout persons that could not attend the temple service, set apart those hours for their private devotions: and we find Elijah made that solemn prayer and sacrifice recorded 1 Kings xviii. 36, "at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice." But upon their solemn days of fasting and humiliation, they continued their devotions from the time of the morning sacrifice till that of the evening was finished. Such was this of Daniel, and that of Cornelius, mentioned Acts x. 30. This custom was continued among the primitive Christians, who did not conclude their prayers or fasts on their stationary days till three in the afternoon [see Mr. Bingham, Eccles. Antiq. book xxi. ch. 3].

Ver. 23. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth.] God's command to me to finish. I might instruct the reader that I should hereafter build the city and temple of Jerusalem, in whose behalf thou didst pour forth thy supplications. Here was a remarkable completion of that promise, Isa. lxv. 24, "While they are yet speaking I will hear." For thou art greatly beloved.] Learned men have observed a near affinity between the prophecy of Daniel and the Revelation, wherein John and we may take notice, that much the same title is given to them both. Daniel is styled "a man greatly beloved," here and x. 11, 19, and the character given to St. John is.
24 Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make that of "the disciple whom Jesus loved," John xxi. 20, 24.

Therefore understand the matter.] Apply thy mind carefully to what is said, for this prophecy contains in it truths of the greatest importance. Our Saviour pleaded to come to Jerusalem which occasioned, ver. 25, when, explaining the latter part of this prophecy of the final destruction of Jerusalem, he adds, "Let him that readeth understand," Matt. xivv. 15.

Ver. 24. Seventy weeks] To recite all the different methods chronologers have taken of computing these seventy weeks, would be too large a work for a commentary. I shall only take notice of three opinions, which seem most agreeable to the text. The first is, that of Petavius, Ratisbon, Temp. par. ii. p. 154, and Archbishop Usher, Annal. V. T. ad An. P. J. 4200. These two learned authors date the beginning of this prophecy from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, when he gave his commission to Nehemiah to rebuild Jerusalem (Neh. ii. 1), from which time they reckon half of the week here specified (ver. 27), to be completed at the death of Christ. But these authors suppose Artaxerxes to have begun his reign nine years sooner than the historians commonly date it. The second opinion is that of Dr. Prideaux, Connex. of Script, par. i. ad an. A. C. 458, who fixes the date of this prophecy to the seventh year of Artaxerxes, when he gave a commission to Ezra, to settle the state of the Jews at Jerusalem, to which sense he understands the commission to reaffirm and to build Jerusalem, which time he computes four hundred and ninety years to the death of Christ.

The third opinion is that of the late right reverend and learned Bishop Lloyd, which may be seen in the Chronological Tables, published by his direction, Numbr. 3, 4. He supposes the years here specified to consist of three hundred and sixty days: such years he affirms the scripture always makes use of in the computation of time; as appears in the history of Noah's flood, Gen. vii. 11, compared with ver. 24, and viii. 4, and from Rev. xii. 6, compared with ver. 24, and xiii. 5, where twelve hundred and sixty days are reckoned equivalent to three years and a half, and to forty and two months. The same computation of years was generally made use of in ancient times by all nations, particularly by the Chaldeans, where Daniel now lived. The reasons of this opinion are at large set forth by Mr. Marshal, in his treatise upon the Seventy Weeks, par. ii. ch. 4. The bishop proceeding upon this hypothesis, computes the date of this prophecy from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, and reckons sixty-nine weeks of years, or four hundred and eighty-three years, from thence to the year before Christ. But then he supposes seven weeks, that remains to make up the number of seventy he separates from the rest, and begins it from the year of Christ 63, in the latter half of which the "sacrifice and oblation were to cease, and the city and sanctuary to be destroyed by the Romains" all which was fulfilled in the seventieth year after Christ.

The difference of these opinions as to the main point, the completion of this prophecy, is not very great; for, as the learned Bishop Chandler hath judiciously observed (Answers to Grounds and Reasons, p. 139): "The commencement of the weeks must be either from the seventh of Artaxerxes, which falls upon the four hundred and fifty-seventh year before Anna Domini, or from the twentieth of Artaxerxes. Add to four hundred and fifty-seven years before Christ, twenty-six years after Christ (which is the number that four hundred and eighty-three years, or sixty-nine weeks, exceeds four hundred and fifty-seven years), and you are brought to the beginning of John the Baptist, by the sone of the angel of the Messias: add seven years, or one week, to the former, and you come to the thirty-third year of Anna Domini, which was the year of Jesus Christ's death. Or else compute four hundred and ninety years, the whole seventy weeks, from the seventh of Artaxerxes: by subtracting four hundred and fifty-seven years (the space of time between that year and the beginning of Anna Domini) from four hundred and ninety, and there remains thirty-three, the year of our Lord's death. Let the twentieth of Artaxerxes be the date of the seventy weeks, which is the four hundred and forty-fifth year before A. D. and reckon sixty-nine weeks of Chaldean years: seventy Chaldee years being equal to sixty-nine Julian; and so four hundred and seventy-eight Julian years making four hundred and eighty-three Chaldean years, and placed in the thirty-third year after Christ, or the passover following. Any of these reckoning (add this learned author) are sufficient for our purpose. It is rather to be wondered, how, at this distance of time, learned men have been able to come to any exactness in these matters." Seventy weeks are determined] By seventy weeks are to be understood seventy weeks of years, or seventy times seven years; i. e. four hundred and ninety years, each day being accounted for a year, according to the prophetic way of reckoning (see Numbr. xivv. 34, Ezek. iv. 6). Daniel distinguisheth between these weeks and the weeks after the common reckoning, by calling the latter "weeks of days," x. 2, according to the sense of the Hebrew, expressed in the margin. And Isaiah distinguisheth a natural year from a prophetic one, by calling it "the year of the Lord's favour," Isa. xvi. 14, xvi. 16.

The Jews numbered their time by sevens of years: every seventh year was a year of release, and after seven times seven years, i. e. forty-nine years, came the year of jubilee. So the computation of time here made use of alludes to Lev. xxv. 8, "Thou shalt number seven sabbaths [or rather weeks] of years, seven times seven years," or Hebrew word "sabbath" signifying the number seven, as it is rendered קֶשֶׁר by the LXX. in the latter part of the verse; and so the Greek word κηρήστηκα is used in Luke xviii. 12, xxiv. 1. Daniel, by examining the prophecy of Jeremiah, had discovered how the seventy years of the captivity were near expiring; and here the angel discovers to him another line of time, importing, that after the restoration of Jerusalem it should continue for a period of one hundred and forty-nine years, or seven times seven years, which being expired, it should be finally destroyed. Seventy weeks contain ten jubilees, and ten being the number of perfection, these seventy weeks denote the bringing in the most complete jubilee, or remission, as the LXX. render that word: when all former trespasses should be cancelled, and men should be restored to that heavenly inheritance they had forfeited, by the death of the Messias.

Upon thy people and upon thy holy city.] Daniel in his prayer to God, speaking of the Jews and Jerusalem, had used these expressions, "Thy people, and thy holy city," ver. 18, 19, as if their title to God's favour were indefeasible. To correct this mistake, the angel, directing his discourse to Daniel, returns 25 Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; as to him his own expressions, as if the people and the city were rather his than God's. In the same paragraph God speaks to Moses, after the sin of the Israelites in making the golden calf, Exod. xxxii. 7. At the twenty-sixth verse of this prophecy, the angel tells Daniel how they ceased to be God's people.

To finish the transgression, etc.] This the Messiah did by making an atonement for sin, and absolving men from the guilt of it: by giving men the best rules and assistance for the promoting true and inward righteousness; called here "everlasting righteousness," in opposition to the righteousness of the law, a great part of which consisted in external ordinance, "imposed on them," for a season till the time of reformation," Heb. ix. 10, where the English text reads, "to make an end of sin:" the margin translates it, to seal up sin, following a various reading in the Hebrew: but the sense comes all to one, for the verb which signifies to seal up, denotes likewise the accomplishing of any thing, and is applied to sin, or the punishment of it, Lam. iv. 22 (see likewise the following note).

To seal up the vision and prophecy.] To fulfil the prophecies of foregoing ages concerning the Messiah, and to confirm them, by making the event to answer the prediction, as the setting of a seal confirms the authenticity of any writing. Thus the rabbins upon the text interpret the words, "All the prophecies (say they) shall be fulfilled at the coming of the Messiah." Bishop Lloyd explains the sentence of the finishing and completing the prophetic writings of the Old Testament, which he supposes to have been done forty-nine years after the commencement of this prophecy (see the note upon the following verse).

And to anoint the most Holy.] The word "anoint" plainly alludes to the name of Messiah, expressed in the following verse, which signifies in Hebrew, "the Anointed," and is translated "Christ" in Greek (see John i. 41). To "anoint" is the same here as to consecrate the Messiah to be a priest, prophet, and king, all which offices were conveyed by the ceremony of anointing. The Messiah is styled here "the most Holy," upon the account of his unsotted original, as well as his unblamable life (see Luke i. 35, Acts iii. 14, Heb. vii. 26, Rev. iii. 7). The words may be literally translated, "To anoint the holy of holies:" an expression which usually signifies the inner sanctuary, called "the holiest of all," Heb. ix. 3, and it is very properly applied to the Messias, who was "greater than the temple," Matt. xii. 6, because "in him dwelt the fulness of the Godhead," Col. ii. 9, whereupon he calls his body the "temple," John ii. 21, Ver. 25. Know therefore and understand.] See ver. 23.

From the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem] Or "To build again Jerusalem," as the margin reads, and so the verb shall is translated in the latter part of this verse. Compare Neh. vi. 16. Daniel had besought God to "behold their desorations, and the ruins of the city which is called by his name," ver. 15. In answer to this his supplication, the angel acquaints him that the city, both the streets and the wall thereof, should be rebuilt. These expressions do very much confirm their interpretation, who date this prophecy from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, when he gave a commission to Nehemiah to rebuild the city and its walls (Neh. ii. 1): whereas Dr. Prideaux, who dates this prophecy from the seventh year of Artaxerxes, is forced to understand the expressions in a metaphorical sense, for restoring and establishing the church and state of the Jews. Now it is a received rule, that a literal sense is always to be preferred, if it be consistent with the main scope of the text.

Unto the Messiah the Prince] Anointing being the ancient ceremony of investing persons in the highest offices and dignities, the name of "Messiah," or "Anointed," was in an eminent manner appropriated to him that was sanctified, or set apart, and sent into the world under the highest character of being the Redeemer of it. By that name he was commonly known unto the Jews, John i. 41, iv. 26, and that title was chiefly given to him from the authority of this prophecy. He is called here the Prince, or Ruler, a title often given to David (see 1 Sam. xix. 24, 26), and the same as the title of the Messiah himself, spoken of under the name of David, Isa. iv. 4. The author of the first book of Chronicles probably alludes to this place of Daniel, ver. 2, "Judah prevailed over his brethren, and of him was the chief ruler [the nagid here in the text] to come:" as the words may best be translated. The Messiah was commonly known under the title of "king of Israel," or "king of the Jews," (see Matt. ii. 2, Luke xxiii. 2, 3, John i. 49, xix. 19).

Shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks:] A colon should be placed at the end of this sentence, which is wrong placed in the middle of it in our English bibles. "Seven weeks and threescore and two weeks" put together, make sixty-nine weeks of years, or four hundred and eighty-three years. As the cutting off of the Messiah is appropriated to the period of threescore and two weeks in the following verse, so the seven weeks or forty-nine years, here mentioned, must in all probability be assigned to the building of the street and the wall, whether we understand it literally, or metaphorically with Dr. Prideaux, for the restoring and settling the Jewish church and state (see Dr. Prideaux, ubi supra, and ad an. A. C. 409). Bishop Prideaux supposes the date of this prophecy from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes concludes the seven weeks, or forty-nine years, in the eighth year of Artaxerxes Memnon, at which time he supposes Malachi to have written his prophecy, and thereby finished the Old Testament Canon, or sealed up the vision and prophecy, after whom the Jews were to look for no other prophet till John Baptist and Jesus Christ. Mal. iv. 4, 5, compared with Matt. xxvii. 11, 14.

The street shall be built again, &c.] When the Jews were sorely assaulted by their adversaries, who did all they could to hinder them from rebuilding the city, and fortifying it with a new wall (see Neh. vii. 7, etc., vi. 15). These words, taken in their obvious sense, plainly fix the date of this prophecy to the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, who then gave Nehemiah a commission to rebuild the city, and raised the walls and ramparts of it (see Neh. ch. ii. — iv., compared with Ecles. xlii. 13). Before which time the Jews, that returned from captivity, lived in the cities where their inheritance lay (see Ezra ii. 70, Neh. vii. 4). The word haruts, translated wall, properly signifies the circuit bounding out the limits of the city, whereas the wall was built, and it was generally used to be marked out with a plough making a furrow round about, as Mr. Mele observes (Works, p. 704); and by rekshoth, the street, or broad place, he understands people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary: and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined.

1, edit. Hudson); and the Jews relate that a plough was drawn over the ground where they both stood (see Dr. Largen's letter in the Med. for 1855, May 3.) These evident accomplishments of our Saviour's prediction, that one stone should not stand upon another, with respect either to the city (Luke xix. 44), or to the sanctuary (Matt. xxvii. 58, xxiv. 2).

And the end thereof shall be with a flood.] The desolations made by an army are often compared to the inundations of a flood, whose violence nothing is able to withstand (see Deut. xii. 29, Jer. vii. 7.

Desolations are determined.] Or, "decreed." That war shall make an utter destruction both of the city and the nation.

Ver. 27. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week:] The former part of the verse may be literally translated thus: "One week shall confirm the covenant with many, and the midst of (or the half part of) the week shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease."

Most interpreters suppose the seventy weeks to be completed at the death of Christ, or at least one-half of the seventieth and last of them; accordingly they understand the "confirming the covenant" of the new covenant, and the terms of salvation therein proposed, first by John Baptist, as the forerunner of Christ, and then by Christ himself (compare Isa. xlii. 6, 4., Jer. xxxi. 31, Ezek. xviii. 66). They thus combine the promulgation of the new covenant to the first half of the seventieth week, understand it of Christ's preaching for three years and a half, and then suffering in the midst of that week. That they understand the confirming the covenant to be of the same extent with the seventieth week, suppose John Baptist's preaching to have taken up three years and a half, before Christ entered on his prophetic office, and translate the following words, In the half part of the week (see the next note but one).

With many] The same expression is elsewhere used of the universal redemption, or general promulgation of pardon by the gospel covenant (see Isa. lii. 11, Matt. xx. 28., Rom. v. 15, 19, Heb. ix. 28.)

In the midst of the week] Our translation of the words follows their opinion who place the death of Christ in the middle of the seventieth week. Bishop Usher's Annals, par. ii. p. 569): whereas they that suppose the whole seventy weeks completed at our Saviour's passion, translate the sentence thus, "In the half part of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease;" understanding it of the latter half (see Dr. Prideaux, ubi supra). The Hebrew word chasis, signifies properly "the half part," and is commonly translated by "Hyere in the Septuagint. [In this sense it is to be understood by our translation, xii. 7, of this prophecyl.

He shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease.] Christ, by his "one oblation of himself once offered," shall put an end to all the sacrifices and oblations made in the Jewish temple (compare Heb. x. 5, 13), in fulfillment of Matt. xxiv. 3): which were that suppose the seventy weeks to have been finished at our Saviour's death. To confirm this exposition we may observe, that the putting an end to the temple service by violence, such as was threatened under Antiochus Epiphanes, is expressed in a different manner; viz. by "taking away the daily sacrifice," vii. 11, 12, xi. 31. Others understand these words of the final destruction of the Jewish temple and worship by the 27 And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.

Romans; and it may be observed, that the word minchah, "oblation," is sometimes used for the daily sacrifice (see 1 Kings xvi. 29, 30). Bishop Lloyd explains the words to this sense: he separates this single, or odd week (so he translates shabbos eckah, "one week"), from the other sixty-nine; and makes it commence in the sixty-third year after Christ, and to end in the final destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, which came to pass A. C. 70. It must be granted, that this interpretation agrees better with the letter of the text than the former: and the "abomination of desolation" immediately following it, they may both be reasonably thought the express characters of one and the same week, viz. the seventh, "determined upon Daniel's people and city."

The same learned prelate understands the words, "He shall confirm the covenant with many—of the prince's future people," mentioned in the foregoing verse, viz. the Romans: who, by their general Cer- bulo, made a peace with the Parthians, Medes, and Armenians, that they might be better at leisure to make an entire conquest of Judea: of which Tacitus speaking, saith, "There never was so firm a peace as now." (Annal. lib. xv.)

There is one difficulty which attends this explication; viz. that instead of setting forth one continued "line of time," from the "going forth of the commandment to rebuild Jerusalem," to the conclusion of the events here foretold, it makes a considerable break, or interval of time, between the fulfilling one part of the prophecy and the other. Whereas the other interpretations suppose the destruction of the city and temple to run beyond the computation of the seventy weeks, and to be immediately subjoined to the death of Christ, as we see they are, ver. 26, to show what shall be the catastrophe, or final punishment, which shall attend so great a wickedness.

And for the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate.] Mr. Mede translates the words thus, "And being a desolator," he shall command "over a wing of abominations." (Works, p. 407.) Bishop Lloyd, with some little variation, renders them, "And upon the battlements (shall be) the idols of the desolator."

Bishop Lloyd, with some little variation, renders them, "And upon the battlements (shall be) the idols of the desolator." They both understand by the phrase the Roman army, which is the interpretation Christ himself gives of it (Luke xxii. 20, compared with Matt. xxiv. 15). The word kenaph, translated in the English "overspreading," properly signifies a "wing," and may either signify an army, as it is used, Isa. viii. 8, or else stand for the battlements of the temple, as the Greek ἱππορύσσειν, which answers to it, plainly does, Matt. iv. 5. Here the Romans, after they had set the temple on fire, pitched their tents, and were about to be exercised against the eastern gate of the temple, and offered sacrifice to them, as Josephus expressly tells us (Bell. Jud. lib. vi. cap. 6, edit. Hudson). The word shikutain, "abominations," is commonly used for idols (see 1 Kings xi. 5, 7, 2 Kings xxviii. 13); and the "abomination of desolation" set upon the altar by Antiochus (1 Macc. i. 54), is explained by the idolat- rious thing set up. So the abominations here spoken of do very properly signify the ensigns, or standards, or the Roman legions; each standard having stamped upon it the image of the tutelar god of that legion, to whom they offered sacrifice. Tacitus calls the eagle, and the other ensigns, Propria legi- onum numina, the "deities which were peculiar to their legions" (Annal. lib. ii.)." "Abominations" are the same purpose; Religio tenuit castrorum signa venatorum, signa jurat, et Diis omnibus pro- ponit: "All the religion of the army consists in paying divine worship to their standards, in swearing by them, and preferring them before all other deities!" (Apol. cap. 16.)

Even until the consummation.] Till God's indignation be accomplished, as the same sense is express- ed, xi. 20.

And that determined [or which is decreed] shall be poured upon the desolator.] Compare ver. 11 of this chapter. Mr. Mede translates it, "shall continue upon the desolator," p. 769. The words briefly declare those terrible calamities which made an entire destruction of that city and people, and were executed upon them in a most dreadful manner that any nation ever suffered, and with the most evident tokens of a divine vengeance upon them, according to the relation of their own historian Josephus, who was an eye-witness of these desolations. And ever since their posterity have been dispersed all the world over, living only upon sufferance in their several dispersions, and very often exposed to grievous oppressions and persecutions, enough to have extinguished their race, unless they had been preserved by providence, on purpose to verify the truth of those prophecies which foretold these calamities: and particularly those words of Christ, which have a plain aspect upon the text before us (Luke xxi. 22—24). "These be the days of vengeance: that all things that are written may be fulfilled—for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people; and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and be led away captive unto all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles, until the times of the gentiles be fulfilled:" i. e. till the times of the fourth monarchy, spoken of ch. ii. vii. are expired (see the note upon xii. 7).

Bishop Lloyd renders the last word homen, "desolate," in an active sense, "the desolator," or him that makes desolate: in which sense the word is plainly taken, viii. 13, xii. 11. The sense he gives of the sentence is much the same with the former: viz. that the divine vengeance shall continue upon the Jews, till it be returned upon the author of their desolations, which he interprets of the Roman government, as it was exercised under the seventh head (see Rev. xvii. 11).

Having given a particular account of the most probable expositions of this famous prophecy. I need not take any notice of Sir John Marsham's explica- tion of it in his Chronicus Canon, p. 568, since a learned writer, Mr. Marshal, in his Treatise upon the Seventy Weeks, lately published, hath shown it to be inconsistent with itself, as well as with the undoubted monuments both of sacred and profane history. The late author of Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion, hath thought fit to men- tion Sir J. M's hypothesis with approbation: but it is to be presumed that this writer took it upon trust, without ever examining it, and was glad to find an opinion prejudicial to Christianity countenanced by so great a name.
5 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and beheld a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girted with fine gold of Uphaz:

6 His body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms and his feet like in colour to brazen brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.

7 And I Daniel alone saw the vision: for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves.

8 Therefore I was left alone, and saw this used to do constantly (see Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. xiii. ch. 1).

9 Ver. 4. In the four and twentieth day of the first month.] According to the Jewish computation, which was the month Nisan, beginning about our 10th of March. The commentators observe from hence, that Daniel's fast fell upon the time of the paschal solemnity; and therefore the Jews did not think themselves obliged to keep their solemn festivals anywhere but in their own country, and at the place appointed by God for that purpose.

10 I was by the side of the great river, which is Hiddekel.] The same with Tigris (see Gen. ii. 14). This was near Shushan, where Daniel probably resided (see the note upon vii. 2).

11 Ver. 5. I lifted up mine eyes.] Being by the river side in a deep contemplation, I looked up and saw a person appear before me, placed in the air above the waters, or hovering over them (see xii. 6, and compare Rev. x. 2, 5).

12 Behold a certain man clothed in linen.] He appeared in the habit of a high-priest (see Exod. xxviii. 4, 39, xxix. 5). The description St. John gives of Christ as high-priest of the church, Rev. i. 15, seems to be taken from this place of Daniel, which proves that the person here described can be no other than the Son of God: which may be farther confirmed by comparing the person described here, and xii. 5, with Rev. x. 2, 5, 6, who in these represented as "setting his right foot upon the sea, and his left upon the land," as sovereign Lord of both elements (compare Matt. xxviii. 19).

13 Concerning the "fine gold of Uphaz," see the note upon Jer. x. 9.

14 Ver. 6. Like the beryl.] Of an azure, or sky-colour, mixed with a bright green (see Ezek. i. 10).

15 His arms and his feet like—(as polished brass.) Of a bright blazing colour (see Ps. civ. 4, Ezek. i. 7, Rev. i. 15, x. 1).

16 And the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.] Great and powerful (compare Ezek. i. 24, Rev. i. 15, x. 3).

17 Ver. 7. A great quaking fell upon them, &c.] They were seized with such terror and astonishment, that they made what haste they could to get out of the reach of such an amazing sight (compare Acts ix. 7).

18 Ver. 8. There remained no strength in me.] I fell into a swoon or fainting fit (see ver. 9).

19 My comeliness was turned in me into corruption.] Or, "my vigour," as the margin reads to a better sense. So the word is used Prov. v. 3, where our translation renders it, "thine honour;" but it should be translated "thine strength," or vigour, as appears 3L great vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my comeliness was turned in me into corruption, and I retained no strength.

9 Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep sleep on my face, and my face toward the ground.

10 ¶ And, behold, an hand touched me, which set me upon my knees and upon the palms of my hands.

11 And he said unto me, O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee, and stand upright: for unto thee am I now sent. And when he had spoken this word unto me, I stood trembling.

12 Then said he unto me, Fear not, Daniel: for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words.

13 But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days: but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

by comparing that verse with the parallel text, Prov. xxxi. 3. [Ver. 9.] The very sound of his words put me into a fainting fit (see vili. 18).

Ver. 10.] This seems to be a distinct appearance from that described ver. 5, not so terrible, but nearer approaching to a human form (see ver. 16): and may probably be supposed to be the angel Gabriel, who had been sent to Daniel upon the like occasions (see vili. 17, 18, ix. 21). The Logos, or Son of God, in the representations made of him in the Old Testament, usually appears with a retinue of angels attending him (see Gen. xviii. 2). And in this prophecy (vili. 15, &c.), we have a vision of several angels attending upon one principal one (compare xii. 5).

The same retinue of angels may be observed in Zechariy’s visions, i. 8—10, 12, 13, ii. 3, 4, 8, iii. 2, 4, 7. The angel who now appeared to Daniel, putting forth his hand, raised him from the ground, and restored him to his former strength in some degree (see ver. 11, xv. 21, Jer. i. 9, Ezek. ii. 2, Rev. i. 17). [Ver. 11. O Daniel, a man greatly beloved.] See ix. 23.

Understand the words that I speak unto thee—unto thee am I now sent. Though this angel was inferior to that eminent person described ver. 5, yet he being the angel that informs Daniel of all those matters contained in the following chapter, and the beginning of the twelfth (the man clothed in linen, speaking nothing but what is related xii. 7), he may possibly take the whole business of the vision upon himself, as he does here and in the following verse.

Ver. 12. And I am come for thy words.] To give an answer to thy requests, by the direction of that divine person (ver. 5), upon whom I attend (compare vili. 15—17, ix. 22).

From the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, &c.] As God graciously answered those prayers thou madest in thy former humiliation, occasioned by thy searching out the time allotted for the captivity of thy people (see ix. 2, 22, 23); so now God is pleased, in answer to thy repeated humiliation and solicite concern for thy people, to send me to inform thee what shall be their state and condition in after times.

Ver. 13. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me. The princes of the kingdom of Persia and Grecia, mentioned here and ver. 20, are generally supposed to be the guardian or tutelar angels of those several countries. That there were such tutelar angels, not only over private persons (see Acts xii. 15), but likewise over provinces and kingdoms, was an opinion generally received. The four spirits mentioned Zecl. vi. 5, seem to be the guardian angels of the four great empires. Every heathen nation thought their country under the peculiar protection of some tutelar deity; and they looked upon the God of the Jews to be no other than that deity who presided over that nation (see 1 Sam. iv. 8, 1 Kings xx. 23, 24, 2 Kings xviii. 32—35, Isa. x. 10, 11).

This notion was very much countenanced by a passage in Deuteronomy xxxii. 8, where the Septuagint translate the text thus: "When the most high divided the nations their inheritance—he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the angels of God, for the Lord’s portion is his people." As if the sense were, That the government of other nations was committed to so many tutelar angels, whereas Israel was under the immediate care and government of God himself. The opinion I have been hitherto explaining supposes the presiding angels here mentioned to have been good angels; from whence it is followed, that the occasion of their contention was because neither party was as yet acquainted with the divine will, to which they were already to submit (see this point largely treated of by Pseudo-Dionysius, Dogma. theolog. tom. iii. de Angelis, cap. 8).

But others suppose those princes or angels who opposed Michael and Gabriel to be evil spirits, such as are described by St. Paul under the names of the rulers of the darkness of this world, having their residence in the lower regions of the air (Eph. ii. 2, vi. 12). These evil spirits are sometimes represented as part of the heavenly host, both in respect to their original station, and because these are the instruments of providence, and have a command over the inferior world, as far as God thinks fit to permit (see 1 Kings xxii. 19, &c. Job i. 6, 12, &c.). They are likewise represented as accusers of good men before God, and as aggravating their faults, in order to have them delivered over to them, as the executioners of God’s judgments (see Job i. 11, ii. 5, Zech. iii. 1, Rev. xii. 10). If we follow this opinion, the contest here will be of the same nature with that of the angel and Satan. Zech. iii. 1, and with the dispute that Michael the archangel had with the devil "about the body of Moses," mentioned in St. Jude’s Epistle, ver. 9.

The prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days.] The Persians upon the solicitation of the Jews’ enemies, had put a stop to the building of the temple, all the time of Daniel’s humiliation (see the note upon ver. 2). And the tutelar genius of that empire still insisted that they might be kept under these hardships, while the angel Gabriel was doing them all the good offices he could. In like manner, Satan is represented as eagerly opposing the rebuilding the temple, and the restoration of the Jewish nation, Zech. iii. 1, 2.

But, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes.] Michael is styled an archangel by St. Jude, ver. 9, and "a great prince that stands up for the children of thy people," xii. 1 of this prophecy. Christ himself, as he is often represented under the character of an angel, so he is described under the name of Michael, Rev. xii. 7. But in this and the parallel texts of Daniel, the name rather denotes some principal angel,
CHAPTER XI.

14 Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days.

15 And when he had spoken such words unto me, I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.

16 And, behold, one like the similitude of the son of men touched my lips: then I opened my mouth, and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength.

17 For how can the servant of this my lord talk with this my lord? for as for me, straightway there remained no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me.

whom the Jews looked upon as the guardian angel of their nation (see ver. 21, and xii. 1).

And I remained there with the kings of Persia:] I still continued to oppose any motions the tutelary genii of Persia might make in prejudice of the Jews. The word king is equivalent in Hebrew to prince or governor (see vii. 17, Jer. xxy. 30, &c., 1 Kings xxii. 47).

Ver. 14.] Daniel was solicitous about the present state of his people (see ver. 2). The vision informs him, first, that the empire shall be translated from the Persians to the Greeks (xi. 2), and then what should be the condition of the Jews under Alexander’s successors, the kings of Syria and Egypt: one of which, viz. Antiochus Epiphanes, should be a figure of antichrist, who should disturb the state of the Christian church in the latter times of the world (see ver. 1, and compare xii. 4, 5).

Ver. 15.] I was perfectly astonished, and deprived of all sense (see ver. 16, 17, and compare viii. 18).

Ver. 16. One like—the sons of men] One that appeared in a human form, the same angel that touched me with his hand before (see ver. 10), restored my speech to me, which my fright and concern had quite deprived me of.

And said unto him that stood before me.] Compare viii. 15. This angel stood upon the earth near Daniel, not above the waters of the river, as the person did whose appearance was so glorious: ver. 5. O my lord, &c.] See ver. 8.

Ver. 17. How can the servant of this my lord talk with this my lord?] How can thy servant, a poor mortal man, maintain a discourse with a person of your rank and dignity (see Noldius, p. 359)? The words may be translated thus, “How can the servant of this my lord, talk with that my lord?” i.e. with the other person that first appeared to me with so majestic a presence; at whose sight I was perfectly confounded (ver. 5, 9); the pronoun ech, when it is doubled, often signifies two distinct persons or things (see Exod. xiv. 20, Eccles. vi. 3, vii. 14, 18, Isa. vi. 3).

18 Then there came again and touched me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthen ed me.

19 And said, O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee, he be strong, yea, he be strong. And when he had spoken unto me, I was strengthened, and said, Let my lord speak; for thou hast strengthened me.

20 Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I came unto thee? and now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come.

21 But I will shew thee that which is noted in the scripture of truth: and there is none that holdeth with me in these things, but Michael your prince.

Ver. 19. O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee.] Thou needest not be under such terrible apprehensions, as if this vision did portend thee some mischief (see Jug. vii. 22, xiii. 20); for it is a peculiar token of God’s favour to thee (see ver. 11).

Ver. 20. Knowest thou wherefore I came unto thee?] viz. “To make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days" (ver. 14).

Now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia.] Or, “I shall again fight,” or contend, “with the prince of Persia;” in which sense the verb shub, return, is often used (see ix. 25).

When I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come.] When I am gone forth from the divine presence the tutelar angel of the Grecian empire will appear in the court of heaven, and offer his reasons for translating the empire from the Persians to the Greeks, that the Jews may enjoy the benefits of their dominion; as a government that will be more favourable to them than the Persian emperors were. Alexander and some of his successors bestowed many favours upon the Jews, as may be seen in Josephus’s Antiq. lib. xi. cap. ult. lib. xii. cap. 2, 3.

Ver. 21. I will shew thee that which is noted in the scripture of truth:] Or, “In the writing of truth:” i.e. what is certain and irrevocable. God’s decrees are spoken of as if they were committed to writing, and registered in a book (see Deut. xxxxi. 34, Ps. liv. 8, Isa. lxv. 6, Mal. iii. 16).

There is none that holdeth with me in these things, but Michael your prince.] None of the guardian or tutelary angels, who have the care and presidency of other nations committed to them, join with me in defending the cause of the Jewish nation, but Michael your prince and protector (see xii. 1). St. Jerome, in his Commentary upon the thirteenth verse, supposes the prince of Persia to oppose the Jews upon account of their sins, which reason may be applied to other guardian angels or ministering spirits.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Also I in the first year of Darius the Mede, even I stood to confirm and to strengthen him.

CHAP. XI.

See the Argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 1. This verse should have been joined to the last chapter: the angel adds, that as he now joins with Michael in defending the cause of the 2 And now will I shew thee the truth. Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Per-

Jewish nation: so, at the time of the overthrow of the Babylonish empire, he assisted Michael in advancing Darius to the succession, which was the occasion of restoring the Jewish captivity. The word him may relate either to Michael or Darius, and the sense, taking it either way, is much the same.
DANIEL.

The word translated `plucked up,' is the same as `rooted up, or destroyed,' and is opposed to `planting,' or making to thrive; Jer. i. 10, xxiv. 6, xxxi. 28, or the phrase may allude to the feathers of a bird being plucked and scattered abroad (compare vii. 4).

Ver. 5. The king of the south.] By the "king of the south" in this and the following verses, is meant the king of Egypt; and by the "king of the north," the king of Assyria. These two kings came at length to have the principal share of Alexander's dominions, and make the greatest figure among his successors. But the reason why they are only mentioned here is because they only were concerned in the affairs of the Jews; Judea bordering upon each of their dominions, and sometimes belonging to one, and sometimes to the other of those princes. The "king of the south," mentioned in this verse, denotes Ptolemy the first, the son of Lagus, called, by way of distinction, Ptolemy Soter. The text saith of him, that he should be strong; for he had all Egypt and the adjacent parts of Lydia under his dominion, besides Palestine, Cilico-Syria, and most of the maritime provinces of the lesser Asia.

One of his princes; and even he shall be strong above him.] Another of the successors of Alexander, who took upon them the style of kings, or princes (see note on ver. 4). This was Seleucus Nicator, the first king of the north, or of Syria; who, by the conquest of Lygimachus king of Thrace, and Demetrius king of Macedon, obtained the name of Nicator, i.e. conqueror.

His dominion shall be a great dominion.] He had under his dominion all the countries of the east, from Mount Taurus to the river Indus: and from thence westward to the Egean sea; whereupon Appianus the historian reckons him the most potent of all Alexander's successors.

Ver. 6. In the end of years they shall join themselves together.] In process of time the successors of these two kings, viz. Ptolemy Philadephus, the son of the former Ptolemy, and Antiochus Theus, the grandson of Seleucus Nicator, shall enter into a league or confederacy with each other.

For the king's daughter of the south!] This league shall be concluded by the marriage of Berenice, daughter to Ptolemy Philadephus, with Antiochus Theus king of Syria. Although he had another wife, Laodice, and two children by her, Seleucus Callinicus and Antiochus.

She shall not retain the power of the arm.] She shall not be able to keep her power or interest with Antiochus; for as soon as her father Ptolemy was dead, Antiochus divorced her, and recalled his former wife Laodice and her children.

Neither shall he stand, nor his arm.] Nor shall Antiochus himself long survive, for Laodice, being jealous of his fickle temper, procured him to be poisoned, and concealed his death till her son Seleucus had secured the succession.

She shall be given up, and they that brought her.] Berenice, after she had shut herself up in the asylum and fourtieth shall be far richer than they all: and by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia.

3 And a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will.

4 And when he shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled:

Ver. 2. Will I show thee the truth.] What is contained in the scripture," or writing of truth," x. 21. Or, I will show thee the succession of the Persian and Grecian empire in plain and naked truth, not in symbolical or figurative representations, as it was shown before, ch. viii.

There shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; after Cyrus, shall succeed Cambyses, Smerdis, and Darius Hystaspes.

So Ezra mentions two kings, whom he calls Ahaseurus and Artaxerxes (names which were common to most of the Persian kings in the Jewish history), who reigned between Cyrus and Darius Hystaspes (Ezra iv. 6). The fourth shall be far richer than they all:] This plainly meaneth Xerxes, who brought together an army of above four millions, according to Herodotus's account: of eight millions, as others say, to over-run the whole country of Greece.

These wars, carried on by Xerxes's successors, ended at last in the conquest of the Persian monarchy by Alexander the Great. Upon this account the angel passes over the rest of the Persian kings; and proceeds immediately to relate the successes of Alexander: it being the chief design of the former part of this vision to foretell the translation of the empire from the Persians to the Greeks (see x. 20). St. Jerome rightly observes upon the fifth verse of this chapter, "That it was not the design of the scripture to give us a historical narrative of the actions of heathen princes any farther than the affairs of the Jewish nation were concerned in them." In like manner, at the thirty-sixth verse, the angel breaks off the succession of the Syrian kings after Antiochus, to describe antichrist, of whom the former was the type and forerunner. [So viii. 9, the prophet passes over all the successors of Alexander to Antiochus Epiphanes, whose reign had a particular influence upon the Jewish affairs.]

Ver. 3.] Compare ver. 16. This denotes Alexander the Great, whose success was so uninterrupted, that nobody was able to put a stop to the progress of his victories (see viii. 5).

Ver. 4. When he shall stand up.] When he shall be in the height of his prosperity.

His kingdom shall be broken:] See vii. 8.

Not to his posterity.] Alexander had a brother, Arrhidæus, and a sister and Merope; these were all cut off in a few years after his death, to make way for his generals, who divided his empire among themselves.

Nor according to his dominion which he ruled:] They did not immediately take upon them the title of kings (see Dr. Prideaux, ad an. A. C. 301); and his dominion being divided, lost much of that strength and power which the empire had when it was united in the person of Alexander (see viii. 22).

His kingdom shall be plucked up.] Alexander's four great successors were Ptolemy, Cassander, Lysimachus, and Seleucus (see the note upon viii. 8); but others beside them came in for a share of his dominions, such as Eumenes, Philotas, and others. For his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others besides those.
power of the arm; neither shall he stand, nor his arm: but she shall be given up, and they that brought her, and he that begat her, and he that strengthened her in these times.

7 But out of a branch of her roots shall one stand up in his estate, which shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortress of the king of the north, and shall deal against them, and shall prevail:

8 And shall also carry captives into Egypt their gods, with their princes, and with their precious vessels of silver and of gold; and he shall continue more years than the king of the north.

9 So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land.

10 But his sons shall be stirred up, and shall assemble a multitude of great forces: and one shall certainly come, and overflow, and pass through: then shall he return, and be stirred up, even to his fortress.

11 And the king of the south shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north: and he shall set forth a great multitude; but the multitude shall be given into his hand.

12 And when he hath taken away the multitude, his heart shall be lifted up: and he shall cast down many ten thousands: but he shall not be strengthened by it.

13 For the king of the north shall return, and Euergetes' death, and the succession of his son Ptolemy Philopator, a weak and profligate prince: under whose reign he attempted the recovery of Syria. We may observe the text here speaks only of a single person, viz. Antiochus, for his brother Seleucus died in the beginning of this enterprise, having scarce reigned three years. The devastations of an army are fitly compared to inundations (see ver. 22, 40, and ix. 29).

Then shall be return, and be stirred up, even to his fortress, being enraged at the attempts of Antiochus, shall come with a great army to encounter him.

He shall set forth a great multitude: if we understand the words of Ptolemy's army, that consisted of seventy thousand foot, five thousand horse, and seventy-three elephants: Antiochus' was little inferior to his, for he had sixty-two thousand foot, six thousand horse, and sixty-two elephants.

The army of Antiochus was discomfited by Ptolemy, ten thousand being slain, and four thousand taken prisoners. The author of the third book of Maccabees ascribes this victory to the passionate importunity of Arsinoe. Ptolemy's sister, who ran about the army with her hair about her shoulders, and by promises and entreaties engaged the soldiers to fight with more than ordinary resolution.

Ver. 12. His heart shall be lifted up.] So far as to offer to force his passage into the holiest part of the Jewish temple, when he came to Jerusalem to offer sacrifices there, after his victory: the story is related at large in the forementioned third book of the Maccabees, ch. 1.

And he shall cast down many ten thousands: but he shall not be strengthened by it.] Or, "Though he shall cast down—he shall not be strengthened by it."

He shall content himself with recovering the provinces of Caro-Syria and Palestine, and make no further advantages of his victory; being willing to agree to a peace, that he might securely follow his pleasures (see Dr. Prideaux, par. ii. ad ann. A. C. 217).

Ver. 13. For the king of the north—shall certainly come after certain years with a great army.] Fourteen years after the ending of the former war, upon the death of Philopator, and the succeeding of his infant son Ptolemy Euphrates, Antiochus the king of the north shall return into Caro-Syria and Palestine for shall set forth a multitude greater than the former, and shall certainly come after certain years with a great army and with much riches.

14 And in those times there shall stand up against the king of the south: also the robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves to establish the vision; but they shall fall.

15 So the king of the north shall come, and cast up a mount, and take the most fenced cities; and the arms of the south shall not withstand, neither his chosen people, neither shall there be any strength to withstand.

16 But he that cometh against him shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him: and he shall stand in the glorious land, which by his hand shall be consumed.

17 He shall also set his face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom, and upright ones with him; thus shall he do: and he shall give him the daughter of women, corrupting her: but she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him.

18 After this shall he turn his face unto the islands, and shall take many: but a prince for his own behalf shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease; without his own reproach he shall cause it to turn upon him.

Ver. 16. He that cometh against him shall do according to his own will.] Nobody being able to oppose him in Cæsio-Syria or Palæstine (compare viii. 4, 7, and ver. 36 of this chapter).

He shall stand in the glorious land, which by his hand shall be consumed. [He shall make himself master of Judea (see note upon viii. 9), which shall be consumed by the foraging and plundering of his soldiers: Jerusalem itself receiving great damages during the siege, the garrison which Scopas left there: as appears by Antiquias's decree for repairing the ruins of the city, in Josephus, ubi supra. In the contests between the kings of Syria and Egypt, Judea lying in the middle between them, whoever were conquerors, that country was sure to suffer: Josephus compares its condition to that of a ship in a storm, which is beaten by the waves on both sides (Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 9, 4, 5). The Greek interpreter renders the former part of the sentence, "And he shall stand in the land of Sabi:"

Thus shall he do.] Or, "He shall succeed," as the word is taken, ver. 28, 32. He shall succeed in this his proposal.

Give him the daughter of women, corrupting her.] In making this proposal of marriage, his intent was that she should betray her husband to him, and by that means become master of Egypt. She is called "the daughter of women," xxi. 157, by way of excellence, either upon the account of her quality, or else because of her great beauty.

But she shall not stand on his side.] When she was married to Ptolemy, she forsook the interest of her father, and embraced that of her husband: and we find her joining with him in an embassy to the Romans, to congratulate the victory they had obtained over her own father, as Dr. Prideaux observes out of Livy, lib. xxxvii. (see Script. Connex. par. ii. ad ann. C. 187).

Ver. 18. After this shall he turn his face unto the isles, and shall take many.] Antiochus shall set out a great fleet for reducing the lesser Asia, which sailing along the coasts of Cilicia, Pamphylia, Lyibia, and Cariæ, took a great many of the maritime cities of the recovery of those provinces, and shall bring with him a greater army than he had in the former war, the same which he brought out of the east, at his late return from thence.

After certain years] The Hebrew reads, "At the end of times, even years:" which expression confirms the interpretation given before of the word times in this prophecy (see the note on lv. 10).

With an abundant supply of all necessary provisions for an army; and especially, with beasts of burden for removing their baggage: for that is the proper sense of the word recus.

Ver. 14. In those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south.] Antiochus, king of Syria, and Philip, king of Macedon, entered into a league, to divide the dominions of Ptolemy Epiphanes, king of Egypt, being then an infant of six years of age. Agathocles, his father's comrade, and her brother Agathocles, who managed everything under Ptolemy Philopator, were framing projects to keep the regency in their own hands during the minority of this prince. And Scopas, one of his generals, some time afterward formed a design of usurping the sovereignty over Egypt.

The robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves to establish the vision; but they shall fall.] The apostates from the Jewish law shall exalt themselves under the favour of the king of Egypt and his ministers, to accomplish what is said in the writings of the prophets concerning the persecutions that should befall God's people, and the punishments that should at length overtake those that forsake the truth. These apostates according as they did fall, and were cut off by Antiochus, as also Epiphanes, who was at the rise of Epiphanes's reign, Antiochus made himself master of Jerusalem, and cut off or drove from thence all those Jews that were of Ptolemy's party, and bestowed particular favours upon those that persevered in the observance of the law. Josephus, Antiq. lib. xii. ch. iii. gives us a copy of Antiochus's decree in favour of their temple, and the service therein performed, and to secure it from being profaned.

Ver. 15. The king of the north shall come, and take the most fenced cities.] Antiochus having vanquished the king of Egypt's army under Scopas at Panaces, near the fountain-head of the river Jordan, he besieged and took first Zidon and Gaza, then all the other cities of that district, viz. Abilo, Samaria, and Gadra: and afterward became master of the whole country. The word sollicitus, translated, a mountain, does likewise signify battering-engines for throwing stones, and such-like offensive artillery (see 2 Kings xix. 32; Jer. xxxii. 34; xxxiii. 4).

The arms of the south shall not withstand, neither his chosen people.] Neither the king of Egypt's best generals, such as Scopas and others that came to relieve him, nor his choicest troops, shall prevail or be able to withstand Antiochus.
19 Then he shall turn his face toward the fort of his own land: but he shall stumble and fall, and not be found.

20 Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes in the glory of the kingdom; but within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle.

21 And in his estate shall stand up a vile person, to whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom: but he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries.

These provinces, and the islands adjoining. All countries lying upon the sea-coasts are called islands, in the Hebrew dialect, as hath been observed in the notes upon Isa. xi. 11.

But a prince for his own behalf shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease, &c.] Or, "But a prince shall cause to cease his [i.e. Antiochus'] reproach against him: moreover, he shall cause his reproach to return upon him" (compare Hos. xii. 14).

The particle bilt, translated without, signifies likewise moreover (see Niddius, p. 202). Lucius Scipio, the Roman consul, made the reproach which Antiochus had offered to the Romans by that invasion, to return upon his own head, by overthrowing him in battle at Mount Syrus, and forcing him to quit all the conquests he had made in the lesser Asia. From this great victory, whereby Asia was delivered out of the hands of Antiochus, this Scipio had the surname of Asiaticus: this action is at large related by Livy, in the thirty-seventh book of his history.

Ver. 19. If he shall turn his face toward the fort of his own land: but he shall stumble After this great defeat, Antiochus returned back to Antioch, the chief seat and fortress of his kingdom. From whence going into the eastern provinces, to raise the money he was by agreement to pay the Romans, and attempting to rob the temple at Elymas, for that purpose, he was slain there, and never returned again into Syria.

And not be found.] An expression, denoting utter destruction (see Job xx. 8, Ps. xxxvii. 36, Ezek. xxvi. 21).

Ver. 20. Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes in the glory of the kingdom:] Seleucus Philopator, the son of Antiochus, shall succeed in the kingdom of Syria (compare ver. 4). His father by the treaty of peace was obliged to pay a thousand talents for twelve years together to the Romans; and it was the main business of his son's reign to raise this money upon his subjects. His necessities put him upon offering to seize the treasures which were laid up in the temple at Jerusalem; for which attempt his treasurer Heliodorus, was miraculously punished, as the story is told at large, 2 Macc. iii. 4, &c.

Within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle.] Dr. Prideaux, par. ii. Script. Connex. at the end of the second book, translates this sentence, "Within few years he shall be destroyed:" the word yamin, days, often signifying years: which seems suite better with the event here foretold. For Seleucus reigned but eleven years, which may properly be called a few, in comparison of the thirty-seven years of his father's reign: and he came to his end neither by war abroad, nor by a sedition at home, but was poisoned by Heliodorus his treasurer, who designed to usurp the kingdom to himself, as Apian relates it.

Ver. 21. In his estate [or place] shall stand up a vile person.] This is a description of Antiochus Epiphanes, the great persecutor of the Jewish nation and religion. He is called here a vile person, not for any want of wit or parts, but for the extravagance of his life and actions, which made many doubt whether he had more of the fool or the madman in him: so, instead of Epiphanes, the Illustrious, they called him Epiphanes, the Madman (see the Fragments of the twenty-sixth book of Polybius, p. 1492, of the Leyden edition).

To whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom: The right of succession did belong to Demetrius, the son of Seleucus Philopator, and nephew to Antiochus: but he being sent a hostage to Rome by his father, Antiochus took advantage of his absence, and by uniting Eumenes king of Pergamus, and Attalus his brother, with flattering speeches and great promises of friendship and assistance against the Romans, prevailed with them to stand by him against the usurper Heliodorus, and so came peaceably into the possession of the kingdom.

Ver. 22. With the arms of a flood shall they be overflowed:] Compare ver. 10. Antiochus, by the assistance of Eumenes and Attalus, shall vanquish all the forces that opposed his pretensions, both those raised by the usurper Heliodorus, and those which Cleopatra, mother to Ptolemy Philometer, had got together to assist her son's right, as being nephew to the deceased king Seleucus.

The prince of the covenant:] Onias the high-priest, as several interpret it, whom they suppose to be meant by the prince of the host, viii. 11, where the prophet speaks of the persecution of the Jews, of which the same Antiochus was the author. This Onias was deposed and banished by him, and afterward murdered by one of his lieutenants (2 Mac. iv. 10, 24). But the following verses incline me to think, that Ptolemy Philometer is meant here, for he it is with whom the league there mentioned is made: and he was the principal person that opposed Antiochus chiefly in his pretension to Coelo-Syria and Palestine: in whose name a war was carried on against Antiochus, the success of which is foretold in the following verses.

Ver. 23. After the league made with him he shall work deceitfully:] This league was made between Ptolemy Philometer and Antiochus, in the lifetime of Cleopatra his sister, and mother of Ptolemy. But when the king of Egypt's ministers demanded the restitution of Coelo-Syria and Palestine, as belonging to the king of Egypt, by virtue of the marriage-articles between Ptolemy Epiphanes and Cleopatra, Antiochus, without any regard to the league he had made with Philometer his nephew, marched his army towards the frontiers of Egypt, and having obtained a victory over the Egyptians, he put a battle fought between mount Casius and Pelusium, the next year made himself master of the greatest part of Egypt, Philometer himself falling into his hands: whom he pretended to take care of as his nephew, and to man age his affairs as his tutor and guardian. But this belongs to his second expedition, mentioned ver. 25.

Shall become strong with a small force:] As the sees then were but small, as St. Jerome observes out of Sutorius, a historian extant in his time: at least from the strong-holds, even for a time. 25 And he shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the south with a great army; and the king of the south shall be stirred up to battle with a very great and mighty army; but he shall not stand: for they shall forecast devices against him. 26 Yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him, and his army shall overflow: and many shall fall down slain. 27 And both these kings' hearts shall be to do mischief, and they shall speak lies at one table; in comparison of those he brought with him in his second expedition (see the note upon ver. 29). Ver. 24. He shall enter peaceably even upon the fat- ted places.] By his clemency towards the Egyptians, and civil treatment of Philometor, he shall succeed in his attempts upon Egypt, beyond all his predecessors, the former kings of Syria: viz. Antiochus Theron, Seleucus Callinicus, and Antiochus surnamed the Great, whose actions are specified in the foregoing part of the chapter: all these had a design of getting Egypt into their hands, but none of them ever succeeded so far in their designs: he, in those rich and miserable plundered the whole country, and divided the riches of it among his followers (see 1 Macc. i. 19, 81. Jerome in his notes upon the place, and Athenaeus, Deipnosophist. lib. v. and x.). Epiphanes was in himself of a profuse and prodigal temper, as the author of the first book of Maccabees, ii. 30, and several other historians agree in giving his character, from whence he gained the name of Munificent and Liber- al, as Josephus informs us, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 11. He shall forecast his devices against the strong-holds.] He shall not only seize upon the richest parts of Egypt, but shall likewise make himself master of the chief places of strength in that country, keeping Pelusium in his hands, which was the key of Egypt, and laying siege unto Alexandria. Even for a time.] See ver. 29. Ver. 25.] The preparations here described belong to Antiochus's second expedition into Egypt, as the author of the second book of Maccabees rightly calls it, v. 1, when he invaded that country with great forces both by sea and land, as that expedition is described, 1 Macc. i. 17, 18, where the historian adds, that "Ptol- eleny fled from him, and many of his army were wounded to death; thus they got the strong cities in the land of Egypt, and he took the spoils thereof." After which victory Ptolemy Philometor surrendered himself into Antiochus's hands, as was observed before: whereupon the Alexandrians set up his brother upon the throne, whom they surnamed Euergetes. Ibid. and ver. 26. But he shall not stand:—they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him.] The ill success of Philometor's expedition was chiefly owing to the maladministration of Lænus, Eulens, and other ministers and officers employed under him, and to the treachery of Ptolemy Macrow, who forsook Philometor's interest, and went over to Antiochus. His army shall overflow.] The arms of Antiochus shall overrun the whole kingdom of Egypt, like a sudden inundation (see ver. 10, 28). Ver. 27. Both these kings' hearts shall be to do mis- chief.] These two kings shall meet at Memphis, and frequently eat at the same table as friends; Antiochus pretending to take care of the interests of his nephew Philometor, especially after the Alexandrians had proclaimed his brother Euergetes king: and Philometor seemingly confiding in his uncle's protection, but it shall not prosper: for yet the end shall be at the time appointed. 28 Then shall he return into his land with great riches; and his heart shall be against the holy co- venant; and he shall do exploits, and return to his own land. 29 At the time appointed he shall return, and come toward the south: but it shall not be as the former, or as the latter. 30 ¶ For the ships of Chittim shall come against him: therefore shall he be grieved, and return, and have indignation against the holy covenant: so shall he do; he shall even return, but herein they both designed to impose upon each other; Antiochus's design being to seize the kingdom of Egypt to himself, and Philometor's to disappoint those designs of his, by coming to an agreement with Euergetes and the Alexandrians. So this pre- tended friendship broke out into open war, wherein Antiochus subdued all the country as far as Memphis, and marched to Alexandria to besiege that city. For yet the end shall be at the time appointed.] These wars and calamities are not yet come to an end, but shall be determined at the time of God's appointment (see ver. 29, 35, 36, viii. 19). Ver. 29. Then shall he return into his land with great riches.] Having taken the spoils of Egypt, 1 Macc. i. 19 (see the note upon ver. 24). This return of Antiochus into his own dominions, is the same which is again mentioned at the end of the verse: so the sense might be more clearly expressed thus: "Then shall he return into his land with great riches, having had his heart stirred up against the holy covenant, and having finished his designs, he shall even return into his own land." His heart shall be against the holy covenant.] While Antiochus was in Egypt, a false report was spread over Judea that he was dead, whereupon Jason with his party made himself master of Jerusalem, in order to regain the office of high-priest, from which he had been turned out by the hand of his brother Menelaus. Upon this, Antiochus, supposing the whole nation had revolted from him, marched with all haste out of Egypt into Judea to quell this rebellion : and taking Jerusalem by force of arms, he slew forty thousand of the inhabitants in three day's time, profaned the temple, and took away all its ornaments and treasures (see 1 Macc. i. 20, 23, 2 Macc. ii. 24, v. 11, 20). He shall do exploits, and return to his own land.] Or, having finished his designs, he shall return, &c. (see the last note but one, and compare ver. 30, 82, viii. 12). After having satisfied his revenge upon the Jews, he shall return to Antioch, the chief seat of his empire, with the spoils of the temple at Jeru- salem (besides those of Egypt, amounting to eighteen hundred talents (2 Macc. v. 24). Ver. 30.] Antiochus shall make a third expedition into Egypt, in order to reduce Alexandria: but this attempt shall not be attended with the same success as the two former, for the reason mentioned in the next verse. Ver 30. For the ships of Chittim shall come against him: therefore he shall be grieved, and return.] The embas- sadors Popilius Lænus and his companions, coming in ships (see ver. 30) Antiochus of Macedon and Greece, shall come to him, bringing peremptory demands from the Romans, that he should desist from making war against Egypt, otherwise they would denounce war against him. This message will make him, to his great grief, return out of Egypt, and quit his designs upon that country. The isles of Chittim," Jer. ii. 10, Ezek.
and have intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant.

31 And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate.

32 And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall be corrupt by flatteries: but the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits.

33 And they that understand among the people shall instruct many: yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days.

34 Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help: but many shall cleave to them with flatteries.

35 And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed.

36 And the king shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things.

xxvii. 6, signify the coasts of the Mediterranean sea, so as to comprehend both Italy and Greece.

And have indignation against the holy covenant.] Being enraged at this disappointment, he shall vent his fury and indignation against the Jewish church and nation; and send Apollonius with an army of seventy-two thousand men to lay Jerusalem waste, and cause the temple worship to cease there: this happened two years after the taking of Jerusalem by Antiochus (compare 1 Macc. i. 29, 40, with 2 Macc. v. 24—26).

So shall he do [or, shall prosper in his undertakings; see ver. 32]: he shall even return.] At his return, as in Ps. cxviii. 6, Ezek. xxiv. 25, the temple is called the "sanctuary of strength," because it was a token of the divine protection, being the place of God's especial residence (see Ps. xxxviii. 6, xxvi. 21, 29).

They shall place the abomination that maketh desolate.] Idols are commonly called abominations in scripture, as hath been observed upon ix. 27. In agreement with that usage of the word, "the abomination of desolation" must signify the idol which was placed upon the altar of burnt-offerings (see 1 Macc. i. 54, 59). As the temple itself was dedicated by the heathen to Jupiter Olympus, 2 Macc. vi. 2, so the idol was probably the image of Jupiter. This idol is said to make desolate, because it banished the true worship of God and his worshippers from the place (see 1 Macc. iv. 38).

Such as do wickedly against the covenant shall be corrupt by flatteries.] Such as Jason and Menelaus, who had bought the high-priesthood of him, and became his instruments in spelling and profaning the sanctuary of strength, and such other apostates whom the king by fair words and promises brought over to comply with his designs (see 1 Macc. i. 52, 2 Macc. vi. 21).

But the people that do know their God shall—do exploits.] Or, shall prosper (see ver. 28, 30). They that have a sense of their duty shall courageously resist these apostates, and behave themselves valiantly (see 1 Macc. i. 62, ii. 41—43, iii. 43, &c. 2 Macc. v. 27).

They that understand among the people shall instruct many.] They that know their duty, and are zealous in doing it, will arm others against the temptations whereby the wicked would persuade them to forsake the true religion. Such were Matthanias and his family, 1 Macc. ii. 1, &c. Eleazar, 2 Macc. vi. 19, 19, and the mother and her seven children, 2 Macc. vii.

Yet they shall fall by the sword.] It was death for any person to observe the law, and disobey the king's command: and accordingly many suffered for their constancy in adhering to their religion (see 1 Macc. i. 50, 62, 2 Macc. vi. 9—11, 19, 30, vii. 1, &c.).

By flame, &c.] This was remarkably verified in the torments inflicted upon the seven brethren recorded 2 Macc. viii. 3, 5. Burning alive was a punishment usual in those countries (see iii. 6).

By captivity, and by spoil.] By banishment and loss of goods.

Many days.] For three years and a half, as the time is computed by Josephus, reckoning from the first beginning of the persecution till the sanctuary was cleansed (see the note upon vii. 25). The persecution may be enlarged to a longer time, if we date it from the beginning of this apostasy (see the note upon viii. 14).

Many shall cleave to them with flatteries.] Not sincerely: such were Joseph and Azarias, who engaged in the common cause out of ambition, and a desire of fame (1 Macc. v. 56, 62): such were they who, after their death were found with idols consecrated under their clothes, 2 Macc. xii. 40. Such was Rhodocus, who disclosed their secrets to the enemy, ibid. xiii. 21.

Some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, &c.] Some of the principal men for piety and knowledge shall fall under this persecution (see ver. 50), for the trial of their faith and patience, and to purge them from lesser corruptions, which are the usual effects of prosperity (compare 1 Pet. i. 7). The persecutions which shall befall the church under anticrist, are designed for the same purpose, as appears by comparing xii. 10, with the words here: Antichus's persecution being a type and figure of that under anticrist (see the note upon vii. 14, 24, and the thirty-first verse here, with xii. 11).

It is set for a time appointed.] Till the time appointed by God for an end of those calamities shall come (compare ver. 27, viii. 19). Mr. Mede refers the latter part of the sentence to the following verse, and so connects the following prophecy with what went before, to this sense: "This persecution shall last to the time of the end: for as yet for a time appointed a king shall do corruptions, which are to the usual effects of prosperity. (see his works, p. 909). [To the same sense the Vulgar Latin translates it, Qnia adhuc ulium tempus crit.] Antichus was a type and forerunner of anticrist, as hath been observed; so the angel makes a sudden transition from the type to the antitype, or the description of anticrist himself: the words in the against the God of gods, and shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished: for that that is detamed shall be done.
37 Neither shall he regard the God of his fa-ters, nor the desire of women, nor regard any god: for he shall magnify himself above all.
38 But in his estate shall he honour the God of forces: and a god whom his fathers knew not shall he honour with gold, and silver, and with precious stones, and pleasant things.
39 Thus shall he do in the most strong-holds with a strange god, whom he shall acknowledge and increase with glory: and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the land for gain.
40 And at the time of the end shall the king

"Even together with the god whom his fathers knew not (see ver. 37), shall be honour [them] with gold and silver," &c. i. e. with the most costly ornaments.

Pleasing things: The Hebrew word nammudah, is used by the prophet Isaiah (xliv. 9), to signify the costly ornaments wherewith the heathens decked their images.

Grotius and some others explain this verse of Antichus's setting up the statue of Jupiter Olympos within the precincts of the temple (1 Macc. i. 54, 2 Macc. vi. 1). But I do not apprehend how he can be called a god whom Antichus's father knew not," since he was worshipped under the name of Baal by the Phoenicians many ages before.

Ver. 39. Thus shall he do in the most strong-holds with a strange god;" According to Mr. Mede, the words should be thus translated: "And he shall make the strong-holds [or fortresses] of the Mau-zims jointly with [or to] the strange [or foreign] god": i.e. He shall consent to be, isto the unknown and strange God:" whom St. Paul tells them, "they ignorantly worshipped," as not knowing him to be the one supreme God.

And shall divide the land for gain.) Or, "Distribute the earth for a reward:" i.e. he shall assign whole provinces and kingdoms to the protection of several saints and angels, to whom they may have recourse as their patrons: and shall give them suitable titles and honours, as a reward of their care and protection.

Ver. 40. At the time of the end) At God's apointed time (see ver. 35); or, in the latter days (see xii. 8).

The king of the south—and the king of the north shall come against him) They that understand this and the following verses of Antiochus Epiphanes and Polonius Philometor, suppose that the angel reckons what he said before at large, from ver.
23. It is certain these and the following words cannot be explained of any further wars between the kings of Egypt and Syria; for Antiochus never made any further attempt upon Egypt, after that peremptory demand of the Roman ambassador, requiring him to desist from that enterprise, mentioned ver. 30. Whereupon venting all his indignation against the Jews upon that disappointment, he af-afterward took a journey into Persia, where he died (1 Macc. vi. 1, 6, 2 Macc. ix. 1, 28).

These difficulties attending the common interpretaof the south push at him: and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over.

41 He shall enter also into the glorious land, and many countries shall be overthrown: but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon.

42 He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries: and the land of Egypt shall not escape.

43 But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps.

44 But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many.

45 And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain: yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him.

Ethiopians, being joined with Libyans or Africans, as they are in some other places (see 2 Chron. xii. 3, xvi. 8, and the note upon Jer. xiii. 23. St. Jerome observes upon the place, that it is not recorded of Antiochus Epiphanes, that he ever marched so far as into these countries, or had any footing there. So Mr. Mede more probably expounds the place of the Turks, who have extended their dominions into these parts of the world.

Ver. 44.] This Dr. Prideaux explains of Antiochus thus: That in the east, i. e. in Persia, his taxes were not duly paid, which engaged him to take a journey into Persia, to gather up the arrears due to him there: and in the north Artaxias, king of Armenia, had revolted from him. They that understand the words of later times, suppose them not yet fulfilled, and so not capable of a certain interpretation.

Ver. 45. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain.] If we apply the words to Antiochus, the sense will be, that he shall place the ensigns of his sovereignty as a conqueror at Jerusalem (compare ver. 41, and Ps. xlviii. 2): which city was placed upon a mountainous situation, between the Mediterranean sea and the sea of Sodom, near the middle of Judea, which had those two seas for its boundaries (see Joel ii. 20, Zech. xiv. 8). To "plant the tabernacle of his palace" or pavilion at Jerusalem, is an expression denoting an entire conquest, and is applied to Nebuchadnezzar in that sense, Jer. xxiii. 10, where the Hebrew word shapharir, translated pavilion, is expounded in the Chaldee paraphrase by apadon, the word used in the text here. The holy mountain oftentimes denotes the Christian church in the prophetical writings (see the note upon Isa. ii. 2): and if we apply this text to antichrist, we may compare it with the boasts of that proud prince, who is supposed to be the figure of antichrist, Isa. xiv. 13, where he saith, "I will sit in the midst of the congregation, in the sides of the north:"

and we may explain both these texts by those words of St. Paul, who describes antichrist as "sitting in the temple of God," 2 Thess. ii. 4, meaning the Christian church, as that phrase commonly signifies in St. Paul's writings (see 1 Cor. iii. 16, 2 Cor. vi. 16, Eph. ii. 20, 1 Tim. iii. 15).

Yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him.] He "shall be broken without hand;" i. e. by a judgment immediately inflicted by God, as is said of Antiochus, viii. 25. The like judgment is denounced against antichrist, 2 Thess. ii. 8.
1 And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book.

2 And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.

CHAPTER XII.

ARGUMENT.—See the Argument of the tenth chapter.

Ver. 1. At that time shall Michael stand up.] See x. 13, 21. He, as the protector of the Jewish nation, "contended with the devil about the body of Moses," as St. Jude informs us from some ancient writing or tradition, Jude, ver. 9. He is probably that archangel who shall make that awful summons to the day of judgment, mentioned i Thess. iv. 16, and as several angels will be employed "in gathering together God's elect," Matt. xxiv. 31, so we may collect from this place of Daniel, that it will be his province to assemble those of the Jewish nation.

There shall be a time of trouble.] The scriptures speak of the extraordinary appearance of God's kingdom, as ushered in by great tribulations (see Isa. xxvi. 30, 21, Jer. xxx. 7, Matt. xxiv. 21): so the saints are said to have "come out of great tribulation," Rev. vi. 14. This some learned men suppose to relate to the times of the last rival, Rev. xvi. 18, when "there was a great earthquake," saith the text, "such as was not since men were upon the earth."

Every one that shall be found written in the book.] That is, in the book of life (compare Exod. xxxii. 32, Ps. lxxix. 28, Ezek. xiii. 9, Phil. iv. 3, Rev. iii. 5, ixii. 5, xx. 12). The phrase alludes to the registers that used to be kept of the members of any city or corporation; the privileges of which society none can lay a claim to but those whose names are found in such registers.

Ver. 2. And many of them that sleep in the dust—shall awake.] A plain description of the general resurrection both of the just and unjust; the belief of which St. Paul speaks of, as grounded upon the writings of the law and the prophets, Acts xxiv. 15, 16, xxvi. 6—8, and there is no text so full to that purpose as this before us. The word many is sometimes equivalent to all, as hath been observed in the notes upon ix. 27.

Some to shame and everlasting contempt.] In this life men may so far harden themselves in sin as to be past shame; but this shame shall be doubled upon them in the world to come, when they shall be convicted of their sins in such a manner, as neither to be able to deny or excuse them; and shall thereupon be objects of scorn and contempt to God and all his saints. And "as a thief is ashamed when he is found," or taken in the very fact, "so shall the wicked be ashamed" and confounded at that time, as the prophet Jeremiah makes the comparison, Jer. vi. 36.

Ver. 3.] The words allude to xi. 33, 35, and import, that they who have been the great lights of the world, who have instructed others by their doctrine, and confirmed them in the truth by their sufferings and example, shall have an eminently glorious reward at the day of judgment. So the mar-of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river.

6 And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?

7 And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever that it shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, these things shall be finished.

of the river Hiddeskel, attending upon that supreme angel, or the Son of God, who appeared in that glorious form described x. 1, 5 (see the note upon x. 10).

Ver. 6. And one of them said to the man—which was upon the waters of the river.] Or rather, "above the waters of the river" (see note upon x. 5).

How long shall it be to the end?] So the inferior angel inquires of the superior concerning the accomplishment of the events foretold, viii. 13.

Ver. 7. I heard the man clothed in linen—when he held up his right hand and left hand unto heaven.] "Holding up the hand" was a ceremony anciently used in taking an oath (see Gen. xiv. 22, Deut. xxxii. 40). St. John plainly alludes to this place, Rev. v. 5, 6, and by the description he gives of the angel, that "he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot upon the earth," ver. 2, he can be no other than Christ, who had "all power given to him in heaven and in earth."

That it shall be for a time, times, and an half:] Or, "the dividing of time," as it is expressed in the Chaldee (vii. 25), which contains, in the literal sense, "three years and a half;" during which time the public sacrifices and worship were discontinued during the persecution of Antiochus, the figure of antichrist (see the note there). But this line of time is expressly applied to the antichristian persecution, Rev. xii. 14, and is farther explained in that chapter, ver. 6, by "twelve hundred and sixty days;" which is "three years and a half," reckoning "three hundred and sixty days" to a year (see note upon ix. 24). And if we suppose each day to signify a year, which, by the Chaldees, was the case of the word day, this period of time denotes twelve hundred and sixty years (see note upon viii. 14, ix. 24).

When he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, &c.] When the Jews' dispensations shall be ended, then the most remarkable events contained in this prophecy shall be fulfilled. The restoration of the Jewish nation is foretold by the prophets as one of those signal events to be brought to pass in the latter days, or times of the world (see Isa. xi. 11, xxvii. 12, 13, lxvi. 10, &c., Jer. iii. 18, xxiii. 5, 8, xxx. 3, &c., xxxii. 1, 1.4, Ezek. xx. 38, 41, xxxii. 25, xxxiv. 18, xxxvi. 24, &c., xxxvii. 12, &c., Hos. i. 11, iii. 5, Joel iii. 1, Amos ix. 14, 15, Obad. ver. 17, &c., Micah vii. 14, 15, Zeph. iii. 11, Zech. vii. 7, 13, x. 6, xii. 10, xiv. 8, &c.). Mr. Mede makes the text before us parallel with those words in Christ, Luke xxii. 24, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles, until the times of the gentiles shall be fulfilled:" i. e. till the times of the fourth monarch be expired (see his Works, p. 709, 744, 753).

Of the holy people.] See viii. 24.

Ver. 8. I heard, but I understood not.] I did not understand what time was allotted for bringing to pass this event, viz. the restoration of the Jewish nation.

What shall be the end of these things?] See ver. 6.

8 And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?

9 And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end.

10 Many shall be purifi¬ed, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand.

11 And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate.
maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.

12 Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days.

appoint thee till the finishing of all these wonderful events (ver. 4, 6, 8).

For thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.] The prophet was now ninety years of age at least (see note upon x. 1): so he could not expect to live much longer: and the angel here tells him, that after his life was ended, he should rest in peace with the souls of the righteous (compare Isa. lii. 2, Rev. xiv. 13), and at the resurrection, foretold ver. 2, of this chapter, he should obtain a share of that happiness which is reserved for the faithful servants of God, and shall be actually conferred upon them at the conclusion of the times here specified, ver. 12.

The righteous are said "to stand in the judgment of the last day" (Ps. i. 5), and to "have boldness in the day of judgment" (1 John ii. 28, iv. 17), whereas the wicked are described as "hiding themselves for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when the great day of his wrath is come (Isa. ii. 10, Rev. vi. 15—17).

The word lot signifies a state or condition of life, Jer. xiii. 25, and is often used for an inheritance, because the land of Canaan was divided by lot among the Israelites; as the promised land was a figure of that better and heavenly country, which all the good men among the Jews expected, so here it signifies that heavenly inheritance which belongs "to the heirs of salvation."

THE BOOK
OF THE PROPHET HOSEA.

A GENERAL PREFACE TO THE MINOR PROPHETS.

The twelve minor prophets were always comprised in one book, called the "book of the prophets," by St. Stephen, Acts vii. 42, and the "book of the twelve prophets," by St. Cyprian, Epist. 59. The son of Sinach speaks of them under one and the same character, Ecclus. xlix. 12, "Let the bones of the twelve prophets flourish out of their place." And both Jewish and Christian writers, particularly Josephus (lib. i. contr. App.) and St. Jerome (Prolog. Galent.), when they mention the canonical books of the Old Testament to be in number twenty-two (a number equal to the letters of the Jewish alphabet), comprehend the twelve minor prophets under one book.

These twelve prophets are not placed exactly in the order of time when they lived, either in the Hebrew or Greek copies: for Jonah, who was the eldest of them, is placed the sixth in order both in the Hebrew and Greek Bibles: there being in other respects some little difference between them: the series of them standing thus in the Greek—Hosea, Amos, Micah, Joel, Obadiah, Jonah; but no variation as to the rest.

Hosea, who is placed the first in order, is as ancient as any of them, except Jonah: having prophesied before the captivity of the ten tribes, to whom he chiefly directs his prophecy; and threatens them with a sudden destruction for their great and crying sins, which he, in all probability, lived to see brought upon them.

CHAPTER I.

The word of the Lord that came unto Hosea, the son of Beeri, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah,

CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—Under the figure of a wife living in whoredom, and bearing illegitimate children, is represented the great idolatry of the ten tribes, which provoked God to cast them off utterly; yet with the promise of repairing that loss, by bringing and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, king of Israel. If the beginning of the word of the Lord by ing in the gentiles into the church: and afterward of uniting Israel and Judah under one head, the Messias. The prophet does likewise foretell the extinction of Jehu's family.

Ver. 1.] Jeroboam the son of Joash, who was the second king of Israel of that name, and was contem-Hosca. And the Lord said to Hosea, Go take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms: for the land hath committed great whoredoms, departing from the Lord.

3 So he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim; which conceived, and bare him a son.

4 And the Lord said unto him, Call his name Jezreel; for yet a little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel.

5 And it shall come to pass at that day, that I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel.

6 ¶ And she conceived again, and bare a daughter. And God said unto him, call her name Lo-ruhamah: for I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel; but I will utterly take them away.

7 But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and will save them by the Lord their God, and will not save them by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, by horses, nor by horsemen.

8 ¶ Now when she had weaned Lo-ruhamah, she conceived, and bare a son.

9 Then said God, Call his name Lo-ammi: for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God.

10 ¶ Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land: for great shall be the day of Jezreel.

CHAPTER II.

1 Say ye unto your brethren, Ammi: and to your sisters, Ruhamah.

2 Plead with your mother, plead: for she is not my wife, neither am I her husband: let her therefore put away her whoredoms out of her sight, and her adulteries from between her breasts;

3 Lest I strip her naked, and set her as in the day that she was born, and make her as a wilderness, and set her like a dry land, and slay her with thirst.

CHAP. II.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet reproves the ten tribes for their ingratitude to God, their great benefactor, and giving the glory of all the good things they possessed to their idols; for which he threatens them with severe judgments, yet gives them some hopes of obtaining mercy and reconciliation.

Ver. 1.] Several interpreters join this verse with the foregoing chapter, to this sense: 'When that general restoration of the Jewish nation shall come to pass, ye may alter your style in speaking to those of your brethren and sisters, whom I had before disowned, and you may call them my people, and such as have obtained mercy.' This interpretation gives the plainest and easiest sense. However, other expositors join this verse with the following words, and translate it thus, 'Ye that are my people, and have obtained mercy, speak to your brethren and sisters, and plead with your mother.' But this sense I think not so agreeable with the context, which threatens the ten tribes with the miscarriages of their ensuing captivity.

Ver. 2. Plead with your mother, plead.] The words are directed to those pious persons that still remained among the ten tribes, who are required to reprove, and use their best endeavours to return that general corruption which the nation had contracted by its idolatry: whereby they have broken the covenant I had made with them (frequently expressed in the prophecies by a marriage contract; see Jer. iii. 1, 8, xxxii. 32), and made a separation or divorce between them and me (see Isa. l. 1).

Let her therefore put away her whoredoms] Let her leave off her idolatries, usually expressed by the familiarity and caresses which pass between unchaste lovers (compare Ezek. xvi. 23, &c.).

Ver. 3. Lest I strip her naked.] The punishment commonly inflicted upon harlots was to strip them naked and expose them to the world (see ver. 10, Jer. xiii. 22, 26, Ezek. xvi. 37). So God threatens to deal with the nations or kingdom of Israel; to deliver her into the hands of her enemies, who shall strip her of all her wealth and ornaments, and carry her away naked into captivity (see ver. 9), in a forlorn and desolate condition, as she was during her bondage in Egypt (see Ezek. xvi. 4, compare likewise ver. 37, 41, of the same chapter.)

Make her as a wilderness.] The state of captivity is fitly compared to being placed in a wilderness, in want of common necessaries (compare Ezek. xix. 13).

Ver. 4.] As an injured husband has no regard for the children his wife has brought by another man; so he understood here in both senses: they ascribed all the plenty they enjoyed chiefly to the favour of the idol gods which they worshipped (see Jer. xiv. 17); and then they placed their trust and confidence in the confederacies they had made with their neighbouring idolaters, and thought the peace and plenty they possessed was very much owing to their protection and alliance.
CHAPTER II.

7 And she shall follow after her lovers, but she shall not overtake them; and she shall seek them, but shall not find them: then shall she say, I will go and return to my first husband; for then was it better with me than now.

8 For she did not know that I gave her corn, and wine, and oil, and multiplied her silver and gold, which she prepared for Baal. Therefore, I returned, and took away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof, and will recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness.

9 And now will I discover her lewdness in the sight of her lovers, and none shall deliver her out of mine hand.

10 I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts.

Ver. 6.] I will bring her under great calamities, that she shall not know which way to turn herself, or get out of them (compare Job iii. 23, xix. 8, Lam. iii. 7, 9).

Ver. 7. She shall follow after her lovers.] She shall seek for help of her idols, but shall receive none. She shall seek them, but shall not find them.] A proverbial expression, denoting lost labour, when persons receive no assistance from those whose help they implore (see v. 6, Prov. i. 28).

I will go and return to my first husband.] Her affections will bring her to a sense of her duty, and the happiness she enjoyed as long as she cleaved steadfastly unto God (see v. 13, and compare Luke xv. 19).

Ver. 8.] Or, bestowed upon Bal (compare 2 Chron. xxiv. 7). "She did not consider," so the first part of the sentence should be translated (compare vii. 9), that all the necessaries she enjoyed, as well as her riches and ornaments, were my gift, which yet she ungratefully bestowed upon the service of her idols (compare viii. 4, and Ezek. xvi. 17—19).

Ver. 9. Take away my corn, &c.] For a punishment of her ingratitude, I will take away the good things I have given her; at the very season when she expects to receive the fruits of the earth, her enemies shall invade her and destroy them.

And will recover [or take away] my wool and my flax given to cover her] They shall strip her of her very clothes, and carry her away captive: without leaving her any covering for her nakedness (see note upon Isa. iii. 17).

Ver. 10.] The filthiness of her idolatries shall appear by the punishments I will inflict upon her, which shall be so remarkable, that it shall be taken notice of by the idolatrous nations round about her (see ver. 5, and Ezek. xvi. 37, xxii. 29).

Ver. 11. The public festivals were frequently called days of joy and gladness; the observation of several of these festivals was retained in the worship of the golden calves (see 1 Kings xii. 32, Amos viii. 5). God here threatens them, that, under their captivity, they should have no opportunity to celebrate them, since they had so much abused those solemn seasons of divine worship (see ix. 4, 5, Amos viii. 10, and the note upon Dan. x. 4)

Ver. 12. These are my rewards] See ver. 5, and ix. 1.

The beasts of the field shall eat them.] I will give up their lands unto their enemies, who shall destroy the fruits of it, or else leave it desolate, for the beasts of the field to devour (compare Ps. lxxx. 12, 13, Isa. v. 7).

Ver. 13. I will visit upon her the days of Baalim.] I will punish her for all the idolatries she has committed from the days of Jeroboam, who first set up the worship of false gods (see xili. 1). The chief god of every country was called by the name of Baal; so Baal-zebub was the god of the Moabitians; Baal-zebul was the god of Ekron (2 Kings i. 2); Baal-berith was the god of the Phœnicians (Judg. viii. 33). Those several deities are called in the plural number Baalim (see Judg. iii. 7).

Ver. 14.] Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her.

Ver. 15.] I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope: and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt.

of the field to devour (compare Ps. lxxx. 12, 13, Isa. v. 7).

Ver. 13. I will visit upon her the days of Baalim.] I will punish her for all the idolatries she has committed from the days of Jeroboam, who first set up the worship of false gods (see xili. 1). The chief god of every country was called by the name of Baal; so Baal-zebub was the god of the Moabitians; Baal-zebul was the god of Ekron (2 Kings i. 2); Baal-berith was the god of the Phœnicians (Judg. viii. 33). Those several deities are called in the plural number Baalim (see Judg. iii. 7).

Ver. 14.] Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her.

Ver. 15.] I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope: and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt.

16 And it shall be at that day, saith the Lord, that thou shalt call me Ishi; and shalt call me no more Baal.

17 For I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they shall no more be remembered by their name.

18 And in that day will I make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground: and I will break the bow and the sword and the battle out of the earth, and will make them to lie down safely.

19 And I will betroth thee unto me for ever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies.

20 I will even betroth thee unto me in faithful-ness: and thou shalt know the Lord.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth: 22 And the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil; and they shall hear Jezebel.

23 And I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God.

She shall sing there, as in the days of her youth. She shall express her joy in God, as her forefathers did at their first coming out of Egypt, after their deliverance at the Red sea, when I espoused them for my peculiar people, and entered into a covenant with them at Mount Sinai: where they solemnly promised an entire obedience to me, (see Exod. xix. 5, 8 (compare xi. 1, Jer. ii. 2, Ezek. xvi. 8, 22, 60). Ver. 16. Thou shalt call me Ishi; and—no more Baal. Whereas God had formerly renounced any marriage relation with Israel by reason of their idolatry (see ver. 2); he now declares himself reconciled to them again (see ver. 20); and permits them to call him by the name of Ishi, i.e. "husband," but not of Baal, i.e. "Lord." The word Baal signifies a husband, and is particularly spoken of God, as he was by his covenant relation a husband to his people (see Isa. liv. 5, Jer. iii. 14). But because the word Baal had been so much profaned by being given to idols, he forbade it to be applied any more to himself (see the following verse).

Ver. 17. The Jews were forbidden to mention the names of heathen idols (see Exod. xxiii. 13, Josh. xxii. 7, Ps. xvi. 4, compare Zech. xiii. 2, and see the note upon xiv. 2). Baalim is sometimes equivalent to Baal (see 1 Kings xviii. 18, compared with ver. 21, and 2 Chron. xxiv. 4, compared with 2 Kings ii. 24), Baalim and Ashtaroth, Judg. x. 6, 7, is the same with Baal and Ashtaroth, Judges ii. 13, for the plural number in the Hebrew language sometimes expresses an excellence, as in the word Elohim. In like manner Baal was called Baalim by his worshippers, to denote that he was a principal object of their worship; but the word likewise signifies the several Baals which the idolaters worshiped under so many distinguishing characters: such as Baal-peor, Baal-berith, Baal-zebub, and the like; and, in general, it signifies the many strange gods of the heathens (see 1 Sam. vii. 3, 4, 2 Chron. xxiv. 7, Jer. ii. 23).

Ver. 18. Make a covenant for them with the beasts I will protect them from that violence and annoyance which beasts and birds of prey or venomous creatures might threaten them with (compare Job xi. 23, Ezek. xxxiv. 25).

I will break the bow and the sword A universal peace and freedom, both from foreign and domestic enemies, is mentioned by the prophet as a concomitant of that flourishing state of the church, which shall commence from the restoration of the Jews, and the coming in of the gentiles (see Isa. ii. 4, xi. 6, 9, Zech. ix. 10).

Make them to lie down safely. As flocks do when they are secure from beasts of prey (see Ezek. xxxiv. 25, Zech. iii. 13, Jer. xxiii. 6, xxx. 10).

Ver. 19. And I will betroth thee unto me for ever. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness: and thou shalt know the Lord. Ver. 20. And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth. They shall hear Jezebel. And the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil; and they shall hear Jezebel. Ver. 21. And I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God. Ver. 23. And I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy. Compare i. 6. I will have mercy both on the Jews and gentiles, who shall become true converts to the Christian faith. This was in part fulfilled at the first preaching of the gospel (see Rom. ix. 24.—28), but shall receive its completion at the restoration of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles (compare i. 10, 11).
CHAPTER III.

1 Then said the Lord unto me, Go yet, love a woman beloved of her friend, yet an adulteress, according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Israel, who look to other gods, and love flagons of wine.

2 So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of silver, and for an homer of barley, and an half homer of barley:

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—Under the figure of the prophet’s receiving his adulterous wife home again, and her continuing there in a state of widowhood, yet with hopes of reconciliation, is signified that Israel (the ten tribes especially) shall be for several ages without any external form of civil government, or public worship; yet with a promise of being restored to their ancient dignity and privileges in the later ages of the world.

VER. I. Love a woman beloved of her friend, yet [or, although] an adulteress.] This is probably the same woman mentioned i. 3, who, upon her ill life, was parted from her husband, who yet had a kindness for her still, and was willing to receive her upon conditions of her better behaviour. The Hebrew word reug, friend, is used for a husband, Jer. iii. 20, Cant. v. 16.

According to the love of the Lord toward—Israel, who look to other gods, and love flagons of wine.] Hosea’s dealing thus with a wife who had injured him, exactly resembles the favour which God hath shown towards the Israelites, who, notwithstanding all their obligations to him, retain an incurable propension to idolatry, often called by the name of spiritual whoredom.

The words which our translation renders “flagons of wine,” may be translated “cakes made of (dried) grapes.” Such were the cakes, probably, which the Jews offered to the queen of heaven.” Jer. vii. 18, xlv. 19. So, Cant. ii. 5, the word asheb might rather signify cakes, or round, than flagons: as our translation renders it. The expression signifies, in general, those entertainments which they were partakers of in the idol temples (Amos. ii. 8, i Cor. x. 7, 21).

VER. 2.] The expression alludes to the custom anciently practised of men’s buying their wives: and it implies, that the prophet made a new espousal or contract with her; as God intended to be-throw Israel a second time, ii. 10, and the meaness of the price offered, shows how little value the Israelites were in God’s sight, since their apostasy from the worship of God to idolatry (compare Zech. xi. 13). A homer was about ten bushels (see the note upon Ezek. xlv. 14).

VER. 3, Thou shalt abide for me many days.] Thou shalt continue in a solitary condition (see Deut. xxiv. 3). For a certain time, that I may make some proof of thy amendment.

Thou shalt not be for another man.] The word another is not in the Hebrew, so the sentence may be thus translated more agreeably to the original, “Thou shalt not have a husband, neither will I have thee” [to my wife]: i.e., thou shalt continue some time in the state of widowhood. The Hebrew phrase Lo tohi irash properly signifies, “Thou shalt not have a husband;” and so it is rendered by our interpreters, Ezek. xlv. 25, and to the same sense without the negative particle, Ruth i. 12. The 3 And I said unto her, Thou shalt abide for me many days: thou shalt not play the harlot, and thou shalt not be for another man: so will I also be for thee.

4 For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim:

LXX. render it to the same sense, Odet xe and, so it is used by St. Paul, Rom. vii. 8.

VER. 4. Israel shall abide many days, &c.] This threatening was fulfilled upon the ten tribes immediately upon their captivity by Shalmaneser (compare ix. 4), and upon the two remaining tribes at the destruction of their temple and commonwealth, during the Babylonian captivity. The later Jews thus express the sense of those exiles in the Song of the Three Children, as it is found among the apocryphal writings, ver. 14, “Neither is there at this time, prince, or prophet, or leader, or burnt-offering, or sacrifice, or oblation, or income, or place to sacrifice before thee, and find mercy.” This threatening was still more remarkably fulfilled upon the whole nation of the Jews, from the destruction of Jerusalem by Vespasian unto this day. From that time they have had no republic or civil government of their own; but live everywhere, like so many exiles, only upon sufferance; they have had neither priests nor sacrifice, their temple being destroyed where only they were to offer sacrifice: and yet the want of a place where to perform the most solemn part of their public worship, does not tempt them to idolatry, or make them fond of image worship, or any such idolatrous practices, which was the epidemic sin of their forefathers. This seems the general import of this remarkable prophecy: but the several expressions must be more particularly explained.

Without a king.] A king in the Hebrew language signifies any sort of governor or magistrate: it is applied to Moses, Deut. xxxvii. 5, and to the judges, Judg. xvii. 6, and to the four successive monarchies, Dan. vii. 14. So in the New Testament, Rev. xvii. 10, the seven kings are commonly explained of seven sorts of governments: so here a king means any civil magistrate with supreme authority.

Without a prince.] The word may be equivalent to the former: if we suppose it to denote a distinct authority, it may be fitly explained of the high-priest, and the heads of the priestly courses: called “the princes of the sanctuary,” Isa. xiii. 8, and “governors of the house of the Lord,” Jer. xx. 1. Taking the word in this sense, it fitly follows, “And without a sacrifice,” which could only be offered by the priests.

Without an image,—an ephod, and without teraphim.] Some interpreters suppose these words to denote the several ways of lawful worship, or means of inquiring after the will of God; and by the word metzetbek, they understand an altar: this sense agrees very well with the word sacrifice, going before: the same word is joined with an altar erected to God’s worship, Isa. xix. 19, and signifies in that place such a religious memorial as Jacob set up, Gen. xxx. 20. Teraphim they suppose to signify the same with the urim, or the oracle placed in the breast-plate of the high-priest, and therefore fitly joined with the ephod, which often signifies the whole priestly habit, and is particularly mentioned
HOSEA.

5 Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Hear the word of the Lord, ye children of Israel: for the Lord hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land.

2 By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out, and blood toucheth blood.

3 Therefore shall the land mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish, with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven;

They break out;] There is an inundation of all manner of wickedness, and all law and right are broken through and violated.

Blood toucheth blood.] Compare v. 2, vi. 9. This may more particularly relate to the murder of their kings, that were slain by their successors: as Zerediah by Shallum, Shallum by Menahem (2 Kings xv. 10, 14). In such civil broils a great many of their friends and dependants are commonly slain with the kings themselves (see 1 Kings xvi. 11).

Ver. 3.] These civil wars and contemions make the whole land look desolately: the inhabitants are either destroyed, or forced to leave their habitations, and languish under want of all things; the beasts of the field, and fowls of the air, are consumed by famine or pestilence: and the fishes of the rivers and great waters (called seas in the Hebrew language) are killed through drought, or the waters being tainted by the infection of the air, or corrupted by the blood of the slain (compare Jer. iv. 25, Zeph. i. 3). The prophets sometimes describe a general desolation by when there is occasion of consulting God by the high-priest, 1 Sam. xxviii. 9, xxx. 7. This interpretation is followed by the LXX. and it makes an easy and natural sense of the text, viz. that God will deprive the Jews of the principal offices, for the enjoyment of which they chiefly valued themselves, viz. that of the priesthood, and that of prophecy. The Jews had no succession of prophets for a considerable time before Christ's coming (Ecclesiuses, xxxvi. 15, 1 Macc. iv. 46, ix. 27, xiv. 41): and both kingdom and priesthood were taken away within forty years after Christ's death. Dr. Spencer carries this interpretation so far, as to be very positive that terraphim means the same with the urim, and that both words denote an image enclosed within the folds of the high-priest's breast-plate, which uttered oracles by a voice (lib. iii. De Legib. Halib. Dissert. ult.). This opinion is strenuously opposed by Dr. Pocock in his notes upon this place, to which I refer the reader. Other learned men agree with Dr. Pocock, in observing that the word terraphim is, in other places of scripture, used for a sort of divination practised by idolaters, and therefore think it unlikely that the prophet should express an oracle of God's own appointment by so infamous a name: whereupon they suppose, that Hosea here speaking to the ten tribes, means some idolatrous kind of divination practised by the priests at Dan and Bethel, after Jeroboam's schism: as if he had threatened them, that in a short time they should have neither king, nor priest, nor sacrifice, nor any degree of prophecy or foreknowledge of what is to come. This interpretation exactly agrees with that state of the people's widowhood, described ver. 3.

To this interpretation it may be objected, that it cannot be thought a proper punishment to threaten the taking away an idolatrous sort of worship. But to this they answer, that the prophet here conforms his speech to the sentiments of those he speaks to, and threatens them with the loss of what they were extremely fond of.

Ver. 5. Afterward shall—Israel return, and seek the Lord. They shall be touched with a true remorse for their former errors (especially that of rejecting the Messias), and shall desire to be instructed in the knowledge of the truth (compare Jer. 1. 4). The expression of "seeking the Lord," alludes to the custom of the Jews going up in companies to celebrate their solemn feast at Jerusalem (compare v. 6, Ps. cv. 4, Jer. l. 4, 5).

David their king.] The Messias is often called so by the prophets, as being the person that was to spring from his loins, and in whom all the promises made to David were to be fulfilled (see Isa. iv. 3, 4, Jer. xxx. 9, Ezek. xxxxi. 20, xxxvii. 24). So the Chaldee paraphrase expounds this and the parallel texts: David was a type of the Messias (see Ps. lxxxix. 20, 36): who therefore is called by the name of David: so John Baptist is called Elias, Mal. iv. 5, because he was to resemble him, and to succeed him in his office of reproving the people, and exhorting them to repentance. The expression cannot be literally understood here, David himself having been dead long before the uttering of this prophecy.

And shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days.] The goodness of God in making them partakers of the mercies of the gospel, shall engage them to yield an entire obedience to him (compare Jer. xxxii. 9): and this will come to pass in the latter days or times of the world. The "latter days" are often spoken of the times of the gospel (see note upon Isa. ii. 2, Dan. ii. 28). But the phrase does sometimes denote the very last days of the gospel age, near which time probably the conversion of the Jews will be brought to pass (see Deut. iv. 20, Jer. xxx. 21, Ezek. xxxviii. 8, 16).
Yet let no man strive, nor reprove another: for they people are as they strive with the priest.

Therefore shalt thou fall in the day, and the prophet also shall fall with thee in the night, and I will destroy thy mother.

My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.

As they were increased, so they sinned against me: therefore will I change their glory into shame.

They eat up the sin of my people, and they set their heart on their iniquity.

And there shall be, like people, like priest: and I will punish them for their ways, and reward them their doings.

an enumeration of particulars (compare Isa. xix. 5. 8.)

Ver. 4.] The prophet speaks of the Israelites as one that despairs of their amendment, and thought it lost labour to reprove them, they being of that refractory temper, as not to hearken to instruction, and even to quarrel with their priests themselves, when they admonished them of their duty. This seems to be a proverbial expression to denote a stubborn and incorrigible temper; for it was a capital offence by law for any to behave themselves in a presumptuous manner against the injunctions of the priest (see Deut. xvii. 12).

Ver. 5. Therefore shalt thou fall in the day, and the prophet—in the night.] Thou shalt be destroyed both by open violence and by secret treachery (compare Jer. vi. 4. 5. xv. 8.) and the false prophets shall be involved in the same destruction (compare ix. 7. 8).

I will destroy thy mother.] The Hebrew reads, "I will cut off thy mother:" i. e. the whole state or kingdom of Israel (compare ii. 2. Jer. vi. 2. xv. 8.).

Ver. 6.] My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge.] The ignorance of the true principles of religion, which prevails among the people of the ten tribes, is the occasion of those sins which draw down such heavy judgments upon them: the Levites who are placed in every tribe by God's appointment for the better instructing of the people, are turned out of their possessions by Jeroboam and his successors, and none left to teach them their duty (see 2 Chron. xi. 14).

I will also reject thee.] This is spoken to Jeroboam's priests, who, being taken "out of the lowest of the people" (1 Kings xii. 31), were very ignorant themselves, and therefore unable to teach others.

I will also forget thy children.] I will not look upon them any longer "as the seed of Abraham," and children of my covenant.

As they were increased, so they sinned against me.] Or, "The more they were increased, the more they sinned against me" (see Noldius, p. 436). The greater were the favours I heaped upon them, the more presumptuously they sinned against me (compare xiii. 6). Therefore I will divest them of all those glories for which they pride themselves, and lead them thence in a poor and miserable condition into captivity.

Ver. 8.] These idolatrous priests, mentioned ver.

For they shall eat, and not have enough: they shall commit whoredom, and shall not increase: because they have left off to take heed to the Lord.

Whoredom and wine and new wine take away the heart.

My people ask counsel at their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them: for the spirit of whoredoms hath caused them to err, and they have gone a whoring from under their God.

They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills, under oaks and poplars and elms, because the shadow thereof is good: therefore your daughters shall commit whoredom, and your spousers shall commit adultery.

I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your spousers when they commit adultery: for themselves are separated with whores, and they sacrifice with harlots: therefore the people that doth not understand shall fall.

6. live upon the sin-offerings of the people; and are so far from restraining them, that they take delight in seeing them commit iniquity; because the more they sin, the greater is the number of their sin-offerings, which are the priests' portion.

Ver. 9.] As they are alike in sinning, so shall they be in punishment.

Ver. 10. And not have enough:] Or, "Not be satisfied;" as the word is elsewhere translated (see Lev. xxvi. 28. Mic. vi. 14.). The expression may signify either, their food shall not afford due nourishment, for want of God's blessing accompanying it (compare Deut. viii. 3. Hag. 1. 6.; or else the words imply a threatening them with famine, when they shall not have food enough to satisfy a craving appetite (compare Lev. xxvi. 20. Amos iv. 8. Mic. vi. 14.). The contrary phrase, "To eat, and be full," or satisfied, denotes plenty (see Lev. xxvi. 5. Dent. vii. 11. viii. 10. xi. 15. Ps. xxii. 26. Joel ii. 26.)

Ver. 11.] Deprive men of their judgment, and darken their understandings. So a gift is said to "destroy the heart," Eccles. vii. 7, to bereave men of the use of their discerning faculties.

Ver. 12. Ask caused at their stocks.] Of their idols: for so the word nets elsewhere often signifies (see Jer. ii. 27. x. 8. Heb. ii. 19.).

Their staff declareth unto them.] This, learned men suppose to be the same kind of divination with that made by arrows, which is described, Ezek. xxxi. 21 (see the note upon that place).

For the spirit of whoredoms hath caused them to err:] This is to be understood of idolatry, which is spiritual whoredom (compare v. 4.)

Ver. 13. They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains.] The sacrificing upon mountains and shady groves was an ancient piece of idolatry, often mentioned and reproved by the prophets (see Isa. i. 29. Ezek. vi. 13. xx. 20. and the notes upon those places).

Your daughters shall commit whoredom.] God delivers men into the idolatry, as a punishment of their idolatry (see Rom. i. 28.).

Ver. 14. I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom.] I will suffer them to "fall from one degree of wickedness to another" (see the foregoing verse).

They sacrifice with harlots:] The word rendered harlot signifies such as performed themselves in an idol-temple, in honour of the idol: such lewd practices were frequent in the gentle temples dedicated.
Hosea.

15 Though thou, Israel, play the harlot, yet let not Judah offend: and come not ye unto Gilgal, neither go ye up to Beth-aven, nor swear, The Lord liveth.

16 For Israel slideth back as a backsliding heifer: now the Lord will feed them as a lamb in a large place.

to Venus, and such-like impure deities (see Baruch vi. 29); from thence the Jews learned those filthy customs (see 1 Kings xiv. 23, 24, xv. 12). The LXX. render the word very properly πεπήγαγος; such as are initiated into the service of the idol by lewd rites.

That doth not understand shall fall.] See ver. 1, 6.

Ver. 15. Yet let not Judah offend;] The kingdom of Judah still retained the worship of the true God, and the ordinances of the temple-service; so the prophet exhorts that people not to be led away by the ill example of their brethren of the ten tribes.

Come not ye unto Gilgal, neither go ye up to Beth-aven;] Gilgal was a remarkable place for the renewing of the rite of circumcision (Josh. v. 9); there the people afterward used to offer sacrifice (1 Sam. xv. 21); after Jeroboam's setting up of idolatry, it was noted for the worship of false gods, as appears by comparing this text with ix. 15, xii. 11, Amos iv. 4, v. 5. In those places of Amos, as well as in this verse, it is joined with Beth-el, noted for the worship of one of Jereboam's calves; called here Beth-aven, and x. 5. Beth-el originally signifies the house of God; that name was given to it by Jacob, because of God's appearing to him there, Gen. xxviii. 17. But when it became the seat of idolatry, it was called Beth-aven, i.e. the house of vanity.

Nor swear, The Lord liveth.] As long as ye continue to worship idols, I will not have my name mentioned by your polluted lips. Inasmuch as there is no fellowship between God and idols. Many of the Israelites hated between God and Baal, and the other idols, sometimes serving one, and sometimes the other (see 1 Kings xviii. 21, Ezek. xx. 39, xxiii. 38, 39, Zeph. i. 4, 5). Some understand the words, of their swearing by the name of the true God, which is a solemn act of religious worship (see Dent. x. 20), and yet meaning by it the god that is worshipped at Beth-el. This God forbids as a profanation of his name (see Amos viii. 14).

Ver. 16. Israel slideth back as a backsliding heifer.] The word translated slideth back, properly signifies being headstrong and untractable; it is a metaphor from oxen or heifers that draw their neck back, and will not put it under the yoke (see Jer. vii. 24). The expression alludes to the calves called heifers by the Septuagint, which they worshipped.

Now the Lord will feed them as a lamb in a large place.] The expression seems ironical; as if the prophet had said, they were like headstrong cattle, that would not be managed by their leaders or drivers; so God will suffer them to be scattered as sheep without a shepherd in the large country of Assyria, whither they shall be led captive.

Ver. 17. Ephraim signifies the same with Israel, or the ten tribes (see v. 3). It is to no purpose to take pains to reclaim him (see ver. 4).

Ver. 18. Their drink is sour.] The phrase may be metaphorical, to express the corruption of their manners (compare Deut. xxxii. 32, Isa. i. 22); or else, if we join it in sense with the remaining part of the verse, it imports their excessive drinking, till their liquor turn sour in their stomachs: and so the whole verse takes them for three great vices, drunkenness, whoredom, and bribery.

They have committed whoredom;] This may be understood of idolatry, which is spiritual whoredom (see ver. 12), but the literal sense agrees very well with the rest of the verse.

Her rulers with shame do live, Give ye.] i.e. Are continually asking or expecting bribes (compare Prov. xxx. 18): are still greedy of filthy lucre (see Mic. iii. 11, vii. 3).

The Hebrew word translated rulers, properly signifies shields: it is taken for rulers in Ps. xlviii. 9, as well as here.

Ver. 19.] The words threaten them with going into captivity; for it is common with the prophets to express what is future by thepreter-perfect tense (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9); God's anger is often expressed by a blustering or tempestuous wind (see xiii. 15, Jer. iv. 11, 12, li. 1). This wind is said here to carry them away out of their country: and then they will have reason to be ashamed of their idolatrous sacrifices, which have brought such severe judgments upon them.

CHAPTER V.

1 Hear ye this, O priests; and hearken, ye house of Israel; and give ye ear, O house of the king; for judgment is toward you, because ye have been a snare on Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor.

2 And the revolters are profound to make judgment is toward you (or against you), because ye have been a snare on Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor.] Ye have laid snares for others to seize upon them and kill them (see ver. 2): just as hunters spread their nets upon mountains and hills in order to catch their prey. Mizpah and Tabor were two noted mountains; the former on the hither side of Jordan, the other on the farther side of it, the same with Gilgal (see Gen. xxxi. 25, 40, 49).

Ver. 2. The revolters are profound to make slaughter.] The ringleaders in idolatry and other wickednesses have deep designs to ensnare men's lives (compare iv. 4, vi. 9).

CHAP. V.

Argument.—This chapter and the next to the fourth verse, threaten judgments both against Israel and Judah for their manifold sins, till they repent, upon which they may conceive hopes of pardon.

Ver. 1. O priests.] Or rather, "O princes:" which reading better agrees with "the house of the king" that follows; the Hebrew word is of both significations. So Gen. xii. 48, and Exod. ii. 16, where it is in the text "princes of On and Midian," but the margin reads "the prince of On and Midian" (compare vi. 9).
CHAPTER V.

I have been a rebuker of them all.] By my prophets (compare vi. 3).

Ver. 3. I know Ephraim, and Israel is not hid from me.] I know all the doings of Ephraim; and is equivalent to Israel, as distinct from Judah, in this prophecy, and comprehended the ten tribes, ver. 5, 12, 14, iv. 17, vi. 4, 10, vii. 8, 11, viii. 9, and in several other places. Ephraim was the head of the ten tribes, both for its numbers, and because Jeroboam had placed the seat of his kingdom in that tribe (1 Kings xii. 25).

and ver. 4. Ephraim, thou committest whoredom.] See its 12.

Ver. 5. The pride of Israel doth testify to his face.] Their indendent behaviour towards God, whose worship they despise, doth discover itself in all their behaviour; and convicteth them of the just desert of their sins (compare Isa. iii. 9).

Ver. 6. They shall go with their flocks—to see the Lord.] “The sacrifice of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord,” as the scripture often abominate (see Prov. xv. 5, 51, 10, 11. 15). This verse is meant of the people of Judah, mentioned in the latter part of the foregoing verse; who, though they did frequent the temple-worship, yet came thither without any true sense of religion; for which the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah particularly reprove them (see Isa. i. 11, &c. Jer. vii. 3, &c.).

Ver. 7. The word bagad, to deal treacherously, signifies properly a wife’s being false to her husband (see Jer. iii. 20): from whence it is applied to the sin of idolatry; and is often styled spiritual whoredom (compare vi. 7, Isa. xviii. 8, Jer. v. 11).

Ver. 8. Begotten strange children.] “Strange children” may either mean children begotten of heathen women, whom they took to marriage, contrary to the law (Exod. xxiii. 12, Deut. vii. 2), or it may signify such children as are bred up in the idolatrous practices of other nations.

Now shall a month devour them.] If we understand this verse of Judah (which interpretation the foregoing and following verses favour), the words may be expounded of the invasion made upon Judah by Pekah, king of Israel; of which, see 2 Chron. xxviii. 6. By “a month’s devouring them,” is meant a sudden and speedy destruction (compare Zech. xi. 5), and the trumpet in Ramah: which imports the sounding an alarm to give notice of the approaching enemy (compare Joel ii. 1), which threatens to invade the kingdom of Judah (see the foregoing verse). These were towns in the tribe of Benjamin, that lay upon the frontiers of that kingdom.

Cry aloud at Beth-aven.] To give notice of the approach of the enemy (compare Isa. x. 30). Bethaven may either mean Beth-ol (see iv. 15), or a town of that name near to it (see Josh. vii. 2).

After thee, O Benjamin.] The enemy is just behind thee: or, Let him that is after thee, or behind thee, O Benjamin, prepare himself to battle; i.e. the tribe of Judah, which lay next to Benjamin.

Ver. 9. Ephraim shall be desolate.] God’s judgments shall likewise overtake Israel, or the ten tribes (see note on ver. 3), as well as Judah.

I have made known that which surely shall be.] I have denounced my judgments against the whole kingdom of Israel as well as that of Judah, and given them warning that they may escape them by a timely repentance.

Ver. 10. The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound.] They have violated the most sacred laws of God, upon which not only the ordinances of his worship, but likewise the rights and properties of men depend; and are become guilty of the same injustice and confusion with those that remove the ancient bounds and landmarks (see Deut. xix. 14). Critics observe, that the note of similitude is sometimes in sense equivalent to a strong affirmation. So Isa. xiii. 6. “It shall come as a destruction from the Almighty:” i.e. it shall be an apparent instance of the divine vengeance. John i. 14, “We beheld his glory, as of the only-begotten of the Father;” i.e. such as proved him to be the only-begotten of the Father.

Pour out my wrath upon them like water.] Which shall overwhelm them like a deluge. Great calamities are often compared to the overflowing of water (see Ps. xxxii. 6, &c. xxiv. 7, Isa. xxx. 28, Dan. ix. 26).

Ver. 11. Ephraim is oppressed.] He is delivered over to oppressors by God’s just judgment: such were Pul and Tiglath-pileser, kings of Assyria (2 Kings xv. 19, 20, compare Deut. xxviii. 30).

He willingly walked after the commandment.] This is commonly said of the people giving to his subjects of forsaking the worship of the true God: which they readily complied with. Of the same kind were the statutes of Omri, which are mentioned in Mic. vi. 16. But the LXX. renders it, “He walked after vanity;” i.e. idolatry; either reading it shew for there: or else supposing the latter word put for the former: as there are frequent instances in the Hebrew text, that letters which are near the same sound are often changed one for another.

Ver. 12. My judgments shall consume both Israel moth, and to the house of Judah as rottenness. 13 When Ephraim saw his sickness, and Judah saw his wound, then went Ephraim to the Assyrian, and sent to king Jareb: yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound. 14 For I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and to Judah, as a "moth fretted a garment" (see ver. 3).

Ver. 13. When Ephraim saw his sickness, and Judah his wound.] When the king of Israel saw himself too weak to contend with Palt, king of Assyria, he sent an embassy to make him his ally, and in order to it became his tributary, that "his hand might be with him to confirm his kingdom to him" (2 Kings xv. 19); which king is therefore called king Jareb, i.e. the king that should plead for him, or defend his cause against any that should oppose him. So in like manner shall Ahaz, king of Judah, implore the assistance of Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, against his enemies (2 Kings xvi. 7, 2 Chron. xxviii. 16-18). Yet could he not heal you.] Yet neither of these alliances afforded any lasting benefit or succour to those that desired their help; Menahem's son being as a young lion to the house of Judah: I, even I, will tear and go away: I will take away, and none shall rescue him. 15 ¶ I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face: in their affliction they will seek me early.

CHAPTER VI.

ARGUMENT.—The first three verses of this chapter should have been joined to the fifth, as was observed in the argument of that chapter; in the following verses God complains of their incorrigibility, and threatens his judgments as a just consequence of their sins.

Ver. 1. Come, and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and will bind us up. 2 After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight. 3 Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord: his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the dawn, and have mercy upon us.
CHAPTER VII.

6 For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings. 7 But they like men have transgressed the covenant: there have they dealt treacherously against me. 8 Gilead is a city of them that work iniquity, and is polluted with blood. 9 And as troops of robbers wait for a man, so sengers are like the sentence of a judge, which shall be certainly followed with execution. 10 Thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth. Thou wilt make the justice of thy judgments, O God, appear as clear as the light of the rising sun. It is frequent in the Hebrew language to change the discourse from the first to the second or third person. Ver. 6. And not sacrifice.] i.e. Rather than sacrifice; I am better pleased with true goodness, than with the exactest observance of the external duties of religion, unless they proceed from a sincere principle of obedience (see Mic. vi. 6—8). The Jews used to express comparisons by negatives, or rejecting the thing less worthy: so we are to understand that expression of the prophet Joel (ii. 13), "Read your heart, and not your garments!" and those words of Christ (John vi. 27), "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that which endureth to everlasting life!" i.e. for this rather than the former; and that text of St. Peter (1 Pet. iii. 3, 4), "Whose adornment, let it not be the outward adornment of plaiting the hair, or wearing gold; but let it be the hidden man of the heart." Ver. 7. But they like men [Hebrew, like Adam] have transgressed the covenant.] Which I solemnly contracted with them; just as Adam did in Paradise. There have they dealt treacherously against me.] In that very instance of my loving-kindness, they made the most unsuitable returns (see v. 7). Ver. 8.] The iniquity which Gilead is here accused of is, probably, idolatry, as appears by comparing this verse with xii. 11. The Hebrew word even, used in both places, frequently signifies so; and the blood which is said to be polluted with, may mean the blood of their children which they sacrificed to Moloch. Dr. Wells interprets the verse of those Gileadites who assisted Pekah in the murder of Pekahiah, 2 Kings xxv. 25. The Hebrew phrase translated here "polluted with blood," literally signifies "with bloody footsteps," being taken from such as are found with their shoes stained with the blood they have shed (compare 1 Kings ii. 5). Ver. 9. The company of priests murder in the way by consent.] The word cohabin, priests, does likewise signify princes (see v. 1): who are often proved by the prophets as guilty of great injustice and oppression (see Ezek. xxii. 27, Zeph. iii. 9). They commit lewdness.] Or, enormity: as the margin reads to a better sense. Ver. 10. I have seen an horrible thing.] Such an apostasy from God as cannot be mentioned without horror (compare Jer. ii. 11, 12, v. 30). There is the whoredom of Ephraim.] This may be understood, both in a literal and a metaphorical sense, for idolatry (see iv. 12—14). Ver. 11. O Judah, he hath set an harvest for thee.] Or, a harvest is appointed for thee; the active is used for the impersonal (see the note upon Isa. xlv. 18): i.e. thou hast made thyself ripe for destruction (compare Jer. ii. 33, Joel iii. 13, Mic. iv. 12, Rev. xiv. 15). When I returned the captivity of my people.] The sense would be plainer if the words were rendered, "When I would have turned away the captivity of my people: when I would, upon their repentance, have averted my judgments, which will end in their captivity. The Hebrew language wants the potential mood, which is supplied by the tenses of the indicative.

CHAPTER VII.

1 When I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the wickedness of Samaria: for they commit falsehood; and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers spoileth without. 2 And they consider not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedness: now their own doings have beset them about; they are before my face. 3 They make the king glad with their wickedness, and the princes with their lies. 4 They are all adulterers, as an oven heated

CHAP. VII.

Argument.—The prophet reproves the sins of the princes and great men of Israel, and denounces judgments against the people in general for their hypocrisy. Ver. 1. When I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, &c.] When God was just avert ing his judgment from Israel, the people gave him new provocations, especially the inhabitants of Samaria, the principal seat of the kingdom (see ver. 5). For they commit falsehood, &c.] Both great and small seize other men's properties by the secret methods of fraud, and the open violence of rapine and oppression (see v. 1, vi. 10). Vol. III. — 29

Ver. 2. Their own doings have beset them about.] They shall be taken in their own wickedness (see Ps. ix. 16, Prov. v. 22), and their sin shall bring its own punishment with it. Ver. 3. They make the king glad with their wickedness.] They study to please their kings and great men by complying with the idolatry they have set up. The LXX. read, kings, in the plural number, meaning the succession of kings of Israel from Jeroboam. Princes with their lies.] Which they speak to please and flatter them. But the word lie sometimes signifies an idol, and the practice of idolatry, as being set up in direct opposition to the true God (compare ver. 13, ii. 4, x. 13, xi. 12, Hab. ii. 18, Rom. i. 25, Rev. xxii. 15). This sense agrees very well with the scope and design of the place. Ver. 4. They are all adulterers.] The expression 3 N by the baker, who ceaseth from raising after he hath kneaded the dough, until it be leavened.

5 In the day of our king the princess have made him sick with bottles of wine; he stretched out his hand with scorners.

6 For they have made ready their heart like an oven, whiles they lie in wait: their baker sleepeth all the night; in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire.

7 They are all hot as an oven, and have devoured their judges; all their kings are fallen: there is none among them that calleth unto me. Ephraim is mixed himself among the people; Ephraim is a cake not turned.

9 Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not: yea, grey hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth not.

10 And the pride of Israel testifieth to his face: and they do not return to the Lord their God, nor seek him for all this.

11 ¶ Ephraim also is like a silly dove, without a heart: they call to Egypt, they go to Assyria.

12 When they shall go, I will spread my net upon them; I will bring them down as the fowls of the heaven; I will chastise them, as their congregation hath heard.

13 Woe unto them! for they have fled from me: destruction unto them! because they have transgressed against me: though I have redeemed them, yet they have been TOKEN against me.

14 And they have not cried in my heart with their heart, when they howled upon their beds: they assemble themselves for corn and wine, and they rebel against me.

15 Though I have bound and strengthened their arms, yet do they imagine mischief against me.

25 may be metaphorical, implying that they were apostates from God, to whose service they were engaged by the most solemn bond and covenant (compare Jer. ix. 2, Matt. xiv. 4, James iv. 4). If the words be understood literally, the prophet compares the heat of their lust to the flame of an oven: as it follows, Who ceaseth from raising after he hath kneaded the dough.] When an oven is sufficiently heated, the baker doth not raise any more fire, but thinks what he has made, enough to keep the oven hot, till the dough be fit to put into the oven. Some render the latter part of the sentence thus, "Who ceaseth from waking, or watching" (his oven); to the same sense with that of ver. 6, "Their baker sleepeth all the night."

Ver. 5. Made him sick with bottles of wine.] Or, "With being overheated through wine:" so the word chamath signifies, Hab. ii. 15. The day of the king's birth or inauguration was kept with riot and excess.

He stretched out his hand with scatterers.] He encouraged mean and loose people to converse too familiarly with him, forgetting his rank and dignity.

Ver. 6.] This verse pursues the metaphor begun in ver. 4. As the baker, when he has thoroughly heated his oven, if he lays himself to sleep in the night, finds all in a flame in the morning: so the greatest men of the land kindle evil desires in their hearts, and at the first opportunity their hidden designs break out like a flame into open action.

Ver. 7.] The flame of civil discord is spread among the people in general: this hath been the destruction both of the inferior magistrates and of their kings too; an anarchy continuing for eleven years after the death of Jeroboam the second; and afterward his son Zecariah, and his successors Shallum and Pekahiah, being slain by conspiracies formed against them (2 Kings xv. 10, 14, 25.) And yet these confusions have not brought either kings or people to a due humiliation for their sins.

Ver. 8.] Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people.] Whereas Israel was by God's institution to be his peculiar people, Deut. vii. 6, he has mixed or joined himself with idolaters (see Ps. cvi. 38); and he shall have a just punishment for his sins, he shall be carried away captive to dwell among them (see ix. 3, Jer. xvi. 12, 13).

A cake not turned.] Baked only on one side: i.e. serving God by halves, and halting between his service and the worship of idols. The Chaldee paraphrase interprets it, "Before it is baked on both sides, it is devoured by its greedy enemies:" the metaphor being taken from the ravenousness of a hungry stomach. This sense agrees very well with what follows.

Ver. 9. Strangers have devoured his strength, and (or yet) he knoweth it not.] The Syrians, in the time of Jehoshaz, reduced them very low (see 2 Kings xiii. 7); afterward they became tributaries to Pul king of Assyria (2 Kings xv. 20), and at length were carried captive by Shalmaneser (2 Kings xviii.). And yet all these afflictions do not make them sensible of the ill state of their affairs, and that the hand of God is against them (see ii. 8, and the following verse: Isa. xlii. 25).

Grey hairs are here and there upon him.] He still declines in strength and power, like a man worn out with age, and ready to give up the ghost.

Ver. 10. The pride of Israel] See ver. 3. They do not return to the Lord] See ver. 9.

Ver. 11.] Like an uneasy dove which falls into the snare that is laid for it; so the Israelites betake themselves for refuge to their enemies; sometimes they apply themselves to the king of Egypt for succour; at other times they trust to the aid of the Assyrians (see 2 Kings xv. 10, xvii. 4).

Ver. 12.] I will spread my net upon them.] Whistsoever they betake themselves for safety, they shall no more escape than birds can escape the snares of cunning men (see Ps. lxxiv. 17-19). I will chastise them, as their congregation hath heard.] I will bring those calamities upon them, which I have denounced in my laws against the whole people of Israel, whenever they forsake me (see Lev. xxvi., Deut. xxviii., compared with 2 Kings xviii. 13, 14). The Chaldee paraphrase renders the latter part of the verse thus, "I will chastise them because they have followed their own counsels," as if he had read in the original la ansatham, instead of laddatham (compare x. 6, xi. 6).

Ver. 13 Though I have redeemed them.] Though I have redeemed them out of Egypt (see Mic. vi. 4), and afforded them many other signal deliverances, yet they have not given me the glory; but have represented me by their golden calves, and "changed my truth into a lie," Rom. i. 25 (see the note upon ver. 5).

Ver. 14. When they howled upon their beds.] When they were bemoaning their calamities, as sick men bewail themselves upon a bed of sickness, yet they did not call upon me heartily and sincerely (compare Jer. iii. 10, Ps. lxviii. 34, 36). They assemble themselves for corn and wine, and they rebel against me.] When they assembled them-
CHAPTER VIII.

16 They return, but not to the most High: they are like a deceitful bow: their princes shall yield by the sword for the rage of their tongue: this shall be their derision in the land of Egypt.

Ver. 15.] Though I have bound up their wounds, and given them new strength and vigour, yet they are continually devising some new idolatrous invention, whereby they may dishonour me.

Ver. 16. They are like a deceitful bow.] Their conversion is only outward, not inward and sincere: they are like an ill-contrived bow, which never directs the arrow to the mark (compare Ps. lxviii. 57).

CHAPTER VIII.

ARGUMENT.—God's judgments are denounced both against Judah and Israel, for their idolatries and other impieties.

Ver. 1. Set the trumpet to thy mouth. He shall come as an eagle against the house of the Lord, because they have transgressed my covenant, and trespassed against my law.

2 Israel shall cry unto me, My God, we know thee.

3 Israel hath cast off the thing that is good: the enemy shall pursue him.

4 They have set up kings, but not by me: they have made princes, and I knew it not: of their silver and their gold have they made them idols, that they may be cut off.

5 ¶ Thy call, O Samaria, hath cast thee off; mine anger is kindled against them: how long will it be ere they attain to innocency?

6 For from Israel was it also: the workman made it; therefore it is not God: but the call of Samaria shall be broken in pieces.

7 For they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind: it hath no stalk: the bud shall am and Jezhul had done, or consulting me by any prophet.

Of their silver and their gold have they made them idols.] They have abused their wealth to idolatry, which will be the occasion of their destruction (see ii. 8).

Ver. 5. Thy call, O Samaria, hath cast thee off:] As the people of Samaria (see ver. 6) have cast off that which is good (ver. 3), so the call which they worship shall not protect or deliver them from the evils coming upon them, now my anger is kindled against them.

How long will it be ere they attain to innocency?] I shall no longer show any patience towards them, since it is in vain to expect any reformation from them.

Ver. 6. From Israel was it also:] This call, as well as that made in the wilderness (Exod. xxxii.), was an invocation of the Israelites, not borrowed from any of their neighbouring idolaters.

The call of Samaria shall be broken in pieces.] And carried for a present to the king of Assyria." (see 1 Kings x. 16-29).

Ver. 5.] Wherein they have really cast off the true worship of God, and with that everything that is good: and as a punishment of their impiety, their enemy the king of Assyria shall pursue them like a wild beast, and they shall become a prey to him (compare Ps. xcviii, 3; Lam. iii. 66, v. 5). Dr. Wells reads the verse according to the division he has made of this and the foregoing verse: "As for Israel, Israel hath cast off the thing that is good," &c.

Ver. 4. They have set up kings, but not by me:] Shallun, and Menahem, and Pekah, usurped the kingdom by murder and treason (2 Kings xv. 13, 14, 29): not by any declaration of my will, as Jerobo-
CHAPTER IX.

1 Rejoice not, O Israel, for joy, as other people: for thou hast gone a whoring from thy God, thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor.

2 The floor and the wine-press shall not feed them, and the new wine shall fail in her.

3 They shall not dwell in the Lord's land; Thou hast broken the covenant God made with thee, by serving other gods (see iv. 12, v. 4, 7), and hast offered the first-fruits, or tithes of thy increase, to idols, as an acknowledgment that the plenty thou enjoyest was their gift (see ii. 12, Jer. xiv. 17).

Ver. 2.] I will take away their plenty of corn and wine, as a just punishment of their ingratitude (see ii. 9, 12).

Ver. 3.] God will turn them out of that inheritance he gave to their fathers, and they shall be carried into captivity and bondage a second time into Egypt (see viii. 12). Their circumstances in captivity will

Ver. 4.] For Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples; and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities: but I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the palaces thereof.

12 I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing.

13 They sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of mine offerings, and eat it; but the Lord accepteth them not; now will he remember their iniquity, and visit their sins: they shall return to Egypt.

14 For Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples; and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities: but I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the palaces thereof.

Jer. xvi. 13), and be the occasion of bringing my severest judgments upon him.

Ver. 12.] That law which I gave them by Moses, containing rules excellent in themselves, and such as would have made them great in the eyes of their neighbours (Deut. iv. 6, 8), they have disregarded, as if it had neither reason nor authority.

Ver. 13. They sacrifice flesh—but the Lord accepteth them not.] Their sacrifices are not acceptable to God, being not brought with a religious mind (see ev. 6, ix. 4, Amos iv. 4). The Chaldee paraphrast renders the expression xibehababait, "the sacrifices of mine offerings," as if it meant "the sacrifices of extortion," such as were gotten by bribes and rapine, which still adds to the wickedness of the offerers (compare Amos ii. 8).

Now will he remember their iniquity.] See ix. 9, Amos vii. 7.

They shall return to Egypt.] As into a second bondage there, which God threatens the Jews as one of the severest judgments he could inflict upon them (Deut. xxvii. 6, see xvi. 11, ix. 3, 6 of this prophecy). Or the expression may denote, that they shall go into a state of captivity and bondage, as bad as that which they suffered in Egypt. "Going into Egypt" was a proverbial speech for extreme misery (see note upon Zech. v. 11).

Ver. 14. Buildeth temples.] To his idols, at Dan and Beth-el.

Judah hath multiplied fenced cities.] Judah puts greater confidence in their fortifications than in God's protection: but God's judgments shall destroy them as surely as if a fire had been kindled in them (compare Amos i. 4, &c.). God's vengeance is often compared to fire (see note upon Ezek. xxx. 8).
but Ephraim shall return to Egypt, and they shall eat unclean things in Assyria.

4 They shall not offer wine-offerings to the Lord, neither shall they be pleasing unto him: their sacrifices shall be unto them as the bread of mourners; all that eat thereof shall be polluted: for their bread for their soul shall not come into the house of the Lord.

5 What will ye do in the solemn day, and in the day of the feast of the Lord?

6 For, lo, they are gone because of destruction: Egypt shall gather them up, Memphis shall bury them: the pleasant places for their silver, nettles shall possess them: thorns shall be in their tabernacles.

7 The days of visitation are come, the days of recompense are come; Israel shall know it: the prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad, for the multitude of thine iniquity, and the great hatred.

8 The watchman of Ephraim was with my God: but the prophet is a snare of a fowler in all his ways, and hatred in the house of his God.

9 They have deeply corrupted themselves, as in the days of Gibeah: therefore he will remember their iniquity, he will visit their sins.

10 I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; I saw your fathers as the first-ripe in the fig-tree at her first time: but they went to Baal-peor, and separated themselves unto that shame; and their abominations were according as they loved.
Hosea.

11 As for Ephraim, their glory shall fly away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception.

12 Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them, that there shall not be a man left: yea, woe also to them when I depart from them!

13 Ephraim, as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: but Ephraim shall bring forth his children to the murderer.

14 Give them, O Lord: what wilt thou give? give them a miscarrying womb and dry breasts.

Idolatries which they committed (see Numb. xv. 39, Deut. xxxix. 19, Amos iv. 5).

Ver. 11.] The multitude of their people, in which they pride themselves (see x. 13), shall vanish out of sight like a bird (compare Prov. xxiii. 4): their women shall not be so fruitful as they have been heretofore.

Ver. 12. Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them.] If after the hazards of conception and childbearing, they should breed up their children to man's estate, yet will I make them childless, and bear them without, and famish and pine without, and make an entire riddance of them and their posterity (see Deut. xxvii. 62, xxxii. 25, Jer. xvi. 3).

Woe also to them when I depart! They shall feel what miseries shall befall them, when I withdraw my protection from them (see Deut. xxxix. 17, 2 Kings xvii. 18, 29).

Ver. 13.] The situation of Ephraim, and particularly of the royal city of Samaria, situate in that tribe, is as pleasant as that of Tyre (see Ezek. xxvii. 3). But though Tyre held out against the siege of Shalmaneser, as Josephus relates (Antiq. lib. ix. cap. xvil.), yet Ephraim and the whole kingdom of Israel (see x. 3) shall be subdued by him, and many of their children shall be a prey to his murdering sword.

Ver. 14.] The prophet speaks as if he were in suspense, their condition being so desperate, that nothing could relieve them. But, saith he, rather let their women be barren, than bring forth children only for the slaughter (see the foregoing verse and compare Luke xxiii. 29).

Ver. 15. All their wickedness is in Gilgal: (see iv. 15:) for there I hated them.] Or, "Therefore I hated them:" so the particle shum sometimes signifies (see Neldus, p. 766).

I will drive them out of mine house.] Compare i. 6. I will not any longer treat them as my domestics, but deliver them of the privilege of living in my land (ver. 3), of coming to my temple (ver. 4, 5), or enjoying any marks of my favour (ver. 17).

All their princes are revolters.] Their rulers and magistrates revolt from my worship, and break all the rules of justice and honesty (compare iv. 8, Isa. i. 23, Ezek. xxvii. 27, Mic. iii. 11, Zech. iii. 3).

Ver. 16. They shall bear no fruit.] They are like a tree that is blasted and dead at root, and only fit to be cut down.

Though they bring forth, &c.] See ver. 13.

Ver. 17.] He will no more own them for his people, but leave them to wander and be dispersed among the other nations. They were afterward called by the name of the serrati, or dispersed among the gentiles (see John vii. 55, James i. 1, 1 Pet. i. 1).

CHAPTER X.

1 Israel is an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself; according to the multitude of his fruit he hath increased the altars; according to the goodness of his land they have made goodly images.

2 Their heart is divided; now shall they be found faulty: he shall break down their altars, he shall spoil their images.

3 For now they shall say, We have no king, because we feared not the Lord; what then should a king do us?

4 They have spoken words, swearing falsely

They have made goodly images.] See ii. 8, viii. 4.

Ver. 2.] They think to divide their duty and affections between God and idols (see I Kings xviii. 21). This will manifestly appear in the punishment of their sin, when God shall destroy all the monuments of their idolatry (see ver. 5, 6, 8).

Ver. 3.] This verse relates to the time of anarchy, or an interregnum, which continued for eight or nine years, between the murder of Pekah and the settlement of Hosea in the throne (compare ver. 7, 15, and see Archbishop Usher's Annals, ad A. M. 3265, 3274).

What then should a king do to us?] Or rather, for us, as the phrase signifies, vi. 4, i. e. a king cannot protect us, if God be against us.

Ver. 4. Swearing falsely in making a covenant:] This may either relate to their breaking their solemn covenant with God (see v. 7): or their treachery towards their kings, against whom they had formed in making a covenant: thus judgment springeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field.

5 The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Beth-aven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and the priests thereof of that rejoiced on it, for the glory thereof, because it is departed from it.

6 It shall be also carried unto Assyria for a present to king Jareb: Ephraim shall receive shame, and Israel shall be ashamed of his own counsel.

7 As for Samaria, her king is cut off as the foam upon the water.

8 The high places also of Aven, the sin of several conspiracies (see 2 Kings xv. 10, 14, 25, 30).

This judgment springeth up as hemlock] Injustice being publicly countenanced, encourages the same practices in private men's dealings; thus, instead of judgment and fair dealing, injustice increases everywhere, as bitter and poisonous weeds grow up in a field, where there is no care taken to destroy them (compare Amos v. 7, vi. 12). The word rosh is sometimes translated gall, and in other places hemlock; and signifies some bitter poisonous herb expressed by a "root of bitterness," Hebrew xii. 15.

Ver. 5. Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Beth-aven ] Samaria here signifies the kingdom of Israel, of which Samaria was the capital city (see xiii. 3, 6). The inhabitants of that kingdom shall be seized with fear and confusion when the calf of Bethel (see iv. 15) shall be carried away as a present to Shalmaneser (ver. 6), when he made the king and kingdom of Israel tributary (2 Kings xvii. 3).

The Jewish writers have a tradition, that the golden calf at Dan was taken away by Tiglath-pileser, when he subdued Galilee (2 Kings xv. 20), and the other at Bethel by order of Shalmaneser. The plural number of the word calves, is an alludage for the singular: for the same idol is in this verse spoken of in the singular number (compare xiii. 2).

The priests thereof that rejoiced on it,] Dr. Pocock observes, that the word yapelin, translated rejoiced, is also used in a contrary signification, as several Hebrew words are for mannerwise, or being sorrowful, in which sense it is probably used, Job li. 32, Ps. li. 11, and then the sentence here may be word for word translated, "and the priests thereof shall sorrow over it." Both priests and people shall mourn and be sorrowful, when they see its glory departed from it (1 Sam. iv. 21), and it is no more the object of religious worship. The word kemanira, rendered priests, is translated "idolatrous priests," 2 Kings xxv. 5, but the original word is retained in our translation of Zeph. i. 5, which are all the places in which it occurs in the scriptures. From this word the Latin camillus, is derived, which in the primary signification denotes a priest.

Ver. 6. For a present to king Jareb ] King Jareb is a king that can plead their cause, and take them into his protection. As for Bethel, it is explained, v. 13, there it probably means Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, unto whom Menahem betook himself for safety; and here it seems to denote Shalmaneser, who took the Israelites into his protection by making them tributaries (see note on ver. 5).

Ephraim shall receive shame.] They shall see the unsuccessful of Jeroboam's policy in setting up this idolatrous worship, and their complying with it; and shall be ashamed to find that the idol in which they trusted, could not defend itself (compare xi. 6).

Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars; and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us.

9 O Israel, thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah: there they stood: the battle in Gibeah against the children of iniquity did not overtake them.

10 It is in my desire that I should chastise them; and the people shall be gathered against them, when they shall bind themselves in their two furrows.

11 And Ephraim is as an heifer that is taught, and loved to tread out the corn; but I passed.

Ver. 7.] This may probably be understood of Pekah, who was slain by Hoshea (see ver. 3). The king of Israel is styled king of Samaria, 1 Kings xxi. 1, 2, 2 Kings i. 3, as being the capital city of that kingdom.

Ver. 8. The high places also of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed. ] Aven is the same with Beth-aven, ver. 5. The idolatrous temples were usually placed upon mountains (see iv. 13); so was that at Beth-el, called the high places, the plural number being often used in the Hebrew to express a thing spoken of to be eminent or remarkable in its kind. The idolatry here practised is called the sin of Israel, as being such in an eminent manner (see Jer. ix. 2). So Jeroboam is said to "make Israel to sin," by setting up this idolatrous worship (see 1 Kings xii. 30, xiii. 34).

The thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars;] Such usually growing among ruins (see ix. 6).

And they shall say to the mountains, Cover us, &c.] The words express the great consternation of the wicked, when God's judgments overtake them, whose guilt prompts them to cast about where to hide themselves (compare Isa. ii. 19, Luke xxiii. 30, Rev. vi. 16).

Ver. 9. Thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah.] See ix. 9. Some render it, "More than in the days of Gibeah."

There they stood.] The other tribes set themselves in array of battle against the Benjamites, who refused to deliver up the men who had been guilty of so much lewdness (see Judg. xx. 13).

The battle in Gibeah—did not overtake them.] The other tribes did not at first get the better of the Benjamites, though at last they cut all of them off but six hundred (see Judg. xx. 40, 47). But if the same thing were to be done now, you would not have the zeal or courage to encounter any such offenders.

Ver. 10. It is in my desire that I should chastise them;] I shall take pleasure in punishing them for their sins, and shall now "rejoice over them to destroy them," Dent. xxxiii. 68.

The people shall be gathered against them.] Either the Assyrians, whose alliance they formerly sought after; or those people whose idolatry they had complied with (see Ezek. xxi. 3). When they shall bind themselves in their two furrows.] The LXV. give a much plainer and easier sense of the words, who follow the marginal reading of the Hebrew, and render it, "When I shall chastise them for their two iniquities," viz. the calves of Dan and Beth-el (compare ver. 5).

Ver. 11.] The sense would run easier if we read it, "Ephraim is as a heifer that is teachable—so I passed over her fair neck. I caused Ephraim to ride, Judah did plough, and Jacob did break the eels." God sets over upon her fair neck: I will make Ephraim to ride; Judah shall plow, and Jacob shall break his cedars.

12 Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground: for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you.

13 Ye have plowed wickedness, ye have reap'd iniquity; ye have eaten the fruit of lies: before the gentle and easy methods he used to bring both Israel and Judah to a sense of their duty; treating them with gentleness, as a husbandman does young bullocks or horses, stroking them, and encouraging them, till they are accustomed to the yoke; then he gave them his law, and prescribed him rules for the several duties and offices of life, and expected they should bring forth fruit answerable to the several helps and advantages which he had given them. Men's improvements in grace are often compared to the manuring of ground, in order to make it fruitful; so the church is styled "God's vineyard," Isa. v. 9, and his "husbandry," I Cor. iii. 9.

Ver. 12. Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy.] Employ yourselves in works of justice and righteousness: and by God's mercy you may still hope to reap the fruits of your repentance and reformation.

Break up your fallow ground.] You have lain a long while uncultivated, so it is time for you to repent and bring forth the fruits of good living: and you shall not fail of God's blessing upon your sincere endeavours, to make you more and more fruitful. Ver. 13. Ye have plowed wickedness, &c.] As your thoughts and designs have been evil, such has been the fruit and reward of your labours (compare viii. 7).

Ye have eaten the fruit of lies:] You have received the just rewards of your idolatry (see note on vii. 3).

Then didst trust in thy way.] See ix. 11, xiii. 15. This way may signify that way of worship which thou hast devised: so the word is taken, Amos viii. 14 (see note there).

Ver. 14. A tumult arise among thy people.] This points at the taking Samaria, after a three years' siege, by Shalmaneser king of Assyria; which put a final period to the kingdom of Israel (see 2 Kings xvii. 6).

As Shalman spoiled Beth-arbel] The prophet compares the destruction of Samaria with another terrible desolation, which the same Shalmaneser, called here Shalman, made at Beth-arbel, a place in Armenia (famous afterward for the defeat of Darius, the last king of Persia, by Alexander), where all the inhabitants were put to the sword, without any distinction either of sex or age (compare xiii. 10).

Ver. 15. So shall Beth-el do unto you because of your great wickedness:] In a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off.

In a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off.] Suddenly shall Hosea be deprived of his kingdom, and an end put to the whole state and government of Israel. The expression in the Hebrew denotes the "first appearing of the morning," to signify that it shall be done early and without delay: so we read, Ps. xlvii. 3, "God shall help her, and that right early." when the Hebrew reads, "At the appearing of the morning," and again, Ps. xc. 13, exllii. 8. The same thing is elsewhere expressed by "rising early," Jer. vii. 13, xxxv. 15. The expression here may allude to the destruction of Pharaoh and his army when "the morning appeared," Exod. xiv. 27.

CHAPTER XI.

1 When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt.

2 As they called them, so they went from them: they sacrificed unto Baalim, and burned incense to graven images.

3 I taught Ephraim also to go, taking them by their arms; which is observable in many other prophecies, which can but improperly be applied to those of whom they were at first spoken, and taking them in their true and genuine sense, are only fulfilled in Christ (see particularly Ps. xxi. 16, 15).

Ver. 2. As they called them, so they went from them.] Or, "The more they called them," or "they were called (the active being often used for the impersonal), so much the more they went from them," (see Noldius, p. 436). The more earnestly the prophets called upon them to cleave steadfastly to the true God (see ver. 7), the more they were bent to depart from him to the worship of idols.

They sacrificed unto Baalim.] See the note upon lii. 13, and xiii. 1.

Ver. 3. I taught Ephraim also to go, taking them by their arms:] In this time of childhood (ver. 1) I bare him, and carried him "as a man doth bear his son," Deut. i. 31; or, As a mother doth teach her
CHAPTER XI.

8 How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboil? mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together.

9 I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim: for I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee: and I will not enter into the city.

10 They shall walk after the Lord: he shall roar like a lion: when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west.

11 They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria: and I will place them in their houses, saith the Lord.

give thee up to be a perpetual desolation (compare Deut. xxix. 23).

Mine heart is turned within me.] Thus God's compassion towards sinners is elsewhere expressed by the sounding or yearning of his bowels, Isa. lxiii. 15. Jer. xxxi. 20, a metaphor taken from the natural affection which parents have for their children.

Ver. 9. I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy] I will not deal with them like an enraged enemy, who thinks of nothing but satisfying his revenge: I will not, like such a one, "return to destroy," i.e. make a second destruction, so as to cut off those that escape the first fury of my vengeance: I do not give way to a blind rage, as men often do; but, as God, an unchangeable, and will still fulfil my gracious promises made to Abraham, and his people, of being their God (compare Mal. iii. 6).

I will not enter into the city.] A second time, in order to make an utter destruction.

Ver. 10. They shall walk after the Lord: he shall roar like a lion.] They shall follow God's call, and comply with his commands; when he shall convert them by an efficacious call of his providence, or powerful preaching of the gospel. God's voice is elsewhere compared to the roaring of a lion, because of the terror which accompanies it (see Joel iii. 16, Amos i. 8, Rev. x. 3).

Then the children shall tremble from the west.] The word tremble describes the motion which a bird makes with her wings when it flies; see the following verse. So the sense is, That at this efficacious call of God, his children, the remnant of Israel, who shall be accounted his children, and heirs of the promises made to their fathers (see i. 10), shall come in haste from the several places of their dispersions, and particularly from the western parts of the world (see Zech. viii. 7; called the sea in the original, and expressed in Isaiah, by "the islands of the sea," (see Isa. xi. 11, xxiv. 14, and the notes there).

Ver. 11. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt [i.e. fly with haste; see the foregoing note], as a dove out of—Assyria.] Great numbers of Jews were exiles in Egypt and Assyria: so when the restoration of the Jews is spoken of, Egypt and Assyria are mentioned as countries from whence a considerable number of them should return (see the note upon ix. 3, 6).

I will place them in their houses.] As doves naturally resort to the houses they are used to (see Isa. lx. 15), so shall these return and settle in their own native country (see the note upon Ezek. xxviii. 25).

Ver. 12. Ephraim compasseth me about with lies.] In several translations this verse begins the twelfth chapter, as of right it ought to do: for the reproof 12 Ephraim compasseth me about with lies; and the house of Israel with deceit: but Judah which God gives here to Israel belongeth to the subject of the following chapter: and sets forth the ten tribes abounding in all manner of idolatry and wickedness (see the note upon vii. 3).

Jehudah yet ruleth with God, and is faithfull with the saints.] Judah keeps close to that kindly government which God settled in David's family, and faithfully observes those ordinances which God gave to his saints by Moses (see Deut. xxxiii. 3); by which they were to be distinguished to be a holy nation, and God's peculiar people. This relates to the times of Hezekiah.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Ephraim feedeth on wind, and followeth after the east wind: he daily increaseth lies and desolation; and they do make a covenant with the Assyrians, and oil is carried into Egypt.

2 The Lord hath also a controversy with Judah, and will punish Jacob according to his ways; according to his doings will he recompense him.

3 ¶ He took his brother by the heel in the womb, and by his strength he had power with God:

CHAP. XII.

Argument.—The prophet reproves both Israel and Judah for their impieties, and puts them in mind of God's favours to their father Jacob, for which they made most ungrateful returns.

Ver. 1. Ephraim feedeth on wind, and followeth after the east wind:] A proverbial expression to signify labour in vain, or pursuing such measures as will bring damage rather than benefit (compare viii. 7). The east wind was a parching wind, which blasted the fruit of the earth: thence it denotes desolation and destruction (see xiii. 15).

They do make a covenant with the Assyrians, &c.] At the same time that they engage themselves to be tributaries to the king of Assyria, they underhand send presents to the king of Egypt, that he should assist them in shaking off that yoke (see 2 Kings xvii. 4). The land of Judah had plenty of excellent oil (see Deut. vii. 8, Ezek. xxvii. 17).

Ver. 2.] See iv. 1. Though Hezekiah had abolished idolatry, and restored God's worship in the temple (2 Chron. xxix. 3, xxx. 1), yet there was much hypocrisy and great corruption in the manners of his subjects; for which God's judgments are here threatened, and the invasion of Sennacherib was actually inflicted (2 Kings xviii. 13, &c.).

Ver. 3. He took his brother by the heel in the womb.] From the mentioning of Jacob in the foregoing verse, the prophet takes occasion to put his posterity in mind of the particular favours God had shown him, and bestowed upon his posterity for his sake. His taking his brother "by the heel" in the womb, denoted that he obtained the right of the first-born, and deprived his brother of it.

Ibid. and ver. 4. By his strength he had power with God: yea, he had power over the angel and prevailed.] The prophet alludes to those words of his, Gen. xxxii. 29, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me;" intimating the strength and prevalency of his prayers for the obtaining a blessing from God. The words, ver. 3, "He had power with God," and those that follow, "He had power over the angel," are equivalent; which plainly prove that this person who assumed a human shape was really God; i. e. "the Son of God," and the "angel of the covenant," by whom all the divine appearances recorded in the Old Testament were performed; the affairs of the church being ordered by him from the beginning. This subject is learnedly handled by Dr. Alix, in his Judgment of the Jewish Church against the Unitarians, ch. 13—15, by Archbishop Tenison, in his discourse of Idolatry, ch. 14, and by Bishop Ball, Defen. Fid. Nicen. cap. 1, sect. 1.

Ver. 4. He wept, and made supplication unto him.] Jacob's wrestling with the angel was not only a corporal conflict, but likewise a spiritual one: from bodily wrestling he betook him to spiritual weapons: he poured forth tears with earnest supplications and prayers, and strove not so much for victory as for a blessing; the only way for a feble, impotent creature, to prevail over his Creator. Jacob's supplication and tears may probably relate to those earnest prayers he made, Gen. xxxii. 9—11. The combat here referred to, by which he had power with God, ended in an assurance that his prayers were answered.

He found him in Beth-el.] This relates to God's appearing to Jacob after the former vision, Gen. xxxv. 9, 14, where God renewed his promise of giving the land of Judea to his posterity. The prophet takes particular notice of the place where he appeared, viz. Beth-el, which they had since so miserably polluted by idolatry.

There he spake with us:] The Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint reads, "There he spake with him;" as if the expression alluded to Gen. xxxv. 14, where God is said "to have talked with Jacob:" but the present Hebrew reading yields a very good sense, importing that God did not only speak to him there, but likewise did instruct us not to set up an idol in that place which he had honoured with his presence.

Ver. 5.] Jehovah is the name by which he will be known, and remembered by all his servants, and distinguished from all false gods (see Exod. iii. 5).

Ver. 6.] Return to him and serve him faithfully, and thou mayst expect the continuance of his favours, and his making good the promises he made to your fathers.

Ver. 7.] Instead of keeping mercy and judgment (ver. 6), he loves those frauds and deceits, which are too commonly practised in buying and selling; and forgets those laws of God, which require the use of "just weights and measures" (see Lev. xix. 35, 36, Prov. xi. 1).
CHAPTER XII.

8 And Ephraim said, Yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance: in all my labours they shall find none iniquity in me that were sin.
9 And I that am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt will yet make thee to dwell in tabernacles, as in the days of the solemn feasts.
10 I have also spoken by the prophets, and I have multiplied visions, and used similitudes, by the ministry of the prophets.
11 Is there iniquity in Gilead? surely they are vanity: they sacrifice bullock’s in Gilgal; yea, their altars are as heaps in the furrows of the fields.

12 And Jacob fled into the country of Syria, and Israel served for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep.
13 And by a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved.
14 Ephraim provoked him to anger most bitterly: therefore shall he leave his blood upon him, and his reproach shall his Lord return unto him.

Ver. 8. Yet I am become rich.] He pleneth himself with the thoughts that his riches increase, not withstanding his unjust dealings; and from thence concludes that God is not displeased with him, nor will lay his injustice to his charge.

They shall find none iniquity in me that were sin.] Or, "They shall find neither iniquity nor sin:" the particle after is sometimes taken in a copulative sense (see Eccles. v. 13). The words translated iniquity and sin are equivalent (see Ps. xxxii. 5).

Ver. 9. I that am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt.] Who brought thee out from thence, and have still continued my favours towards thee (compare ver. 13, xiii. 4).

Ver. 10.] Here are three species of prophecy or divine revelation distinctly mentioned: first, immediate suggestion or inspiration, when God dictates or suggests the very words which the prophet was to deliver: secondly, visions, or a representation made of external objects to the imagination in as lively a manner as if they were conveyed by the senses; and, thirdly, parables, or apt resemblances; such as that of God’s church to a "vineyard," Isa. v. 1, of the destruction of Jerusalem to a "forest set on fire," Ezek. xx. 46, 49, and to a "soothing-pot," xxiv. 3. Hosen himself was a parable or type to the Jews in taking a "wife of whoredoms to represent the idolatries of the house of Israel, whereby they went a whoring after strange gods, and forsook the Lord their king and husband." It was an ancient custom in the eastern parts of the world, to convey instructions under symbols and sacred hyerogliphics: Pythagoras learned this method in his travels in the East, and the conversation he had there with the Jews, and other wise men of those parts. God said here, that he had inspired his prophets in these different ways to bring his people to repentance, but all in vain. Some interpreters understand the words in the future tense, "I will also speak by the prophets;" as if God had promised to give some new effusion of his Spirit in the latter days to facilitate the Jews’ conversion (see the note upon Isa. li. 13).

Ver. 11. Is there iniquity in Gilead? If we read the former part of the sentence with an interrogative, it might be more significantly rendered, "Is there not iniquity in Gilead?" So the particle in signifies, Esth. iv. 14, Jer. xxxii. 20. However, the words are in sense a vehement affirmation, importing that the idolatry practised in Gilead (see vi. 8), could not preserve him from being carried away captive by Tiglath-pilesar (2 Kings xv. 20).

They sacrifice bullock’s in Gilgal.] Notwithstanding this judgment of God upon Gilead, and the country on the other side Jordan, they continue to offer sacrifices to their idols in Gilead (see iv. 15). Their altars stand so thick, that they are discernible as stones gathered up and laid in heaps in the fields (see vii. 11, x. 1). Some understand the sentence as containing a threatening, that their altars should be demolished, and become so many ruinous heaps (2 Kings xix. 25). The word gulim, heaps, alludes to Gilgal, just before mentioned, a name derived from the same original. Some commentators explain the whole verse to this sense; That the whole kingdom of Israel, that part which is beyond Jordan, where Gilead stood, as well as the other parts on this side that river, and particularly Gilgal, are polluted with idolatry.

Ver. 12.] In this, and the following verse, the prophet reproves their ingratitude, by putting them in mind from what small beginnings God raised them to a mighty nation; that their ancestor Jacob (mentioned before, ver. 3, 4), was fain to fly for his life to Laban in Syria, and sustain himself, and raise his family by keeping his uncle’s flock (compare Deut. xxvi. 5).

Ver. 13.] And afterward, when his posterity were detained in a miserable bondage in Egypt, God delivered them hence, and miraculously preserved them at the Red sea, and in the wilderness, by the hand of Moses (compare xiii. 4, 5).

Ver. 14. Ephraim provoked him to anger most bitterly.] Notwithstanding all my favours shown to these people and their ancestors, they have provoked me by their idolatries, and other sins, in a most outrageous manner. The word tamruvrim, translated "most bitterly," Schindler renders, "by his heaps;" i.e. his altars, which stood as heaps in the field, ver. 12 (compare Jer. xxxi. 21).

Ver. 15.] Therefore shall he leave his blood upon him.] Or, "His blood shall return upon him," as the Chaldee paraphrase renders it: his wickedness will be the cause of his destruction (see xiii. 9).

His reproach shall his Lord return unto him.] He has reproached and dishonoured God by word and deed, and God shall in a just recompence make him a reproach and by-word among the heathen (see vii. 16, Deut. xxviii. 37; compare Dan. xi. 18).
CHAPTER XIII.

ARGUMENT.—A continuation of God's threatenings for their sins; to which are added gracious promises of deliverance from death, to be fulfilled under the gospel.

Ver. 1. When Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel;] While he behaved himself submissively and obediently towards God, he was reckoned among the principal tribes of Israel. Here Ephraim is spoken of as distinct from Israel; in other places of this prophecy he is put for the whole kingdom of the ten tribes (see v. 3).

But when he offended in Baal, he died.] When he gave himself to idolatry, his strength immediately declined, and had manifest symptoms of ruin and destruction; as when a man falls into a languishing condition, it is the certain forerunner of death. The word Baal is here taken in a general sense, for all false gods, or idolatrous ways of worship; so as to comprehend the worship of the golden calves, though they were designed for symbolical representations of the true God: in which sense the word Baalim may be understood, ii. 13, xi. 2. To the same sense we may most probably explain that text, 1 Kings xix. 18. "Yet have I left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal." meaning that small remnant of the faithful in Israel, who had stuck close to the worship of the true God, when the whole body of the people had complied with that idolatry which Jeroboam set up and authorized as the national religion (compare Tobit i. 5).

Ver. 2. Have made them molten images—according to their own understanding.] Or, "according to their invention," or fancy. They please themselves with some new piece of idolatry, as their fancy or imagination suggests (compare x. 1).

They say of them [or, to them] Let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves.] Compare 1 Kings xix. 18. The word adoration properly signifies kissing the hand, and making obeisance to the object of worship: so Job describes the adoration which the ancient idolaters paid to the heavenly bodies, xxxi. 26. Afterward the same outward act of worship was paid to images; as appears by a noted passage at the beginning of Minucius Felix's Octavius. Sometimes they kissed the image itself; as appears by the description Cicero gives of Hercules's image, which Verres had taken away, act 4, in Verrem, and by those noted verses of Lucretius, lib. i.

Ver. 3. I did know thee in the wilderness, in the land of great drought. According to their pasture, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me.

Therefore I will be unto them as a lion: as a leopard by the way will I observe them: I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rend the caul of their heart, and there will I devour them like a lion: the wild beast shall tear them.

O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thine help.

I will be thy king: where is any other that may save thee in all thy cities? and thy judges

Some translate zibhe adam, "the sacrifices of men;" i. e. those who offered human sacrifices: but this was an execrable piece of worship paid to Moloch, but never practised, that we find, at Dan or Beth-el. Our interpreters render the words zibhe adam, very properly, "the men that sacrifice;" as the phrase etzioni adam, signifies "the poor among men," Isa. xxix. 19.

Ver. 3.] Comparisons that express their sudden disappearing and coming to nothing (compare vi. 4, Dan. ii. 35).

In thy distress thou beookest thyself to other gods, expecting relief from them; but thou shalt find that none will be able to save thee but myself, whenever thou wilt sincerely turn to me (compare xii. 9, Isa. xlix. 11). This and the following verse are an introduction to the gracious promises that follow, ver. 9, 14, and ch. xiv. and import, that God will never utterly forget the promises made to their fathers (see Rom. xi. 29).

I took especial care of thee, fed and sustained thee for forty years in the wilderness, a place destitute of all conveniences of life: the words are taken out of Deut. ii. 7. To know, often signifies, in the scripture phrase, to have a regard for, or take care of. See Exod. ii. 23, Ps. i. 7, xxxi. 8, exliii. 3, Prov. xii. 10, Nah. i. 7, where our translation renders it regard.

The more care I took to provide plentifully for them, both before and after they came into the land of promise, the more perverse they showed themselves towards me; their pride made them forget me their great benefactor. The expression al- ludes to Deut. viii. 12, 14 (see likewise xxi. 15).

I will utterly consume them from being a nation, and give them up into the hands of such enemies as will show them no mercy (compare ver. 16, and Jer. v. 6).

Thy own shee have brought down destruction upon thee; and it is from me only thou canst expect any help, which I will in due time afford thee (see the note upon ver. 4).

I will be thy king: where is any other that may save thee? God promises to be their immediate protector upon their repentance. But the words may better be translated, "Where is thy king now, that he may save thee?" &c. In this sense the LXX. understand the words, and several other interpreters; the word ehi being taken for ajeb, by a freof whom thou saist, Give me a king and princes?

11 I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath.

12 The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up; his sin is hid.

13 The sorrows of a travelling woman shall come upon him: he is an unwise son; for he should not stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children.

14 I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, quent transposition of letters, as it is used again, ver. 14. The words either relate to the anarchy, which continued for some years, between the murder of Pekah and the succession of Hoshea (see x. 3); or else to the time when Hoshea was deposed and imprisoned by the king of Assyria (see 2 Kings xvii. 4).

Give me a king and princes? They desired a king to judge them like other nations, attended by his judges and proper officers (see 1 Sam. viii. 5, 12).

Ver. 11. I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away (or, will take him away) in my wrath. I complied with your request in giving you your first king Saul, though I was justly displeased at it (see 1 Sam. viii. 7, x. 19). And of later times I have suffered you to set up new kings, after you had murdered their predecessors (see vii. 4); and now I will remember against you, O king Hoshea, and at the same time put an end to your kingdom and nation.

Ver. 12.] Our translators seem to understand the verse in a favourable sense, as if God had promised not to execute that vengeance upon Israel which was due to their sins: but the words rather imply a contrary meaning, and may be better translated, O the iniquity of Ephraim is treasured up; his sin is laid up, i.e. it is laid up in my memory: and though the punishment due to it has been resented for some time, yet now the season is come when it shall be put in execution. The sentence is equivalent to that expression in Job, xiv. 17, "My transgression is sealed up in a bag," i.e. thou keepest an exact account of it, as men do money, which they shall deliver back on occasion. To the same purpose are those words of Moses, Deut. xxxii. 34, 35, "Is not this laid up in store for me, and sealed up among my treasures? To me belongs vengeance," &c. (compare Rom. ii. 5).

Ver. 13. The sorrows of a travelling woman shall come upon him: Great calamities are often compared to the pains of child-birth (see Isa. xlii. 8, Jer. xxx. 6, Ps. xviii. 4, and so the Greek word ἠμοί is used, Acts ii. 24).

For he should not stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children. The old translation reads it to a plainer sense, else he would not stand still like a still-born child. As a child, if it could be supposed to have understanding, would deliver itself out of the straits of the womb, and not tarry there to the manifest danger of itself and the mother (compare 2 Kings xix. 3): so if Ephraim, or Israel had acted wisely, they would have prevented their approaching destruction by a speedy reformation.

Ver. 14. I will ransom them from the power of the grave: If we apply this to Ephraim, or the Israelites spoken of before, it may signify, that though they be in never so hopeless and desperate a condition, God will, in due time, deliver them out of it (see the like expressions, Ps. xxxi. 3, lxxi. 20, lxxxvi. 13). But there is a more sublime and spiritual sense contained in the words, as will appear by the following note.

O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: It is usual for the prophets, when they foretell temporal deliverances, to carry away beyond their first views by the impetus of the prophetic spirit, to predict the greater mercies and deliverances which belong to the gospel state: so here the prophet takes occasion from the telling temporal mercies, to enlarge his views, and set forth that great and final deliverance of the faithful from the power of sin and death, which shall be completed by Christ at his second coming, when he shall swallow up death in victory," I Cor. xv. 54. St. Paul understood the words in this sense in the following verse of that chapter, "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?" This will appear to any one, that compares that place with the Septuagint translation here. The word ἐνθι, translated I will, they render where, as it signifies, ver. 10 of this chapter. The apostle, indeed, seems to quote this text from his memory, and rather represents the sense of it, than keeps close to the letter. However, the learned Dr. Pocock is of opinion, in his comment upon this place, that the Hebrew word debareka, rendered by our interpreters thy plagues, and by the LXX. thy plea, sentence, or judgment, is very properly translated thy sting by St. Paul; the word denoting, in Arabic, 'the sharp point of a bird's claw," and the word debarah, a bee, being a name occasioned from it. Ver. 15. Though he be fruitful among his brethren, an east wind shall come, &c. The word Ephraim denotes fruitfulness (see Gen. xlii. 52). This tribe answered his name, being the most numerous and potent of all the ten tribes (see the note upon v. 3). Notwithstanding the pride he takes in his fruitful ness (see x. 10), the king of Assyria, a country lying eastward of Judea, shall come with an army, like a parching east wind coming over a large plain or wilderness, and shall blast and wither him, as a tree that is dried up for want of moisture (compare iv. 19, and see the note upon Jer. iv. 11).

He shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels. The same enemy shall plunder all their treasuries, and the rich furniture, as the word kelee is translated, Nah. ii. 9.

Ver. 16. Samaria shall become desolate; The prophet foretells the final destruction of Samaria for her idolatry and other impieties, by Shalmaneser king of Assyria (see 2 Kings xvii. 6).

Their infants shall be dashed in pieces; These are the barbarous practices of conquerors, when they take cities by storm, to put all to the sword, without distinction of age or sex (see x. 15, 2 Kings viii. 12, xv. 16, Isa. xiii. 16, Amos i. 13, Nah. iii. 10).
1. O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.
2. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord: say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips.
3. Assyria shall not save us: we will not ride upon horses: neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.
4. ¶ I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from him.
5. I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon.
6. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon.
7. They that dwell under his shadow shall return: they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.
8. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him, and observed him: I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found.
9. Who is wise, and he shall understand these things: these are the gifts in renouncing all sorts of idol-worship; which is often spoken of in the prophets, as an introduction to that state of the church which is to commence from the time of the Jews' conversion (compare ii. 17, and see the note on Isa. i. 29). God interprets all image-worship, or creature-worship, as terminating in the image or creature to which it is offered.

Chapter XIV.

ARGUMENT.—The prophecy concludes with an earnest exhortation to repentance, and God's gracious promises of pardon and blessing upon it.

Ver. 1. Thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.] Thy sins have been the cause of thy destruction (see xiii. 9).

Ver. 2. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord.] The prophet prescribes them a form of confession very proper to be used upon their repentance and conversion, beseeching God to pardon their past sins, and receive them graciously upon their repentance. Such another form we have, Joel ii. 17.

And receive us graciously.] The latter part of the sentence may be rendered, "And give us what is good."" besow thy grace and blessing upon us. Many Hebrew verbs have two contrary significations, as hath been observed upon Isa. xxii. 18. To the instances there collected, we may add one taken out of xi. 8, of this prophecy; where the verb miggen signifies to deliver up, whereas its usual signification is to protect. So the verb lakah here used probably signifies to give, as well as to receive: as appears from Ps. lxviii. 15, where our translation reads, "Thou hast received gifts for men:" but the LXX. render it, "Thou hast given gifts unto men;" which sense St. Paul follows, Eph. iv. 8, and which best agrees with the scope of the text.

So will we render the calves of our lips.] Instead of the sacrifices of calves or bullocks, we will offer to thee the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, which is "the fruit of our lips," our "reasonable service," and such as properly belongs to the times of the gospel. So that this form of confession will be most suitable for the Jews to use upon their conversion to Christianity. St. Paul applies the words to the unchristian (Heb. xiii. 13) the true Christian sacrifice; and follows the Septuagint translation of them, which expresses the sense rather than the words.

Ver. 3. Assyhr shall not save us.] The first part of the people's repentance is described as consisting in relying solely upon God's protection, and not putting their trust in human strength; and then is renouncing all idolatrous worship. The Israelites had formerly made an alliance with the Assyrians (see v. 16); and they were often abroad by the prophets for their courting foreign alliances, and particularly strengthening themselves with horses from Egypt or Assyria (see 2 Chron. xvi. 7, Isa. xxx. 16, xxxvi. 8).

Neither will we say—to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods.] Another part of their repentance consists in renouncing all sorts of idol-worship; which is often spoken of in the prophets, as an introduction to that state of the church which is to commence from the time of the Jews' conversion (compare ii. 17, and see the note on Isa. i. 29). God interprets all image-worship, or creature-worship, as terminating in the image or creature to which it is offered.

For in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.] It is the property of God to be the "helper of the friendless," or fatherless (see Ps. x. 10). The Chaldee expresses the sense very well, " Thou didst take pity upon our forefathers, when they were like fatherless children in Egypt" (compare Ps. lxviii. 5).

Ver. 4.] God's gracious answer to their professions of repentance; assuring them of his being reconciled to them, and as a token of it freeing them from their sins, and the punishment due to them (compare xi. 7), and embracing them with a true love and affection, without any remembrance of their former provocations (compare Zeph. iii. 17).

Ver. 5. I will be as the dew unto Israel.] This and the following verse contain gracious promises of God's favours and blessing upon Israel's conversion, represented by different metphrases; described in this sentence by the refreshing dew which large drops give to the grass in the heats of summer (compare Job xxxix. 19, Prov. xix. 12), Cast forth his roots as Lebanon.] As a tree of Lebanon, as the Chaldee paraphrase explains it.

Ver. 6. His beauty shall be as the olive tree.] Compare Ps. lii. 8, cxviii. 9, Eccles. xxiv. 12, l. 10. His smell as Lebanon.] From the trees of Lebanon came many sweet spices, particularly frankincense, called Lebanon in Hebrew, from whence some derive the word Lebanon (compare Cant. iv. 11).

Ver. 7. They that dwell under his shadow shall return.] Most interpreters translate the sentence thus: "They shall return and dwell under his shadow;" 1 e. They shall return into their own country, and rest safely under the shadow or protection of the Almighty (compare Ps. xci. 1, and see the note upon i. 11). The scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.] As fragrant and as pleasing as the richest wines, such as were made near Lebanon; where there was a city called by the Greeks Ampelnessa, for the excellence of its wine; as is related by Pliny, lib. v. cap. 18.

Ver. 8.] This verse contains a dialogue between God and Ephraim, or Israel his people (see v. 3) after their conversion. They begin with declaring their utter aversion to idolatry (see ver. 3). To which God graciously replies, that he has heard them confessing their sins, and expressing their abhorrence of them.
things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein.

of perverse and disobedient tempers take offence at God's commands, and repine against his providence, to their own ruin and perdition. The same sense is expressed in that observation of the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xxxix. 24, "As God's ways are plain to the holy, so are they stumbling-blocks to the workers of iniquity." To the same purpose are these words of Christ, "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice," John xviii. 37, and "He that is of God heareth God's words," viii. 47. And St. Peter says, that "Christ is become a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence to the disobedient," 1 Pet. ii. 8. The observation of Grotius is very remarkable on this subject, De Verit. Christian. Relig. lib. ii. cap. ult., where he says, that the doctrine of the gospel was designed to be unequam lapis lydius, ad quem ingenia sanabili.s explorarentur: "as a touch-stone, to try the tempers of men, whether they were corrigible or not."

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET JOEL.

PREFACE.

If it were certain that the minor prophets were placed in the order of time wherein they lived, we might conclude that Joel prophesied before Amos, who was contemporary with Uzziah king of Judah. Archbishop Usher, in his Annals, ad A. M. 3197, makes the same inference, because Joel foretells that drought (ch. i.) which Amos mentions as actually to come pass (iv. 7—9). But to that argument it may be answered, that the drought there spoken of might probably be peculiar to the kingdom of Israel. And as to the precedence which the present Hebrew copies give to Joel, the LXX. place him the fourth in order, and put Amos and Micah before him.

If we consider the main design of his prophecy, we shall be apt to conclude, that it was uttered after the captivity of the ten tribes; for he directs his discourse only to Judah, and speaks distinctly of the sacrifices and oblations that were daily made in the temple. Israel is indeed mentioned, iii. 2, but it is in relation to future times, not to their present condition at the time when Joel prophesied.

CHAPTER I.

1 The word of the Lord that came to Joel the son of Pethuel.
2 Hear this, ye old men, and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land. Hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers?

ARGUMENT.—A description of a terrible flames that is coming on the land, occasioned by a long drought, and the locusts, and other noxious vermin which that produced: with an exhortation to proclaim a fast to be observed by the people, that they may humble themselves under the hand of God, and avert his judgments.

Ver. 2, 3.] The prophet shows how great and un-paralled this dearth is, by appealing to the memory of the ancients, and the observation of the present generation, whether they ever knew or heard anything like it; so that it deserved to be recorded as a warning to aftertimes (compare ii. 2).

Ver. 4.] A succession of noxious creatures hath made a perfect independence of all the fruits of the earth, which makes this judgment so strange and remarkable.

Ver. 5.] This calamity should particularly affect those that spend their time in jollity and excess, and left hath the cankerworm eaten; and that which the cankerworm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten.

5 Awake, ye drunkards, and weep; and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; for it is cut off from your mouth.

6 For a nation is come upon my land, strong, and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek teeth of a great lion.

7 He hath laid my vine waste, and barked my fig tree: he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white.

8 ¶ Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth.

9 The meat-offering and the drink-offering is cut off from the house of the Lord; the priests, the Lord's ministers, mourn.

10 The field is wasted, the land mourneth: for the corn is wasted: the new wine is dried up, the oil languisheth.

11 Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vine-dressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished.

12 The vine is dried up, and the fig tree languisheth; the pomegranate tree, the palm tree also, and the apple tree, even all the trees of the field, are withered: because joy is withered away from the sons of men.

13 Gird yourselves, and lament, ye priests; howl, ye ministers of the altar: come, lie all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God: for the meat-offering and the drink-offering is withholden from before your God.

14 ¶ Sanctify ye a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the Lord your God, and cry unto the Lord.

15 Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come.

16 Is not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, joy and gladness from the house of our God?

17 The seed is rotten under their clods, the make that the chief business of their life (compare Isa. xxiv. 7—9, 11). It carries along with it evident tokens of being sent as a punishment for their disorders.

Ver. 6. For a nation is come upon my land,

Insects are described as a nation, or people marching in order under their leaders, both by sacred and profane writers, because of their power to do mischief, and their being irresistible by human strength or art (compare ii. 2, 25, Prov. xxx. 25—27).

Whose teeth are [as] the teeth of a lion, So the locusts are described, Rev. ix. 8. They devour everything that comes in their way, like a lion, and none can rescue it. The particle as is frequently understood (see the note upon Isa. xxx. 1). The word labi is sometimes rendered a great lion, as it is here: lions being common in Judea, the Hebrew language hath particular words to express the several ages and sizes of that creature.

Ver. 7.] Bochart, De Animal. par. ii. p. 469, n. 447, observes out of Pliny and other writers, that locusts and such noxious creatures will not only destroy the leaves, but the fruit, but even devour the very boughs and stock of those trees upon which they fasten (compare ver. 12). The word translated barked, is read but in this one place of the bible; so the LXX. and some others, render it to break off, and understand it of the upper branches of the tree; in which sense it is used in the Arabic language.

Ver. 8.] The words are an apostrophe to the land of Judea: the prophet puts her in mind that she ought to be deeply affected with the sore stroke of the divine vengeance, and express her inward sense of those calamities, with the same outward expressions of mourning, as a young virgin that was betrothed to a husband, and should lose him before they had lived together, would lament such an untimely loss. It was common among the Jews for persons who were espoused to spend some time together in the house of the woman's friends, before the husband took her home to live as man and wife together (see Gen. xix. 14). The "husband of her youth" is a woman's first husband, called elsewhere the "guide of her youth," Prov. ii. 17, Jer. iii. 4; as the "wife of thy youth," Mal. ii. 15, is the first wife.

Ver. 9.] The meat-offering and drink-offering always accompanied the daily sacrifices (see Num. xxviii. 4, 7). The word minchea, commonly translated meat-offering, properly signifies the bread-offering; being made of flour (see the note upon Isa. xliii. 23). The dearth had destroyed both the corn and the wine, ver. 10—12, and thereby disabled the performing the necessary parts of God's daily worship in the temple. This was a new cause of grief to the priests, as well as to all pious persons.

Ver. 10.] The fields and the whole land have a mournful appearance, being altogether bare and destitute of food, either for man or beast (see ver. 18).

Ver. 11.] Your being disappointed of your expectations, and the fruits of your labour, is enough to cover you with shame and confusion (compare Jer. xiv. 3): especially when you consider these calamities as the just effects of the divine indignation.

Ver. 12. Joy is withered away] That joy they used to show at the gathering in of the fruits of the earth (see Isa. ix. 3, xiv. 10, Jer. xlviii. 33).

Lie all night in sackcloth, Those priests whose turn it is to keep the night-watches in the temple (see Exod. xxvii. 21, 1 Sam. iii. 3, 1 Chron. ix. 39, Ps. cxxxiv. 2). Let them cover themselves with sackcloth, as is usual in times of the greatest calamity, and not put it off when they take themselves to rest; but sleep in sackcloth instead of their ordinary garments (see Dr. Lightfoot's Temple Service, ch. 9, at the beginning).

Ver. 14. Sanctify ye a fast, &c.] In order to avert God's wrath, and depurate his judgments (see ii. 15, 16).

Into the house of the Lord] The house where God hath placed his name, and where he hath promised to hear the prayers which are made to him by his people, when they are afflicted with judgments of this kind (see 1 Kings vii. 37, &c.).

Ver. 15.] We have just cause to lament our sins which have brought these judgments upon us, which, if not averted by our repentance, will end in our utter destruction, as coming from a God that is infinite in power, and terrible in his judgments.

Ver. 16.] The dearth has discontinued all public sacrifices (ver. 9, 13), and has deprived us of those rejoicings wherewith we used to keep our solemn feasts at Jerusalem, and partake of the sacrifices.
CHAPTER II.

1 Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand;

2 A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations.

3 A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

5 Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array.

A great people, and a strong:] See i. 6.

There hath not been ever the like:] And behind them a desolate wilderness:] The locusts which pleased God in the days of Hezekiah were described after the same manner, Exod. x. 14, 15. Before them there were no such locusts, neither after them shall be such. In both places we are to take it for a proverbial expression, to set forth the extraordinary greatness of the judgment, and not understand it too strictly according to the grammatical sense of the word. So we read of Hezekiah, that ‘after him there was none like him, among all the kings of Judah, nor any that went before him,’ 2 Kings viii. 5, and yet the same character is given to Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 25.

A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth:] The locusts and the drought which ushered them in (see i. 19), have in a manner devoured everything that comes in their way; and leave sad tokens of destruction wherever they have been. Those that have travelled in the eastern countries, inform us, that wherever the swarms of locusts light, they make such a destruction, that there remains not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, as Moses speaks concerning the locusts in Egypt, Exod. x. 15.

The land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness:] The land of Judea, so famous for its fertility and pleasantness before this calamity, is now turned into a desolate wilderness, by the ravages they have made. The ‘garden of Eden’ is a proverbial expression for a place of pleasure and fruitfulness, as we commonly use the word paradise (see Gen. xiii. 10, Isa. ii. 8).

Ver. 4.] See the same comparison, Rev. iv. 7. Bochart observes that locusts resemble horses, not only in their swiftness, but also in the shape of their heads (see his Hierozoicon, par. ii. p. 474).

Ver. 5. Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains:] Compare Rev. ix. 9. Chariots anciently were a part of warlike preparations, as appears by many passages in scripture. The text says, that...
6 Before their face the people shall be much pained; all faces shall gather blackness.
7 They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his way, and they shall not break their ranks:
8 Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.
9 They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief.
10 The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:
11 And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great; for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?
12 ¶ Therefore also now, saith the Lord, turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning:
13 And rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and pitiful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil.
14 Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat-offering and a drink-offering unto the Lord your God?
15 ¶ Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly:
16 Gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assembling the people at the solemn times of public worship (see Numb. x. 3, 9, 10).

Sanctify a fast, &c. See i. 14.

Ver. 16. Sanctify the congregation.] Take care that they be purified from those legal pollutions which render persons unqualified to approach God’s temple or worship (see Lev. xv. 31, Numb. xix. 18, 20).

Ver. 17. Let the priests—weep between the porch and the altar.] A principal part of the priests’ office was to attend upon the altar, and offer the sacrifices there. For which reason the open court just before the porch of the temple, where the brazen altar stood (see 2 Chron. viii. 12), was called the priests’ court, where the greatest part of those whose course it was gave their attendance. Hereupon this is mentioned as the most proper place for the priests to make their prayers and intercessions to God in behalf of the people. It was, as it might be said, the central point of all the sanctuary, and where they had before offered the sacrifices proper for such an occasion, which were the most solemn way of calling upon the Lord (see Gen. xxii. 4, 1 Sam. vii. 8, 9), and being joined to their prayers, were the most effectual means to make an atonement for sin, and avert the divine displeasure. Let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord.] It was usual to prescribe certain forms of prayer, or praise, to the priests in their public ministrations (see 1 Chron. xvi. 36, Hos. xiv. 2). Such was this herein mentioned, wherein they beseech God to deliver their people, not for any merit of theirs, but for the glory of his own name, lest the heathen round about them should take occasion to blaspheme his name, as if he were not able to protect his people (compare Ps. xlii. 20, xxxvi. 11, xvii. 2).

That the heathen should rule over them.] This translation of the Hebrew verb mashal favours their interpretation, who expound the army described at the beginning of the chapter of a hostile invasion: but if we understand those expressions only as a metaphorical description of that grievous destruction the locusts and other venomous insects should make in the land (which I take to be the truer exposition), then this sentence is to be translated, “That the heathen and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen:

20 But I will remove far off from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea, and his hinder part toward the utmost sea, and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because he hath done great things.

21 ¶ Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things.

22 Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig tree and the vine do yield their strength.

23 Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice at my loving kindness; for I have rendered moderate, literally signifies, “according to righteousness,” and is equivalent with “accord joye in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. 24 And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the futs shall overflow with wine and oil. 25 And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you. 26 And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you: and my people shall never be ashamed. 27 And ye shall know that I am in the midst of judging, i. Jer. x. 23, or in measure, Jer. xxx. 11. But some interpreters translate it here plentifully. Our margin reads a teacher of righteousness, which sense is followed by the Chaldee paraphrase, and the Vulgar Latin, and may be proper introduction to the promise which follows (ver. 28) of pouring God's Spirit upon all flesh. The latter rain in the first month. Which was Nisan, partly answering to our March: the regular season for this rain was three months before harvest (Amos iv. 7.), i. e. before wheat-harvest, which was later than barley-harvest in Judea (see Ruth ii. 23, 2 Sam. xxii. 3). Ver. 25. I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten. The fruit of those years which the venomous insects have devoured (see i. 4.). My great army! See ver. 11. Ver. 26. Ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied. Ye shall eat bread to the full, as it is expressed, Lev. xxiv. 3, Deut. vii. 11, viii. 10. Times of scarcity are expressed by eating and not being satisfied. Lev. xxvi. 36, Amos iv. v. Mic. vi. 14. Ver. 27. Ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel. God's giving tokens of his especial blessing and protection to his people is expressed by his dwelling among them, or in the midst of them; see i. 17, Lev. xxvi. 11, 12, Ezek. xxxviii. 26. This is a favour he never promises but upon their sincere and steady obedience, as appears in the foretold places, and then the promises contained in this and the foregoing verse, will punctually be fulfilled. That I am the Lord your God. You will then be convinced that I am always ready to protect you, and you need not apply yourselves to any other gods, in your wants or troubles (compare Isa. xiv. 5, 21). My people shall never be ashamed. Shall not be any more disappointed of the trust they place in me; nor be reproached by the heathen, as if I had forsaken them (see ver. 19, compare Isa. li. 22, Nahum i. 13). Ver. 28. It shall come to pass afterward. Or, in the last days, as St. Peter explains the phrase, Acts ii. 17, by which expression Manasseh ben Israel tells us, that all their wise men understood the times of the Messias (see the Bishop of Litchfield's Def. of the ancient Prophecies, p. 129). So afterward and in the latter days is explained, Dan. ii. 28, 29. I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh. The plentiful effusion of the Holy Spirit is mentioned by the prophets as the peculiar character of the gospel state; and it is elsewhere compared to the pouring waters upon thirsty land, whereby it becomes fruitful (see Isa. xliv. 3, liv. 13, Jer. xxxii. 31, Ezek. xxxvi. 27, compared with John vii. 39). So this text, in analogy to other parallel places, is very aptly applied. Peter to the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the first believers, Acts ii. 17. All flesh comprehends the gentiles as well as the Jews; which promise we see was punctually fulfilled, Acts x. 44, xi. 17. The expression of the last days is another indication that this prophecy belongs to the times of the Messias: for the Jews agree that prophecy was sealed up with Malachi, and not to be restored till the days of the Messias (see the forementioned discourse). But we need not confine this prophecy to those early times; but since many prophecies have gradual completions, we may suppose this prophecy to imply, that there shall be another remarkable effusion of the Spirit bestowed upon the Jews in order to their conversion in the latter times of the world (see note upon Isa. li. 13, Ezek. xxxix. 29). This exposition agrees very well with some expressions in this prophecy, and makes a clearer connexion with the following chapter. Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy. The gift of prophecy was bestowed upon some women under the Old Testament, as upon Miriam (Exod. xv. 20), Deborah (Judg. iv. 14), and Huldah (2 Kings xxii. 14). But this gift was more frequently conferred upon them in the times of the New. This we read of four daughters of Philip the evangelist, who did prophesy, Acts xxii. 9, and church history affords us several other instances; such as Perpetua and Felicitas, who were martyrs for the Christian faith, Potamena mentioned by Eusebius, lib. iv. cap. 5, and others. Your young men shall see visions. In visions the inspired person was awake, but his external senses being bound up, and as it were taken from him (see Numb. xxiv. 4), he had a distinct knowledge of the things revealed to him, and that sometimes accompanied with external representations: such was that vision of St. Peter's, mentioned Acts x. 11. From visions being applied to young men, and dreams to old, some have observed that the imagination is stronger in those that are young than in the old; so that their senses need not be bound up with sleep, in order to make them capable of receiving heavenly visions. Ver. 29. As every age and condition are made partakers of the common benefits of the gospel, so they shall not be excluded from the privilege of the extraordinary gifts of it (see Col. iii. 11, James i. 5). Ver. 30. This and the following verse principally point out the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the effect it had upon the Jewish nation for their resisting the Holy Spirit, and contempt of the means of grace. So Malachi, after he had foretold the coming of the Messias (iii. 1), immediately adds, that his coming should be attended with terrible judgments upon the disobedient, iii. 2, 3, 5, iv. 1. The prophet here takes notice of the extraordinary signs which God had wrought, i. e. the great slaughters of men, and burning of the towns and cities of Judah, which preceded that last and finishing stroke

CHAPTER III.

32 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem of the divine vengeance; and chiefly the comet which hung over their city, and the fearful sights seen in the air some time before; which are mentioned by Josephus, De Bell. Jud. lib. vi. cap. 31, and foretold by Christ, Luke xxi. 11.

Ver. 31.] Compare Mal. iv. 5. Particular judgments upon kingdoms and nations are often described in such terms as suppose last and general judgments; as hath been observed upon the tenth verse of this chapter. The expressions here used, in the literal sense, import the failing of light in the sun and moon, whether by eclipses (when the moon looks of a bloody colour), or any other cause: and here they denote the dark and melancholy state of public affairs at the destruction of the Jewish nation by the Romans: and the utter overthrow of that state and government (see the note upon Isa. xiii. 10).

Ver. 32. Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered.] This St. Paul, Rom. x. 13, explains of those who give themselves up to Christ, and profess themselves his disciples; that being the most effectual means of escaping the judgments coming upon the unbelieving Jews, and likewise of being "delivered from the wrath to come" (see Luke xxi. 32, 1 Thess. i. 16).

For in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance.] The gospel is described as taking its rise from Jerusalem, and being from thence spread abroad into the world (see Ps. cxv. 2, Isa. ii. 3). Accordingly Christ commanded his disciples to preach the gospel "to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem," Luke xxiv. 47. The words may also imply, that the Christian church, often denoted by mount Zion and Jerusalem, is the only place of salvation (see likewise Obad. ver. 17).

As the Lord hath said.] By me his prophet. Or the words may relate to the several promises made in the Psalms, and other prophets, relating to the church, under the names of Zion and Jerusalem (see particularly Ps. xiv. 7, and several texts in Lysias): for we cannot certainly conclude in what time Joel lived.

And in the remnant whom the Lord shall call.] Or, "Among the remnant:" this may partly be understood of those who were converted by the preaching of Christ and the apostles, and thereby escaped the vengeance which involved the rest of the nation (see Acts ii. 40, 1 Thess. ii. 16). These are called the Zewewi, "such as should be saved," or delivered, Acts ii. 47. But there is another remnant of the Jews included in this promise, who shall be converted at the end of the world (when the obstinate and incorrigible shall be destroyed), and return home from their several dispersions. In this sense the "remnant" is often understood (see Isa. xi. 16, Jer. xxxi. 7, Mic. iv. 7, v. 3, 7). This conversion of the Jewish nation is frequently mentioned in the prophets (see Jer. xxx. 3, &c., xxxvi. 25, &c., Ezek. xx. 34, 40, xxvii. 25, Amos ix. 9, and the notes upon these texts). This sense agrees with what follows in the next chapter.

CHAPTER III.

1 For, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,
2 I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land.

Ver. 2. And will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat.] The prophet speaks of a general discomfiture of God's enemies in some decisive battle before the general judgment, as hath been observed in the notes upon Isa. lxvi. 16. Such probably is the battle of Gog and Magog, described Ezek. xxxix., and that of Armageddon, spoken of Rev. xvi. 14, 16. The place of this remarkable action is here called "the valley of Jehoshaphat," as if the prophet had said, "the place where the Lord will execute judgment," for so the word Jehoshaphat signifies in the original. So the "valley of Jezreel," Hos. i. 4, means where God's arm or strength will exert itself. The expression likewise alludes to the valley of Bera-chah, as it was afterward called, 2 Chron. xxx. 26, which was famous for the victory Jehoshaphat and his people obtained there over a great confederacy of their enemies. This valley was not far from Jerusalem, if it be the same with that described, Zech. xiv. 4.

And will plead with them there.] God pleads with men, and vindicates the cause of oppressed truth and innocence by his judgments. Then their own converse, science and the fly of the face of the guilty, and force them to acknowledge the justice of those punishments they suffer (compare Jer. i. 19, 20, and particularly this verse with Jer. xxx. 9). The prophet's mentioning only the kingdom or tribe of Judah, is a probable argument that he was of that tribe, and lived after the captivity of the ten tribes.
3 And they have cast lots for my people; and have given a boy for an harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.

4 Yea, and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me a recompence? and if ye recompense me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompence upon your own heads;

5 Because ye have taken my silver and my gold, and have carried into your temples my goodly pleasant things:

6 The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border.

The prophets of the Old Testament are often cast as socially critical voices, warning their readers of the consequences of their actions and the need to repent. In this passage, the prophet Amos addresses Tyre and Zidon, warning them of judgment if they do not repent. The passage highlights themes of commerce, faith, and the impending destruction of the nations for their actions.

Ver. 3. The prophet addresses Tyre and Zidon, warning them of making their own choices and the potential consequences of their actions.

Ver. 4. The prophet mentions the sins of the people of Tyre and Zidon, highlighting their lack of repentance.

Ver. 5. The prophet warns of judgment coming swiftly and speedily, emphasizing the severity of the consequences for sin.

Ver. 6. The prophet addresses the sale of children and goods, linking these actions to the impending destruction.

The passage serves as a warning to nations and individuals alike, emphasizing the importance of repentance and the consequences of unrepentant sin.
and gather yourselves together round about: that is the day mighty ones to come down. O Lord, and let them be astonished, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about.

13 Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down; for the press is full, the futs overflow; for their wickedness is great.

14 Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision.

15 The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining.

16 The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel.

17 So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more.

18 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim.

19 Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land.

The valley of Jehoshaphat] See ver. 2.

Ver. 13. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe:] God will give his commands to the angels, who are "the reapers," Matt. xiii. 39, to cut off the wicked by a speedy destruction; for their iniquities are come to maturity, and are ripe for judgment (compare Jer. li. 39, Hos. vi. 11, Matt. xiii. 38, 41, Rev. xiv. 15). The phrase again commanded to go down from heaven to the "valley of decision," ver. 14. The LXX. and the Chaldee paraphrase the words, Come, tread, deriving the Hebrew word from rudah, which verb still remains that sense in the Arabic, as Dr. Pocock informs me.

For the press is full, the futs overflow; for their wickedness is great.] The wicked have filled up the measure of their iniquities. The former words allow to the time of the harvest; these to the season of the vintage (compare Rev. xiv. 19). As the juice of the vine is called the blood of the grape; in pursuance of the same metaphor, God's extraordinary judgments are expressed by his "treading the wine-press of his wrath" (see Isa. lxiii. 3, Lam. i. 15, Rev. xiv. 19, 20).

Ver. 14. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision.] This makes it probable that the battle here spoken of is the same with that of Gog and Magog, described Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix. for there the valley where Gog is said to be buried, is called Hannon Gog: i. e. "the multitude of Gog," xxxix. 11, "The valley of decision" is the same with the "valley of Jehoshaphat" above mentioned, the place where the great cause shall be decided between God and his enemies.

The day of the Lord is near See ii. 1.

Ver. 15.] This particular judgment shall be a forerunner of the general one, when the whole frame of nature shall be dissolved (see the note upon li. 10, 31).

Ver. 16. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion.] Where he shall give tokens of his especial residence. God's anger, when he speaks to us by his notes the plentiful issues of the divine grace; an emblem of what was the streams that issued out of the rock, and followed the Israelites through a great part of the wilderness (1 Cor. x. 4).

Ver. 19.] These two people were remarkable for the spite they bare to the Jews: the Egyptians were their oppressors when they first became a nation, and afterward exercised great cruelties upon them during the reign of the Egyptian kings, who were Alexander's successors. The Idumeans are often reproved, and threatened with judgments by the prophets, for the spite they took all occasions to vent against the Israelites, though nearly related to them (see Jer. xlvi. 7, Ezek. xxv. 12, Amos i. 11, Obad. ver. 10). So those two nations are taken, in a general sense, for the enemies of God's people (see the note upon Isa. xi. 14).

21 For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: for the Lord dwelleth in Zion.

Ver. 20. Judah shall dwell (or continue) for ever.] Free from the annoyance of enemies (see ver. 17, and compare Amos ix. 15).

Ver. 21. I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed.] I will thoroughly cleanse them from their sins and pollutions; neither shall they rise up any more in judgment against them. The word blood may signify pollution in general (see Isa. iv. 3, Ezek. xvi. 6). But the words chiefly import, that God will pardon the Jews the great crime of shedding the blood of Christ, upon their sincere repentance; the guilt of which they had imprecated upon themselves and their posterity, Matt. xxvi. 25, and had felt the visible effects of God's displeasure upon that account for several ages.

For the Lord dwelleth in Zion.] See ver. 17.

THE BOOK

OF

THE PROPHET AMOS.

PREFACE.

Amos was contemporary with Hosea, though he did not probably live so long, but died before the reign of Hezekiah, and the captivity of the ten tribes. St. Jerome gives him this character, that "though he was rude in speech, yet not in knowledge." Several of his expressions are taken from such observations as are suitable to the employment of a shepherd; as, when he compares God's anger to the "roaring of a lion," i. 2, iii. 8, and the gigantic stature of the Amorites to the "height of oaks and cedars," ii. 9 (see also v. 8). But still there are many beautiful passages in this prophecy, where the expressions are very elegant, and the pathos or rhetoric very moving: such as are ii. 9—11, iv. 6, &c., v. 6, 9, vi. 1, 7, viii. 7, 10, ix. 2, 6.

CHAPTER I.

1 The words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel.

2 And he said, The Lord will roar from Zion, in the days of Jeroboam] See vii. 10. Two years before the earthquake.] Amos uttered his prophecy at that time, though it is probable he did not commit his book, or collection of prophecies, to writing, till after the earthquake mentioned here, and again Zech. xiv. 15, where it is said to have happened "in the days of Uzziah." Josephus relates it as a tradition among the Jews, that this earthquake was sent as a punishment for Uzziah's presumption in invading the priest's office, for which he himself was struck with leprosy, as we read 2 Chron. xxv. 15, 19, and the whole city was terribly shaken with an earthquake (see Joseph, Antiq. lib. ix. cap. 10). This judgment the Jews suppose to have befallen Uzziah in the twenty-fifth year of his reign: but Archibishop Usher, in his Annals, ad A. M. 3221, and other later chronologers, think it did not happen till the latter part of Uzziah's life and reign, because his son Jo-and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.

3 Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Damascus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have threshed Gilead with threshing instruments of iron:

4 But I will send a fire into the house of Hazel, which shall devour the palaces of Ben-hadad.

5 I will break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from the plain of Aven, and him that holdest the sceptre from the house of Eden: and the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the Lord.

6 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will not turn them back upon him the government, who was not born till after Jeroboam's death; so the earthquake must have happened some time before Uzziah's quitting the government to his son.

Ver. 2. The Lord will roar from Zion.] See note upon Joel iii. 16.

The habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.] The want of pasture here threatened was occasioned by the drought which is foretold, iv. 7. S. Carmel was a mountainous tract of ground, which ran through the two tribes of Issachar and Zebulun; it is spoken of as one of the most fruitful places in all Judaea (see Isa. xxxiii. 9, xxxv. 2); upon which account the word is sometimes taken apppellatively, and translated "a fruitful field." These are mentioned. (see Isa. ix. 17-19.)

Ver. 3. For three transgressions of Damascus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment!] The prophet begins with denouncing his judgments against foreign countries, and then comes to Judah and Israel. The first he threatens is Syria, the head or capital city of which was Damascus (see Isa. vii. 9), for the several transgressions they had committed, expressed by "three transgressions, and four." It is a common way of speaking, to use a certain number for an uncertain. So we read, Job v. 10, "He shall deliver thee in six troubles, yea, in seven no evil shall touch thee" (see the like phrase, Prov. vi. 16, Eccles. xi. 2, Mic. v. 5). So "once and twice" are used, Ps. lxxii. 11, "twice and thrice," Job xxxii. 20.

Because they have threshed Gilead with threshing instruments of iron:] The way of threshing in the eastern countries was by drawing heavy planks with iron wheels over the corn, having sharp stones fastened on the boards (see Dr. Hammond's notes on Matt. iili. 12). From hence the phrase is used to signify the weak's being crushed by the mighty (see Isa. xiv. 15, Jer. vii. 28). Here it denotes the cruelties exercised by Hazael and Ben-hadad, kings of Syria; see 2 Kings x. 32, 33, xili. 3, 7, where the sacred historian, speaking in the phrase of the text, saith, that "he made them like the dust by threshing." (see the note there). Ver. 4. God's judgments are often compared to fire (see Ps. lxxviii. 63, and the note upon Ezek. xxx. 8). The word is taken in this general sense in the following verses.

Ver. 5. I will break also the bar of Damascus; its gates and fortifications, wherein its strength consists, and cut off the inhabitant from the plain of Aven, Or, Bikath-aven: the word signifies "the plain of vanity:" from whence some conjecture it was a place in Syria remarkable for idolatry; as Bethel away the punishment thereof; because they carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom:

7 But I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof:

8 And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdest the sceptre from Ashkelon, and I will turn mine hand against Ekron: and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord God.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the brotherly covenant:

10 But I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

11 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions is called Beth-aven for that reason, Hose. v. 15 (see the following note).

And him that holdest the sceptre from the house of Eden:] "The house of Eden" is equivalent to "the house of pleasure," so it may denote one of the pleasant palaces belonging to the king of Syria, described by "him that holdest the sceptre." But Eden was likewise a country bordering upon Syria; mentioned 2 Kings xix. 12, Ezek. xxvii. 23 (see the note there). Mr. Maundrell, in his Travels, observes, that not far from Damascus there is a plain still called the valley of the Bocot, which he supposes the same with Bikath-aven here mentioned: and there is a place at this time called Eden near it (see his Corrections upon p. 118).

How that holdest the sceptre—and the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir.] This was fulfilled when Tiglath-pileser took Damascus, "and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Rezin" their king, 2 Kings xvi. 9. Kir was a city in Media, mentioned Isa. xxii. 6. The Vulgar Lat. trans. renders it Cyrene both here and in the second of Kings: but that does not appear to have been under the king of Syria's dominion.

Ver. 6. Gaza.] This city was situated upon the coast of Palestine, and is one of those threatened by Joel, iii. 6.

Because they carried away captive the whole captivity.] Gaza was a town belonging to the Philistines, who made frequent invasions upon the Jews, and carried away considerable spoil with them (see 2 Chron. xxi. 16, xxviii. 18).

To deliver them up to Edom.] See ver. 11.

Ver. 7.] Compare Jer. xlvii. 1.

Ver. 8. I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod.] Another town belonging to the Philistines, and threatened by the prophets with the same judgments which befell Gaza (see Jer. xlvii. 20, Zeph. ii. 4, Zech. ix. 5).

I will turn my hand against Ekron.] To "turn the hand," is the same as to inflict punishment (see Ps. lxxxi. 14, Isa. i. 25, Zech. xiii. 7).

The remnant of the Philistines shall perish.] These are elsewhere called "the remnant of the sea-coast," Ezek. xxvi. 16, and "the remnant of the country of Caphtor," Jer. xlvii. 4 (see the note there).

Ver. 9. For three transgressions of Tyre, &c.] This is probably to be understood of the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, foretold by Isaiah, ch. xxiii., by Jeremiah, xlvii. 4, where it is joined with the Philistines, as here; and by Ezekiel, ch. xxvii., xxviii. 33.
gessions of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and he kept his wrath for ever:

12 But I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah.

13 ¶ Thus saith the Lord: For three transgressions of the children of Ammon, and for four,

They delivered up the whole captivity] See ver. 11.
And remembered not the brotherly covenant] That strict league and friendship begun between David and Hiram king of Tyre, 2 Sam. v. 11, and afterward continued by Solomon, 1 Kings v. 1, ix. 11.

Ver. 11. For three transgressions of Edom, &c.
The Idumeans are often threatened for their enmity against the Israelites; who took all occasions to oppress them, and to insult over them in their distress (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 17, Jer. xlix. 7, Ezek. xxv. 12, xxxv. 2, Joel iii. 19, Obad. ver. 1—11).

Because he did pursue his brother with the sword.] They retained the same hatred and animosity against their brethren the Israelites, which their father Esau had expressed against his brother Jacob.

Ver. 12. Teman and Bozrah were two principal cities of Idumea (see Isa. lx. 3, Jer. xlix. 7, Ezek. xxv. 15). This expression imports the entire conquest and destruction of that country, according to the predictions of the prophets before cited; to which may be added, Mal. i. 3, 4. The ancient seat of the Edomites was the same which was afterward called Arabia Petraea; from whence they were expelled by the Nabatheans, and never could recover their country, but were forced to settle themselves in the southern parts of Judaea (see Dr. Prideaux, par. ii. ad A. C. 163).

Ver. 13. They have riped up the women with child of Gilead.] Hazael, king of Syria, grievously afflicted the Israelites that lay eastward of Jordan, particularly the Gileadites (see 2 Kings x. 33). The low condition these countries were reduced to, might probably encourage the Ammonites to possess themselves of Gilead, which lay near their own borders, and to destroy the inhabitants in that cruel manner (compare Jer. xlix. 1, Zeph. ii. 8, Hos. xiii. 16).

Ver. 14. I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah.] Compare Jer. xlix. 2. Rabbah was the chief city of the Ammonites (see 2 Sam. xii. 26).

With a tempest in the day of the whirlwind.] The destructions of war are often compared to the devastations caused by whirlwinds and tempests (see Isa. v. 26, Jer. xxv. 32, Dan. xi. 40, Zech. ix. 14).

Ver. 15. 3 See Jer. xlix. 3.

CHAPTER II.

1 Thus saith the Lord: For three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he burned the bones of the king of Edom into time:

2 But I will send a fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the palaces of Kirioth: and Moab shall die with tumult, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet:

3 And I will cut off the judge from the midst thereof, and will slay all the princes thereof with him, saith the Lord.

4 ¶ Thus saith the Lord: For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have despoiled the law of the Lord, and have not kept his commandments, and their lies caused them to err, after the which their fathers have walked;

5 But I will send a fire upon Judah, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem:

6 ¶ Thus saith the Lord: For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes:

the text, to the story of the king of Moab, related 2 Kings iii. 27. But the story there recited, seems rather to be understood of the king of Moab's own son, than of the king of Edom's.

Ver. 2. Moab shall die with tumult.] His men shall die in the tumult of war (compare Jer. xlix. 15).

Ver. 3. I will cut off the judge] The word judge denotes the supreme magistrate or governor (see Deut. xvii. 9); and is here equivalent to the king (compare Mic. v. 1).

Ver. 4. Many of the tribe of Judah have continued in the same idoltry and worship of false gods, which their wicked kings, such as Jehoram and Ahaziah, and their forefathers, have set up, notwithstanding all the warnings I have given them by my prophets (see 2 Chron. xxvii. 17—19). Idols are often called lies in the scripture (see note upon Hos. vii. 3).

Ver. 6. They sold the righteous for silver, &c.] They perverted the cause of the righteous, and gave an un-

8 And they lay theirselues down upon clothes laid to pledge by every altar, and they drink the wine of the condemned in the house of their god.

9 Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of the cedars, and he was strong as the oaks; yet I destroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath.

10 Also I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and led you forty years through the wilderness, to possess the land of the Amorite.

just sentence against him for a bribe of the smallest value (compare v. 11, 12, viii. 6).

Ver. 7. That part after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor.] The Vulgar Latín hath given the best sense of this sentence, Qui contenter super pulvere termis capit panispernium: "Who tread down the heads of the poor into the dust of the earth?" i.e. they throw them into the dust, and then trample upon them. The Chaldee paraphrase understands the verb saaph in the sense of despoiling, which comes near the sense of trampling upon; the LXX. render it by "nazarites," "to tread upon," both here and Ps. lxi. 1, 2. livi. 3. The verb shoph, which is near akin to saaph, plainly signifies to tread upon, or bruise, Gen. iii. 15.

A man and his father will go in unto the same maid (or young woman), to profane my holy name.] One man hath cohabited with his father's wife, to the great reproach of my name and religion; being such an instance of fornication, or uncleanness, "as is scarce heard of among the more civilized heathens," as St. Paul observes, 1 Cor. v. 1. And another "hath lewdly defiled his daughter-in-law," as Ezekiel complains, xxii. 11, in contradiction to the express words of the law, Lev. xviii. 8, 15.

Ver. 8. They lay themselves down upon clothes laid to pledge by every altar.] This is to be understood of the sacrifices, which were made of their idolatrous sacrifices, and were eaten in some of the apartments of their temples, according to the custom of the Jews and gentiles (see 1 Sam. ix. 12, 13, 22, Isa. lvii. 7, Ezek. xxiii. 41). The prophet reproves them not only for partaking of things offered to idols, but likewise for making use of other men's furniture, left in their hands for a pledge, to set off their idolatrous entertainments. Here was another instance of their unmercifullness, to detain pledges received from the poor, contrary to the law, Exod. xxxii. 26 (see the note upon Ezek. xviii. 7).

The Jews, as well as the Romans, used to lie along at their meals in couches, as appears by this verse, compared with vi. 4. This custom continued in aftertimes, as appears by several places in the gospels, where it is in the original, "Lay down to meat;" though our translation renders it, "Sat down." The custom of sitting at meals seems to have been the more ancient of the two (see Gen. xlix. 33, 1 Sam. ix. 22, xvi. 11, xx. 25).

They drink the wine of the condemned.] The drink-offerings, made with wine, were a necessary part of the sacrifices; some of which was likewise reserved for the entertainment that followed (see Exod. xxxii. 6). And this was provided out of the fines or mullets of such as had been unjustly condemned (ver. 6).

In the house of their god.] In the houses dedicated 11 And I raised up of your sons for prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites. Is it not even thus, 0 ye children of Israel? saith the Lord.

12 But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink; and commanded the prophets, saying, Prophesy not.

13 Behold, I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves.

15 Neither shall he stand that handleth the bow; and he that is swift of foot shall not delito the calves of Dan and Beth-el, or some other idolatrous temple.

Ver. 9. Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them.] The Amorites include the rest of the Canaanites (see Gen. xv. 10).

Whose height was like the height of the cedars.] Many of them were of a gigantic stature, as appears from Num. xiii. 32, 33. Virgil makes the same comparison, speaking of the Titans, Æneid. lib. iii. ver. 677.

Conciliait horrendum, quales, cum vertice celso

Ver. 10. Led you forty years through the wilderness.] Where you wanted for nothing (see Deut. ii. 7, viii. 2—4).

Ver. 11. I raised up of your sons for prophets.] I provided for you a succession of prophets, bred up in schools erected for that purpose (see 2 Kings i. 1, 2), to be your constant instructors, and to whom you might have recourse in any difficulty.

Ver. 12. Of your young men for Nazarites.] A Nazarite signifies one separate, or set apart for the service of God (see Amos vii. 5). Such were Samson, Judg. xiii. 5, and John Baptist, Luke i. 15. Their vow did often include in it, beside their abstaining from wine, and not shaving their heads, a constant attendance upon God's service, during the time of their separation (see 1 Mac. iii. 49, and the note upon Hos. ix. 10). We read of "women that departed not from the temple," Exod. xxxviii. 8, such as Anan, Luke ii. 37, and there might probably be men that constantly attended upon the service there: and of such I would upon second thoughts understand the Nazarites, mentioned Lam. iv. 7. They are described in that place as remarkable for their youth and beauty: and they are styled young men here. A Nazarite is always mentioned as a title of honour, and Joseph is called, by way of emimighty shall flee away naked in that day, saith the Lord.

CHAPTER III.

1 Hear this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying,

2 You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities.

3 Can two walk together, except they be agreed?

4 Will a lion roar in the forest, when he hath no prey? will a young lion cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing?

5 Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? shall one take up a snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all?

6 Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?

7 Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.

2 The lion hath roared, who will not fear? the Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy?

3 I Publish in the palaces at Ashdod, and in the palaces in the land of Egypt, and say, Assemble yourselves upon the mountains of Samaria, and behold the great tumults in the midst thereof, and the oppressed in the midst thereof.

10 For they know not to do right, saith the Lord, who store up violence and robbery in their palaces.

11 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: An adversary there shall be even round about the land; and he shall bring down thy strength from thee, and thy palaces shall be spoiled.

12 Thus saith the Lord; As the shepherd

Shall there be evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it? You may be assured that the calamities you feel, or have just cause to fear, are not the effect of chance, but come upon you by the especial direction of providence (compare Isa. xiv. 7).

7 [There was a succession of prophets among the Jews from Samuel's time till the captivity: the people commonly consulted them upon extraordinary occasions, and they gave them counsel and direction what was proper to be done (see ii. 11, 1 Kings xxii. 15, 2 Kings ii. 11, xxii. 13, Jer. xxii. 2, Ezek. xx. 2). The want of this prophetic gift was much lamented in the times of the captivity (see Ezek. vii. 26, Lam. ii. 9, Ps. lxxiv. 9).

8. Ver. 8] As the denouncing of the divine judgments ought to terrify you like the roaring of a lion (see ver. 4, and i. 2), so the prophets that are God's messengers must obey those commands and instructions he gives them, with whatever peril the discharge of their duty may be attended (see ii. 13, vi. 12, 13).

9. Ver. 9] God calls upon the heathen to be witnesses of his judgments upon his own people, that they may take warning thereby; particularly he gives notice to the Philistines and Egyptians, the Jews' inveterate enemies, that they may assemble themselves, and with pleasure to behold the ravages and oppressions which their insulting adversaries will bring upon the kingdom of Israel, whose capital city was Samaria, built upon a hill of the same name (1 Kings xvi. 24); or the "mountains of Samaria" may be equivalent to the "mountains of Israel," mentioned Ezek. xxxvi. 8, xxxvii. 22. Samaria being often taken for the whole kingdom of Israel (see the note upon Hos. viii. 6).

10. Ver. 10. For they know not to do right, i. e. They will not know nor learn to do right (see Jer. v. 4, vii. 3).

11. Ver. 11] Shalmaneser the king of Assyria shall invade the land on every side, shall dismantle its fortresses, and plunder its wealthy palaces.

12. As the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs When the lion hath for some time ravaged the flock, but is at last frightened away by the
CHAPTER IV.

1 Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountain of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy, which say to their masters, Bring, and let us drink.

2 The Lord God hath sworn by his holiness, that, lo, the days shall come upon you, that he will take you away with hooks, and your posterity with fish-hooks.

3 And ye shall go out at the breaches, every cow at that which is before her; and ye shall cast them into the palace, saith the Lord.

4 ¶ Come to Beth-el, and transgress; at Gil-quire the threatened judgment upon this people (compare Ps. lxxix. 33).

That he will take you away with hooks, and your posterity with fish-hooks. Invaders and spoilers are elsewhere compared to fishers (see Jer. xvii. 16, Hab. i. 15). The words beiraadh digultural, translated "with fish-hooks," the Targum translates, in fisher-boats, boats made in the fashion of a pot, for the word siroth properly signifies a pot. The several invaders of Israel, first, Tiglath-pileser (2 Kings xv. 29), then Shalmanezer (ibid. xvii. 5), "The Syrians before, and the Philistines behind" (Isa. ix. 12), those coming after one another, will make an entire rid- dance of the whole nation: so that their posterity, or remainder, as the word may be translated, which hath escaped the first invaders, shall certainly fall into the hands of those that come after.

Ver. 3. Ye shall go out at the breaches, every cow at that which is before her. The prophet pursues the metaphor taken from the kine of Bashan, ver. 1, and tells the people, that as cattle strive to get out at every breach they can find in a mound or fence, so shall they with all possible haste make their escape at the several breaches which shall be made in the walls of Samaria (compare 2 Kings xxv. 4, Ezek. xii. 12).

Ye shall cast them into the palace. The sentence may be thus translated, "Ye shall cast out yourselves;" i.e. Ye shall with haste betake yourselves tokeith out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear; so shall the children of Israel be taken out that dwell in Samaria in the corner of a bed, and in Damascus in a couch.

13 Hear ye, and testify in the house of Jacob, saith the Lord God, the God of hosts, 14 That in the day I shall visit the transgresnoise of the shepherds and their dogs, or by throwing darts and other offensive weapons at him; in such a case the shepherd can hope to save but only some poor remains of the prey the lion had seized upon. And thus shall he be at the sucking of Samaria; but a small remainder of the inhabitants shall escape the search of their enemies, though they try to hide themselves in their most retired apartments (compare 1 Kings xx. 30, xxii. 23).

And in Damascus in a couch. The marginal reading gives a better sense, "On the bed of feet." They that follow the reading of the text, explain it of those Israelites who fled for refuge to Damascus, there being a confederacy between Israel and Syria (see Isa. vii. 2), but were seized there, upon the taking of Damascus (see 1, 2 Kings xvi. 9, compared with xv. 29). Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, conquered both Israel and Syria (see the places above cited, and compare Isa. vii. 16, xvii. 1-6).

Ver. 13. The words are directed to the prophets, whom God sends to testify and declare his will.

Ver. 14. I will also visit the altars of Beth-el. In the general destruction of the ten tribes, God's judgments should be particularly visible upon the places dedicated to idolatrous worship, especially Beth-el, the principal place of that kind (see ix. 1, Hos. x. 5, 6, 8). Altars may stand here for altar; as we read of the "calves of Bethaven," in that place of Hosea, meaning the calf at Beth-el.

The horns of the altar shall be cut off. They were squares placed at the four corners of the altar, and hollow in the middle, into which some of the blood of the sacrifices was poured out (see Exod. xxvii. 12, and Dr. Prideaux's draught of the altar, in the first part of his Connex. of Script. Hist.).

Ver. 15. I will smite the winter house with the summer house. The great men had their different houses or apartments suited to the several seasons of the year (see Jer. xxxvi. 21).

The houses of ivory shall perish. King Ahab built him "an ivory house," i.e. ceiled or wainscoted with ivory (1 Kings xxii. 39). It is probable other great men followed his example, in adorning their houses after this costly manner. Whereupon the prophet threatens destruction to this piece of pride and state.

CHAPTER IV.
And offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven, and proclaim and publish the free offerings: for this liketh you, O ye children of Israel, saith the Lord God.

And I also have given you, &c. Or, "For this cause have I given thee" (see Noldius, p. 337, 388). The famine I have sent upon the cities and territories of Israel hath not brought you to a sense of your sins, or any sincere purpose of amendment.

I have sent among you the pestilence after the manner of Egypt: your young men have I slain with the sword, and have taken away your horses; and I have made the stink of your camps to come up unto your nostrils: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord.

I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord.

Therefore will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.

13 For, lo, he that forareth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man these several judgments upon thee altogether, till I make an entire destruction of thee.

Then said the Lord, Go and enquire of the Lord, what is his thought, that maketh the morning darkness, and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, The Lord, the God of hosts, is his name.

upon some occasions, discovers them for men's conviction (see Dan. ii. 28).

That maketh the morning darkness.] Who turns day into night, overcasting the heavens with clouds (see v. 8); or else, "darkens the earth in the clear days," by an extraordinary eclipse of the sun (see viii. 9); and can in like manner turn the most flourishing condition into a state of misery (compare v. 18, 19). Ambition is often expressed by darkness (see v. 18, Job xxxii. 11, Isa. v. 30, viii. 22).

Treadeth upon the high places of the earth.] Who can subdue cities or fortresses of the greatest strength, whose "walls reach up to heaven," as it is expressed Deut. i. 28 (compare xxxiii. 29), and takes delight to humble the great and mighty, denoted elsewhere by the mountains and hills (see Isa. ii. 14, Is. xxxii. 3).

CHAPTER V.

1 Hear ye this word which I take up against you, even a lamentation, O house of Israel.

2 The virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise: she is forsoaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up.

3 For thus saith the Lord God; The city that went out by a thousand shall leave an hundred, and that which went forth by an hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

4 ¶ For thus saith the Lord unto the house of Israel, Seek ye me, and ye shall live:

5 But seek not Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought.

6 Seek the Lord, and ye shall live; lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Bethel.

7 Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth,

CHAP. V.

ARGUMENT.—A pathetical lamentation for the sins of Israel, which, upon their impenitency, the prophet foresaw would end in their destruction: whereupon he earnestly exhorteth them to a sincere repentance and reformation, without which all their outward exercises of religion would avail nothing.

Ver. 1.] The words might be better translated thus, "Hear you this word, even a lamentation which I take up over you." The text alludes to the lamentations made at funerals (see ver. 16, Jer. i. 17, Ezek. xix. 2, xxvii. 2). So the prophet condemneth the state of the kingdom of Israel, as dead and irrecoverably lost.

Ver. 2. The virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise.] She that never was conquered by any, is fallen from her glory, and shall never be restored to her former state, as a kingdom or nation. Those cities or kingdoms are called virgins which were never conquered (see Isa. xxiii. 12, xxxvii. 22). The virgin of Israel may likewise import her that was espoused to God, as a chaste virgin to a husband (see 2 Cor. xi. 2), and had the benefit of being under his protection, but is now, for her idolatries and other sins, delivered up to the will of her enemies (compare Jer. xvii. 13).

If she is forsaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up.] Like an infant that is exposed, or fallen upon the ground, and hath none to take it up.

Ver. 3.] A city which was able to furnish out a thousand men fit for war, shall have but a hundred of them left. And so it shall be in proportion for any less number; but one in ten of them shall escape the sword, and other chances of war.

Ver. 4. For [or rather, therefore] thus saith the Lord, Seek ye me, and ye shall live.] I. e. Ye shall be prosperous. Life is taken for prosperity or happiness (see 1 Sam. xix. 6); as death is used for misery, Exod. x. 17, Hos. xiii. 1.

Ver. 5. But seek not Bethel.] See iv. 4.

Pass not to Beer-sheba.] A place remarkable for Abraham's dwelling there, and planting a grove for the worship of God (Gen. xxv. 32, xxvi. 9). It is likely a grove might still be continued there, and abused to idolatry (see vii. 9, viii. 14). Beer-sheba did formerly belong to Judah (see 1 Kings xix. 3); but it seems in latter times to have been taken from it by some of the kings of Israel.

Gilgal shall surely go into captivity.] There is an allusion in the Hebrew between the word Gilgal and Galah, which signifies captivity. Such paronomasias are now and then used by the sacred writers (see the note upon Isa. xxiv. 17).

Bethel shall come to nought.] The original runs thus, "Bethel shall become Aven." Bethel signifies the house of God; when the place was defiled by idolatry, it was named by way of reproach, Beth-aven, i. e. "the house of vanity," or idolatry (see Hos. iv. 15); and it is here called so in another sense, viz. as vanity is the same with a thing of nought, or of no continuance.

Ver. 6. Lest he break out like fire [see i. 4] in the house of Joseph.] The ten tribes are called by the name of Joseph, as they are elsewhere by that of Ephraim, the son of Joseph; because that was the chief tribe of the kingdom of Israel (see Ezek. xxxvii. 10).

And there be none to quench it in Bethel.] The idol
Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night: that calleth for the waters of the sea, and pour-eth them out upon the face of the earth: The Lord is his name:

9 That strengtheneth the spoiled against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the fortress.

10 They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and their abhor him that speaketh uprightly.

11 Forasmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat; ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them.

ye worship will not be able to deliver you, but will itself be involved in the common calamity (see note upon Hos. x. 6).

Ver. 7. Ye who turn judgment to wormwood.] Or, "into hemlock," as the word massaḥ is translated, vi. 12. Ye that pervert the law which was designed to protect innocence, and under colour of it exercise the greatest oppression.

Ver. 8. Seek him that maketh the seven stars, and Orion.] The Hebrew names of these constellations are Kūna and Kesel, which are translated to the same sense, Job ix. 9, xxxviii. 31. These, and other constellations, were commonly thought to have a great influence upon the seasons (see the forementioned place of Job). Whereupon their rising and setting used to be particularly taken notice of by husbandmen and shepherds; whose employments lying abroad, made them more observant of the heavenly appearances. So this is an instance of providence very suitable for one of Amos's profession to mention.

Maketh the day dark with night:] The vicissitudes of day and night, and the light's breaking out of darkness, are just matter of admiration, did not the constant recourse of them lessen the wonder. Clemens Alexandrinus cites these verses out of Pindar to the same sense:

Orion, et astra, et sidera
Vissequae terrae, et lumina
Nobilis coelestis usque caelestis
Viri.有过者，而使黑夜同昼并行，

God can create the light.

And make it spring from darkest night:

And when he covers o'er the day, The darkness chases light away.

That calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out] Who commandeth the seas and the rivers to overflow the earth in great inundations. The Jews call all great bodies of water by the name of seas. The words may likewise be explained of the raising vapours out of the sea, to supply rain for the earth, the clouds retaining none of the saltiness of the sea-water (compare Job xxxviii. 34).

Ver. 9.] That giveth strength to him that hath been conquered, and enableth him to subdue his conquerors and become master of their fortifications. And such deliverance God is able to work for Israel (see 2 Kings xiii. 17, &c.).

Ver. 10.] The oppressors of the poor (see ver. 11, 12) hate those magistrates that would punish the injuries, and do right to the oppressed. It was the custom for judges to execute their office sitting in the gates of the city (see the note upon Isa. xxix. 21, and ver. 15 of this chapter).

Ver. 11. Burdens of wheat:] Or, Choice gifts, as the LXX. render it, agreeably to the sense of the Hebrew, where the word massah often signifies a gift or reward (see Jer. xl. 5, Ezek. xx. 40, and bar, the choice or best of any thing.

Ye have built houses—but ye shall not dwell in them;] God often threatens to deprive men of the enjoyment of their ill-gotten substance (see Deut. xxiii. 29, 30, Mic. vi. 15, Zeph. i. 10).

Ver. 12.] Your daring impieties, your sins of the first magnitude, such as idolatry and oppression, proved in the foregoing part of the chapter; or your numerous sins, as the word may be translated; in which sense it is taken, Isa. xlvi. 9.

Ver. 13.] In such times as these, the wisest way for private persons is not to be too free in reproving public vices; which will bring trouble upon themselves, and do no good upon those who are hardened in their sins (compare Hos. iv. 4,Matt. vii. 6).

So the Lord,—shall be with you, as ye have spoken.] Ye used to boast of your interest in him, and of the promises he hath made to your fathers; and obedience is the condition required on your part to qualify you for his favour.

Ver. 15. Establish judgment in the gate:] See ver. 10.

It may be that the Lord—will be gracious.] Your case is not so desperate, but repentance may avert God's judgments (compare Jer. xxxvi. 3); and he may be gracious to the small remains of the ten tribes (see ver. 6), after those grievous invasions wherewith the kings of Syria first, and afterward Tiglath-pileser, have wasted them (see 2 Kings xlii. 7, 9, xiv. 26, 27, xv. 29).

Ver. 16. Wailing shall be in all—and they shall call the husbandman to mourning, &c.] There shall be a general lamentation of all orders and degrees of men; of the citizens, for the loss of their wealth and substance, plundered by the conquerors; of the husbandman and vine-dressers, for the loss of the Tigris of the earth, destroyed or devoured by a foreign army.

And such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing.] Let such whose profession it is to make lamentation at funerals join in this public mourning, to make it more solemn (see ver. 1).

Ver. 17. In all vineyards shall be wailing:] Where there used to be shouting and rejoicing, when the summer grapes were gathered in (see Isa. xlvi. 10, Jer. xxv. 30, xlvii. 33).

For I will pass through thee.] He will come like 21 ¶ I hate, I despise thy feast days, and I will not smell in thy solemn assemblies.

22 Though ye offer me burnt-offerings and your meat-offerings, I will not accept them; neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beasts.

23 Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols.

24 But let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.

25 Have ye offered unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?

as an enemy, that invadeth and destroyeth a country as he Marches through it (compare Exod. xiii. 12, Nahum i. 15).

Ver. 18. Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! Infidels made a mock of the words of the prophets, when they told them, "the day of the Lord was at hand" (see Joel ii. 11, Zeph. i. 14): and out of a principle of unbelief they expressed their desire of seeing this day, that they might be convinced of the truth of such predictions by ocular demonstration (compare Isa. v. 19, Jer. xvii. 15, Ezek. xii. 21, 27, 1 Pet. iii. 4).

To what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness. To what purpose should you desire to see the day of the Lord? It will certainly be a very uncomfortable time, when evils shall succeed one another so fast, that he who seeks to escape one shall fall into a worse (compare Joel ii. 2, and see the note upon iv. 13).

Or went into the house—and a serpent bit him.] Or as a man should go into the house to avoid the severity of the weather abroad; and a viper, whose sting is incurable, should creep out of the wall and bite him.

Ver. 19.] See ver. 13.

Ver. 21. I hate, I despise thy feast days, &c. This and the three following verses are the same in sense with Isa. i. 11, 16, Jer. vi. 20, vii. 21—23, Hos. vi. 6, viii. 13, all which places import, how little the external rites of religion are valuable, unless they are accompanied with a universal obedience.

I will not smell in your solemn assemblies.] Or, "I will not smell the sacrifices of your solemn assemblies." The word chag signifies both a solemn feast, and the sacrifice offered at it (see Exod. xxiii. 18): and by the same reason the word asteroth may be capable of both those significations.

Ver. 22. Neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beasts.] They made choice of the fatter and fattest cattle, when they offered peace-offerings, or offerings of thanksgiving. So we read, Ps. lxvi. 15, "I will offer unto thee burnt-offerings of fattedlings with the incense, or burnt fat, of rams.

Ver. 23. The psalms and hymns were sung in the temple with vocal and instrumental music. As the worshippers at Beth-el imitated the temple worship in other particulars (see iv. 4), so it is likely they did in this part of the public worship (see viii. 3). The prophet calls their songs a noise like that of an unmeaning voice, because their melody not proceeding from a true principle of religion, it was not grateful to God.

Ver. 24.] Rather let justice have its free course, so that the meanest persons may feel the benefit of it.

Ver. 25.] When your forefathers offered sacrifices of slain beasts, and added their meat and drink offerings to them, during their abode in the wilderness; they performed these services with as little sincerity and devotion to me as you do at present. To me is the same as to my honour (see Isa. xliii. 23, Zech. vii. 5, Rom. xiv. 6). The prophets often upbraided the Jews with the sins of their forefathers, and threatened them with remarkable judgments upon that account, when their posterity continue in the same or worse impieties (see Hos. ix. 9, x. 9; compare Matt. xxviii. 35).

Ver. 26. But ye haveovershewn the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chion your images. Your ancestors want of true devotion towards me appears from hence, that they were so prone to continue in those idolatrous practices which they learnt in Egypt; to which they added the worship of the idols they saw in the countries through which they travelled (see Lev. xvii. 3, xviii. 3, Num. xv. 99, xxv. 2, Josh. xxiv. 14, Ezek. xx. 7, 16, xxiii. 8), "The tabernacle of Moloch" was a shrine with the image of the deity placed within it: such were the "silver shrines of Diana," Acts xix. 24, and the Thenea or Lecetice among the Romans. These their votaries carried in procession, as a solemn piece of worship, or a pledge of the presence of their gods among them (see xlvii. 7). Moloch is an idyl often mentioned in scripture to denote the custom of焚烧 their children in sacrifice. It is probable the Israelites were addicted to this kind of worship in the wilderness, because it is so severely prohibited by Moses, Lev. xx. 2, 5. Chion is generally supposed by learned men to be the same with Saturn (see particularly Luc. de Dieu, upon Acts vii. 43, and Dr. Spencer, De Legh. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 5). The same idol was called Remphan, or Rephan, by the Egyptians, as you may see proved in the places above cited: for which reason the Seventy interpreters translate Chion by Rephan; which is an argument that those interpreters were natives, or, at least, inhabitants, of Egypt, as Dr. Hoby observes, De Ver. Grac. Auctoribus, lib. ii. cap. 4.

The stars. As the heathens had images that represented the heavenly bodies (see 2 Kings xxiii. 11, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4), so the image of Chion represented the star Saturn, as that of Moloch did the sun. If we suppose with some learned men that Remphan, or Rephan, was a famous Egyptian king, it was a common opinion among the heathens to suppose the souls of their defiled heroes to be placed in the stars. So Virgil speaks of the stars that appeared quickly after Caesar's death, Eclog. ix.
26 But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Ch妞n your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves.

Ecc diomel processit Cessar ins astrum.

"See Cesar's star is lighted in the skies."

Ver. 27.] Ye shall be removed farther from your own country, than when Hazael, king of Syria, carried away so many Israelites captives to Damascus (see i. 4), and, consequently, shall have less hopes of returning home. The king of Assyria carried the ten tribes captives as far as Media (2 Kings xvii. 6). St. Stephen, in his speech recorded by St. Luke, expressing rather the sense than the words, reads, I will carry you away beyond Babylon, Acts vii. 43. Media being at a much greater distance than Babylon. Both readings import, that the captivity of the ten tribes would be far worse than that of the two remaining, and with less hopes of returning to their own country.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria, which are named chief of the nations, to whom the house of Israel came!

CHAP. VI.

ARGUMENT.—A reproof of those who indulge their ease and pleasures without having any sense of God's afflicted hand, which threatens ruin and desolation to the whole kingdom of Israel for their pride and incorrigibleness.

Ver. 1. Woe to them that are at ease in Zion.] Or, "Are secure," as the margin reads: who live fearless of God's judgments, and resolved to indulge themselves in their voluptuousness, notwithstanding the evident tokens of God's displeasure against the whole nation, both Israel and Judah. For these and the following words contain a threatening against both kingdoms, both Israel and Judah (see ver. 2), though the chief design of this prophecy is against the ten tribes, or kingdom of Israel. But the LXX. translate the words tims, "Woe unto them that despise Zion." [But the learned Dr. Grabke conjectures that instead of Εξουσίοις, despise, it should be read ἐξουσίων, are prosperous: for so the LXX. render the word shanaanim. Pael. cxxii. 4. See the Prolegom. to his edition of the Prophets.] The word shanaanim, which our translation renders are at ease, signifying also to be insolent: in which sense the words may fitly belong to the ten tribes, who despised Zion and the temple, which "God chose out of all the tribes of Israel, to place his name there," and trust in the mountain of Samaria.] In the strength of their capital city, built upon the hill of Samaria (see iv. 1).

Which are named chief of the nations, to whom the house of Israel came? Zion, or Jerusalem, and Samaria, are the chief seats of the two kingdoms, whither is the greatest resort of the whole nation. The word gojim, nations, usually signifies the heathen nations, but sometimes denotes the Jews, and is equivalent to amanim (see Zeph. ii. 9). The Chaldee interprets it, "Who give names to their children, according to the names of the chief of the heathen, to whom the house of Israel apply themselves for protection." Thus, in the later times, some of the Jews took the names of Alexander, Antipater, Agrippa, and the like, to compliment some great men among the Greeks or Romans of those names. The Jews' making alliances with the heathens, is often reproved by the prophets (see 2 Chron. xvi. 7, Isa. xxx. 1, 2, Hos. v. 13, vii. 11, xli. 1).

Ver. 2. Pass ye unto Calneh, and see; and from thence go ye to Hamath the great: then go down to Gath of the Philistines: be they better than these kingdoms? or their border greater than your border?

2 Ye that put far away the evil day, and cause the seat of violence to come near;

3 That lie upon beds of ivory, and stretch yourselves to the hosts of foreign princes.

4 That make them drunk with wine, and stretch themselves upon their beds.

5 That chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick, like David;

6 That eliminate judgment, and perform every manner of pleasure to themselves.

7 That build houses, but not to dwell therein; that plant vineyards, but not to drink the wine thereof.

8 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that make houses, but do not dwell therein.

9 That build houses, but not to dwell therein; that plant vineyards, but not to drink the wine thereof.

10 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

11 That build houses, but do not dwell therein; that plant vineyards, but do not drink the wine thereof.

12 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

13 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

14 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

15 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

16 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

17 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

18 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

19 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

20 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

21 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

22 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

23 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

24 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

25 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

26 That make cities, but do not inhabit them; that plant vineyards, but do not dwell therein.

27 Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus, saith the Lord, whose name is The God of hosts.
CHAPTER VI.

6 That drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.

7 ¶ Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the Chaldee of them that stretch themselves shall be removed.

8 The Lord God hath sworn by himself, saith the Lord the God of hosts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces: therefore will I deliver up the city with all that is therein.

9 And it shall come to pass, if there remain ten men in one house, that they shall die.

10 And a man's uncle shall take him up, and he that burneth him, to bring out the bones out of the house, and shall say unto him that is by the sides of the house, Is there yet any with thee? and he shall say, No. Then shall he say, Hold ing themselves upon their couches," express the posture they used at their meals (see ver. 7, and ii. 8).

Eat the lambs out of the flock.] The choicest and best of them.

Ver. 5. Invent to themselves instruments of music, like David.] Such variety of music as he appropriated to the praise of God (see 1 Chron. xxvi. 5), that they contrive for their own diversion.

Ver. 6. They are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.] They do not humble themselves under God's afflicting hand, nor lay to heart the miseries the divine judgments have brought upon the kingdom of Israel, called by the name Joseph, and the house of Joseph, v. 6, 15. The words allude to the afflicted state of Joseph, when he was sold by his brethren into Egypt.

Ver. 7. The banquet of them that stretched themselves shall be removed.] Their luxurious way of living shall be at an end (see ver. 4).

Ver. 8. I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces.] Whatever the kingdoms of Israel and Judah value themselves for is hateful to me, as having been abused by them, and made instrumental in dishonouring me. If we understand this of Israel, the ten tribes valued themselves as being the most potent kingdom (see 2 Kings xiv. 9). If we suppose the words comprehend Judah (see ver. 1), they valued themselves for having Jerusalem and the temple situate in their territories, where God had "placed his name;" and is peculiarly called the honour, or excellency of Jacob, Ps. xlvii. 4, Ezek. xxiv. 2:

Therefore will I deliver up the city! I will deliver up Samaria first, and then Jerusalem, into the hands of their enemies.

Ver. 9.] Those that escape the hands of the enemy shall die by the pestilence (compare Ezek. v. 13).

Ver. 10. A man's uncle [or near kinsman] shall take him up.] His nearest kinsman must be forced to perform the last office for him, and carry him to his burial.

And [or] he that burneth him, to bring out the bones out of the house.] And is equivalent to or here (see Nolius, p. 271). The undertakers of the funeral first burnt the body, in order to carry out the remaining bones to be buried. It was usual to burn the bodies of kings and great persons with odours and spices (see Jer. xxxiv. 5, 2 Chron. xvi. 14), and it may be, they might use the same custom in this case for fear of infection.

Shall say unto him that is by the sides of the house [in or near the house], Is there yet any with thee?] Alive or dead.

Hold thy tongue: for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord.] Silence best becomes such astonishing calamities: or, It is to no purpose to call upon God, or to implore his help in our afflictions. An expression betokening despair, joined with impatience: like that of Jeram, 2 Kings vi. 33, "What should I wait for the Lord any longer?" The verb zacar, to remember, or make mention, when it is spoken of God, signifies his worship, as Dr. Spencer observes, De Leg. Heb. lib. ii. cap. 5.

Ver. 11.] People of all ranks, high and low, shall be sufferers in the common calamities (see ill. 15).

Ver. 12.] Your perverting of judgment, and thereby making up for the seeming fruit or effect of righteousness, is as much the inverting the nature and order of things, as it would be to undertake to run a race upon a rock, or to cultivate it by ploughing or sowing there. The word rosh, translated here and in other places galt, signifies a weed growing among corn, as bitter as wormwood: and hannah, rendered hemlock, is translated wormwood, v. 7, and in other places.

Ver. 13. Ye which rejoice in a thing of nought,] Ye pride yourselves in your own strength, which will stand you in no stead, without God's blessing and assistance.

Have not taken to us horns by our own strength?] A horn is often used in scripture for power, strength, or authority; the metaphor being taken from the horns of an ox or bullock, wherein his strength lies. The boast of the Israelites seems chiefly grounded upon the success their king Jeroboam the Second had in restoring the ancient dominion of Israel, and recovering it from the Syrians, who had brought them very low (see 2 Kings xiii. 3, 7, xiv. 25).

Ver. 14. I will raise up against you a nation,— and they shall afflict you from the entering in of Hemath unto the river of the wilderness.] The prophet means the Assyrians, who should afflict them from one end of the land unto the other. "The entering in of Hemath" was the northern boundary of their country (see note upon ver. 2), and "the river of the wilderness" is the same with the "river of Egypt," Gen. xi. 12, Josh. xv. 47. 1 Kings viii. 65, Isa. xxvii. 12, which arises out of mount Paran, and is the southermost bound of Judea. It is called the "sea of the plain," as our interpretation renders it, Deut. iii. 17, or "the sea of the wilderness," as it is translated here; the original word Arabah being the same in both places.
AMOS.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me; and behold, he formed grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and, lo, it was the latter growth after the king's mowing.

2 And it came to pass, that when they had made an end of eating the grass of the land, then said I, O Lord God, forgive, I beseech thee; by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small.

3 The Lord repented for this: It shall not be, saith the Lord.

4 ¶ Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me; and behold, the Lord God called to contend by fire, and it devoured the great deep, and did eat up a part.

5 Then said I, O Lord God, cease, I beseech thee; by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small.

6 The Lord repented for this: This also shall not be, saith the Lord God.

CHAP. VII.

ARGUMENT.—By three several visions God represents to Amos the judgments he is bringing upon Israel, which are mitigated by the intercession of the prophet; who being accused of sedition by Amaziah the priest of Beth-er to king Jeroboam, he denounces judgment against Amaziah and his family.

Ver. 1. He formed grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth.] Most commentators suppose this vision to denote the invasion of Pulp, king of Assyria, mentioned 2 Kings xv. 19. But this and the following calamities may as probably relate to those tumults and commotions which happened after Jeroboam's death, during an anarchy which lasted eleven years, from that time till his son's settlement on the throne, as appears by comparing the times of the kings of Israel and Judah. This was cutting Israel short, after they had begun to flourish again under the prosperous reign of Jeroboam, and so might fitly be represented by the grasshoppers devouring the latter or second growth of the grass.

It was the latter growth after the king's mowing.] The first crop of grass was set apart for the use of the king's stables.

Ver. 2. By whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small.] If thou suffer these calamities to proceed to extremity, by what means shall the small remains of the riches and strength of the kingdom be rescued from utter destruction? Some translate the words, Who shall arise up, or stand for Jacob? but the interpellatory pronoun, mi, who, may stand for bem, by whom; as it does, Isa. li. 19.

Ver. 3. The Lord was pleased to hearken to my earnest supplication, and to promise, that the threatened judgment should not proceed to an utter destruction of the whole kingdom.

Ver. 4. This represents a sorcer judgment than the former, and in the opinion of most expositors denotes the invasion of Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, who carried a great part of Israel away captive (2 Kings xv. 29), and so was properly represented by a raging fire, which consumed the sea by turning it into vapours, and then devoured a great part of the land.

7 ¶ Thus he shewed me: and, behold, the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand.

8 And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, a plumb-line. Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumb-line in the midst of my people Israel: I will not again pass by them any more:

9 And the high places of Israel shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste; and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.

10 ¶ Then Amaziah the priest of Bethel sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel: the land is not able to bear all his words.

11 For thus Amos saith, Jeroboam shall die by the sword; and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land.

Ver. 7, 8. The Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, &c.] God's judgments are sometimes represented by a line and a plummet, to denote that they are measured out by the exactest rules of justice (see 2 Kings xxi, 13, Isa. xxvii. 17). The instruments which are designed for building are sometimes used to mark out these places which are to be pulled down or destroyed (see 2 Sam. viii. 2, Isa. xxxvii. 11, Lam. ii. 5). This vision imports that as God formerly by built up his people, he would now pluck them down and destroy them (see Jer. i. 10, xxxii. 25).

Ver. 8. I will not again pass by them any more.] I will not any longer pass over their transgressions (compare viii. 2, Mic. vii. 18). Or, I will not pass through them to destroy them any more (see v. 17), because I will do it once for all (compare Nahum i. 9).

Ver. 9. The high places of Israel shall be desolate.] The altar and grove at Beer-sheba, where Isaac dwelt and built an altar (Gen. xxvi. 25, xlvii. 1). This place was afterward abused to idolatry (see the note upon v. 5).

The sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste.] The places set apart for idolatrous worship: such were Beth-el, Gilgal, and Beer-sheba (see iii. 14, v. 5). The word sanctuary is used for an idolatrous temple, Isa. xvi. 12. I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.] This was fulfilled when Shallum conspired against Zechariah the son of Jeroboam, and slew him (2 Kings xv. 10), who was the last of that family who reigned.

Ver. 10. Then Amaziah the priest of Beth-el sent to Jeroboam: This was a priest, not of the tribe of Levi, but such a one as were those, whom Jeroboam, the first of that name, had consecrated to perform the idolatrous service at Beth-el (see 1 Kings xii. 31).

Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel.] i. e. In an open and barefaced manner. He traduces the prophet as a stirrer up of sedition: the same crime was objected to Jerimiah, Jer. xxxvi. 9, 10, to Christ, Luke xxii. 2, and to St. Paul, Acts xxiv. 5.

The land is not able to bear all his words.] The friends of the government cannot patiently hear them, and the enemies of it will take advantage from them to make some disturbance.
CHAPTER VIII. 733

12 Also Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou seer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there; for it is the king's chapel, and it is the king's court.

13 But prophesy not again any more at Beth-el: for it is the king's chapel, and it is the king's court.

14 ¶ Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I AM not a prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdsman, and a gathering of sycemore fruit:

15 And the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel.

16 ¶ Now therefore hear thou the word of the Lord: Thou sayest, Prophesy not against Israel, and drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.

17 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Thy wife shall be as an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land; and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

Ver. 16. Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.] The verb hitith, to drop, signifies in its primary sense, to instill doctrine or instruction by easy and gentle degrees (see Deut. xxxii. 2); from thence it comes to denote prophecy, being one sort of instruction accompanied with exhortation. See Ezek. xxi. 2, Mic. ii. 6, where the word is translated prophecy by our English interpreters. "The house of Isaac" may be taken in the same sense with the "high places of Isaac, " ver. 9, meaning Beer-sheba; or it may be equivalent to Jacob or Israel, in which sense most expositors understand it.

Ver. 17. Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city.] When Beth-el shall be taken by the Assyrians (see Hos. x. 5, 6), the soldiers shall abuse thy wife, and treat her as a common harlot (compare Isa. xiii, 16, Lam. v. 11, Zech. xiv. 2). And this shall befall her as a punishment of her idolatry, which is spiritual whoredom (see Hos. iv. 13).

Thy land shall be divided by line.] Among the Assyrians: in the division of land it was customary to mark out every one's share by a line (see Ps. lxxviii. 55).

Thou shalt die in a polluted land.] Thou shalt be carried captive out of thine own country, and die in a land where the inhabitants are idolaters, and where it will be impossible to converse without committing legal pollutions (see Ezek. iv. 13, Hos. ix. 3).

CHAP. VIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet by a fourth vision gives notice of the certainty and nearness of the destruction of the ten tribes: he reproves them for oppression, and foretells that the sun shall be darkened by an eclipse upon their solemn festivals, which shall turn their present joy into mourning, and shall be esteemed a prognostication of more dismal calamities to come; amongst which "a famine of God's word" here threatened may be esteemed the greatest.

Ver. 1, 2. A basket of summer fruit.] The basket of ripe summer fruit, which Amos saw in a vision, was to denote that Israel's sins were now ripe for judgment; as the time of judgment is elsewhere expressed by a harvest or a vintage (see Joel iii. 13). The two Hebrew words, kaec, " summer fruit," and

3 And the songs of the temple shall be howlings in that day, saith the Lord God: there shall be many dead bodies in every place; they shall cast them forth with silence.

4 ¶ Hear this, O ye that swell up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail,

5 Saying, When will the new moon be gone, kete, "an end," having an affinity in their sound: such paronomasias are to be found in other texts of scripture (see Isa. xxiv. 17, Jer. i. 11, 12). Many instances of this kind are to be found; Micah i. 10, &c.

I will not again pass by them] See vii. 8.

Ver. 3.] The songs or hymns sung in the temple at Beth-el, shall be turned into howlings or lamentations (see v. 22). This may relate to the time when the golden calf was carried away by Shalmaneser (compare Hos. x. 5, 6). The Assyrians (see ver. 8) will make such a slaughter among the people, that there will be no opportunity of using public mournings or lamentations at their funerals, as was usual in other cases; but their friends will hurry them to their graves with as much silence and privacy as they can (compare Jer. xxii. 18).

Ver. 4. O ye that swell up the needy.] Or, Trample upon them (see note on li. 7).

Ver. 5. When will the new moon be gone,] This 3Q. that we may sell corn, and the sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shékél great, and falsifying the balances by deceit?
6 That we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?
7 The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works.
8 Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn therein? and it shall rise up wholly as a flood; and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.
9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord Gop, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day:

was one of their solemn feasts, the use of which they retained with their idolatrous worship (see ver.
10).

Making the ephah small, and the shekel great.) The ephah was the measure wherewith they sold, containing about one of our bushels: this they made smaller than the just standard. The shekel was the money they received for the price of their goods:
and by falsifying the balances, when they weighed it, they diminished its just value, and commanded a greater price for their goods. So both ways they overreached those that dealt with them (see Mi. vi.
11).

Ver. 6. That we may buy the poor for siler.]
Who must be forced to sell themselves to us for slaves, to satisfy the debts they owe to us (see ii.
6).

And sell the refuse of the wheat?] The traders by these deceitful arts made corn so dear, that people were glad to buy the worst of it, and such as was not fit to make bread.

Ver. 7. The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob,] By himself, who is truly the glory of Jacob, or Israel (see Ps. lxi. 34), whatever other excellency or advantage they may make the subject of their glory (see vi. 5).

I will never forget any of their works,] God is said to remember men's sins when he punisheth them (see Hos. viii. 13, ix. 9, Isa. xiii. 25, Jer. xxxi. 34).

Ver. 8. It shall rise up wholly as a flood.] Or, a river. The LXX. with a very small alteration in the Hebrew points, give a plainer sense of the words, thus: "Distress shall rise up like a flood;" the calamity of a hostile invasion by the Assyrians shall be like an inundation, which in a short time overruns a whole country (compare Isa. viii. 7, 8, Jer. xlvii. 5, Dan. ix. 30).

It shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.] Or rather, " The river of Egypt." The inhabitants of the land shall be swallowed up, as Egypt is by the inundation of the river Nile. To this sense the Chaldee paraphrase expounds the place: "He shall make a king come against it [the land] with a mighty army, like a flood, and he shall drive out the inhabitants thereof, and [the land itself] shall be drowned, as when the flood of Egypt [overflows]."

Ver. 9.) Calamitous times are expressed by the falling of the light of the sun, and the day's being overspread with darkness (see Isa. xiii. 10, lix. 9, 10, Jer. xv. 9, Job v. 14, xxii. 17). But Archbishop Usher hath observed in his Annals, ad A.
M. 3213, that about eleven years after the time when Amos prophesied, there were two great eclipses of the sun, one at the feast of tabernacles, 10 And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

11 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the Lord Gop, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord:
12 And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it.
13 In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst.
14 They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy god, O Dan, liveth; and The mannae [or way] of Beer-sheba liveth; even they shall fall, and never rise up again.

CHAPTER IX.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet seeth a fifth vision, representing the final destruction of the kingdom of Israel; but he concludes his prophecy with promises of restoring the kingdom of David, and the Jewish nation, under the Messias, when the church shall be enlarged by the gentiles coming into it.

Ver. 1. I saw the Lord standing upon the altar:] This may most probably be understood of the altar at Bethel (compare iii. 14.) God's standing upon the altar, may likewise denote the destruction of the idolaters themselves, as so many victims slain tostone the divine vengeancethe compare Ezek. ix. 2, xxiv. 17, Isa. xxiv. 6. This appearance of God was, by a visible and glorious light, commonly called the Shechinah by the Jewish writers; concerning which the reader may consult Archbishop Tenison's Treatise of Idolatry, ch. 14.

Smite the lintel of the door, that the posts may shake:] This denotes the approaching ruin of that idolatrous temple, which should put an end to the worship performed there (see viii. 3). The altar of burnt-offerings probably stood near the outward door of the temple, as it did at Jerusalem.

I will slay the last [or residue] of them with the sword:] I will give them a mortal wound (compare Ps. lxxxvii. 21, Isa. ii. 9, Hab. iii. 13), so that there shall be no residue or remainder left to escape (compare Ezek. xxii. 23).

He that believeth, if he not flee away,] See ii. 14.

Ver. 2.] Though they hide themselves in the deepest holes, or caverns of the earth (see Isa. ii. 19), or take refuge in the highest fortresses, they shall not escape my vengeance.

Ver. 3. Though they hide themselves in the top of Carmel,] There were great caves formed by nature in the tops of some mountains, where men used to secure themselves in the time of danger. Such was the cave in a mountain in the wilderness of Ziph, 1 Sam. xxviii. 14 (see the note upon Ezek. xxxiii. 27, and Dr. Lightfoot's Works, vol. ii. p. 85).

Will I command the serpent.] The word serpent is used for a water animal, Isa. xxvii. 1, and is joined there with levithath and launin, which last word signifies not a dragon, as it is translated, but a whale. In like manner the word nehash, used here, may signify some carnivorous fish.

Ver. 4.] The same judgment is denounced against them, Lev. xxvi. 33, Deut. xxviii. 65, compare likewise Ezek. v. 13.

Ver. 5. And [or, for] the Lord God of hosts—toucheth the land, and it shall melt.] The least token of God's displeasure will put the whole frame of nature out of order (compare Isa. lxvi. 1, 13, Mic. iii. 4, Hab. iii. 10). And when God's hand is visibly stretched out against a land, or people, they become altogether dispirited; the stoutest men lose their courage (see ii. 16), their hearts failing them for fear, and out of a dreadful expectation of the miseries which are coming upon them.

If [this calamity] shall rise up wholly like a flood; and [they that dwell in the land] shall be drowned.] See viii. 8.

Ver. 6. It is he that butteth his stories in the heaven.] An awful description of God's irresistible power, discovering itself in the works of the creation, particularly in his appointing several regions of the air, as so many apartments that lead to the highest heaven, the seat of his own glory (see Ps. civ. 3).

And hath founded his troop in the earth.] The old English translation hath rendered the sense very perspicuously thus: "And hath laid the foundation of his globe of elements in the earth." The word agudah, troop, signifies the collection of elements and other creatures, which furnish the earth, expressed by the word ina, the host, Gen. ii. 1. The Chaldee paraphrase expresses the sense thus: "It is he that hath placed his Shechinah or tabernacle of his glory in the bottom of the sea, whence I will command the serpent, and he shall bite them:"

And though they go into captivity before their enemies, whence I will command the sword, and it shall slay them: and I will set mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good.

And the Lord God of hosts is he that toucheth the land, and it shall melt, and all that dwell therein shall mourn; and it shall rise up wholly like a flood, and shall be drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.

6 It is he that buildeth his stories in the heaven, and hath founded his troop in the earth; he that calleth for the waters of the sea, and pour-eth them out upon the face of the earth: The Lord is his name.

7 Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the Lord. Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt? and the Philistines from Capthor, and the Syrians from Kir?

8 Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord.

9 For, lo, I will command, and I will sift in the height above, and made his church glorious upon earth."

He that calleth, for the waters] See v. 8.

Ver. 7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me.] Are ye not under a curse, as the Ethiopians, the posterity of Ham, were (see Gen. xi. 35), by reason of your multiplied sins and apostasies! Cushi, or Cushim, often signifies the Arabians, but it is sometimes understood of the Ethiopians, properly so called, as hath been observed in the notes upon Jer. xiii. 23.

Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt? and the Philistines from Capthor.] You may think my former kindness in delivering you out of the Egyptian bondage, and giving you the land of Canaan, obliges me still to continue your protector. But I have shown the like favour to other nations, particularly to the Philistines, who had their original from Capthor, and afterward dispossessed the old inhabitants of Palestine, and dwelt in their stead (see Deut. ii. 23, and the note upon Jer. xlvii. 4), and yet against these very Philistines I have denounced my judgments for their sins (see the forementioned place of Jeremy, and l. 8 of this prophecy).

And the Syrians from Kir?] Some copies of our English bible read Assyrians, but it is a mistake of the print; the more correct editions read Syrians, which answers the Hebrew Aram. Some understand the words of the new colonies which Tiththipliser transplanted from Kir, and placed in Syria in the room of the native Syrians, whom he had carried captive to Kir (see i. 5). But it may be understood of some more ancient removal of the Syrians from Kir, not elsewhere taken notice of.

Ver. 8. The eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, &c.] See ver. 4. God still promises to preserve a remnant in the midst of his heaviest judgments, that he may perform to them the promises he made to their fathers (see Jer. xxx. 11, Joel ii. 32, Rom. xi. 25, 29).

Ver. 9. I will mingle or scatter the Israelites among all nations, just as good and bad grain are mingled in a sieve; but will so order it, that none of the good grain shall be lost, or fall to the ground (compare Matt. iii. 12).

Ver. 10. Shall die by the sword.] They shall be cut off by some judgment sent from God (see note upon Zech. xi. 17).

Ver. 11. [That the evil shall not overtake] Who indulge themselves in their carnal security, without any apprehension or dread of the divine judgments denounced against them (compare vi. 3).

Ver. 11. In that day] When I come to make a remarkable difference between the good and the bad (ver. 9). The phrase denotes some extraordinary time or season, prefixed by God, for restoring the good estate of his people the Jews, or bestowing the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sown in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth.

10 All the sinners of my people shall die by the sword, which say, The evil shall not overtake nor prevent us.

11 [In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old:] 12 That they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this.

13 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, great blessings upon the world (see the note upon Isa. iv. 2). The sense of it is expressed by مَنِّ ٖمَرَنَ بِنَاس, afterward, Acts xv. 16, which phrase is equivalent to the last days, Joel ii. 28, which both Jews and Christians expound of the days of the Messias.

Will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, &c.] At that time I will restore the kingdom to the house and family of David, in the person of the Messias, so often styled in the prophets the seed or offspring of David, and known by that title among the Jews of our Saviour's age (see Matt. xxii. 33, 30, xxii. 9). And whereas that family had been, for several years before his coming, reduced to a mean and obscure condition (see Mic. v. 2, Luke i. 48, 52), it shall now recover its ancient splendour and dignity.

The tabernacle of David" is an expression met with but twice in scripture, here and Isa. xlvii. 5. It may allude to his having been a shepherd, and dwelling in tents, before he was advanced to a kingdom, but since that reduced in his family to as low a condition as it was in at first: but I conceive the phrase does mystically denote the church, whereof the Messias, here foretold, was to be the head; which is elsewhere styled God's tabernacle, as being a place of his especial residence, as the tabernacle in the wilderness was (see Lev. xxvi. 11. Ezek. xxvii. 17, compared with Rev. xxi. 3). Tobit understood this text of the days of the Messiah, xiii. 10, where he exhorts "Zion to praise God that his tabernacle may again be built in her."

Ver. 12.] [If we follow the English translation, the words foretell the same event which is foretold by Obadiah, chap. i. 5. Who is able to perform his prophecy; and by Balaam, Num. xxiv. 17.] The words in the Hebrew are capable of another translation, thus: "The remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen that are (or shall be) called by my name, may possess me," the Lord: i.e. that both those of Edom, which are near neighbours, but fierce enemies to the Jews (see the notes upon Isa. xi. 14), as well as the other gentiles "which were at first," may be made subjects to the kingdom of David, now again erected. This sense of the text is followed by the LXX. and approved by Lud. De Dicu, and our learned Dr. Pocock, in order to reconcile the Greek translation with the original (see Dr. Pocock's Not. Miscell. cap. iv. p. 46).

But others suppose the LXX. read, with a small alteration from the present Hebrew, γενεάλογον, seek, for γενεάλογον, which may be made subjects to the kingdom of David, instead of Adam, these two words differing only in their points, which are generally acknowledged to be of a much later date than the original. For the fuller explaining the text, I shall refer the reader to the Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield's learned Defence of the Ancient Prophecies, p. 108.

Ver. 13. The days come, that the plowman shall that the ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt.

14 And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant

The mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

15 And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.

hills shall melt.] i. e. Shall flow down with wine or milk (see note on Joel iii. 18). The Chaldee paraphrase, the Septuagint, and Vulgar Latin, understand the Hebrew verb, translated melt, of being cultivated, the stony ground being made softer by ploughing and manuring. The prophets sometimes describe the days of the Messias in the same terms the poets do the golden age (see Ps. lxii. 16, Isa. xxxv. 1, xli. 19, iv. 13, Hos. ii. 21, 22).

Ver. 14. I will bring again the captivity of my people] I will restore them to their own country, and settle them in it (see the following verse, and note upon Ezek. xxviii. 23).

They shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them, &c.] Compare Isa. Ixi. 4, Ezek. xxxvi. 33, 36. This and the following part of the verse contain a promise to them, that they shall enjoy the fruits of their labours, in opposition to that curse denounced against them, v. 11, Deut. xxviii. 50, that they should build houses, and not dwell in them "(compare Isa.
Iv. 22).

Ver. 15.] They shall dwell in it secure from any annoyance of enemies (compare Jer. xxiii. 6, xxxii.
41, Ezek. xxxiv. 25, Joel iii. 20, Mic. iv. 4, Zeph.
iii. 13).

PREFACE.

Grotius, Heuetius (in his Demonstratio Evangelica), and Dr. Lightfoot (in his Harmony of the Old Testament), are of opinion, that Obadiah was contemporary with the elder prophets, Hosen, Joel, and Amos: the reason they chiefly allege is, that the compilers of the Old Testament canon had a regard to the order of time in their placing the minor prophets. But this reason seems to be of little force, since we find that Jonah is placed the fifth in order, nay, the sixth, in the Greek copies, who was confessedly ancienter than any of those that are placed before him.

Vol. III.—93

The more probable opinion is, that Obadiah prophesied about the time of the taking of Jerusalem: and thereupon, in foretelling the destruction of Edom, he uses several expressions which Jeremiah had done before him, speaking upon that subject (compare Obad. ver. 1, 8, with Jer. xlix. 9, 14—16). Ezekiel agrees with Jeremiah and Obadiah, in assigning the same reason for the judgments threatened against the Edomites, viz.
their insulting over the Jews in the time of their disress (see Ezek. xvi. 12, xxxv. 5, &c.).

Archbishop Usher, in his Annals, ad A. M.
3410, supposes this prophecy to have been fulfilled about five years after the taking of Jerusalem.
1 The vision of Obadiah. Thus saith the Lord God concerning Edom: We have heard a rumour from the Lord, and an ambassador is sent among the heathen, Arise ye, and let us rise up against her in battle.

2 Behold, I have made thee small among the heathen: thou art greatly despised.

3 ¶ The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwellest in the cliffs of the rock, whose habitation is high; that saith in his heart, Who shall bring me down to the ground?

4 Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord.

5 If thieves came to thee, if robbers by night, (how art thou cut off!) would they not have stolen till they had enough? if the grape-gatherers came to thee, would they not leave some grapes?

6 How are the things of Edom searched out! how are his hidden things sought up!

7 All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border: the men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee, and prevailed against thee; they that eat thy bread have laid a wound under thee: there is none understanding in him.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet, after having denounced utter destruction upon Edom for their unnatural enmity against the Jews, foretells their restoration and flourishing state in the latter times.

Ver. 1. An ambassador is sent among the heathen [or nations], &c.] The prophets sometimes represent Almighty God as summoning armies, and setting them in array of battle, against those people he designs to destroy (see Jer. ii. 27, 28). And here, according to the custom of earthly princes, he is described as sending ambassadors to invite the nations to join in a confederacy against the Idumeans (compare Jer. xlix. 14). The words are the same in both places, only what Jeremiah speaks in the singular number is expressed here in the plural, to intimate that Obadiah had received the same commission from God which was signified to Jeremiah before.

Ver. 2. I have made thee small among the heathen [or nations]!] Thou art contemptible in the sight of the Chaldeans and their confederates, who think they can easily subdue thee. This verse and the two following are almost word for word the same with the fifteenth and sixteenth verses of the forty-ninth chapter of Jeremiah.

Ver. 3.] Thou valuest thyself too much upon the strength of thy situation, being placed among rocks which thou thinkest inaccessible by the enemy. St. Jerome, who dwelt in that neighbourhood, observes upon the place, that the Idumeans dwelt in caves dug out of the rocks (see likewise Numb. xxxiv. 3, 4, 2 Kings xiv. 7).

Ver. 4. Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle [see note upon Jer. xlix. 16], and though thou set thy nest among the stars.] Upon the highest mountains, that seem to reach up to heaven (compare Isa. xiv. 14, 15, Jer. ii. 59, Amos ix. 2, Hab. ii. 9).

Ver. 5. If thieves come to thee.] See Jer. xlii. 9.

Ver. 6. How are his hidden things sought up!] Those treasures and riches which he took all possible care to conceal, that they might not be discovered by the enemy (see Jer. xlix. 10).

Ver. 7. All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border:] The confederates marched out with thee till they came to the borders of thy country, and then they treacherously joined with the enemy's forces.

Ver. 8. Shall I not in that day, saith the Lord, even destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau?

Ver. 9. And thy mighty men, O Teman, shall be dismayed, to the end that every one of the mount of Esau may be cut off by slaughter.

Ver. 10. ¶ For thy violence against thy brother Jacob shall I cause to cease thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever.

Ver. 11. In the day that thou standest on the other side, in the day that the strangers carried away captive his forces, and foreigners entered into his gates, and cast lots upon Jerusalem, even thou castest as one of them.

Ver. 12. But thou shouldst not have looked on the day of thy brother in the day that he became a stranger; neither shouldst thou have rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction; neither shouldst thou have spoken proudly in the day of distress.

Ver. 13. Thou shouldst not have entered into the gate of my people in the day of their calamity; yea, thou shouldst not have looked on their affliction in the day of their calamity, nor have laid hands on their substance in the day of their calamity:
14 Neither shouldst thou have stood in the crossway, to cut off those of his that did escape; neither shouldst thou have delivered up those of his that did remain in the day of distress.

15 For the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen: as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head.

16 For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually, yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been.

17 § But upon mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions.

18 And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the Lord hath spoken it.

19 And they of the south shall possess the mount of Esau; and they of the plain the Philistines: and they shall possess the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria: and Benjamin shall possess Gilead.

20 And the captivity of this host of the children of Israel expression of "looking upon an enemy," signifies the beholding his fall with satisfaction, Ps. liv. 7, lxix. 10, xevi. 10, xxiii. 8. Our translators render it in those places "See my desire upon mine enemies" (compare Mic. iv. 11, vii. 10).

The day of thy brother] "The day of his calamity," as it is expressed ver. 13 (compare Ps. xxxviii. 13, cxxxvii. 7). When he was driven from his own inheritance, and went captive into a strange land.

Ver. 14. Neither shouldst thou have delivered up those—that did remain] Or, "Shut up those," as the margin reads. The word signifies to shut up all the ways of escaping to the conquered, in order to take them and deliver them up to the enemy (see Ps. xxxvi. 8). So the Greek word which answers it is taken, Gal. iii. 33. Συγκατατεθησαται απο την μητροτητη πιθηκους, which should be translated, not shut up, but "delivered over to the faith, which should afterward be revealed," just as a schoolmaster delivers up his scholar whom he be comes to age; as the comparison there follows.

Ver. 15. For the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen] "If judgment begin at the house of God, we may certainly conclude, that they who are more professedly wicked shall not escape (compare Jer. xxxv. 18, 29, xlix. 12, I Pet. iv. 17).

They shall be as thou hast not been] Others shall rejoice at thy calamities, as thou hast insulted over theirs. As thou hast spoiled and plundered thy neighbours, thou shalt be served thyself (see Ezek. xxxv. 15, Iab. ii. 8).

Ver. 16. As ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually.] Since ye, O my people, have drunk the cup of my wrath, which has been executed upon you in mount Zion (see ver. 17) and at Jerusalem, where my name was placed; there is no reason that those who are strangers and foreigners to my name and worship should expect to be excused (see the note upon ver. 15). The prophet speaks of the Jews here, as already under a state of captivity; as they actually were, before this prophet was called; and God's judgments are commonly represented by a cup of intoxicating liquors (see note upon Jer. xxv. 15).

They shall be as though they had not been.] They shall be utterly destroyed (compare Ezek. xxvi. 21).

Ver. 17. Upon mount Zion shall be deliverance.] This was remarkably verified at the first preaching of the gospel, when God's "law came forth from Zion" (Isa. ii. 3, Joel ii. 22, Ps. cxv. 2): and there shall be another completion of it, at the restoration of the Jewish nation, which is spoken of in this and the following verses.

There shall be holiness.] See Joel iii. 17.

Ver. 18.] The Jews, when they are restored to their own land, shall devour all their enemies that shall give them any disturbance there (see Isa. xlv. 14, xxxi. 9, Joel iii. 19, Mic. v. 8, Zech. xii. 6, Ezek. xxxviii. 14, 23).

Ver. 19. They of the south shall possess the mount of Esau.] They that dwell in the southern parts of Judea shall possess the mountainous country of Edom (see Mal. i. 3), elsewhere called mount Seir (see Ezek. xxxv. 2, 3). The tribe of Judah, which inhabited the southern part of Judea, bordered upon Edom (see Josh. xv. 21). Here it is foretold they should enlarge their borders that way.

They of the plain the Philistines.] The plain lay lower and more watered than the south part of Judea, and it lay towards the Philistines' country (see Josh. xv. 33, 45, and the note upon Zech. vii. 7). These were likewise ill neighbours to the Jews, whom they should at last conquer, and possess their land, as the prophet here foretells (compare Zeph. ii. 7).

They shall possess the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria.] The prophet speaks of those places as places of perpetual waters, for so they were in his time; viz. that colony which the king of Assyria settled here, "who served their own idols, together with the god of the land," 2 Kings xvii. 24, 33. So the words import the conquest of the Jews over their idolatrous neighbours (see the note upon ver. 18).

Benjamin shall possess Gilead.] Benjamin, although the smallest of the tribes, shall enlarge his borders as far as the land of Gilead beyond Jordan.

Ver. 20. The captivity of this host—shall possess that of the Canaanites, even unto Zarephath.] The ten tribes, when they shall return from their captivity, shall possess all the country where the Canaanites formerly lived, even unto Zarephath, or Sarepta, a city near Sidon, in the northern borders of Judah, 1 Kings xvii. 9. The Canaanites, properly so called, were ancient inhabitants of that district (see Judg. i. 32, 33, Matt. xv. 21, 22).

The captivity of Jerusalem, which is in Sepharad, shall possess the cities of the south.] Dr. Lightfoot, in his Chronological notes upon St. Luke, chap. ii., supposes Sepharad to be a part of the country of Edom, and explains the text of the Jews who were captives in Edom, that they should possess the cities of the south that lay near that country (see the beginning of the nineteenth verse). Others translate the sentence thus, "The captivity of Jerusalem shall possess that which is in Sepharad, and the cities of the south." In the former part of the verse the prophet mentioned the re-settlement of the ten tribes after their restoration: here he mentions that of Judah, under the name of Jerusalem. Israel and Judah are commonly joined together, as equally sharers in the general restoration of that nation (see the note upon Jer. iii. 18). Of the latter it is here foretold, that they should possess the country called Sepharad. If that word be taken as an appellative, it signifies a border, and may denote that part of dren of Israel shall possess that of the Canaanites;

Even unto Zarephath; and the captivity of Jerusalem, which is in Sepharad, shall possess the cities of the south.

Arabia which bordereth upon the south of Judea, or the "cities of the south," here mentioned.

Ver. 21. And saviours shall come up on mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's.

commonwealth of Israel (compare ver. 17, and Amos ix. 22). Instead of saviours, the LXX., with a small alteration of the Hebrew points, read, "those that are saved, or escape: the same with the remnant often mentioned in the prophecies, and particularly Joel ii. 32 (see the note upon the place).

The kingdom shall be the Lord's.) This will be fulfilled when the four monarchies are destroyed, and the stone which smote the image becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth (see Dan. ii. 35, 44, vii. 14, 27; Zech. xiv. 9, Zeph. iii. 9, Rev. ix. 15).

THE BOOK

OF

THE PROPHET JONAH.

PREFACE.

Jonah was the most ancient of all the prophets whose writings are preserved in scripture canon. Bishop Lloyd, in his Chronological Tables, supposed him to have prophesied in the latter end of Jehu's or the beginning of Jehoshaz's reign; at which time the kingdom of Israel was brought very low by the oppressions of Hazael, king of Syria (2 Kings xiii. 22). This might be a proper reason for Jonah to foretell the success which Jehoshaz's grandson, Jeroboam, should have in restoring the coasts of Israel; 2 Kings xiv. 25. He was of Gath-hepher, a town in the tribe of Zebulun (Josh. xix. 19), not far from Sephorin, or Dio-cæsarea, as St. Jerome informs us in his Commentary upon Jonah: who adds, that "Jonah's sepulchre was shown there in his time." This town was situate in Galilee, and so confutes that observation of the Pharisees, that "out of Galilee there did arise no prophet," John vii. 52. He was sent to Nineveh, to denounce destruction to that city, within forty days' time, if they repented not. But they complying with the summons of the prophet, God deferred the executing his judgments till the increase of their iniquities made them ripe for destruction, about one hundred and fifty years afterward; as we shall see more particularly, when we come to explain the prophecy of Nahum.

CHAPTER I.

1 Now the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the son of Amittai, saying,

2 Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me.

3 But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish to the LXX. express the sense (see Gen. xviii. 20, James v. 4, Rev. xviii. 5). For this cause heinous offences are called "crying sins."

Ver. 3. But Jonah rose up [or went away: see Gen. xxv. 34, Numb. xxiv. 25] to flee—from the presence of the Lord.) He might think that that impulse which wrought in the prophet might not exert itself but in the land of Judea; or he might go away out of a sudden fear, as our first parents "hid themselves from the presence of God among the trees of the garden," Gen. iii. 8. It is certain that Jonah, in his sedate thoughts, acknowledged God's omnipresence (see the ninth verse of this chapter, and ii. 2).
from the presence of the Lord, and went down to Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord.

4 ¶ But the Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken.

5 Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep.

6 So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.

7 And they said every one to his fellow, Come, and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us. So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah.

8 Then said they unto him, Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us; What is thine occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou?

9 And he said unto them, I am an Hebrew; and I fear the Lord, the God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land.

He found a ship going to Tarshish: [Learned men suppose that there were several places of that name noted for trade; one in Spain, another in India; and this might probably be in Cilicia. “Ships of Tarshish” generally signify any trading or merchant-ships (see the note upon Isa. ii. 16). The reason of Jonah’s unwillingness to undertake the delivery of the divine message, shall be considered in the note upon iv. 2.

Ver. 5. Cried every man unto his god.] To their several idols, as being heathens, and ignorant of the true God.

But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship:] Into a cabin in one of the sides of the ship. So we read that Jephthah was buried “in the cities of Gilead,” Judg. xii. 7, where our interpreters rightly express the sense, “in one of the cities of Gilead.”

Ver. 7. Let us cast lots.] This was a usual method of referring things to the appointment or discovery of Providence (see 1 Sam. x. 20, 21, xiv. 42, 44, Prov. xvi. 33, Acts i. 26).

Ver. 9. I fear the Lord the God of heaven.] Or, rather, “Jehovah, the God of heaven”; Jehovah being the peculiar name of the true God, by which he was distinguished from those who had the names of gods and lords among the heathen.

Ver. 10. Why hast thou done this?] You have been guilty of great profanation to disobey his command, whom yourself acknowledge to be Lord and maker of all things.

Ver. 11. For the sea was wrought, and was tempestuous.] The Hebrew reads, “The sea went, and was tempestuous;” i. e. “grew more and more tempestuous,” as our margin reads. We find the same phrase, Exod. xix. 19, “The trumpet waxed louder and louder;” where it is in the Hebrew, “The trumpet was going and strengthening.”

Ver. 14. They cried unto the Lord.] They were convinced by the account Jonah gave of himself, that the God whom he worshipped (ver. 9) had brought this tempest upon them: so they made their petitions to him.

Let us not perish for this man’s life.] For expounding this man’s life to inevitable danger; since it is done out of extreme necessity to save ourselves, and by his own desire.

Ver. 16. Then the men feared the Lord exceedingly.] They were convinced of the power and greatness of that God whom Jonah worshipped; which appeared both in raising this storm, and so suddenly laying it.

And offered a sacrifice unto the Lord, and made vows.] The words may be translated to a plainer sense, thus, “And offered sacrifice unto the Lord, that is, they made vows” to do it as soon as they had opportunity. The copulative particle vau is sometimes used by way of explanation; as hath been observed in the note upon Isa. li. 19 (see Noldius, p. 280). This sense suits best here.

Ver. 17. A great fish.] Naturalists give an account of some sorts of fish which are large enough to swallow a man; particularly the canis characarius, or dog-fish, called by some writers lamia, (see Bochart, De Animal. lib. v. cap. 12).

Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.] The Hebrew language hath no one word to express what we call a natural day; so what the Greeks express by Ναξίμαυς, they denote by “a day and a night.” Therefore the space of time, consisting of one whole revolution of twenty-four hours, and part of two others, is fitly expressed in that language, by “three days and three nights.” Such a space of time our Lord lay in the grave; and we may from thence conclude, that Jonah, who was an eminent figure of him in this particular, was no longer in the fish’s belly.
I Then Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God out of the fish's belly.

2 And said, I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice.

3 For thou hadst cast me into the deep, in the midst of the seas; and the floods compassed me about; all thy bills and thy waves passed over me.

4 Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight; yet I will look again toward thy holy temple.

5 The waters compassed me about, even to the soul: the depth closed me round about, the weeds were wrapped about my head.

CHAPTER II.

ARGUMENT.—It contains the prayer of Jonah, when he was in the fish's belly, and his deliverance from thence.

Ver. 1.] Those devout thoughts which he had at that time, he afterward digested into the following prayer, and added a thanksgiving for his deliverance at the end of it. So several of David's psalms were probably composed after this trouble was over; but in a manner suitable to the thoughts he had at the time of his affliction, and with a grateful sense of God's mercies for his deliverance out of it (see Ps. liv. 2).

Ver. 2.] Out of the belly of hell The word shod signifies the "state of the dead" (see note on Isa. xiv. 9). So it may most properly be rendered the grave here, as the margin reads: the belly of the fish was to Jonah instead of a grave.

Ver. 4.] My first apprehensions were, that as I had justly forfeited thy favour by my disobedience; so thou wouldest cast me out of thy protection (see ver. 7, and compare Ps. xxxi. 22) yet, upon recollecting myself, I thought it my duty not to despair of thy mercy, but direct my prayer towards thy heavenly habitation (see ver. 7).

Ver. 5.] When I was thrown into the sea, I

6 I went down to the bottoms of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me for ever; yet hast thou brought up my life from corruption, O Lord my God.

7 When my soul fainted within me I remembered the Lord: and my prayer came unto thee, into thine holy temple.

8 They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy.

9 But I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving; I will pay that that I have vowed. Salvation is of the Lord.

10 And the Lord spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

CHAPTER III.

And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying,

2 Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee.

3 So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, ac-

ARGUMENT.—Jonah is sent again to the Ninevites, and preacheth to them with good success.

Ver. 3. Nineveh was an exceeding great city] The Hebrew reads, "A city great to God," so "the mountains of God" are the same with great mountains, Ps. xxxvi. 5, and "the cedars of God" are translated goodly cedars, Ps. lxxx. 10. Diodorus Siculus informs us, that Nineveh was four hundred and eighty furlongs in compass, which makes sixty of our miles (see Dr. Prideaux, ad A. C. 612); so that it was bigger than Babylon; which, according to the word of the Lord. Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three days' journey. And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

Ver. 4. Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.] God was pleased to allow them sufficient time to repent, and give some proof of their reformation. The copies of the LXX. read, three days: it is no easy matter to guess at the occasion of the mistake, although Is. Vossius is willing to believe that this was the original reading (see his book De LXX. Interp. cap. 29). Some copies of Justin Martyr's
CHAPTER IV.

5 § So the people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them.

6 For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes.

7 And he caused it to be proclaimed and published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his nobles, saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing: let them not feed, nor drink water:

Dialogue with Trypho (p. 310, edit. Lond.), reads forty-three days; but that number is probably owing to the copiers, who joined the two readings of the Hebrew and LXX. together.

Ver. 5.] The fame of the wonderful works God had wrought for the Jews was spread over the eastern parts of the world. This might make the Ninevites hearken to a man of that nation, that came to them as sent by God: and it is likely that he gave them an account of the miraculous circumstances which attended his own mission. But without question, a sense of their own guilt, and their deserving whatever punishment Heaven could inflict, was a principal reason that moved them to have a regard for his message. And by the men of Nineveh's "repenting at the preaching of Jonas," God designed to upbraid the stubbornness of his own people, and shame them, as it were, into repentance, for fear the men of Nineveh "should rise up in judgment against them;" as our Saviour speaks of the Israelites in his own time, Matt. xii. 41.

Ver. 6. For word came unto the king of Nineveh.] Archbishop Usher, in his Annals, ad A. M. 3233, supposes this prince to have been Pul, the king of Assyria. Nineveh being then the capital city of that empire: who afterward invaded the kingdom of Israel, in the days of Menahem (2 Kings xv. 17); it being very agreeable to the methods of providence, to make use of a heathen king that was penitent, to punish the impenitency of God's own people, Israel.

Laid his robe from him.] He laid aside all his state, and put on the habit of a penitent.

Ver. 7. Let neither man nor beast—taste anything.] Such general shows of sorrow add to the solemnity of the humiliation, and may be proper to work upon men's minds, and bring them to a true contrition.

Ver. 8. But let man and beast be covered with sackcloth.] The covering horses and mules with sackcloth, adds to the solemnity of a funeral: in like manner, their mournful garb was an affecting circumstance in this public sorrow and humiliation.

Let them turn every one from his evil way.] Natural religion instructed them, that their earnest prayers, without true amendment, would not avail them before God: nor would their repentance be thought sincere, unless they restored to the true owners what they had gained by violence and injustice.

Ver. 9. ] Compare Joel ii. 14, 2 Sam. xii. 22. Even wicked men, upon their repentance, are apt to conceive hopes of obtaining mercy.

Ver. 10. He did it not.] According to the general declaration he hath made of his will in this case, Jer. xviii. 1, therefore the threatenings of temporal evils are to be understood conditionally; viz. unless the execution of them is suspended by men's repentance.

CHAPTER IV.

1 But it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

2 And he prayed unto the Lord, and said, I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my saying, when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of evil.

3 Therefore now, O Lord, take, I beseech thee, my life from me: for it is better for me to die than to live.

4 ¶ Then said the Lord, Doest thou well to be angry?

5 So Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city.

6 And the Lord God prepared a gourd, and made it wax liking unto Jonas, a gourds, because the Lord saw that Jonas was displeased. 7 And Jonas arose, and went forth, and sat southward: and there was a gourd over his head, which did shelter him from the heat: and his countenance was saved from being burnt.

Ver. 1.] God's mercy in sparing the Ninevites was very displeasing to Jonah; and he expressed a great impatience under it, lest he should be esteemed a false prophet, and treated as such.

Ver. 2. He prayed unto the Lord.] He uttered his complaint in his prayers to God, wherein he pleaded an excuse for his disobedience to God's first commands. Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish.] This made me unwilling to go upon this message to the Ninevites, because I knew, by the declaration thou madest to Moses (Exod. xxxiv. 6), and by several instances of thy mercy, that thou dost not always execute the punishments thou threatenest against sinners.

Ver. 3.] I had rather die, than live under the imputation of being a false prophet. Josephus (Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 19) tells a story parallel to this, concerning one Judas, an Essene, who had foretold that Antigonus should be murdered on a certain day at Straton's Tower, which was another name for the town of Cesarea. On the very same day he saw this Antigonus in the temple, at which he fell into a great passion, and wished himself dead: but before the day was over, he received news that Antigonus made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief. So Jonah went exceeding glad of the gourd.

7 But God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered.

8 And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live.

was slain just under that tower of the palace in Jerusalem, which was called Straton's Tower.

Ver. 5. So Jonah went out of the city.] The words should have been translated, "Now Jonah had gone out of the city:" for the particulars related in the foregoing verses happened after his departing out of the city, and sitting somewhere in view of it, expecting some extraordinary judgment should come upon it: but being disappointed, he broke out into that expostulation with God already mentioned.

And sat on the east side] Probably in some solitary place, where he might not be discovered, and which did not lie in the way towards his own country, but quite opposite to it: so that if the Ninevites had a mind to have pursued him, they might not apprehend him.

Ver. 6. God prepared a gourd.] What sort of plant or shrub this should be, was a question before St. Jerome's time, as appears by his commentary upon the place. He translates it ivy, not that he thought it meant so; but in compliance, as he tells us, with some ancient interpreters; although the Septuagint, and all the ancient versions, agree in translating it a gourd.

That it might be a shadow over his head.] From the burning heat of the sun, which still added to his former grief and vexation; the booth which he made at first being withered by the heat.

Ver. 8.] The winds in the hot countries are oftentimes more suffocating than the heat of the sun, when they blow from the sandy deserts; and they make the sun-beams give a more intense heat. The word charishith, vehement, signifies likewise silent, 9 And God said to Jonah, Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, I do well to be angry, even unto death.

10 Then said the Lord, Thou hast had pity on the gourd, for which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which came up in a night, and perished in a night:

11 And should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also much cattle?

as it is translated in the margin. Taking it in that sense, it denotes such a wind, as causes a small motion in the air, and makes it sultry hot.

Ver. 9. Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd?] Dost thou think fit to persist in thine impatience, notwithstanding the punishment I have sent upon thee for thy former guilt in this kind?

I do well to be angry, even unto death.] I have just cause to be angry, even to that degree as to wish myself dead. The prophet here records his own impatience, without concealing any circumstance of it, as Moses and other holy writers have done.

Ver. 10. Thou hast had pity on the gourd.] Thou wast concerned at the loss of that short-lived plant.

Ver. 11. And should not I spare Nineveh?] The lives of so many thousand men are much more valuable than that of a single plant.

Wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left?] i.e. Infants, who "know neither good nor evil," as it is expressed, Deut. i. 39, Isa. vii. 15, 16. If we compute these at the fifth part of the inhabitants of Nineveh, the whole sum will amount to six hundred thousand inhabitants; which are as few as can well be supposed to live in a city of such large dimensions.

Also much cattle?] God's providence extends its care to beasts, as well as men (see Ps. xxxvi. 6, civ. 27, 28): so he is willing to spare them, as well as the more noble parts of the creation.

This reason seems to have silenced Jonah's complaints, and made him sensible of his fault, in repining at God's mercies.

OF

THE PROPHET MICAH.

PREFACE.

The prophet Micah was probably of Judah, because he reckons the time of his prophesying by the reigns of the kings of Judah. He is called the Morasthite here, and Jer. xxvi. 18, from the place of his nativity, Morasthi, which St. Jerome distinguishes from Mareshah, mentioned i. 15, though he places them both in the tribe of Judah (Lib. de Locis Hebr.).
CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet begins with an awful description of God's coming to execute his judgments, first upon Samaria, and then upon Jerusalem.

Ver. 1. Concerning Samaria and Jerusalem.] Concerning both the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, whose Samaria and Jerusalem were the metropolises.

Ver. 2. Hearken, O earth, and all that therein is.] Or, "Hearken, O land [of Israel], and all its inhabitants." A form of speech bespeaking men's attention (see Deut. xxxii. 1, Isa. i. 2). The prophets sometimes address their speech to inanimate things, to upbraid the stupidity of men (see below, vi. 1, Jer. xiv. 21).

Let the Lord God be witness against you.] I call him to witness, that I have forewarned you of the judgments that hang over your heads, unless you speedily repent. And he himself will become a witness against you, and convince you of your sins, in such a manner, that you shall not be able to deny the charge (compare Ps. l. 7, Mal. iii. 5).

The Lord from his holy temple.] From heaven his holy habitation (see the following verse, and the note upon Jonah ii. 7).

Ver. 3. The Lord cometh forth out of his place.] God is described as coming from heaven to judgment because of the visible effects of his power and presence upon earth (see Deut. xxvi. 21).

And will come down, and tread upon the high place of the earth.] When he comes to execute his judgments, he will subdue places of the greatest strength, and bring down the men of the highest rank (see Amos iv. 13).

Ver. 4. An allusion to God's coming upon mount Sinai, when thunder and lightning shook the mountain, and violent rains, which accompanied this tempest, made the hills look as if they were melted down (compare Judg. iv. 4, 5, Ps. lxviii. 8, xxvii. 5, Isa. lxiv. 1, 2, Hab. iii. 6, 9, 10). Or the words may be referred to the general judgment, of which all particular judgments are an earnest; when the heavens and the earth shall be dissolved at God's appearing (compare Nah. i. 5, Isa. lii. 6).

Ver. 5. What is the transgression of Jacob? Is it not Samaria?] Where is the chief cause of Jacob's or Israel's sin and apostasy? Is it not Samaria, the chief seat of that kingdom, the residence of the king and his princes, who have set up the idolatry of the golden calves, and made it the established religion of the kingdom! Vol. III.—91 and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? Is it not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judah? are they not Jerusalem?

Ver. 6. I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and plantings of a vineyard.] It shall be turned into a heap of ruins (compare iii. 12, 2 Kings xix. 25, Neh. iv. 2). It shall be reduced into such heaps of stones as are laid up together in a field lately ploughed, or a vineyard newly planted, after the stones have been gathered out of it (compare Isa. v. 2, Hos. xii. 11). The Vulgar Latin translates the sentence thus; "I will make Samaria as a heap of stones in a field, when a vineyard is planted."

I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations.] Samaria stood upon a hill (1 Kings xvi. 21); so, when it was demolished, many stones would fall down from the high and stately buildings into the valley beneath, and leave the foundations naked and bare (compare Jer. lii. 25).

Ver. 7. All the hires thereof shall be burned with the fire.] i. e. The city shall be destroyed; all its wealth and substance shall be consumed in the fire; the increase of which they looked upon as so many rewards of their idolatry (see Hos. ii. 5, 12).

For she gathered it of the hire of an harlot, and they shall return to the hire of an harlot.] She imagines that she gained her wealth as a reward of her idolatry, and it shall return or be made a prey to idolatrous Assyrians. Nothing is more abominable than the "hire of an harlot," implying two great wickednesses, covetousness and impurity (see Deut. xxiii. 15).

Ver. 8. I will wail and howl, I will go stripped and naked:] I will sympathize with the calamities of my countrymen (compare Isa. xxii. 4, Jer. iv. 19). I will put on the habit and dress of mourners, whose custom it was to go without their upper garments: or with those who wore, rent and torn. This will fitly denote the naked condition to which the ten tribes will be reduced by their enemies (see Isa. xx. 2—4, and the notes there).

A wailing like the dragons.] The word tannin is often translated a dragon by our interpreters; but it signifies most commonly some great fish, such as a whale or crocodile (see the note upon Isa. xxvii. 1, Ezek. xxix. 3). It seems to be taken for a land-animal here, as Dr. Pocock observes upon the place; and so it is taken Lam. iv. 8, where our English reads "The sea monsters draw out the breast, they give" stripped and naked: I will make a wandering like the dragons, and mourning as the owls.
9 For her wound is incurable; for it is come unto Judah; he is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jerusalem.
10 ¶ Declare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all: in the house of Apherah roll yourself in the dust.
11 Pass ye away, thou inhabitant of Saphir, having thy shame naked: the inhabitant of Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of Beth-ezel; he shall receive of you his standing, such to their young ones:" but the text must be understood of a land-animal, sea monsters having no broth.

| Mourning as the owls.] Compare Job xxx. 20, Ps. cii. 6. Bochart (De Animal. lib. ii. cap. 14) thinks the word translated "owls" signifies properly an ostrich. It is generally supposed, that the Hebrew yaanith is derived from the loud noise this bird maketh. The LXX. translated it here by σφινx, σερνα; by which Vossius understands a sort of wap or hornet, of a melancholy note; which kind never goes in swarms, but just one single bee, singly by way (see his Dissert. De Orac. Sibyll. cap. 13).

Ver. 9.] The captivity and desolation of the ten tribes can neither be prevented, because they persist in their impenitence: nor can any relief be applied to it, because it will end in their utter destruction. And one aggravating circumstance attends it, that it is the forerunner of those evils which befall Judah and Jerusalem; whose goses Senacherib shall attempt to besiege, with a design to make himself master of that city and the kingdom (see 2 Kings xviii. 17, 2 Chron. xxxii. 2. compare ver. 12 of this chapter).

Ver. 10. Declare ye it not at Gath.] The words are taken out of David's lamentation over Saul and Jonathan. 2 Sam. i. 20. This manner of speech does not imply, in either place, that such ill tidings could be concealed; but only expresseth the prophet's concern, lest the Philistines should take occasion from thence to rejoice over the calamities of his people.

In the house of Apherah roll thyself in the dust.] Or, "Wallow in the ashes:" as was commonly practised in times of great mourning (see Esther iv. 3, Jer. vi. 20). The word Apherah signifies dust; and the prophet, it is likely, puts it here for Opherah a town in the province of Benjamin: that the name may better suit their present condition.

Ver. 11. Pass ye away, thou inhabitant of Saphir, having thy shame naked.] Or, "Thy nakedness uncovered." The word Saphir imports a fair and delightful habitation, and denotes either Samaria or Jerusalem. The prophet threatens the inhabitants of that place, that they shall go into captivity in a way very unsuitable to their former softness and luxury; even without so much as a covering to hide their nakedness (see Isa. iii. 17, xviii. 2, 3, and the notes there).

The inhabitant of Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of Beth-ezel.] The inhabitants of Zaanan were so much concerned to provide for their own security, that they took no notice of the mournful condition of their neighbour: so Beth-ezel signifies. Grotius supposes Zaanan to denote Zion, and Beth-ezel wandering about in a settled by another name, importing "the house of separation," according to his interpretation; because it was the principal seat of idolatrous worship.

He shall receive of you his standing.] The inhabitant of Zaanan shall make a conjecture of his own strength or condition, whether he is like to stand or fall by the fate which he sees doth befall the people of Beth-ezel.

Ver. 12.] For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good: but evil came down from the Lord unto the gate of Jerusalem.

13 O thou inhabitant of Lachish, bind the chariot to the swift beast; she is the beginning of the sin to the daughter of Zion; for the transgressions of Israel were found in thee.

14 Therefore shalt thou give presents to Moresheth-gath: the houses of Achzib shall be a lie to the kings of Israel.

15 Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitants of Moresheth-gath: he shall be the prince among his brethren, and the chief in his father's house.

The houses of Achor shall be a lie to the kings of Israel: Achor signifies a lie. There is a town of that name belonging to the tribe of Judah, mentioned Josh. xv. 43. This place the prophet foretells will answer its name, and disappoint the kings of Israel that depended upon its strength and assistance [see Chron. xx. 2, xxviii. 19]. Israel is sometimes used for Judah (see below, iii. 9, 10): so it may probably be taken here, and ver. 15.

Ver. 15. Yet wilt I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of Moresheth-gath:] This is another town belonging to Judah, mentioned Josh. xv. 44. This place the prophet foretells will answer its name, and disappoint the kings of Israel that depended upon its strength and assistance [see Chron. xx. 2, xxviii. 19]. Israel is sometimes used for Judah (see below, iii. 9, 10): so it may probably be taken here, and ver. 15.

The enemy shall enrage his conquests even to Adullam, one of the frontier cities of Judah, fortified by Rehobam, 2 Chron. xi. 7. Israel is put here for Judah, as in the foregoing verse. The margin reads, "The glory of Israel shall come to Adullam," i.e. the great and honourable men shall be forced to hide themselves from their enemies, in the cave of Adullam, as David did when he fled from Saul, 1 Sam. xxii. 1.

This may relate to the great depredations which Pekah king of Israel, in conjunction with Rezin king of Syria, made in the kingdom of Judah, in the reign of Ahaz (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 8).
CHAPTER II.

1 Woe to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds! when the morning is light, they practice it, because it is in the power of their hand.

2 And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.

3 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, against this family do I devise an evil, from which ye shall not remove your necks; neither shall ye go haughtily: for this time is evil.

4 ¶ In that day shall one take up a parable against you, and lament with a doleful lamentation, and say, We be utterly spoiled: he hath changed the portion of many people: how hath he removed it from me! turning away he hath divided our fields.

5 Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot in the congregation of the Lord.

6 Prophecy ye not, say they to them that prophesy: they shall not prophesy to them, that they shall not take shame.

7 ¶ O thou that art named the house of Jacob, is the spirit of the Lord straitened? are these his doings? do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightness?

8 Even of late my people is risen up as an enemy: ye pull off the robe with the garment from thee.

Lament with a doleful lamentation. The expression alludes to the lamentations made at funerals (see note upon Amos vi. 1).

He hath changed the portion of my people: how hath he removed it from me? He hath removed his people out of their ancient inheritance, that portion which he himself had allotted them, and given it away to other owners.

Turning away he hath divided our fields. Turning us into captivity; or, as the margin reads, "instead of restoring us," he hath divided our lands among our enemies.

8. Ver. 5. As the Lord's people or congregation (compare Deut. xxiii. 1, 2), they were "the lot of his inheritance" (Deut. xxxii. 9), and he divided their land among them by lot; but now they shall be utterly expelled out of it, and sent captives into a foreign country.

8. Ver. 6. Prophecy ye not, say they to them that prophesy? They do not care to hear the prophets speak ungrateful truths (see Isa. xxx. 10, Amos vii. 16). The words is the same here which is used in that text of Amos (see the note there). "Say they," is understood by a like ellipsis, Nahum xi. 8.

They shall not prophesy to them, that they shall not take shame. Or rather, For they will not take shame. It is to no purpose to prophesy to them, for they still persist in a shameless course of sin (compare Zech. iii. 5, Jer. vi. 15). The latter part of the sentence may be thus translated, "Their shame shall not depart," or be removed from them; i. e. God hath determined to bring that shame upon them which their sins deserve.

7. Ver. 7. That art named the house of Jacob. But do not act suitably to the piety of thy father Jacob.

Is the spirit of the Lord straitened? are these his doings? Is God's hand or power shortened? (compare Isa. lx. 1, Zech. iv. 6.) Are the judgments he brings upon you the genuine effects of his power and goodness! and not rather such acts as your sins do in a manner constrain him to exercise! as punishments are called his strange work, Isa. xxviii. 21. Certainly

CHAPTER II.

Argument.—The chapter begins with a reproof for the sins of oppression, and contempt of God's word, but concludes with the promise of a restoration. Some learned men think that the reproofs of this chapter relate to the times of king Ahaz.

Ver. 1. Woe to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds! Whose thoughts are big with mischief, so that they contrive schemes of wickedness upon their beds, in order to put them in practice when they arise in the morning (compare Ps. xxxvi. 4). Because it is in the power of their hand. "They make their strength the law of justice," according to the character given of such men, Wisd. ii. 11. Some take the Hebrew word El to signify God, which is its most usual signification; in which sense the Vulgar Latin translates it, Contra Deum est manus illorum; "their hand is against God." But the phrase in the original is used in the same sense in which our translators understand it, Gen. xxxii. 29, Deut. xviii. 32.

Ver. 2. So they oppress a man and his house. They take from him both his house and his land.

Ver. 3. As they devise mischief against others, so will I devise an evil against them, as a due punishment for their sin. As they have unjustly deprived others of their inheritance, so a conquering enemy shall possess them, and carry them into captivity (see the following verse). The word family is equivalent to people, as appears from Jer. i. 15; compare viii. 3, x. 25 of that prophecy; where the "families which have not called upon thy name," mean the same with the "kingdoms that have not called upon thy name," Ps. lxxix. 6.

Ver. 4. Shall one take up a parable against you? A parable denotes a speech out of the ordinary way, as the Greek word παραβολή imports, and illustrated with metaphors or rhetorical figures (see Job xxviii. 1, Ezek. xx. 40, Hab. ii. 1). So "speaking in parables" (for so the words should be translated) is opposed to "speaking plainly," John xvi. 25, 29.

cate children; enlarge thy baldness as the eagle; for they are gone into captivity from thee.

20. Jer. vi. 29, Amos viii. 10, and notes upon Isa. xv. 2).

Enlarge thy baldness as the eagle: When she molts her feathers.
them that pass by securely as men averse from war.
9 The women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses; from their children have ye taken away my glory for ever.
10 Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest: because it is polluted, it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction.
11 If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood both his laws and the words delivered by his prophets would turn to your good, if you would obey them.

Ver. 8. Even of late my people is risen up as an enemy: This Dr. Wollas refers to the invasion of Judah by Pekah, and the devastations which followed upon it (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, 8).

Ye pull off the robe with the garment from them that pass by securely: Or, "Ye take the robe off from the garment;" so Noldius translates it, p. 611. By the robe is meant the upper garment, called the cloak; Luke vi. 29, where the phrase seems to be taken from this place. The words import, that the Israelites invaded their countrymen of Judea, who had given them no provocation, and were willing to live peaceably with them; and in a violent manner stripped them of the garment or apparel to which they were accustomed.

Ver. 9. The women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses: This probably relates to the invasion just now mentioned, when the "Israelites carried away captive of their brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters," 2 Chron. xxviii. 8.

From their children have ye taken away my glory; for ever: Ye have taken their children captive with a design to sell them to the heathen (see Jer. li. 9, 10) that they may be bred up in idolatry, and forfeit all their right to the privileges of my temple and worship. The temple is called the "beauty of holiness," Ps. xxix. 2, xcv. 9, where the word is the same which is here translated glory. Some understand the words of Pekah and Rezin's design to set up another king in Judah (see Isa. vii. 6), not allied to the house of David, and thereby to defeat the promises made to that family, that the Messiah should descend from thence, and withal deprive the posterity of the Jews of the most glorious part of God's promises to them.

Ver. 10. Arise ye, and depart: The prophet still directs his discourse to the Israelites that invaded Judah, and tells them, that as a just punishment for their oppressing and spoiling their brethren, they themselves should be carried captive out of their land, where God had promised to give them rest (see Deut. xii. 9, Ps. xcvi. 2).

Because it is polluted, it shall destroy you: The land, being polluted with your sins, shall "sweep you out," as did its former inhabitants, the Canaanites (Lev. xviii. 28).

Ver. 11. If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood Or, "With the mouth." Noldius gives several instances where the copulative particle supplies the place of the genitive case (see his Concordance, p. 315).

I will prophesy unto thee of wine and of strong drink: If a prophet pretend to foretell all manner of plenty and prosperity, such a one shall be hearkened to by this people, though it be never so unlikely to come to pass. Such were those that prophesied of peace, whom Jeremiah reproves, vi. 14, viii. 11, and "spoke smooth things," to please their hearers. Isa. xxx. 10. The words may be thus translated, "I will prophesy unto thee for wine and strong drink:" i. e. if it appears, both by his words and actions, that he doth not design the "serving God, but his own belly," do lie, saying, I will prophesy unto thee of wine and of strong drink; he shall even be the prophet of this people.

12 ¶ I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee; I will surely gather the remnant of Israel; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midst of their fold: they shall make great noise by reason of the multitude of men.

as St. Paul speaks, Rom. xvi. 18, yet such a one shall be followed by those that love soothing teachers (compare iii. 5). Wine and strong drink are often mentioned together; the latter may best be explained in the words of St. Jerome (Epist. 2. ad Nepotianum): Siciam Herennia sermoine omnis potio mocuscupatur, quibus veritates setae, sive quidem concoctae, sive pomerium succeti; aut cum lati decoumputari in dulceum potionem, aut palmarum fructus exprimuntur in liquorem, coctisque fragrantes aqua pinguilorum coloratur. "The Hebrew word Sheker signifies any strong drink, whether it be made with any sort of grain (like our malt), or with the juice of apples; or when a sweet liquor is made by the infusion of honey, or when a juice is pressed out of the dates of the palm or the pomegranate and the sugar colour added to it by the infusion of any other fruit."

Ver. 12. I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee: Here follows a promise of mercy, such as is often subjoined to the threatenings of impending judgments. This promise relates to the general restoration of the Jewish nation, which yet is here and elsewhere confined to that remnant, that shall escape the punishments that will come upon the rebellious (see note upon iv. 7).

I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah: God is often styled the shepherd of Israel," and his care over his people is compared to that of a shepherd over his flock, when he gathers them into the fold, and defends them from beasts of prey, while they are there (compare Jer. xxxi. 10). Bozrah is a noted place in Idumea, where there were large flocks of sheep.

They shall make great noise by reason of the multitude of men: The noise a multitude makes both discovers their numbers, and is a sign of their being lively and in good condition. The words may be rendered, keeping close to the original, "They shall increase with men": the same word in the Hebrew signifying both a noise and a multitude (compare Ezek. xxxvi. 37).

Ver. 13. The breaker is come up before them: He that shall break the bonds of their captivity, or break through all obstacles that hinder their return home. The word portes is usually understood in a bad sense, for a thief or a destroyer; but the context here determines it to a more favourable acceptation. To this sense the vulgar Latin renders it, Pandens iter, "He that opens the way." The Jewish commentators generally understand the breaker, and their king, that follows, of the same person, viz. the Messiah; as may be seen in Dr. Pocock's note upon the place. Bishop Pearson cites the words of Moses Hadarean to the same purpose, in his Exposition of the sixt arieh of the Creed. The words seem parallel to that expression of Zechariah (xii. 8), "As the angel of the Lord before them," or, at the head of them (see the note there). Some of the Jews, indeed, with a little variation, explained their king as a sheep, and the breaker of his forerunner Elijah; as Dr. Pocock observes, the Chaldee paraphrase translates it, "Those that are saved," as if the word were in a passive form. They have broken up, and have passed through the gate: The expressions allude to a flock of sheep, who,
CHAPTER III.

13 The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, as soon as a passage is opened for one to get out, do all of them follow.

Their king shall pass before them, and [or, even] the Lord on the head of them.] The Messiah, who and are gone out by it; and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them. is both their God and their king (see the note upon Isa. vii. 14), shall lead and conduct them as their captain and general (compare Isa. iii. 12, Hos. i. 11).

CHAPTER III.

1 And I said, Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel: Is it not for you to know judgment?

2 Who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones;

3 Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron.

4 Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err, that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him:

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—Both the princes and prophets of Judah are reproved for their sins, and the destruction of Jerusalem is foretold, as a punishment for these enormities.

Ver. 1. Ye princes of—Israel:] Israel stands for Judah here, as appears by ver. 9, 10 (see likewise i. 14, 15).

Ver. 2. Who pluck off their skin, &c.] Who exercise all manner of cruelty upon their inferiors, as if they were so many butchers cutting meat for the shambles.

Ver. 4.] As they have shown no pity to others, God will have no pity for them.

Ver. 5. That bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace:] Though they speak smooth things, yet are no better than ravening wolves, and bring destruction upon those that are deluded by them (see ii. 11).

He that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him:] If men will not still caution and maintain them, they bring them into trouble by raising false accusations against them, as if they were enemies to the government (compare Ezek. xiii. 19).

Ver. 6, 7. Night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision, &c.] The false prophets shall see their own prophecies confuted by experience, so that they shall no more pretend to the gift of prophecy, and shall be covered with shame and confusion for making false pretences to it.

The day shall be dark over them:] As they shall have no light or revelation from heaven, so dark days or dismal calamities shall overtake them, as a just punishment for their frauds and impostures (compare Isa. viii. 20, xxix. 10, Jer. xv. 9, Amos vii. 9, 10).

Ver. 7. They shall all cover their lips; for there is no answer of God.] Men used to cover their mouth, or their face, when they were under any great affliction (see Ezek. xxiv. 17). This likewise showed 6 Therefore night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

7 Then shall the scers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their lips; for there is no answer of God.

8 ¶ But truly I am full of power by the spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

9 Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

10 They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity.

11 The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets that they were utterly silenced, and had nothing to say, either by way of revelation from God, or in behalf of themselves (Job. xi. 4).

Ver. 8.] Whereas I, that am a true prophet, and moved by God’s Spirit, have the honesty and courage to reprove the crying sins of the nation, though practised and encouraged by the greatest men in it (see ver. 9), contrary to the base flatterings and sootheings of the false prophets (see Ezek. xiii. 10, &c.). Gebrach properly signifies might, or courage: so it is used, Isa. xi. 2 (see the note there).

Ver. 9.] See ver. 1. This address to the great men shows the prophet’s courage and impartiality.

Ver. 10.] Who think to increase the wealth, or secure the safety, of the public, by putting the innocent to death (compare Hab. ii. 12).

Ver. 11. The heads—judge for reward.] See ver. 7. Isa. i. 23, Hos. iv. 18, Ezek. xxii. 12, 27, Zeph. iii. 3. The priests—teach for hire.] It was the duty of the priests to instruct the people, as well as to attend upon the service of the temple; for which cause they had cities allotted to them in all parts of Judea (see Deut. xxxiii. 10, Ezra vii. 10, Jer. xviii. 18, Mal. ii. 7). The priests, not content with that plentiful revenue which the law allowed them, made a corrupt gain of their office.

The prophets—divine for money.] See ver. 5, Jer. v. 31, vi. 13. This is to be understood of the false prophets (see Zeph. iii. 4, Zech. xii. 2).

Yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us [or, in the midst of us]? none evil can come upon us.] Notwithstanding these general corruptions, they will rely upon God’s protection, and think themselves secure, because he hath chosen the temple as the place of his peculiar residence (compare Jer. vii. 4, Zeph. iii. 1). St. Paul alludes to this place when he describes the Jews as “resting or relying upon the law,” Rom. ii. 17. The Greek word ἐπιστροφὴν, is the same which the LXX. use here.

3 A 2
prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us.

12 Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

CHAPTER IV.

Ver. 12.] This prophecy had its utmost completion in the final destruction of the city and temple by the Romans (see note upon Jer. xxvi. 15). The word heaps alludes to the heaps of stones laid up together in fields newly ploughed (see i. 6, compare Ps. lxix. 1).

1 But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it.

2 And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

4 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever.

6 In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted;

7 And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation.}

And since all people are fond of the religion of their forefathers, though false and absurd; it much more becomes us to cleave steadfastly to the service of the true God, and not forsake his laws and ordinances, as we have too often done. And this will be remarkably fulfilled at the general conversion of the Jews, when this prophecy shall receive its utmost completion; as hath been observed in the notes upon the parallel text of Isaiah (see likewise the following verses of this chapter).

Ver. 6. In that day—will I assemble her that halteth. Or, "I will heal her that halteth" (compare Zech. iii. 19): for so the verb asaph, assemble, is translated 2 Kings v. 3, 6. The word which we render halted, signifies in general one that is weak and feeble, or bowed down by any disease or calamity (see Ps. xxxv. 13, xxxviii. 17). I will gather her that is driven out. This relates to the calling of the Jews from their several dispersions into the church (see the notes upon Ezek. xxiv. 16, 16): although it may in some degree have been fulfilled in their return from the Babylonish captivity (compare Ps. cxlvii. 2).

Ver. 7. I will make her that halted a remnant. To this remnant are many promises made, which may in some degree be applied to the state of the Jews after their return from captivity (see Zeph. ii. 9, Zech. viii. 6, 11): but are chiefly to be understood of those who were to be called by the gospel, when the main body of the Jewish nation were rejected (see ii. 12, v. 3, 7, 8, vi. 15, Isa. i. 9, x. 21, 22, Jer. i. 20, Joel ii. 32, Zeph. ii. 9, iii. 13, and notes upon these places).

Her that was cast far off a strong nation. The Jews, when they return from their several dispersions (see ver. 6), shall be victorious over all their enemies (compare v. 8, Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix., and see note upon Obadiah, ver. 8).

The Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion, from henceforth even for ever. Compare Joel iii. 17. God will dwell and reign among his saints in the New Jerusalem "that comes down from heaven," Rev. xxi. 2, 3, &c. and then "the kingdoms of and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever. 8 ¶ And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem. 9 Now why dost thou cry out aloud? is there no king in thee? is thy counsellor perished? for pangs have taken me as a woman in travail. 10 Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon: there shalt thou be delivered; there earth shall become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever," Rev. xi. 15, compared with xix. 6, Isa. xxiv. 23, Dan. vii. 27.

Ver. 8.] The church, of which the earthly Jerusalem was but a figure, shall be the seat of this sovereign dominion, which God shall render conspicuous to the whole world, spoken of ver. 7. "The tower of the flock," or of Eder, is best explained by "the strong hold of the daughter of Zion," which follows. The Chaldee paraphrase expounds the words of the Messiah, "in whom the ancient kingdom shall be revived," i.e. the kingdom of David, the Bel-lehemite, "the tower of Eder" being in or near Bethlehem (Gen. xxxv. 19, 21). This notion is countenanced by Jonathan's Targum upon Gen. xxxv. 19, where mention being made in the text of "the tower of Eder, beyond which Israel spread his tent," he adds, by way of explanation, "from hence king Messias shall manifest himself in the latter days." Ver. 9.] Why dost thou cry out, as a woman in the anguish of her travail, as if God himself, thy king and counsellor, had forsaken thee (compare Jer. viii. 19). Some understand it of the time when Je dekiah and his counsellors were seized by the Chaldeans (2 Kings xxv. 6, 18, &c.). Calamities are often compared to the pangs of child-birth (see Isa. xili. 8, Jer. xxx. 6, 1. 43).

Ver. 10. Be in pain, and labour to bring forth.] There is reason for your being in pain and anguish; but, as the pangs of a woman in travail, they shall have a happy conclusion; as it follows in the next words. For now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field.] The Jews' captivity is expressed by their "going out of the city, and dwelling in the field," because their city and temple being destroyed, they should live in an obscure state, without any visible form of government and worship. The same condition is elsewhere expressed by their "living in the wilderness" (see note upon Ezek. xx. 32, and Hos. ii. 14). So the church under persecution is described as "flying into the wilderness," Rev. xii. 14.

There shall thou be delivered.] God shall wonderfully restore thy captivity from thence by Cyrus, as he hath foretold by Isaiah, a prophet contemporary with Micah (Isa. xliv. 28, xlv. 1; compare vii 8, 11 of this prophecy).

Ver. 11.] The heathen round about will take occasion to insult the Jews' calamity, will please themselves with seeing the temple profaned, and glorify their spite with viewing Jerusalem in a forlorn condition (see Lam. ii. 16). "To look upon our enemies," is to behold their fall with delight (compare vii. 10, and see the note upon Obad. ver. 12).

Ver. 12.] They are ignorant of God's purpose, which is to punish them with an entire destruction, after he hath executed his judgments upon his own people (see Jer. xxv. 27—29). Great calamities are compared to the threshing of corn in a floor (see the following verse, and note upon Isa. xxvi. 10).

Ver. 13. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thin horn iron, and—thy hoops brass.] The expressions allude to the manner of trampling out the corn in the eastern countries, which was by the feet of oxen (see Deut. xxv. 4): so the word horn is equivalent to the hoops which follow. The words, as they relate to Zion, may be expounded in a spiritual sense, of bringing in the gentiles to the obedience of Christ (see following note). Or else we may suppose this promise will be fulfilled, when all the enemies of the church shall be subdued, and the saints reigning with Christ "shall have power over the nations, and shall rule (the refractory) with a rod of iron." Rev. ii. 26, 27 (compare this text with v. 8, 15 of this prophecy, and with Isa. xiv. 2, xli. 15, lx. 12, xlii. 5, and see the notes upon those places). I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord.] This denotes the conversion of the gentiles, which is elsewhere expressed by their bringing gifts and offerings to God's temple; because that was the most solemn part of religious worship practised among the Jews (see Ps. lxxvii. 29, Isa. xviii. 7, xxvii. 18, lx. 6, 9, and compare Rev. xxi. 24, 26). The word translated consecrate, properly signifies to devote, and alludes to the action of conquerors, who use to dedicate part of their booty to God, as a thankful acknowledgment for their victory.

CHAPTER V.

I Now gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops: he hath laid siege against us; they shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek.

CHAP. V.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet, that he may comfort the Jews under the calamities foretold in the last chapter, foretells the birth of Christ, whose kingdom should at last become victorious over all its enemies.
2 But thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose going forth have been from of old, even everlasting.

3 Therefore will I smite them with the sword, my feet shall stand upon their habitation; and I will bring out the judgments of the fatherless, and shall lead out the: forsaken on the judgment of the widow.

Ver. 1. A daughter of troops.] This verse is to be understood as in the foreign invasion of Judea, by a nation that had numerous troops; and may relate to the conquest of Judea by the Babylonians. The "daughter of troops" is a phrase of the same kind with the "daughter of affliction;" i.e. one that is surrounded with affliction; so the word of death in one condemned to die, 1 Sam. xx. 31. Ps. civ. 20.

They shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek. This may be understood of Zedekiah, who was put in a contemptuous manner by the Babylonians, as a common captive (2 Kings xxv. 6, 7), "Smiting on the cheek," signifies treating one in a despotic manner, Lam. iii. 31, Matt. v. 39, "The judge of Israel" is equivalent to "the king of Israel" (see Amos ii. 5).

Ver. 2. But thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah.] Ephratah, or Ephrata, was another name for Beth-lehem in the tribe of Judah (see Gen. xxxiv. 19). And both names are joined together, to distinguish it from another Beth-lehem, situate in the tribe of Zebulun, mentioned Josh. xix. 15. It is called "little among the thousands," i.e. among the families, or cities of Judah (compare Judg. vi. 15, 1 Sam. x. 19). The expression is taken from the first division of the people into thousands, hundreds, and other sub-division (see Exod. xviii. 21, 25). Both the city and family of David were in a mean condition at the time of Christ's birth; whereupon the blessed Virgin, in her song, thankfully commemo rates God's extraordinary favour, in honouring that low estate to which they were reduced, with the birth of the Messiah (Luke i. 45, 52, 53.).

But the word "isai," little, hath likewise a contrary signification, as many Hebrew words have (see the note upon Isa. xii. 17), and signifies one of note or esteem; in which sense it is taken by the Chaldean paraphrast upon Jer. xlvi. 4, and by some copies of the LXX. Zech. xiii. 7 (see Dr. Pocock, in his notes upon Penta Mosias, cap. 2, p. 18, 19). And in this sense St. Matthew understands the text, and translates it, "Art not the least among the princes of Judah," ii. 6.

Yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel;] The scribes and pharisaists understood this prophecy of the birth of the Messiah, as appears from Matt. ii. 5, 6, and so did the generality of the Jews of that age, who speak of it as an undoubted truth, that "Christ was to come of the seed of David, and of the town of Beth-lehem, where David was" (John vii. 42.) The Chaldean agrees with their sentiments, and expressly applies the prophecy to the Messiah; and our Lord was born at Beth-lehem, by an especial act of providence, that this prophecy might plainly be fulfilled in him (see Luke ii. 4), "to come forth" is the same as to be born (see Gen. x. 2), xvii. 6, xxx. 5, 1 Chron. ii. 53, Isa. xi. 1). Whose going forth have been from of old, even everlasting.] The words do naturally import an original, distinct from the birth of Christ, mentioned in the foregoing sentence: which is here declared to be from all eternity: for so the word mikkedem (translated here from of old,) but rendered "from everlasting," Hab. i. 12 and mine alen, "from the days of eternity," to plainly signify (see Ps. iv. 19, xc. 2, Prov. viii. 23). If we expound it with the Chaldee paraphrast, "Whose name was foretold of old," the expression contains a plain description of the Messiah.

Ver. 3. Therefore will he give them up, until the time that the time which shallareth brought forth: then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel.

4 ¶ And he shall stand and feed in the strength of the LORD, in the majesty of the name of the LORD his God; and they shall abide: for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth.

5 And this man shall be peace, when the Assyrian shall come into our land: and when he shall tread in our palaces, then shall we raise against him seven shepherds, and eight principal men.
6 And they shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof: thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian, when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders.

7 And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the LORD, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sone of men.

8 ¶ And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flock of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and tareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

9 Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off. sentence may be best explained as coherent with the former verse.

When the Assyrian shall come into our land: I take the sense which Mr. Mede hath given to this passage to be most agreeable to the scope and design of the following part of the chapter. See his Works, p. 706, where he expounds the place of the general destruction of some remarkable enemy, or enemies, to God and his truth, which should come to pass before the consummation of all things: an event foretold in several places of scripture (see Ps. cx. 5, 6, Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, xxxiv. 1, 4., lxxvi. 16, Jer. xxx. 7, 10, Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix., Joel iii. 9, 14, Obad. ver. 15, 16., Zeph. iii. 8, Hag. ii. 22, Zech. xi. 1, xiv. 8, Rev. xix. 19, xx. 9). This enemy is probably called by the name of the Assyrian by Isaiah, xiv. 25, as well as by Michæl here (see the note upon that place). Mr. Mede ingeniously conjectures, that this name was given him by these two prophets, because that ever since the invasion of Sennacherib, the very name of Assyrian carried terror along with it, being esteemed by the Jews as their most formidable enemy.

Then shall we raise up against him seven shepherds, and eight principal men.] Or, rulers. Under his conduct we shall be furnished with commanders sufficient to oppose the enemies of the enemy. Shepherds are elsewhere equivalent to princes or generals (see Jer. vi. 3, xxxiv. 9, 10, xxxix. 1). The words seven and eight are used for an indefinite number (see Eccles. xi. 2): so once and twice, six and seven, are used, Job xxxiii. 14, v. 19, Prov. vi. 16.

Ver. 6. They shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and [or, even] the land of Nimrod: It is in its borders, where its garrisons are, and its chief strength lies. Assyria is called the land of Nimrod, because he was the first king of that country, as appears from Gen. x. 2, where the marginal reading rightly translates the text, Out of that land he (i.e. Nimrod, spoken of ver. 9) went out into Assyria, or invaded and conquered it; as the phrase went forth, commonly signifies (see Ps. lx. 10, Zech. xiv. 2).

Ver. 7. The remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew: That remnant, mentioned ver. 3, and iv. 7, shall be the instruments of converting those gentiles among whom they live (see notes upon Isa. lxxvi. 12, 19): and thereupon may fitly be represented by the dews and rains which come from heaven, and are the means of making the earth fruitful (compare Deut. xxxiii. 2, Ps. lxix. 9, Isa. xi. 24, xlii. 3). That tarryeth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men. The dews and the rains are the gift of God (see Isa. lv. 10, Jer. xlv. 22), and are spoken of here, by way of distinction from those fountains and canals of water, which men convey into their fields and gardens by their own industry (compare Deut. xi. 10, 11). Some of the rabbins apply the text to the birth of the Messiah, spoken of ver. 2, who shall be born, not in the ordinary way of generation, but by the miraculous power of God (see the Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield's Defence of Christianity, ch. 4, sect. 2). To the same sense we may probably interpret, Ps. cx. 5, The dew of thy birth is of the womb of the morning.

Ver. 8.] The former verse described the benefits the converted Jews should bring to those gentiles that were disposed to embrace the gospel: this instructs us how terrible adversaries they will prove to such as persist in their enmity to them and to the truth (compare Obad. ver. 18, 19, Zech. xii. 6, and the note upon ver. 5, of this chapter).

Ver. 10, 11.] I will allot deliverance to my people, not in the ordinary way of second causes, but immediately by myself; so that they shall not need to trust in the strength of their forces or of their garrisons (compare Hos. i. 7, Zech. ix. 10).

Ver. 12—14.] The prophet may be supposed to mention here those sins wherein the Jews of his own age were chiefly faulty, thereby to signify, that in aftertimes, when the promises here mentioned should be fulfilled, such offences should not be found among them (compare Isa. ii. 6—8, with the context here). We may in general take notice, that the destruction of idolatry is often mentioned in the prophets as a principal circumstance in their descriptions of the flourishing state of the church, which should come to pass in aftertimes (see the note upon Isa. i. 29). This appears to have been the sentiment of the ancient Jews, from that passage in Tobit, xiv. 6, where, speaking of the times of the Messias, he saith, All nations shall turn and fear the Lord truly, and shall bury their idols. No nation has been more addicted to the several sorts of divination than the Jews, both in ancient and modern times (see Juvent. Sat. vi. 545, and the note upon Mal. iii. 5): as several of them comply with the idolatries practised in those countries where they are dispersed. See the note upon Zech. xiii. 2, where there is the same prediction of the utter abolishing of idolatry among them.

Ver. 15.] When I have purged my people from their corruptions, I will severely vindicate their cause, to the utter destruction of all their unbelieving enemies (see the notes upon ver. 5, 8).
CHAPTER VI.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter relates to the prophet's own time; wherein he first upbraids the people for their ingratitude towards God: then he instructs them in the true way of performing acceptable service to him: lastly, he reproves them for their injustice and idolatry, and tells them that these sins are the cause of their being unsuccessful in all their undertakings.

Ver. 1.] God often appeals to inanimate creatures for the justice of his proceedings, whereby to upbraid the stupidity of men (see i. 2, Deut. iv. 20, xxxii. 1, Ps. 1, 4, Isa. i. 2).

Ver. 2.] He will enter into judgment with them, for their iniquities, as being injurious to his honour, and for which his justice demands satisfaction (see Hos. iv. 1).

Ver. 3.] The words allude to the forms of court of justice, wherein actions are tried between man and man. God allows his people to offer any plea in their own behalf, and demands what injustice he hath done them, and what grievances they can complain of, either in the laws or the rules of worship which he hath prescribed them (compare Jer. ii. 5, 31).

Ver. 4.] On the other side, God puts them in mind of the great favours he had bestowed upon them, in delivering them out of the Egyptian bondage, by the conduct of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam their sister, who is here mentioned as having been endued with the spirit of prophecy, and by whom upon some occasions God made known his will to the Israelites (see Exod. xv. 20, Numb. xii. 2).

Ver. 5. Remember now what Balak king of Moab consulted.] Remember how Balak sent for Balaam to curse Israel, and he, contrary to his own intentions, blessed them (see Numb. xxiv. 10—12).

From Shittim unto Gilgal; that ye may know the righteousness of the Lord.] To make the sense perfect, we must supply it from the beginning of the verse, as the Chaldee paraphrast doth, "Remember what I have done for you from Shittim unto Gilgal;" i.e. from your encamping in the plains of Moab near Shittim, by Jordan (see Numb. xxii. 1, compared with xxxiiii. 48, 49); where you continued till you passed over that river, and encamped in Gilgal in the land of Canaan (see Josh. ii. 1, compared with iv. 19). If you duly consider these things, you will be convinced of God's great goodness to you, and of his faithfulness in fulfilling the promises made to your fathers.

A learned prelate, in his defence of Christianity from the ancient Prophecies, p. 290, supposes the phrase, "From Shittim to Gilgal," to be a proverbial expression, for a sudden change of an enemy's wicked passions and designs." And then the words will imply thus much.—Remember how I would not suffer Balaam, though when led to it by his inclinations and interests, to curse you, though he removed from one place to another, to find a seasonable time and prospect for his enchantments, and surveyed the army of Israel, going over them with his eye, from Shittim where they lay encamped, to the utmost extremity of them over against Gilgal, or Jericho, by Jordan (see Josh. iii. 1, compared with iv. 19). "But the Lord thy God made him turn his curse into a blessing," Deut. xxxii. 5.

Ver. 6. Whereewith shall I come before the Lord.] After this reproof of the people's ingratitude, they are introduced by the prophet, as anxiously inquisitive how they may propitiate God's displeasure, and avert his judgments. They declare themselves, in the following verse, ready to offer any expiatory sacrifices, though never so costly, for that purpose.

Shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, will God accept of the ordinary sacrifices, such as we offered in other occasions as an atonement for sin (see Lev. iv. 3, ix. 2).

Ver. 7. With thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil?] Or doth he expect a more costly sacrifice? We are ready, if that will appease him, to offer up to him thousands of rams, and to add in proportion meat-offerings prepared with oil (see Lev. ii. 1, 4, 15); though it should cost us an unmeasurable quantity of that liquor (compare Job xxix. 6).

Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, &c.] They further declare themselves ready to sacrifice their first-born, though looked upon as the strength and stay of their family, if that would appease God's wrath, and procure their pardon. Such inhuman sacrifices several of the idolatrous Jews offered up to their idols; for which they are severely reproved by the prophets (see 2 Kings xvi. 3, xxxi. 6, Jer. vi. 31, xix. 5, Ezek. xvi. 20, 21, xxii. 37).

These two verses are an exact description of the temper of hypocrites and habitual sinners, who hope to obtain God's favour by performing the external duties of religion; and are willing to purchase their own pardon upon any terms but that of reforming their lives.

Ver. 8. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good?] Both the dictates of reason, and the laws of God, sufficiently inform men what are the substantial parts of their duty; viz. the practice of justice and mercy, and a reverent behaviour towards God, and looking up to him as our Lord and maker. This is a more and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

9 The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, and the man of wisdom shall see thy name: hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it.

10 Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and the scant measure that is abominable?

11 Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights?

12 For the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the inhabitants thereof have spoken lies, and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth.

13 Therefore also will I make thee sick in acceptable service than the most costly sacrifices (compare Deut. x. 12, 13, 1 Sam. xv. 22, Is. i. 11, &c., Hos. vi. 6).

Ver. 9. The Lord's voice crieth unto the city,] The exhortations God hath given you by his prophets are chiefly directed to the city of Jerusalem and its principal inhabitants, whose injustice and oppression of their neighbours cry aloud for vengeance.

The man of wisdom shall see thy name: ] He that is truly wise will easily discover God's authority in such a message. Wisdom, in the Hebrew, is here put for the wise man, the abstract being often used for the concrete: so righteousness signifies the righteous man, Isa. xii. 2. Some translate the sentence thus, "They will learn wisdom (or, shall obtain salvation) who fear thy name." The derivatives from yare, to fear, and raar, to see, are often used promiscuously in the Hebrew language.

Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it. ] Hear what severe judgments are threatened against your sins, and who it is that threatens them, and is able to put them in execution.

Ver. 10.] Notwithstanding all the exhortations and reproves given you upon this subject, still there are many that use unjust and fraudulent means to enrich themselves, and keep scant measures to sell their goods by, which the law of God often declares to be an abomination to him (see Lev. xix. 35, 36, Deut. xxv. 13, 16, Prov. xi. 1, xx. 10). The word translated measure is ephah in the Hebrew; so the reproof is the same with that of Amos, vi. 5, where he charges the tradesmen with making the ephah small (see the note there).

Ver. 12.] See Hos. xii. 7.

Ver. 13.] The punishment whereby I will afflict thee shall waste thy strength, like a consuming sickness, which prey upon the vitals.

Ver. 14.] Thou shalt eat, but not be satisfied; or, Thou shalt eat, and not be satisfied. ] Either thy food shall not give thee due nourishment, or else thou shalt not have enough to satisfy a craving appetite.

Thy casting down shall be in the midst of thee: ] The miseries that bring thee low, shall be like an incurable disease in thy bowels (see ver. 13).

Thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver: ] Whatever advantages thou shalt make by thy industry, or whatsoever thou shalt gain by conquest, thou shalt not be able to keep it, but it shall become a prey to thine enemies. A contrary form of speech we read in Isaiah, v. 29, where the prophet, speaking how successful the attempts of their enemies should be, saith, "They shall lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it," or retake it. The rabbins generally interpret the text here to this sense: Thou shalt conceive seed, but shall not be safely delivered of the child; or, if thou be, it shall be slain by the enemy. The verb palat, here used, is spoken of cattle which are safely delivered of their young (Job xxii. 20).

Ver. 15.] Thou shalt not enjoy the fruits of thy labours: a curse often threatened for their disobedience (see Deut. xviii. 38, 39, Amos v. 2, Zeph. i. 13).

Ver. 16. For the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab. ] It is said of Omri, that he "did worse than all that were before him," 1 Kings xvi. 25, and his son Ahab added the worship of Baal to the idolatry of the golden calves, ibid., ver. 32, which is spoken of there as the worse degree of idolatry, because it was the introducing a heathen idol; whereas the golden calves were only an idolatrous representation of the true God. Manasseh followed Ahab in his wickedness (see 2 Kings xxi. 3).

The inhabitants thereof an hissing: ] The subject of scorn and derision to their enemies (see 1 Kings ix. 28, Jer. xviii. 16, Lam. ii. 15).

Ye shall hear the reproach of my people. ] The prophet still directs his discourse to the great and rich men (ver. 12, 15), and tells them, that since they have given the chief occasion to those reproaches, which unbelievers have thrown out upon God's people, as if they were rejected and cast off by him, therefore they shall bear the principal share of that shame and contempt with which their enemies shall treat them (compare Ps. xlii. 10, Isa. xxxv. 8). The LXX. read, "The reproach of the people;" to the same sense with those words of Ps. lxxix. 50, 51, "I bear in my bosom the reproach of all the mighty people, wherewith thine enemies have reproached me," Buxtorf, in his Vindicata contra Capeliam, shows this interpretation to agree with the Hebrew, supposing the word ammi to stand for annim in the plural; of which syntax he alleges several instances.
CHAPTER VII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet, speaking in the person of the church, laments the decay of piety, and growth of wickedness; possessing her soul in patience by faith, she foresees her future restoration in the latter times; a subject with which most of the minor prophets conclude their prophecies.

VER. 1. 1 AM AS WHEN THEY HAD GATHERED THE SUMMER FRUITS. The same complaints we find in other holy writers, lamenting the scarcity of good men, and the increase of the wicked (see Ps. xii. 1, xiv. 2, &c., Isa. lvi. 1).

They see the good man perish. They make a prey of their neighbours, and even of their friends and nearest relations (see Hab. i. 11, 15).

Ver. 2. That they may do evil with both hands earnestly. The words may be translated, “That they may prepare their hands for committing evil;” the verb hârîb sometimes signifies to fit or prepare (see Exod. xxx. 7, Hos. x. 1).

The prince asketh, &c. See ii. 11. So they wrap it up. The prince, the judge, and the great man, agreeing in their ill designs, make a three-fold cord of iniquity: or they twist one sin upon another, the latter to maintain or cover the former. The Chaldee renders it, “So they deprave or pervert it;” i. e. the soul, or mind; which word is found in the Hebrew of the foregoing sentence.

Ver. 3. The best of them is a briar: the most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge. Those that have the fairest character among them are set upon mischief. Sinners are everywhere compared to briars and thorns, both upon the account of their unfruitfulness, and because of their hurtful qualities (see ter-in-law against her mother-in-law; a man’s enemies are the men of his own house.

7. Therefore I will look unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my salvation: my God will hear me.

8. Rejoice not against me, 0 mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me.

9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness.

10. Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets.

11. In the day that thy walls are to be built, in that day shall the decree be far removed. In that day also he shall come even to the notes upon Isa. ix. 18, lv. 13, and compare 2 Sam. xxvii. 6, 7, Heb. vi. 8.

The day of thy watchmen and thy visitation comes. The time of vengeance is coming, which hath been foretold by the prophets of former times, as well as the present; called here watchmen, as they are by Ezekiel, iii. 7, and by Hosea, ix. 8, then God will visit for all the sins then hast committed against him. Watchmen may signify magistrates, as well as prophets (see note upon Isa. lvii. 10); and then the words import the time when God will call both princes and prophets to account for their unfaithfulness in the discharge of their several offices (see ii. 11).

Ver. 7. The church here expresses her confidence in God alone, since no trust can be placed in man.

Ver. 8, 9. Let not the enemies of God and his truth insult over me, as if he had utterly forsaken me (see ver. 10, Ps. lixix. 10). After he hath thus tended me for my sins, which I will patiently bear, out of a just sense of my demerits, he will deliver me out of my low and desolate condition, and will cause the light of his countenance to shine upon me, and plend the cause of his oppressed truth (compare Ps. xxvii. 1). This was in some degree fulfilled in their deliverance from the captivity (see ver. 11, and compare iv. 10).

Ver. 10. As the heathen beheld the desecrations of God’s church and temple with delight (see iv. 11): so it shall come to my turn to see God’s judgments executed upon the Babylonish empire, and that brought down to as low a condition as ever they had reduced God’s people (see Isa. li. 26, and compare with the latter part of the sentence, 2 Sam. xxiii. 43, Zech. x. 5).

Ver. 11. Whereupon shall God visit his people, and repair their decayed estate (compare Amos, iv. 11), then the tyrannical edicts of their persecutors shall be utterly abolished. This may partly relate to the recalling those edicts which put a stop to the rebuilding the city and temple of Jerusalem (see Ezra iv. 23, 24, vi. 14, Neh. ii. 8, 17).

Ver. 12. In that day] The phrase signifies in the prophets some remarkable time prefixed by God for restoring the Jews’ affairs, or some other signal events.
CHAPTER VII.

15 According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I shew unto him marvellous things.

16 ¶ The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay by their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.

17 They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth: they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee.

In the wood, in the midst of Carmel: The same place is called "the forest of Carmel," Isa. xxxvii. 24, and spoken of there as a place remarkable for its fruitfulness: compare Isa. x. 18, xxvi. 2, where our translation reads, "The glory of his forest and his fruitful field," or his Carmel, as it is in the original. Bashan, which follows here, and Carmel, are joined together as the most fruitful parts of Judea, Isa. xxxiii. 9, Nah. i. 4.

Let them feed in Bashan and Gilead, as in the days of old. These countries were noted for their rich and fat pastures (see Numb. xxxii. 1, 59, Deut. vii. 13, xxxii. 14). The expressions denote, that the Jews shall enjoy full and free possession of their land after their return to it, with the same security and happiness with which they possessed it, in their most flourishing state, under the reigns of David and Solomon (see 1 Kings iv. 25, compare Zech. x. 10). We are likewise to suppose these temporal blessings to be emblematical and figures of the spiritual benefits conveyed by the gospel (compare Isa. lxv. 10, Jer. i. 19, Zeph. iii. 13, and see the notes there).

Ver. 15. The words are an answer to the prophet's prayer in the foregoing verse; wherein God tells him, that the wonders he will perform in bringing back his people into their own country, shall be as conspicuous as those which he showed in their deliverance out of Egypt, and giving them the first possession of it. The sense is equivalent to that of Ps. lxviii. 22, "The Lord hath said, I will bring my people again as I did from Bashan; I will bring my people again from the depths of the sea."

Ver. 16. The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might. The heathen shall feel the same confusion as men do under a great disappointment, when they shall see that power and force defeated, which they had so long esteemed, and opposed God's people, and hinder them from enjoying the quiet possession of their land (see Ezek. xxxviii. 8, &c.). Others understand their might of the might and power of God's people, whom no force will be able to withstand (see v. 8).

They shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf. The evident tokens of a divine presence with his people shall stop the mouths of their adversaries, so that they shall be struck dumb with admiration and astonishment (see Job xxi. 5, xxxix. 9, Isa. lxi. 15). They shall hardly believe their own ears, when they hear those wonderful works which God hath wrought for them.

Ver. 17. They shall lick the dust like a serpent. The enemies of God's people shall be so overcome by the same

18 Who is a God like unto thee, that pardonneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy.

19 He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.

20 Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET NAHUM.

PREFACE.

The destruction of Nineveh, here prophesied of, is recorded in the book of Tobit, xiv. 15. It is said there to be taken by Nebuchadnezzar and Assuerus; which account Archbishop Usher, in his Annals, A. M. 3378, Dr. Prideaux, Serip. Connex. p. 47, 48, and other learned men, understand of Nabopolassar, father to Nebuchadnezzar (called in the Greek translation Nebuchodonosor), and Cyaxares king of Media, called by Daniel Ahasuerus, Dan. ix. 1. This remarkable transaction is placed by Dr. Prideaux in the twenty-ninth year of king Josiah, about twenty-four years before the destruction of Jerusalem; and the fixing it to this time exactly agrees with the account given by the heathen historians, Herodotus and others; as St. Jerome has observed in his preface upon Jonah. The Ninevites would not take warning by Jonah’s prophecy; so not only Nahum, who probably lived in the reign of Hezekiah, but also Zephaniah, who lived in the time of Josiah, foretold the destruction of Nineveh, ii. 13.
CHAPTER I.

1. The burden of Nineveh. The book of the vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.

2. God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth; the Lord revengeth, and is furious: the Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies.

3. The Lord is slow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked: the Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet.

4. He rebuketh the sea, and maketh it dry, and drieth up all the rivers: Bashan languisheth, and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth.

5. The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein.

6. Who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him.

7. The Lord is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him.

8. But with an overrunning flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof, and darkness shall pursue his enemies.

9. What do ye imagine against the Lord? he will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time.

10. For while they be folded together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry.

11. There is one come out of thee, that imagineth evil against the Lord, a wicked counsellor.

12. Thus will the Lord; though they be quiet, and likewise many, yet thus shall they be cut it may relate to the last judgment, as the following words plainly do (see the note on ver. 3).

Ver. 6.] God is a " consuming fire," when he comes to execute his judgments, Deut. iv. 24, and as fire is of a sufficient force to dissolve the hardest rocks, so God's vengeance can humble the most obdurate sinners.

Ver. 7. He knoweth them that trust in him.] i. e. He takes a particular care of them (compare Ps. i. 7, 39; Jer. ii. 19, and see note upon Hos. xiii. 5).

Ver. 8. With an overrunning flood he will make an utter end] An army's overrunning a country is often compared to an inundation (see Isa. viii. 7, 8, Dan. ix. 26, x. 10, 20, 40). Thus God will bring the great city of Nineveh to utter ruin, so that there shall be no remains thereof in aftertimes. For the ruins which are to be seen of Mosul, are on the opposite side of the river Tigris.

The place thereof.] The effects or relative plains relates to Nineveh, against which city this prophecy is directed, ver. 1.

Darkness shall pursue his enemies.] i. e. Ruin and destruction (compare Isa. viii. 22).

Ver. 9. Affliction shall not rise up the second time.] 1 will make an utter destruction all at once: When I begin, I will also make an end, as it is expressed 2 Sam. iii. 12. The words may be understood with relation to the destruction of Nineveh prophesied of in the following chapters; viz. that at the same time an end should be put to the family which then remained over Assyria, and the seat of the empire should be translated to Babylon (see the note upon ii. 18).

Ver. 10. For while they be folded together as thorns.] Or, " For as they are folded together like thorns. The particle ad translated while, may be a term of comparison (see Noldius, p. 668). The destruction of sinners is elsewhere compared to the burning of thorns (see the note upon Isa. ix. 12).

While they are drunken as drunkards.] Compare iii. 11. God's vengeance is often called the " cup of his fury," because it deprives men both of strength and reason (see note upon Jer. xxv. 15).

Ver. 11.] This probably is meant of Sennacherib, that uttered so many reproaches and blasphemies against the true God (see ver. 14, 15). Nineveh was one of his royal seats, at the time when Nahum delivered this prophecy.

Ver. 12. Though they be quiet (or rather prospe down, when he shall pass through. Though I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more.

13 For now will I break his yoke from off thee, and will burst thy bonds in sunder.

14 And the Lord hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be sown: out of the house of thy gods will I cut off one], and likewise many, yet thus shall they be cut down, when he shall pass through.] Though the Assyrians be never so numerous, and puffed up with their prosperous success against Egypt (see the note upon iii. 8); which will encourage Sennacherib to march directly against Jerusalem; yet God shall cut them off at one stroke by his angel, who slew in one night in the camp of the Assyrians one hundred and eighty-five thousand (2 Kings xix. 35). The verb translated pass through, is often used of a hostile invasion (see Isa. viii. 8, Dan. xi. 10, Joel iii. 17). It is taken in that sense, ver. 15 of this chapter, and in both places is to be understood of Sennacherib, the enemy mentioned ver. 11. I will afflict thee no more.] Rather, "no longer," by Sennacherib or his forces (see ver. 13, 14). So the particle used is plainly taken, Ezek. xii. 28, Hos. i. 6, (see Noldius, p. 652).

Ver. 13.] Hezekiah and his people shall no longer be tributaries to the king of Assyria, as they have been for a considerable time (see 2 Kings xvi. 17, xviii. 14).

Ver. 14. The Lord hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be sown.] God had decreed that Sennacherib's family should not long preserve their royal state and dignity: his son and successor, Esar-haddon, was now probably at man's estate; for he succeeded his father in a little time after his defeat (2 Kings xix. 37), and reigned with great felicity almost forty years; but his next successor, or the next but one, was dispossessed of his kingdom by Nabuponiasar, father to Nebuchadnezzar, whose family enjoyed the empire of Assyria, or Babylon, as it came then to be called, till the conquest by Cyrus (see Dr. Prideaux, under the graven image and the molten image: I will make thy grave; for thou art vile.

15 Behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace! O Judah, keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows: for the wicked shall no more pass through thee; he is utterly cut off.

CHAPTER II.

1 He that dasheth in pieces is come up before thy face: keep the munition, watch the way, make thy loins strong, fortify thy power mightily.

2 For the Lord hath turned away the excellence of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel: for the empiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine-branches.

Make thy loins strong, &c. Stir up all thy strength and courage.

Ver. 2. For the Lord hath turned away the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel: Some translate the words thus, "the Lord hath returned [or, will revenge] the pride, or injurious dealings, against Jacob, and the pride against Israel," i.e. he will require the injuries and oppressions which Sennacherib and Shalmaneser, the kings of Assyria, have exercised upon Judah and Israel. This interpretation agrees better with the scope of the text, than that which most translators follow, and suits very well with the Hebrew idiom. Compare Joel iii. 10, Hab. ii. 8, 17, Obad. ver. 10, where the second of two substantives is taken in the same sense by our translators. For the empiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine-branches.] The Assyrian conquerors have
CHAPTER II.

3 The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in a scarlet: the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fire trees shall be terribly shaken.

4 The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justice one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.

5 He shall recount his worthies; they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defence shall be prepared.

6 The gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved.

7 And Huzzab shall be led away captive, she shall be brought up, and her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, tabering upon their breasts.

plundered them of all their wealth, and bereaved them of their children, often compared in scripture to branches (see particularly, Gen. xix. 22, compared with Deut. xxxiii. 17).

Ver. 3. The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in a scarlet:] This may be understood either of the colour of their shields and cloths when they were made, or of their being dyed in blood afterward (compare Isa. lixiiii. 2).

The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation.] Or, like flaming torches (see the following verse). The Hebrew particles both and caph, as they are alike in figure, so they are often in signification (see Noldius, p. 162).

Thus those words of Isaiah, xlviii. 10, might be best translated, I have refined thee, but not as silver; i.e. not with so fierce a fire.

The fir trees shall be terribly shaken.] The spears and lances made of fir, and which were so long and large that they looked like so many trees.

Ver. 4. The chariots shall rage in the streets.] They shall drive furiously against one another: as it follows, They shall run like the lightnings.] They shall resemble flames or lightening in their swiftness, and their wheels continually striking fire out of the swift horses, like the strong flame, day by day (see Jer. xxii. 31).

Ver. 5. He shall recount his worthies: but [they shall stumble in their walk: ] The king of Nineveh shall muster together his choicest troops; but they shall be disordered, and give way, or be discomfited, as they march against the enemy.

They shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defence shall be prepared.] On the other side, the besiegers shall make their regular approaches towards the walls of Nineveh, and prepare their defences against the assaults of the besieged.

Ver. 6. Be dissolved.] Or, melt. At length the enemies shall possess themselves of all the avenues towards the several streams of the river Tigris, and so become masters of the city. This shall make the heart of the king and all his court to melt for fear, and quite lose all their courage. To this sense—The Chaldee paraphrase explains the latter part of the verse.

Ver. 7. Huzzab shall be led away captive, she shall be brought up.] Rather removed, or taken away (compare Jer. xlviii. 15, Ps. cii. 24). By Huzzab, the Chaldee understands the queen of Nineveh; but the word may probably mean Nineveh itself; the word denoting a strong or impregnable fortress. Her maids shall lead her] Nineveh is described as Vol. III.—96

8 But Nineveh is of old like a pool of water; yet they shall flee away. Stand, stand, shall they cry; but none shall look back.

9 Take ye the spoil of silver, take the spoil of gold: for there is none end of the store and glory out of all the pleasant furniture.

10 She is empty, and void, and waste: and the heart melted, and the knees smile together, and much pain is in all loins, and the faces of them all gathered blackness.

11 Where is the dwelling of the lions, and the feeding-place of the young lions, where the lion, even the old lion, walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid? 12 The lion did teare in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

13 Behold, I am against thee, saith the LORD a great princess carried captive with her maids of honour attending her, and bewailing her's and their condition, with beating their breasts, and other expressions of lamentation: denoting the lesser cities under their jurisdiction, that should be sharers with her in the same calamity. So Babylon is represented as a tender and delicate lady, undergoing the hardships of a captivity.

Ver. 8. But [or, surely] Nineveh is of old like a pool of water:] The words may be translated, The waters of Nineveh are as a pool of waters; i.e. as the city is well watered by being situated upon the river Tigris, so it is vastly populous. A multitude is elsewhere compared to many waters (see Jer. li. 13, Rev. xvii. 1, 15). But they shall all flee for fear of the enemy, and run away like water (compare Ps. lvi. 7). The sense in the LXX. of Dr. Grabes edition runs very clear, if it can be reconciled with the original, Nineveh is like a pool of water; waters are her wall, or defence.

Stand, stand, shall they cry:] When the commanders bid them stand to their arms, none shall turn back to make head against the enemy, but shall shift for themselves as fast as they can (see ver. 10, 11, 17).

Ver. 9.] The enemy may easily plunder the city of all its riches and costly furniture, for there is none to make any resistance.

Ver. 10. She is empty—and the heart melted.] The inhabitants have no heart nor courage to defend themselves (see iii. 13), but leave the city to be plundered and laid waste by the enemy.

The knees smite together, &c.] Expressions of much fear and terrible apprehensions of the approaching evils (compare Jer. xxx. 6, Dan. v. 6, Joel ii. 6).

Ver. 11, 12. Where is the dwelling of the lions, &c.] What is become of the stately palaces of the king and princes of Nineveh, who like so many lions preyed upon the neighbouring countries, and enriched their city with spoils they took from others (compare Job iv. 10, 11, Ps. xxxiv. 10, Ezek. xix. 2, 7). The lion—strangled for his lionesses, &c.] The lions provide food for the females, till their young ones are able to shift for themselves.

Ver. 13. I will burn her chariots in the smoke:] They shall be destroyed in the fire which consumes the city (see iii. 15).

The sword shall devour thy young lions:] ver. 12.
of hosts, and I will burn her chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions: and

The voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.) Thou shalt no more send ambassadors to distant countries, either to encourage thine allies, or to terrify thine enemies (see Isa. xviii. 2).

CHAPTER III.

1 Woe to the bloody city! it is all full of lies and robbery; the prey departeth not;

2 The noise of a whip, and the noise of the rattling of the wheels, and of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots.

3 The horsemen lift up both the bright sword and the glittering spear: and there is a multitude of slain, and a great number of carcases; and there is none end of their corpses: they stumble upon their corpses:

4 Because of the multitude of the whoredoms of the well-favoured harlot, the mistress of witchcrafts, that selleth nations through her whoredoms, and families through her witchcrafts.

5 Behold, I am against thee, saith the Lord of hosts; and I will discover thy skirts upon thy face, and I will shew the nati ons thy nakedness, and the kingdoms thy shame.

6 And I will cast abominable filth upon thee, and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gaz ing-stock.

7 And it shall come to pass, that all they that look upon thee shall flee from thee, and say, Nineveh is laid waste: who will bemoan her? whence shall I seek comforters for her?

8 Art thou better than populous No, that was situate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the sea, and her wall was from the sea?

9 Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength, and it was infinite; Put and Lubim were thy helpers.

10 Yet was she carried away, she went into

CHAP. III.

See the Argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 1. Woe to the bloody city!] Where princes and great men shed innocent blood to enrich themselves with the spoils of the slain (compare Ezek. xxii. 2, 3, xxiv. 6—9).

The prey departeth not;) They are still increasing their conquests by ruin and oppression, till it will come to their own turn to be spoiled and cursed (compare Isa. xxxiii. 1).

Ver. 2.] See li. 3, 4, and compare Jer. xlvii. 3.

Ver. 3. The well-favoured harlot;) Great cities are often called harlots, upon the account of those vices which prevail in them, and infect others by their example (see Isa. xxii. 16.)

The mistress of witchcrafts,) The arts of luxury which are encouraged in such places are called witchcrafts, because they have a sort of charm in them to draw others aside (compare Isa. xlvii. 9, Rev. xiii. 3).

That selleth nations through her whoredoms, and families;) That makes whole nations a prey to their enemies, by teaching them the arts of softness, and effeminacy, and so rendering them weak and defenceless. Families are equivalent to kingdoms (see note upon Jer. i. 15, and comp. Amos iii. 2. Zech. xiv. 18).

Ver. 4. I will discover thy skirts;) I will send thee into captivity naked and bare (see Isa. xx. 4, 8, xlvii. 2, 3, Jer. xiii. 22, Mic. i. 11) Thus will I expose thy shame to the world; which was a punishment often inflicted upon harlots (see note upon Ezek. xvi. 37).

Ver. 5.) I will deprive thee of all thine ornaments, and will cover thee with shame and reproach, and make a public example of thee. Such was the usage that common prostitutes met with (see Ezek. xxii. 25, 36).

Ver. 6.) As being affrighted at the sight of thy dismal condition.

Ver. 7.) An allusion to the lamentations used at funerals, and per-
CHAPTER III.

By her children also were dashed in pieces at the top of all the streets: and they cast lots for her honourable men, and all her great men were bound in chains.

11 Thou also shalt be drunken: thou shalt be hid, thou also shalt seek strength because of the enemy.

12 All thy strong holds shall be like fig-trees, with the first ripe figs: if they be shaken, they shall even fall into the mouth of the eater.

13 Behold, thy people in the midst of thee are women: the gates of thy land shall be set wide open unto thine enemies: the fire shall devour thy bars.

14 Draw thee waters for the siege, fortify thy strong holds: go into clay, and tread the mortar, make strong the brick-kiln.

15 There shall the fire devour thee; the sword shall cut thee off, it shall eat thee up like the come to each man's share (see Joel iii. 3, Obad. ver. 11).

Ver. 11. Thou also shalt be drunken;] See i. 10. Thou also shalt seek strength because of the enemy.] Or, "Thou shalt repair to thy fortress, because of the enemy." Thou shalt not dare to show thyself to the enemy, but shalt betake thyself to thy strongholds (see ii. 1), and places of strength (compare ver. 13, 17).

Ver. 12. As flies drop off when they are ripe, so shall thy strongholds fall into the enemy's hands, upon the first assault.

Ver. 13. The several passages by which the enemy may invade thee shall be left defenceless (see ii. 1), so that they may easily set on fire thy fortifications.

Ver. 14. Draw thee waters for the siege.] In order to maintain the siege. Go into clay,-make strong [or repair] the brick-kiln. In order to repair the breaches of thy walls, or make new ones within, if the old ones should be taken by the enemy. In those countries they used brick instead of stone (see Gen. xi. 3).

Ver. 15. There shall the fire devour thee;] Whilst thou art repairing the old fortifications, or making new ones, shall the enemy set thy works on fire. The particle sham, there, may signify then (see Noldius, p. 797).

It shall eat thee up like the cankerworm.] The word Resist, whom, shall be as numerous and destructive as locusts, or cankerworms, shall destroy thee (see Joel. i. 4). Make thyself many as the cankerworm.] Though thou multiply thin armies, like locusts or caterpillars, yet the enemy shall destroy them.

Ver. 16. The cankerworm spoileth, and fleeth away.] As the locusts destroy the fruits of the earth, and fly away to another place, so shall thy soldiers pillage all the wealth thou hast gained by traffic, and then leave thee.

Ver. 17. Thy crown are as the locusts.] The word Minaszaraith may be literally rendered the Nuzarites: that title is given to persons remarkable for their youth and beauty (Lam. iv. 7; note upon Amos ii. 11), and so may not improperly be applied to the officers in the Ninevites' army: these the prophet compares to locusts and grasshoppers, both for their number (see ver. 15), and for another quality, that they shun the heat of battle, just as the grasshoppers do the heat of the sun.

Ver. 18. Thy shepherds slumber, O king of Assyria.] By "shepherds" are meant captains or generals (compare Jer. vi. 3, xxxv. 34). These are said to slumber, as having lost their courage, or as being gone to their last sleep, are dead and buried (compare Ps. lxvii. 5, 6). By the "king of Assyria," Dr. Prideaux, in the place above cited, understands Sargus, who was now vanquished by Nabopolassar (who had before possessed himself of the kingdom of Babylon), and Cyaxares the king of Media (see the argument of this prophecy). The fall of this prince is elegantly described by Ezekiel, xxxvi. 3, &c. The words of Jeremiah, 1. 18, "I have punished the king of Assyria," are to be understood of the same person. Thy people are scattered] Their generals are called shepherds at the beginning of the verse: the same metaphor is here continued, and the people are said to be dispersed, now their leaders are fled or destroyed, as sheep are scattered where they have no shepherd (compare 1 Kings xxii. 17).

Ver. 19. There is no healing of thy bruises.] Thy destruction is unavoidable. The Chaldee expounds it, "None is sorry or grieved at thy destruction:" which sense agrees very well with the original, and what follows: "They that hear the bruise of thee [and thy fall] clap their hands over thee," as rejoicing over thy calamities (compare Lam. ii. 15, Ezek. xxv. 6, Zeph. ii. 15).

For upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually?] All the neighbouring countries have felt the effects of thy cruelties and oppressions.
OF THE PROPHET HABAKKUK.

PREFACE.

The prophet Habakkuk was probably contemporary with Jeremiah, and prophesied in the reign of Josiah; for the subject of his prophecy is the same with that of Jeremiah, and upon the same occasion: viz, the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, for their heinous sins and provocations. We may observe, as Nahum, the preceding prophet, foretold the destruction of the Assyrians, who carried the ten tribes captive; so Habakkuk foretells the judgments that should come upon the Chaldeans, who completed the captivity of the two remaining tribes.

CHAPTER I.

1 The burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see.

2 O Lord, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save!

3 Why dost thou shew me iniquity, and cause me to behold grievance? for spoiling and violence are before me: and there are that raise up strife and contention.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet complaining of the growth of iniquity among the Jews, God forewarns him the desolations the Chaldeans will make in Judea and the neighbouring countries, as the ministers of his vengeance. The prophet thereupon falls into a holy exultation with God about these proceedings, moved thereunto, as it seems, by the impatience of the Jews, who justified themselves in comparison of their conquerors: to which he receives an answer in the following chapter.

Ver. 1.] The word burden is commonly explained of a burdensome prophecy, big with ruin and destruction (see note upon Jer. xxiii. 33). But a learned prelate, in his Defence of Christianity from the Prophecies of the Old Testament, p. 10, observes, that the Hebrew, massa, signifies no more than briefly a prophecy, and so is translated in our English Bibles, Prov. xxxi. 1, and is often translated by "vision and prophecy" in the LXX. and other ancient versions; the word being used in that sense, from the prophet's hearing or feeling within him the influence of God's Spirit: for which reason they were called in Greek, ὄρατοι, and Παντεοράτοι.

Ver. 2. How long shall I cry—unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save?] The prophet proposes the common objections against providence, taken from the prosperity of the wicked, and the oppression of the righteous, which has been a stumbling-block even to good men (see Job xii. 1, 6, xxi. 7, Ps. xxxvi. 1, Lxxii. 1, Jer. xii. 1).

Ver. 3. There are that raise up strife and contention.] Or, "There is strife, and contention carries it:" they that are best skilled in the arts of contention carry the cause.

Ver. 4. Judgment doth never go forth.] Or, "doth not go forth to perfection," is never rightly and duly administered.

DOTH COMPASS ABOUT?] Doth overpower him.

Ver. 5.] For a punishment to such exorbitant practices, behold God's making the heathen, viz. the Chaldeans (ver. 6), instruments of his vengeance: this is a judgment, you deepseers of God's prophecies will hardly believe, when you consider that at present the Chaldeans are your friends and confederates: as appears by Josiah's fighting with the king of Egypt, as being a confederate of the king of Assyria or Babylon (see 2 Kings xxiii. 29, and Dr. Prideaux, under the thirty-first year of Josiah). St. Luke, quoting this text according to the LXX.'s translation, Acts xiii. 41, reads it thus, "Behold, ye deepseers, and wonder, and perish." The learned Dr. Pocock, in his miscellaneous notes in Porta Mosis, cap. 3, shows, that the interpretation is agreeable to the present Hebrew copy: the word bagojim, which we translate "among the heathen," he derives from the verb baga, which still signifieth, in Arabic, to be proud, or scornful: the following words the same translation renders, "And wonder and perish," which sense he proves the word tamah will admit.
ter and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land, to possess the dwelling-places that are not their's.

7 They are terrible and dreadful: their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves.

8 Their horses also are swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce than the evening wolves: and their horsemen shall spread themselves, and their horsemen shall come from far; they shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat.

9 They shall come all for violence: their faces shall sup up as the east wind, and they shall gather the captivity as the sand.

10 And they shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them: they shall deride every strong hold; for they shall heap dust, and take it.

11 Then shall his mind change, and he shall pass over, and offend, impulsing this his power unto his god.

Ver. 6.] Who should make several invasions into Judea, and at last utterly conquer it (see 2 Kings xxiv., xxv.). They are said here to be cruel in their temerity, and vigorous in their warlike expeditions (compare ver. 8).

Ver. 7. Their judgment and their dignity (or authority) shall proceed of themselves. They will be their own judges of what is right or wrong. The marginal reading in our English bible does not seem to agree with the original.

Ver. 8. Their horses—are more fierce than the evening wolves:] Or, Are swifter than evening wolves, when they go out for their prey, and are pinched with hunger (see Ps. civ. 20, Jer. v. 6). The words might be translated to an easier sense: “Their horsemen are fiercer than evening wolves, and shall spread themselves,” or shall be multiplied.

Their horsemen shall come from far; they shall fly as an eagle, &c.] The words plainly allude to Deut. xxviii. 49, 50 (compare Jer. v. 15). The Chaldeans are said to come from far in respect of their neighbours the Philistines, Syrians and Moabites, who used to infest Judea.

Ver. 9. Their faces shall sup up as the east wind.] They shall destroy everything where they march, and so the wind blaseth the fruits of the earth (compare Ezek. xvii. 10, Hos. xiii. 15). Some render the words, “Whatsoever they gather, they shall carry it towards the east,” meaning to Babylon, which lay north-east from Judea.

They shall gather the captivity as the sand.] Not only in Judea (see Jer. iii. 28—30), but in all the neighbouring countries which they shall conquer (see the following note).

Ver. 10. They shall scoff at the kings.] The Hebrew uses the singular number as well here as in the following verse; and is to be understood of the king of Babylon, who conquers kings and princes, and treats them with scorn and contempt: so they used Zeckiah and his princes (see 2 Kings xxv. 6, 7, 18, 21), and so they shall serve the kings of Egypt and Tyre, and the princes of Moab, Edom, and the Philistines; who shall all of them successively be conquered by Nebuchadnezzar (see Ezek. xxv., xxvi., xxix., xxxii.).

They shall heap dust, and take it.] Cast up mountains against them, and so take them (see Jer. xxxii. 24, xxxiii. 4).

12 Art thou not from everlasting, O Lord my God, mine Holy One? we shall not die. O Lord, thou hast ordained them for judgment; and, O mighty God, thou hast established them for correction.

13 Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot not look on iniquity: wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he?

14 And makest men as the fishes of the sea, as the creeping things that have no ruler over them?

15 They take up all of them with the angle, they catch them in their net, and gather them in their dragnet: therefore they rejoice and are glad.

16 Therefore they sacrifice unto their net, and burn incense unto their dragnet: because by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous.

17 Shall they therefore empty their net, and not spare continually to slay the nations?

Ver. 11.] The prophet speaks of the several kings of Babylon as if they were one and the same person (see the note upon Isa. xxiii. 15); and saith, that he shall change his mind with his fortune, and impute his success to his idol Belus: which was remarkably true of Belshazzar, Nebuchadnezzar’s successor (see Dan. v. 4): but we may understand the words of Nebuchadnezzar himself, if we translate the latter part of the verse thus, “This his strength is his God;” i. e. imputing all his success to his own prowess (compare ver. 10): and afterward, for those arrogant words of his, mentioned Dan. vi. 30, he was degraded into a beast.

Ver. 12. Art not thou from everlasting—we shall not die.] Thou that livest for ever, and whose word is unchangeable as thyself, wilt preserve us from utter destruction, and in due time make good thy promises to us (see Ps. cii. 27, 28).

Thou hast ordained them for judgment;] Thou hast appointed the Chaldeans to be instruments of thy vengeance upon sinners (see 2 Kings xix. 35, Isa. x. 5—7, Ps. xvii. 13, Ezek. xxx. 25).

Ver. 13. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil.] With any complaisance, or approbation. Wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously? Sennest to concur at, or dost not show any dislike at, the violence of those idolatrous Chaldeans.

Ver. 14, 15. Makest men as the fishes of the sea.] Suffereth the Chaldeans not to treat them better than fishes, who become a general prey to the fisherman’s net or angle.

Ver. 16.] They implore all their victories to strength and skill, and make no acknowledgments to God for their success (see ver. 11, Isa. x. 16, 17, 18).

Ver. 17. Shalt they therefore empty their net?] Carry away the riches and treasures of their conquest (see 2 Kings xxiv. 13) in order to undertake more; just as a fisherman empty their nets to fill them again. But the words may be rendered, Shalt he (see ver. 10) cast or spread his net? The Hebrew verb is used of drawing a sword or spear (see Ezek. xxviii. 7, Ps. xxxv. 3): to this sense the Greek and Chaldee here understand it.
1 I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved.

2 And the Lord answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it.

3 For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.

4 Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but the just shall live by his faith.

5 ¶ Yea also, because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeth unto him all people:

6 Shall not all these take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeth himself with thick clay!

CHAPTER II.

ARGUMENT.—In answer to the complaints of the prophet in the foregoing chapter, God tells him that he will in due time perform the promises made to his people, of deliverance by the Messiah; and that in the mean time good men will support themselves by faith; and then foretells him the ruin of their great adversary, the Babylonian empire, and the judgment he will inflict upon them for their covetousness, their cruelty, and idolatry.

Ver. 1. I will stand upon my watch, &c.] It was the business of a watchman, in the time of war, to desy from an eminent station what messengers were coming, and to make known the message as soon as possible (see 2 Kings ix. 17, &c.). The prophet puts himself in such a posture, that he may receive God's answer to the complaints he made in the foregoing chapter.

What I shall answer when I am reproved.] Or rather, "What I shall answer as to what I have argued;" viz. to the expostulations I made with God just before.

Ver. 2.] When the prophets are commanded to write anything, it denotes the great importance of it, that the notice of it may be transmitted to posterity (see note upon Isa. viii. 1, xxx. 8). So God here commands the prophet, to write the contents of this vision in such legible characters as were used in public tables that were hung up in temples and market places, that every one might have cognizance of them.

Ver. 3. For the vision is yet for an appointed time.] God has determined a set time when it shall be fulfilled, and not before (compare Dan. viii. 10, xi. 27, 33, 36). According to the common translation of the following words, by this vision we are to understand the destruction of the Babylonian monarchy, which is plainly foretold from the fifth verse to the end of the chapter, and is a proper answer to the complaint or argument the prophet had made in the foregoing chapter. But the learned Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, in his Defence of Christianity from the ancient Prophecies, p. 160, observes, that the prophet, by way of preface to that prediction, confirms the Jews in the general expectation of their deliverer the Messiah, whose coming had been so often promised, and which profane persons began to question, when they saw God gave up his people into the hands of a cruel and idolatrous nation.

But at the end it shall speak, and not lie.] The same learned prelate, p. 162, observes, that the verb "speak" properly signifies to break forth, as the morning light does (see Cant. ii. 17, iv. 6); to which sense the LXX. and Vulgar Latin translate it here; so he renders the sentence, "At the end, it (or, he) shall break forth, and not deceive." Though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.] There are two different words in the Hebrew, which our English expresses by the same word "tarry:" so the same learned person translates the sentence thus, "Though he tarry, expect him; because he that cometh will come, he will not go beyond" the appointed time, but will make good the promises of deliverance given to your fathers. To this sense the LXX. render the words, very agreeably to the original; and the apostle follows their interpretation (Heb. x. 57), and understands them of the Messiahs, who is often called, "He that cometh, or should come, into the world" (see Ps. cxviii. 26, Zech. ix. 9, John vi. 14): the verb stands impersonally in the Hebrew text; but in such a syntax the person is commonly understood.

Ver. 4. His soul which is lifted up is not upright in him.] The Septuagint translate the sentence thus: "If he (i.e. the just, as it follows) draw back, my soul (the present Hebrew copies read his soul, understanding it of God) shall have no pleasure in him." This version bishop Pearson hath proved to be agreeable to the original text, Prologem. to the LXX. and the apostle confirms this exposition by following that translation, Heb. x. 98.

Ver. 5. Yea also, because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home.] If we suppose a new paragraph to begin here, according to the exposition given of the foregoing verses, the sense would run clearer if the words were thus translated, "Moreover be he that, like a man transgressing by wine, is proud, and shall not continue" or prosper. To this sense, the Chaldee paraphrast and Vulgar Latin explain the words; the particle of comparison, as, being often understood (see the note upon Isa. xxi. S). The prophet having assured the Jews of a deliverance in God's appointed time, proceeds now to denounce his judgment against the Babylonian monarchy, speaking of it as comprised under one person at the head of it (see the note upon i. 11). Here again he describes him as one intoxicated with his successes, and not knowing how to set any bounds to his ambition; but still, as his conquests enlarge, his desire of having more increases. Hell, or death, and the grave, are proverbial emblems of an insatiable temper (see Prov. xxxvii. 29, xxx. 16).

But gathereth unto him all nations.] Extends his dominions far and near (see i. 17).

Ver. 6. Shall not all these take up a parable against
CHAPTER II.

7 Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?
8 Because thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee; because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.
9 ¶ Woe to him that coveteth a evil covetousness to his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil!
10 Thou hast consulted shame to thy house by cutting off many people, and hast sinned against thy soul.
11 For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it.

12 ¶ Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and stablisheth a city by iniquity!
13 Behold, is it not of the Lord of hosts that the people shall labour in the very fire, and the people shall weary themselves for very vanity?
14 For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.
15 ¶ Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness!
16 Thou art filled with shame for glory: drink thou also, and let thy foreskin be uncovered: the threateneth Nebuchadnezzar, Isa. xiv. 22. Belshazzar being the last of that family, whose death put an end to the Babylonian monarchy.

Ver. 11.] The houses and towns which have been destroyed by the Chaldeans, shall cry for vengeance against the destroyer.

Ver. 15.] The latter part of the verse is with very little alteration repeated, Jer. li. 58, where he describes the destruction of Babylon. I observed in my notes upon that place, that the sentence might be better translated thus: "The people shall labour for that which shall be [fuel] for the fire, and the people shall wear themselves for a thing of naught;" i.e. all the pains the Chaldeans have taken in enlarging and beautifying their city, shall be lost in the flames which shall consume their stately buildings (see the notes upon Jer. lii. 25).

Ver. 14.] For God's providence in governing the world shall conspicuously appear in the downfall of the Babylonian empire; especially as it is described in the prophet as an earnest and type of the fall of mystical Babylon, which will be a decisive stroke, that will thoroughly vindicate oppressed truth and innocence.

Ver. 15. ¶ Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, &c.] The desolation of any country is often compared to drunkenness (see the note upon Jer. xxiv. 13): so the king of Babylon, who subdued the neighbouring countries round about him, and perhaps got an advantage over some of them by gifts and presents, or by counterfeit leagues and friendship, is compared to a man that gets an advantage over another by persuading or forcing him to drink too much. The word "chenaath, translated "bottle," signifies likewise that heating or poisonous quality which attends wine taken in excess (compare Hos. vii. 5); and is often taken for any poisonous juice (see Deut. xxxii. 24, 33, Job vi. 4, xx. 16, Ps. liii. 4).

That thou mayest look on their nakedness!] The frequent effects of drunkenness, is to engage others to commit lewdness, and thereby expose them to shame; so the king of Babylon intoxicates the minds of his neighbours, by his arts of policy, in order to discover the weakness of their country or government, called "the nakedness of the land," Gen. xlii. 9, and thereby get the better of them.

Ver. 16.] Thy glory shall now be turned into shame: for it shall come to thy turn to feel the fury cup of the Lord's right hand shall be turned unto thee, and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory.

17 For the violence of Lebanon shall cover thee, and the spoil of beasts, which made them afraid, because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

18 § What profiteth the graven image that of God's judgments, often expressed by "the cup of his wrath;" when thy people shall be made captives, and stripped bare without any covering to their nakedness (see Isa. iii. 17, Nah. iii. 5).

Ver. 17. For the violence of Lebanon shall cover thee.] God shall execute his vengeance upon thee for the violence thou hast offered to the temple at Jerusalem (compare Jer. i. 28, lii. 11); which is here compared to the cedars of the forest of Lebanon, for its height and stateliness of its buildings (compare Zech. xi. 1). Or else the prophet compares the cruelty of the Medes and Persians to the violence of wild beasts in the forest of Lebanon: so the following words import.

The spoil of beasts, which made them afraid.] The relative which, added by our translators, obscures the text; which might be more plainly rendered, "The spoil of (or, made by) beasts shall make them afraid, or make thee afraid;" as the Septuagint and the Chaldee, with a very little alteration, read the text. As thou hast spoiled others, without any sense of common humanity, so the army of the conqueror shall deal by thee (see ver. 8); and shall tear them in pieces, as wild beasts do their prey (see Isa. xiii. 15, 18).

Because of men's blood, &c.] See ver. 8.

Ver. 18. What profiteth the graven image, &c.] The last sin the prophet takes notice of, for which God will execute his judgments upon Babylon, is idolatry (compare Jer. i. 2, lii. 44, 47); and he tells the king of Babylon that when he sees Bel and the rest of his graven images carried away by the conqueror in triumphant procession (see Isa. xlvi. 1, 2), he will be convinced that his idols could bring no advantage or protection to their worshippers.

The molten image, and a teacher of lies.] The setting up, and paying adoration to them, tend to encourage the ignorant in their absurd fancy, that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and a teacher of lies, that the maker of his work trusteth therein, to make dumb idols?

19 Woe unto him that saith to the wood, Awake; to the dumb stone, Arise, it shall teach! Behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it.

20 But the Lord is in his holy temple: let all the earth keep silence before him.

God is like the work of men's hands, and that images have some divine power lodged within them; to the same purpose the stock is called, "the doctrine of vanities," Jer. x. 8.

To make dumb idols? Who "have months and speak not," Ps. cxv. 5 (compare 1 Cor. xii. 2).

Ver. 19. Woe unto him that saith to the wood, Awake.] Woe to him that calls upon idols, as if they could awake and hear his prayers, as God is said to awake, when he answers our prayers (see Ps. lxiv. 23); or as if they could give their worshippers directions how to escape the evils which threaten them.

It is laid over with gold and silver, and (or, but) there is no breath at all in the midst of it.] They are beautified with a great deal of cost, on purpose to delude their ignorant worshippers, and make them fancy some divinity lodged within them; whereas they are altogether without life or sense.

Ver. 20. But the Lord is in his holy temple.] The true God has his throne in heaven, as the place of his peculiar residence (see Jonah ii. 7); from whence he will answer the prayers of his servants, though the temple of Jerusalem should be destroyed.

Let all the earth keep silence before him:] Or, "Stand in awe before him," as the LXX. render it: the consideration of his sovereignty and dominion should strike them with a reverential awe, and especially should dispose them to a profound submission towards him, when they see him execute his judgments in the world, as he will shortly do upon the Chaldeans. The expression is taken from the reverent behaviour which inferiors show by keeping silence in the presence of their betters; or it alludes to such a silence as is kept in courts of justice, when a judge pronounces the sentence (see Job xxxix. 9, 10, Ps. lxvi. 8, 9, Zeph. i. 7, Zech. ii. 13).

CHAPTER III.

I A PRAYER of Habakkuk the prophet upon Shigionoth.

2 O Lord, I have heard thy speech, and was

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet in this hymn recounts, in a poetical style, God's wonderful works, in conducting his people through the wilderness, and giving them possession of the promised land; from whence he encourages himself, and other pious persons, to rely upon God for making good his promises to their posterity in after-ages.

Ver. 1.] Or, as the marginal reading explains it, "According to the tunes called in Hebrew Shigionoth;" which were musical compositions used in the public service of the temple (compare the title of Ps. vii.). It is called a prayer, because it begins in the form of a supplication, although the following parts are rather in the nature of a hymn, or a thanksgiving.

Ver. 2.] I have heard what thou hast revealed to me concerning thy judgments upon thy people: the terribleness of them strikes me with a reverential awe and dread (compare ver. 16); yet I earnestly beg of thee, if it be thy gracious will, to exert thy power, and renew thy former wonders, for the deliverance of thy people, before the seventy years determined for their captivity be expired: and in the midst of judgment to remember mercy.

Ver. 3.] The prophet, to encourage the faithful
3 God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise.

4 And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power.

5 Before him went the pavement, and burning coals went forth at his feet.

6 He stood, and measured the earth: he beheld, and drove asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains were scattered, the perpetual hills did bow: his ways are everlasting.

7 I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction: and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble.

8 Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thine horses and thy chariots of salvation?

9 Thy bow was made quite naked, according to the oaths of the tribes, even thy word. Selah.

10 Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers.

11 The sun and moon stood still in their habitations at the light of thine arrows went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear.

12 The princes of Edom were assembled together, the princes of the Arabians joined with them.

13 They helped him against the God of Jacob; at the head of the mount of his assembly.

14 The kings of the nations were assembled, they helped the kings of the nations.

15 Arise, thou prince among them, thou whom God anointed with the oil of gladness above thy fellows; have respect to him, his lamp shall not be put out, nor his light diminished from Jacob's seed, or from Israel, until Jerusalem come to her appointed time.

16 Who is like unto thee, that shouldest have come up out of the sea, the bed of the deep, the ocean and the sea, and hast come into his land, and into his temple?

17 Thine arrows are in the sure hand of his hand: the summit of the archers shall fear thee.

18 And thou madest a path to enter for thy people, for the solemnities of Jacob, into his sanctuary.

19 There is one that buildeth another, and there is none to come near him: there is one that spreadeth the vineyard, and there is none to plough it: but the一个是 who maketh it to grow.

20 The Lord of hosts shall defend it; and shall make an ensign for the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

21 This is the word which they most desired of thee, O Jacob; this is the word thou didst desire of the LORD, Selah.
12 Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thresh the heathen in anger.

13 Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, even for salvation with thine anointed; thou woundedst the head out of the house of the wicked, by discovering the foundation unto the neck. Selah.

14 Thou didst strike through with his staves the head of his villages; they came out as a whirlwind to scatter me: their rejoicing was as to devour the poor secretly.

15 Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap of great waters.

16 When I heard, my belly trembled; my lips quivered at the voice: rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled in myself, that I might rest in the day of trouble: when he cometh up unto the people, he will invade them with his troops.

17 ¶ Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls:

18 Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

19 The Lord God is my strength, and he will make my feet like hinds' feet, and he will make me to walk upon mine high places. To the chief singer on my stringed instruments.

His brazen arms like flames of lightning shone,
Which the great Thunderer launches from his arm.

The same thought occurs again, liiad. x. ver. 155 (see note upon Ezek. xxi. 15).

Ver. 12.] i. e. Thou didst subdue them, not only by giving success to the arms of the Israelites, but likewise thyself fighting against them from heaven (ver. 11,13; compare Isa. xxi. 10, xli. 15, Jer. ii. 38).

Ver. 13. Thou wentest forth for the salvation—with thine anointed.] With thy peculiar favourites, such as Moses, Joshua, and David, all set apart by thy appointment to be leaders and rulers of thy people (compare Ps. cv. 15).

Thou woundedst the head out of the house of the wicked.] The heads (see ver. 14), or confederate princes of the Canaanites (see Josh. x. 3, xli. 1).

By discovering the foundation unto the neck.] Or, "Raising the foundation," as the word aruch signifies, Ps. cxxxvii. 7, by undermining them from bottom to top.

Ver. 14. Thou didst strike through with his staves the head of his villages.] Or, "Thou didst strike through the head of his warriors among his tribes," or families. Thou didst compass all the petty kings of their several clans, or families, carrying on the war against Joshua (see Josh. xii. 9, &c.). The word peraxas, his villages, in our translation, the Septuagint translate warriors, or generals: and so they understand it, Judg. v. 7, 11, which sense agrees best with this place.

They came out as a whirlwind to scatter me:] Armies are elsewhere compared to whirlwinds (see Zech. ix. 14).

Their rejoicing was as to devour the poor secretly.] The metaphor is taken from wild beasts, who carry their prey into their dens, and there devour it.

Ver. 15.] Thou didst conduct thy people through the Red sea and the river Jordan, as safely as if they had rid on horseback (see ver. 5).

Ver. 16. When I heard [thy judgment decreed against thy own people, ver. 2], my belly trembled.] I was all over in a shaking and consternation, and no strength remained in me (compare Jer. xxii. 9, Dan. x. 8).

That I might rest in the day of trouble, &c.] Nelson, p. 108, 110, of his Concordance, hath given the easiest sense of the latter part of the verse, translating it thus: "Yet I shall rest in the day of trouble, when he shall come up against the people, even he who shall invade them with his troops:" the prophet speaks in the person of the pious man; I shall rest secure under the divine protection, when the Chaldeans shall come to invade Judea (see ver. 17, 18).

Ver. 17. 18.] Though all outward means of nourishment or preservation should fail, yet will I still trust and depend upon God's promises.

Ver. 19. The Lord—will make my feet like hinds' feet.] This verse is taken out of Ps. xviii. 33. He will restore my former strength, nimbleness, and agility, in war, and make me again possessor of the chief places of strength in my native country (see Deut. xxxii. 13, xxxiii. 20, Ps. xviii. 33).

To the chief singer [or musician] on my stringed instruments.] This hymn was designed to be sung in the temple service (see ver. 1), and for that purpose was delivered to the chief musician, to be set to musical notes (compare the title of the fourth Psalm). This direction might probably be given by order of king Josiah.

THE BOOK OF

THE PROPHET ZEPHANIAH.

PREFACE.

This prophet lived in the reign of Josiah, as he himself informs us, and prophesieth chiefly against Judah, who continued very corrupt, notwithstanding the king's pious zeal for reformation, and the good example he gave to his subjects.
CHAPTER I.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet denounces God's severe judgments against Judah for their idolatry, and other heinous sins.

Ver. 1.] Hizkiah is read with the same points in the Hebrew with Hezekiah, the name of the king of Judah; but Zephaniah being here reckoned as the fourth by descent from Hizkiah, that person cannot be the same with king Hezekiah, there being not a sufficient distance of time between them for four descents.

Ver. 2, 3.] A general desolation is threatened, by enumerating the particulars that shall be involved in it (see note upon Hos. iv. 3).

Ver. 3. The stumbling-blocks with the wicked] Or, Of the wicked, for the particle eth often denotes the genitive case (see Noldhuis, p. 122). Stumbling-blocks are the same with idols, called "the stumbling-blocks of iniquity," Ezek. vii. 19, xiv. 3, 4.

Ver. 4. I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place.] Those altars or places of worship, dedicated to the service of Baal, which escaped the reformation of king Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 5, compare Jer. iii. 6.

The names of the Chemarims with the priests] Or, "The names of the idolatrous priests;" so for the word Chemarim is translated, 2 Kings xxiii. 5 (compare Hos. x. 5). I will destroy these together with the priests of the tribe of Levi, who have joined in the worship of idols (see Ezek. xliv. 10).

Ver. 5. And them that worship the host of heaven] See note upon Jer. xix. 13.

Then that worship and that swear by the Lord, and that swear by Malcham.] That join the worship of Idols to that of the true God, who is "a jealous God," and will not admit of any rival in his worship (see Hos. iv. 15). Malcham is the same with Moloch, to whom the people of Judah continued to offer their children, as Jeremiah upbraids them, vii. 31, xix. 5, notwithstanding the reformation that Josiah had made, 2 Kings xxiii. 10. Swearing is an act of religious worship, or a solemn invocation of God, as a witness and a judge (see Jer. xx. 29), and therefore expressly forbid to be used to idols (Josh. xxii. 7).

Ver. 6.] Both those that are apostates to idolatry, and such as live without any sense of religion, and "without God in the world."

Ver. 7. Hold thy peace at the presence of the Lord God.] Keep silence in token of an awful reverence towards God, now he is coming to execute his judgments upon the land (compare Ps. lxxvii. 8, 9; Hab. ii. 20, Zech. ii. 13). "Humble thyself under his mighty hand," without repenting or murmuring at his corrections, which thy sins do justly deserve (see Ps. xxvi. 9).

For the Lord hath prepared a sacrifice, he hath bid his guests.] The slaughter of the wicked is called a sacrifice, because it is in some sense an atonement to God's justice (compare Isa. xxxvii. 6, Jer. xlvi. 10, Ezek. xxxix. 17, Rev. xix. 17). The latter part of the sentence alludes to the custom of those that offered sacrifice, which was to invite their friends to partake of the feast which accompanied it. So God will call the Chaldeans to have a share in this slaughter.

Ver. 8. I will punish the princes, and the king's children.] As having been the encouragers of idolatry, by their authority and ill example. Both the sons of Josiah who succeeded him in the throne, are said to "have done evil in the sight of the Lord," 2 Kings xxii. 32, 37.

All such as are clothed with strange apparel.] There were peculiar vestments belonging to the worship of each idol (see 2 Kings x. 22). So in aftertimes there were peculiar habits belonging to the priests of Saturn, and priestesses of Ceres, which are mentioned in the martyrdom of Perpetua and Felicitas, cap.19, and in Tertullian, De Pallio, cap. 4. The text may likewise be explained of such men as wore women's apparel, and such women as wore that belonging to men; which was contrary to an express law, Dent. xxii. 5, and was a rite observed in the worship of some idols.

Ver. 9. Leap on the threshold.] Or rather, "Leap over the threshold." The expression probably denotes some idolatrous rite, like that which was practised in the temple of Dagon, where the "priests did not tread upon the threshold," Sam. v. To this sense, the Chaldee paraphrast interprets it of those that walk after the laws or rites of the Philistines. Others expound it of those who enter into other men's houses, and take away their goods by violence; according to what follows, "who fill their master's houses with violence and deceit.

Ver. 10. In that day—there shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate.] At that time (see ver. 12), there shall be an outcry of the Babylonish army coming to invade the city on the side of the fish-gate; i. e. the gate which stood near the fish market (see 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14, Neh. iii. 9).
from the fish-gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills.

11 Howl, ye inhabitants of Makketh, for all the merchant people are cut down; all they that bear silver are cut off.

12 And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are settled on their lees: that say in their heart, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil.

13 Therefore their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation: they shall also build houses, but not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof.

14 The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly.

An howling from the second.] Or rather, "From the middle part of the city" (see 2 Kings xxi. 14).

A great crashing from the hills.] From the mountains of Sion and Moriah, whereon the temple and the king's palace were built (see 2 Chron. iii. 1).

Ver. 11. Makketh.] A part, or street, of Jerusalem: the Chaldean interprets it of the inhabitants near the break Kidron.

For all the merchant people are cut down.] They carry on their trades by going to markets or fairs, with great sums of ready money. The original reads, The people of Canaan, which word signifies a merchant (Hos. xii. 7), but the Chaldean understands it of those who resemble the Canaanites in their idolatries and corrupt manners: so Judah's mother is called a Hitite, and her father an Amorite, because they did after the works of the Canaanites, the ancient inhabitants of the land, Ezek. xvi. 45.

Ver. 12. I will search Jerusalem with candles.] I will deliver up Jerusalem into the hands of the Chaldeans, who shall let no corner of it escape them, but shall diligently search the houses, and plunder the wealth of them (see the following verse).

And punish the men that are settled on their lees.] Who having lived securely in ease and plenty (compare Jer. xlvi. 11), have not "God in all their thoughts," but imagine that he doth not concern himself with the affairs of the world, and that neither good nor evil is brought to pass by his providence.

Ver. 13.] The enemy shall plunder their goods, and then demolish their houses; so that they shall not enjoy these possessions which they have gotten by fraud or violence (see ver. 9, and Amos v. 11).

Ver. 14. The great day of the Lord is near (compare Joel ii. 1, 11),—even the voice of the day of the Lord, &c.] A great noise and distraction shall attend the taking of Jerusalem (see ver. 10, Isa. xxii. 3). Some translate the latter part of the sentence thus, "The voice of the day of the Lord is bitter: then the mighty man crieth out." The adverb sham, translated there, signifies time as well as place (see note upon Isa. xlvi. 16, Hos. ii. 15).

Ver. 15.] See ver. 18, Joel ii. 2, Amos v. 18.

Ver. 16.] See Jer. iv. 19.

Ver. 17. They shall walk like blind men, &c.] Not knowing whither to go, or which way to take for safety (compare Deut. xxvii. 29, Isa. lx. 10).

Their flesh as the dung.] Or, "Their carcasses as the dung:" so the Chaldee explains the word flesh. The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be slain in the streets of the city, and their carcasses left there to rot and putrefy.

Ver. 18. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them] This is spoken of the merchants and inhabitants of Jerusalem (see ver. 11—13, and compare Ezek. vii. 19).

But the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy.] God's vengeance is frequently compared to fire; see Nahum i. 6. This shall consume the land and its inhabitants for their heinous offences, and chiefly for their idolatry; because that sin doth peculiarly entrench upon his honour, which is incomunicable to others, whereupon he is called a jealous God; Exod. xx. 5, xxxiv. 14.

CHAPTER II.

1 Gather yourselves together, yea, gather together, O nation not desired;
CHAPTER II.

Lorp come upon you, before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you.

3 Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.

4 ¶ For Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod at the noon-day, and Ekron shall be rooted up.

5 Woe unto the inhabitants of the sea-coasts, the nation of the Cherethites! the word of the Lord is against you: O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.

6 And the sea-coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

7 And the coast shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah: they shall feed thereon: in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening: for the Lord their God shall visit them, and turn away their captivity.

8 ¶ I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border.

9 Therefore as I live, saith the Lord of hosts; the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and saltpits, and a perpetual desolation: the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them.

10 This shall they have for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the Lord of hosts.

11 The Lord will be terrible unto them: for cities of Gaza, Ashkelon, &c. were places for wild Arabs, or other wandering people to pitch their tents, and feed their flocks: so they shall hereafter become the settled habitations of the Jews (compare Isa. xxv. 10).

For [or, when] the Lord—shall visit them, and turn away their captivity. What is promised in this verse, was partly fulfilled after their return from Babylon, and may hereafter receive a further completion (see Obad. ver. 19, and note there).

Ver. 8. I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of Ammon. These countries were destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar about five years after the destruction of Jerusalem (see the argument to Jer. xlviii.). They are threatened with destruction, both here and Jer. xlviii. 17, xlix. 1, and Ezek. xxv. 8, 9, for their insulting over the Jews in their calamities. Magnified themselves against their border. Have invaded the territories of the Jews, when they were carried captive (see Jer. xxxix. 1), and used the inhabitants with great cruelty, as they had done in former times (see Amos i. 13).

Ver. 9. Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah. Proverbial expressions of extreme desolation. As descendants of the Philistines (see note Deut. xxiii. 29, 30, Isa. xlix. 13, Jer. xlix. 18, l. 40). A perpetual desolation. Never more to be possessed by its former inhabitants. The residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them. Judas Maccabaeus and his brethren subdued the Ammonites, as appears from 1 Macc. v. 6. But this and the seventh verse will receive their utmost completion at the general restoration of the Jewish nation: those that then escape, and return from their several dispersions, are elsewhere called by the name of the residue and the remnant (compare ii. 13, and see note upon Mic. iv. 7).

Ver. 10. See Isa. xvi. 6, Jer. xlviii. 29. Ver. 11. See Mark xiii. 6. But this and the phrase may best be rendered Ezek. iii. 12 (see Noldius, p. 555). Men shall worship him everywhere, and not only in Jerusalem (compare Mal. i. 11, John iv. 21).
he will slay all the gods of the earth; and men shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.

12 ¶ Ye Ethiopians also, ye shall be slain by my sword.

13 And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry like a wilderness.

14 And flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the corpses and the bitterness shall lodge in the upper lintels of it; their voice shall sing in the windows; desolation shall be in the thresholds: for he shall uncover the cedar-work.

15 This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said in her heart, I am, and there is none beside me: how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie down in! every one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.

Ver. 14. Flocks shall lie down, &c.] See ver. 6. All the beasts of the nations.] The Chaldee interprets it, The several kinds of wild beasts: as if the Hebrew geom, nations, were to be understood of the several species of wild beasts, as the word is used of several sorts of caterpillars, Joel i. 6. In like manner the ams are called a people, Prov. xxx. 25.

Both the coromant and the bitter shall lodge in the upper lintels of it.] These birds frequent desolate and forsaken places, and shall take up their habitation in the ruined houses of that once populous city (compare Isa. xii. 21, xxxiv. 11, 14).

He shall uncover the cedar-work.] The fine carved work or ceilings made of cedar (see Jer. xxii. 14), shall be exposed to the injuries of the weather, and so quickly come to ruin.

Ver. 15. This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly.] Its inhabitants indulged themselves in their ease and pleasures, and they arrived at that degree of presumption, as to fancy that no strength or power could bring them down from their height, or make them cease to be the capital city of the world. Babylon is charged with the same degree of pride and carnal security, Isa. xlvii. 8.

Shall hiss, and wag his hand.] See Nah. iii. 19.

CHAPTER III.

1 Woe to her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city!

2 She obeyed not the voice; she received not correction; she trusted not in the Lord; she drew not near to her God.

3 Her princes within her are roaring lions;

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—Jerusalem is severely reproved and threatened for her sins: yet the righteous are comforted with the hopes of a general conversion and restoration of the nation in God's due time.

Ver. 1. Woe to her that is filthy [or glibious] and polluted, to the oppressing city.] The city Jerusalem, which is defiled with the sins of luxury and cruelty (see ver. 3, 4).

Ver. 2. She obeyed not the voice: Of God's messengers, the prophets.

Ver. 3. Her princes within her are roaring lions:] Like so many beasts of prey, they devour the people by oppression and injustice (compare Ezek. xxii. 27, Mic. iii. 9—11, Hab. i. 8, Zech. x. 13).

They gnaw not the bones till the morrow.] They devour all presently, and leave not so much as the bones till the next day, as the most voracious creatures commonly do.

her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow.

4 Her prophets are light and treacherous persons: her priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law.

5 The just Lord is in the midst thereof; he... will not do iniquity: every morning doth he bring his judgment to light, he faileth not; but the unjust knoweth no shame.

6 I have cut off the nations: their towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; so their dwelling should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose early, and corrupted all their doings.

8 ¶ Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey:

consider, that he is just and holy, who will neither do iniquity, nor suffer it, without calling the offender to account.

Every morning doth he bring his judgment to light, he faileth not: He doth not fail to give us every day fresh evidences of his justice, though the wicked continue hardened in their sins, and are grown past shame (see Jer. vi. 13, Mic. ii. 6). The expression, "every morning," alludes to the custom of administering justice in the morning (see Ps. i. 8, Jer. xxxi. 12).

Ver. 6.] I have executed my vengeance upon that great city Nineveh (xxii. 13), and have brought my judgments nearer to you, by giving you up your brethren of the ten tribes into the hands of Shalmaneser, who hath put an end to that kingdom, and hath carried his inhabitants captives into a strange land (see 2 Kings xviii. 6).

Ver. 7. Surely thou wilt fear me.] God is introduced as speaking after the manner of men, and expecting what effect such proceedings might in reason have produced (compare Isa. v. 4, Jer. viii. 6). In this sense we may most probably understand that expression of Isaiah (lxxxiii. 8), "He said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie; so he was their Saviour:" i.e. God might justly conclude, that after such experience of his goodness, they would not prove false or treacherous to him.

Ver. 8. Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey:] The connotation of this verse with what went before would better appear, if we translate the particle after, nevertheless; as it plainly signifies Jer. v. 2, Mic. v. 3, and in other places. Notwithstanding these provocations, saith God, I exhort the godly among you to expect the fulfilling of the promises I have made of restoring the Jewish nation to my wonted favour, in the latter ages of the world; in order to which great crisis, I will execute remarkable judgments upon the unbelievers and disobedient (see note upon Mic. v. 5).

My determination is to gather the nations.] This may perhaps be meant of the same general summons which Joel speaks of, when the nations shall be gathered "into the valley of Jehoshaphat" (see Joel iii. 2, 12, and notes there).

[for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

9 For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent.

10 From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.

11 In that day shalt thou be ashamed for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed for all the earth shall be devoured.

For all the earth shall be devoured:] The tender regard I have for my honour, which hath particularly been injured by that idolatry which is spread over the world, will provoke me to execute my vengeance upon the whole earth (see i. 18).

Ver. 9. For then will I turn to the people a pure language.] Or, "I will restore to the people a pure language:" i.e. I will turn them from their idolatry and other wickedness (see ver. 13), to glorify me "with one mind, and one mouth." The same thing is expressed by "speaking the language of Canaan," Isa. xix. 18. This is a blessing reserved for the latter age, after the coming of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles, when there shall be one Lord, and his name one," Zech. xiv. 9.

To serve him with one consent.] The Hebrew reads, "With one shoulder." The metaphor is taken from beasts drawing together under one yoke; or men setting their shoulders together to carry the same burden.

Ver. 10.] The Jews who are dispersed into the most distant countries, such as was Ethiopia, which lay beyond Egypt, shall come into the Christian church, and make their religious acknowledgments there. The expression, "From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," may be translated, "From the borders of the rivers of Ethiopia," both here and Isa. viii. 1, where the same phrase occurs; the word in the Hebrew signifying indifferently the hither, or further side of a river. Ethiopia is described in both places as lying among the rivers, which may probably be understood of the several sluices and channels which the inhabitants are forced to keep open, thereby to prevent the Nile from overflowing their own country, or Egypt (see Dr. Heylin's Geography, in Ethiopia).

"The daughter of my dispersed," is the same with my dispersed, as the "daughter of Zion" is equivalent to Zion (see the note upon Jer. iv. 31). The phrase of bringing an offering, is taken from the sacrifices and oblations brought to the temple; and is in other places of the prophets applied to the saints that are in the Christian church (see Isa. xviii. 7, 1x. 6, 7, 9, Mal. 1. 11).

Ver. 11. Shalt thou not be ashamed for all thy doings?] Or, "Shall thou not be put to shame for all thy doings" (compare ver. 19). Thou shalt not be made a public example by such remarkable judgments (see ver. 15), which have formerly made thee a reproach among the heathen (see Amos iii. 2, Mic. vi. 16, and notes there).

I will take away out of the midst of thee them that rejoice in thy pride.] I will purge out of thee those hypocrites who continued in their sins, and relied upon their outward privileges, such as being of the stock of Abraham, or having the temple of the Lord placed among them, as if these would secure them against me: for then I will take away out of the midst of thee them that rejoice in thy pride, and thou shalt no more be haughty because of my holy mountain.

12 I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord.

13 The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid.

14 ¶ Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem.

15 The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy: the king of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more.

16 In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, from guilt or punishment; and thereupon despised the gentiles as not worthy of the same favours with themselves (see notes upon Mic. iii. 11).

Ver. 12. I will also leave— an afflicted and poor people. — Or, "A meek and poor people:" the blessings of the gospel are peculiarly promised to the poor (see Isa. xi. 4, xiv. 32, lxvi. 1, Zech. xi. 11). Christ and his apostles apply these promises to those that were converted by their preaching, Matt. v. 3, xi. 5, 1 Cor. i. 26, 27, James ii. 5, which texts are meant of such as are ended with a true spirit of poverty, such as consists in a lowliness of mind, contempt of the world, and a resigned will. Afflictions are very useful to produce such a temper of mind, and therefore are often the lot of true disciples (see Acts. xiv. 22, Heb. xii. 7, 1 Pet. i. 7). By the afflicted may be meant those that "come out of great tribulation" (see Ezek. xxxviii. 8, and the note upon Isa. iv. 2).

Ver. 13. The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity. — The "remnant of Israel" is explained in the note upon Mic. iv. 7. These shall be holy; the "rebels being purged out of them" (Ezek. xx. 38), as Jerusalem itself shall then be holy (compare Isa. xxxviii. 8, lx. 21, Joel iii. 17, 21, Zech. xiv. 21, and see notes there).

For [or, therefore] they shall feed and lie down. — The great shepherd the Messiah shall both feed and protect them (compare Ezek. xxxiv. 28, Mic. iv. 4, v. 4, vii. 1).

Ver. 14. These hymns of joy properly belong to the times of the gospel, and especially to the triumphant state of the church (compare Isa. xxii. 6, liv. 1, Zech. ii. 10, xi. 9).

Ver. 15. The Lord— hath cast out thine enemy. — God hath removed thine enemies, who were the instruments of his vengeance.

The Lord, is in the midst of thee. — He gives manifest tokens of his presence in thee, and protection over thee (compare ver. 5, 17, Isa. iv. 5, 6, Rev. vii. 15, xxi. 3).

Thou shalt not see evil any more. — For all thine enemies shall be subdued (see the former part of the verse, and compare Isa. xxv. 10, lii. 22, Joel. iii. 17, Rev. xx. 4).

Ver. 16. Let not thine hands be slack. — Or weak, as the word is rendered in the parallel text, Isa. xxxv. 3. The prophet "comforts the feeble-minded," those whose spirits were sunk under their former afflictions; and exhorts them to perform their duty with cheerfulness and diligence, as being assured of God's assistance and protection (compare Heb. xii. 12).

Ver. 17. He will take pleasure in doing thee good (compare Deut. xxx. 9, Isa. lxix. 5, lxv. 19, Jer. xxxii. 41). He will rest, or take satisfaction in continuing his favour towards thee (compare Hos. iv. 4).

Ver. 18. I will assemble those Israelites who are dispersed in their several captivities, both of Babylon and those of following times, who mourn for the loss of the public assemblies (compare Lam. ii. 6), and were grieved at the reproaches where-with their enemies upbraided them, as if they were utterly forsaken of God (compare Ps. xiii. 3).

Ver. 19. Save her that halteth. — See Mic. iv. 6, 7. I will get them praise and fame in every land! — God will give visible tokens of his care over them, in gathering them from their several dispersions over the world, and bringing them back into their own country (see Ezek. xxxviii. 8, 12, and the following verse).

Ver. 20. At that time will I bring you again. — I will gather you from your several dispersions, in order to bring you back into your own land (compare Isa. xi. 12, xxvii. 12, lvi. 8, Ezek. xxviii. 25, xxxiv. 13, Amos ix. 14).

For I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth. — I will make you the subject of men's praise and admiration, who shall be induced to glorify God, when they shall see the wonderful works he hath wrought for you, in restoring you from your several dispersions, and giving you a joyful meeting together.
Of what family this prophet was, he hath given us no intimation: but the time when he prophesied he has distinctly noted, viz. in the sixth year of Darius Hystaspes. The occasion of this prophecy was the stop that was put to the building of the temple, after the foundation had been laid, according to the commandment of Cyrus, about seventeen years before.

CHAPTER I.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet reproveth the people's delays in rebuilding the temple, and tells them, this their neglect was the cause they prospered no better: he encourageth them to set about it, and promiseth God's assistance in it.

Ver. 1. In the second year of Darius: Compare Ezra iv. 24, v. 12. This is the same Darius who is called in the heathen writers Darius Hystaspes; as shall be proved in the note upon ii. 3, and Zech i. 12.

Ver. 2. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built.

Ver. 3. Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, Ver. 4. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cobbled houses, and this house lie waste?

5 Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts: Consider your ways.

6 Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes.

7 Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Consider your ways.

8 Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord.

9 Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to nothing. They plantedargc, and, lo, they have nothing:

Ver. 5. Consider your ways. Ye have sown much, and bring in little;) Consider both your ingratitude in thus neglecting to restore my house and worship, and what you have got by these your dealings, viz. how none of your undertakings thrive, or are successful: nor do you enjoy the fruits of your labours (see Mic. vi. 15, compare Ezek. viii. 10).

He that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes.] Whatever gains he makes, they are followed by such losses, as leave him no richer than he was before: or provisions are so dear (see ver. 11), that men can but just live by their labour.

Ver. 6. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood.] Go to any of the forests upon the mountains (see Neh. ii. 8), and cut down timber to carry on the building. They entered upon the work before they had any decree from Darius to forward the work (see Ezra v. 2, 3). It is probable, that afterward they had leave to fetch cedar from mount Lebanon (see Ezra iii. 7).

Vol. III.—98
HAGGAI.

CHAPTER II.

1 In the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the Lord by the prophet Haggai, saying,

2 Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who is among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?

CHAP. II.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet encourages the builders by a promise, that the glory of the second temple should be greater than that of the first; and that in the following year God would bless them with a fruitful harvest. In the conclusion he foretells the setting up the kingdom of Christ, under the name of Zerubbabel.

Ver. 3.] When the foundation of the house was laid in the second year of Cyrus, many of the ancient men that had seen the first house, wept to see how much the second temple would fall short of the glory of the first (Ezra iii. 12). The second year of Cyrus was fifty-three years after the destruction of the first temple; so the oldest men among those that returned home might very well remember how glorious that was. The prophecy was uttered fifteen years after the foundations of the second temple were laid; so there might some still survive that saw the first. This is an evident proof, that the Darius mentioned in this prophecy must be Darius Hystaspes: for they that suppose Darius Nothus to be here meant, must allow the distance of one hundred and sixty-six years between the destruction of the first temple and the time of this prophecy: and it cannot be the voice of the Lord their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the Lord their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the Lord.

4 Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts:

5 According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt; so my spirit remained with you; ye fear ye not.

6 For thus saith the Lord of hosts; Yet once it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the dry land; imagined, that any number of men could be capable of comparing the difference between the two temples at that distance of time: see this farther proved in the note upon Zech. i. 12.

Ver. 5.] I will fulfill those promises I made with you, when I delivered you out of Egypt; that, upon your obedience, I would not leave you, nor forsake you, but guide and prosper you in all your undertakings (see Neh. ix. 20, Isa. lxxiii. 11).

Ver. 6. Yet once, it is a little while.] Or, "Once more," as the LXX. render it, whom St. Paul follows, Heb. xii. 26. The phrase implies such an alteration as shall not give way to any further change, as the apostle there expounds it. The space of time from this prophecy to the coming of the Messiah may be called "a little while," in comparison of the several ages elapsed since the first promise of a Redeemer. A learned prelate, in his excellent Defence of Christianity from the ancient Prophecies (p. 88), translates the words to this sense: "After one kingdom [viz. the Grecian, which succeeded the Persian monarchy, at this time subsisting] it is but a little while; and [or, after that] I will shake all nations," &c. I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the dry land.] Great commotions and changes in the world are expressed by shaking the heavens and the earth (see Ezek. xxv. 15, xxxviii. 19, Joel iii.)
7 And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts.
8 And the silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts.
9 The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts; and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts.
10 ¶ In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying,
11 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,
12 If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No.
13 Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

16. These expressions may denote here the great commotions that should be in the Roman empire (see the last note), from the death of Julius Caesar till near the birth of Christ: or it may in general signify the introducing such a kingdom or religion, of which the Messiah is to be the head; which shall in the end "break in pieces," and destroy all the other dominions of the world (see the notes upon ver. 21, 22). Ver. 7. The desire of all nations shall come: He shall come to this house, that shall answer the wish and desires of mankind, by supplying all those defects that hindered them in the performance of their duty. Such a guide and director, as the wisest men among the heathens wished for, and whose coming was the hope of Israel and completion of all the promises made to their fathers: Acts xxvi. 6, xxvii. 20, see Gen. xii. 8, xlix. 10, where the old translations read the latter part of the verse to this sense: "His (or, to him) shall be the expectation of the people," Mal. iii. 1.

I will fill this house with glory. Though it wants the "cloud of glory" overshadowing the mercy-seat, which was a symbol of the divine presence peculiar to Solomon's temple (see Ps. lxxx. 1), yet I will honour this second temple with a much greater glory; viz. the presence of the Messiah, in whom shall "dwell all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Col. ii. 9, where he shall publish his saving doctrine to the world (see Luke xix. 47, xx. 1, xxi. 38, John xviii. 20).

Ver. 8.] Solomon's temple was more richly adorned with silver and gold than this; and I, that am the Lord of all the world, could easily command the riches of it, and bring them together, for beautifying this my house, if I took delight in richness of ornaments.

Ver. 9.] The glory of this second temple shall exceed that of the former, not in riches or costly ornaments, but in this respect, that there the "Prince of peace" shall make his appearance, and the "gospel of peace" shall be preached and published (see Isa. ix. 6, Mic. v. 5, Ephi. ii. 14). The modern Jews expect a third temple, in which this prophecy will be verified, whereas the prophet plainly speaks of the same temple which they then saw, and was in their eyes as nothing, in comparison of the former. The ancient Jews speak of the temple, from the time of Zerubbabel to its destruction under Vespassian, as one and the same temple; particularly...
19 Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree, bath not brought forth: from this day will I bless you.

20 ¶ And again the word of the Lord came unto Haggai in the four-and-twentieth day of the month, saying,

21 Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth;

22 And I will overthrow the throne of kings, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother.

23 In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the Lord, and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the Lord of hosts.

The book of the prophet Zechariah.

Preface.

Zechariah was the son of Barachiah, and the grandson of Iddo: he is called the son of Iddo, Ezra v. 1, vi. 14, the grandson being often called the son in the scriptures; as hath been observed upon Dan. v. 2. He was contemporary with Haggai, and prophesied in the second year of Darius Hystaspes (see the note upon Hag. ii. 3, and upon Zech. i. 10). There is an Iddo mentioned Neh. xii. 4, among those Levites that came from Babylon with Zerubbabel; from whence Dr. Alix infers, that the prophet Zechariah his grandson must have prophesied some considerable time after the first return from the captivity, and therefore would understand the Darius here mentioned to be Darius Nothus. This argument is altogether inconclusive; for if Iddo was advanced in years when he returned, he might have a grandson thirty years of age in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, which was sixteen or seventeen after the first of Cyrus. And it appears that Zechariah was a young man when he saw the vision related at the beginning of this prophecy (see ii. 4). Beside, there is no necessity of supposing the Iddo that was grandfather of Zechariah to be the same person that is mentioned in Nehemiah. In the books of Ezra and Nehemiah there is mention of two Ezras (compare Ezra vii. 1, with Neh. xii. 1), of two Nehemias (compare Neh. i. 1, with iii. 16), and there is a Daniel mentioned Ezra viii. 16, a distinct person from the famous prophet of that name: and it may as well be supposed that there were two Iddos.

The design of the first part of this prophecy is the same with that of Haggai, viz. to encourage the Jews to go on with rebuilding of the temple, by giving them assurance of God's assistance and protection; from whence he proceeds to foretell the glory of the Christian church, the true temple or house of God, under its great high-priest and governor Christ Jesus, of whom Ze-
CHAPTER I.

1 In the eighth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

2 The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers:

3 Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you, saith the Lord of hosts.

4 Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the Lord.

5 Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever?

6 But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not take hold of your fathers? and they returned to their captivity.

CHAPTER I.

ARGUMENT.—After an exhortation to repentance, the prophet relates two visions shown to him, implying the restoration of the Jewish state, and security from their enemies, while they were rebuilding the temple.

Ver. 1. Second year of Darius.] See the Preface.

Ver. 2.] Though God hath been justly displeased with your fathers, and punished them and their children with seventy years' captivity, yet now he declares himself willing to be reconciled to you upon your repentance.

Ver. 4.] Such exhortation the former prophets gave your forfathers, particularly Jeremiah, whose words are here referred to (see Jer. xxv. 5, xxxv. 15). Do not imitate them in their obstinacy.

Ver. 5, 6.] Though the prophets, and those to whom they delivered their message, are dead, yet the commandments delivered by their ministry still continue in full force; which appears by the judgments which came upon your fathers for transgressing them, as they themselves could not but acknowledge. And the same punishments will overtake you, if ye continue disobedient.

Ver. 6. Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us.] Your fathers were forced to acknowledge with sorrow, that God had exactly fulfilled all his threatenings denounced against them (see Lam. ii. 17).

Ver. 7. The eleventh month, which is the month Sebat.] This is the Chaldee name of the eleventh month; as Nisan, Elul, Chisleu, Tebeth, and Adar, are the names of other months mentioned in the books written after the captivity. The Jews distinguish their months only by the order of their succession, as the first, second, &c. So that if the books of and said, Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.

7 Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

8 I saw by night, and behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there red horses, speckled, and white.

9 Then said I, O my lord, what are these? And the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be.

10 And the man that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth.

11 And they answered the angel of the Lord that stood among the myrtle trees, and said, Kings were writ by Jeremiah, as some suppose, the Chaldee names of the months which occur in Kings vi. 2, 8, were added afterward by Ezra.

Ver. 8. A man riding upon a red horse.] A red horse is an emblem of war and bloodshed (see Rev. v. 4). The man, or angel (ver. 11), riding upon him, denotes the Logos, or Son of God, appearing as "the captain of God's hosts," or armies (see Josh. v. 13, 14, and notes upon ver. 12, 13, 20).

He stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom.] As if he and his companions were refreshing themselves in a shady valley, after the fatigues of war. The vision denotes the peace which ensued after Darius had executed God's vengeance upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and made himself master of their city by the stratagem of Zopyrus (compare ver. 11, and see Dr. Prideaux, under the fourth, fifth, and sixth years of Darius.)

Behold behind him were there red horses, speckled, and white.] These may denote the various successes of Darius's arms during his reign, which were sometimes fortunate, at other times not so.

Ver. 9. The angel that talked with me?] The angel that made known this night vision to me: so an angel is said to "speak with Jacob in a dream," Gen. xxxi. 11.

Ver. 10. The man that stood among the myrtle trees.] This was an angel of an order superior to him that was mentioned ver. 9, who prevents that angel, and takes upon him to return an answer to the prophet's question; or else sends his answer to Zechariah by that angel mentioned ver. 9, as Christ sent his Revelation to St. John "by an angel," Rev. i. 1.

These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth.] To these angels he hath entrusted the administration of the affairs of the Persian empire (see vi. 10).
We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.

12 ¶ Then the angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these three score and ten years?

13 And the Lord answered the angel that talked with me with good words and comfortable words.

14 So the angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy.

Ver. 11. They answered the angel of the Lord that stood among the myrtle trees: [They answer this man, (ver. 8), or angel, as if he were their superior and commander (see ver. 10); he is distinguished from the other "angel of the Lord," ver. 12, by the circumstance of his "standing among the myrtle trees." Necessary, with a view to the prophecy that follows, for distinguishing the angel of the Lord (compare Dan. viii. 17)] Now all the enemies of the Persian empire in general, and of all the Jews in particular (see ver. 9), are quiet; so this seems a proper time for setting forward the building of the temple, which hath been so long interrupted.

Ver. 12. Then the angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts: } The angel mentioned ver. 9, makes his supplication to the superior angel, ver. 10, who was indeed the Logos, or Son of God, being called by the name of Jehovah, here and ver. 13, 20 (compare iii. 1, 2, xii. 8, 10).

How long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah? [Cyprus only gave orders for the rebuilding of the temple (Ezra i. 3, vi. 3), so a great part of the city lay in ruins till Nehemiah procured an order from Artaxerxes for rebuilding it (see Neh. i. 7, ii. 3, 8, 17, vii. 4). The Jews, after the captivity, repaired to the several cities where their inheritance lay (Ezra ii. 69), but had not ability to rebuild or fortify them in a regular manner.

Against which thou hast had indignation these three score and ten years? [There are three ways of computing the seventy years' captivity taken notice of in scripture. The first is, beginning from the fourth year of Jehoiakim to the first of Cyrus; this is Jeremiah's account, Jer. xxv. 1, 11, which Daniel follows, Dan. ix. 2. Another may be computed from the besieging of Jerusalem, in the ninth year of Zedekiah, and in the tenth month, for which a solemn fast was kept by the Jews (compare 2 Kings xxv. 1, with Zeck. viii. 19), this computation ends in the second year of Darius, which is the reckoning Zechariah here follows. Or, lastly, if we compute the beginning of the seventy years from the destruction of Jerusalem and the first temple, which came to pass in the eleventh year of the same reign (ibid. ver. 2), they will be accomplished in the fourth year of Darius; and this computation agrees with what is said below, vii. I, 5. The last two ways of reckoning the seventy years may be reduced to one, only by supposing, that the prophet in this verse sets down a complete number for an incomplete, and calls that space of time seventy years, which wanted very little of it; a way of speaking, of which several instances may be produced.

Ver. 13.] The Lord answered: } "The Lord of hosts" mentioned in the foregoing verse.

Ver. 14. I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy.] Or, "I am zealous for Jerusalem with great zeal;" so for the word kinnah often signifies. See Isa. ix. 7, xxxvi. 11, lix. 15, where the translators read, "Their envy at the people;" but the words might be better rendered, "Thy zeal for the people." God here tells the prophet by his angel, that he has a great concern for the welfare of his people, and his spirit will be with her after her affliction.

Ver. 15. I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease;] Who have not yet felt the severity of my judgments, but they shall not escape unpunished. This may be understood of the Babylonians, Samaritans, and other neighbours of the Jews, who had not been made such examples of God's severity, as the Jews were (compare Jer. xxv. 29).

For I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward [or, increased] the affliction.] I made the Babylonians instruments of my vengeance upon the Jews, but they exceeded their commission, and acted as they were prompted by their own ambition and cruelty (compare Isa. xlvii. 6, and see note there). The former part of the verse may be thus translated: "For I was but for a little time displeased; I punished them with a seventy years' captivity: a short punishment in comparison of the many years that they had offended me; but these their many enemies have brought new troubles upon them after their return home, and hindered them from rebuilding their temple (see Ezra iv. 1, 4, &c.).

Ver. 16. I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies:] I am returned to dwell in Jerusalem, and will remove all former marks of my displeasure, and will cause the temple to be rebuilt in it for the place of my residence (see ii. 10), which I had for some time forsaken.

A line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem.] In order to rebuild the streets and walls of it (see ii. 2).

Ver. 17. My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad.] The lesser cities shall likewise be multiplied, and increased in inhabitants.

The Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem.] The Lord shall comfort Zion by showing his wonted kindness to her after her affliction (compare Isa. ii. 3), and making Jerusalem the place of his residence (see ver. 16).

Ver. 18.] Horns often signify the power and strength of princes or people; the metaphor being taken from those cattle whose strength lies in their horns. The four horns may denote the Samaritans, the Aravians, the Ammonites, and the Philistines, who were the great hindrances of the Jews rebuilding the temple (see Neh. iv. 7), or else they may signify in general those their enemies, among whom they were dispersed to the four winds of heaven (ii. 6).

Ver. 19.] These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel.] Israel being mentioned distinctly me, What be these? And he answered me, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem.

20 And the Lord shewed me four carpenters.

21 Then said I, What come these to do? And from Judah, means those of the ten tribes, which were carried away into Babylon with the tribe of Judah, and returned with them (see note upon viii. 13).

CHAPTER II.

ARGUMENT.—The flourishing state of Jerusalem is foretold, and the Jews still remaining at Babylon are warned to leave it, that they may not be involved in the calamities which are coming upon it.

Ver. 1. A man with a measuring line in his hand.] An angel in human appearance: see ver. 3. This angel appeared with a measuring line in his hand, to take the proportions of the city, in order to the re-building it, as architects used to do (see Ezek. xi. 3).

Ver. 3. The angel that talked with me:] See i. 1. And another angel went out:] Or, "The other angel:" i.e., the angel 3 with the measuring line in his hand.

Ver. 4. And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man:] The second angel spoke to the former, to inform him farther concerning the flourishing state of Jerusalem. Zerubbabel might probably be a young man when he was first honoured with the gift of prophecy, as Jeremiah and Daniel were (see Jer. i. Dan. i. 17).

Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle:] The inhabitants of Jerusalem will multiply so fast, that the houses within the walls will not be able to contain them, and their cattle will increase in proportion (see Jer. xxxi. 27). Under the captivity the land was made a desolation "without man or heart" (Jer. xxxiii. 12); now the contrary blessing is promised.

Ver. 5.] Its inhabitants may safely live without the walls of the city (ver. 4), for I the Lord will defend it by my angels, as so many flames of fire surrounding it (Ps. cvi. 4), as I did Elisha against his enemies (2 Kings vi. 17). And my especial presence shall be its protection, of which the "cloud of glory" in the first temple was a figure. This promise will receive its utmost completion in that New he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which lifted up their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it.

Ver. 20. The Lord [see ver. 18] shewed me four carpenters.] Or, smiths, according to the number of the horns. These were to repair the destructions which the horns had made.

JERUSALEM DESCRIBED Rev. xxi. 10, where the "glory of God and the Lamb" are said to be "the light thereof," ver. 11, 23 (compare Isa. lx. 19). Ver. 6. Come forth, and flee from the land of the north:] Chaldea, and Babylon the principal city of it, are called by that name, because they lay northward of Judea (see Jer. i. 14, iv. 6, vi. 1). The Jews who still remained in Babylon and the country thereabout, are exhorted to return with all speed from thence, for a reason assigned, ver. 9. For I have spread you abroad [or, scattered you] as the four winds:] Compare Ezek. xvii. 21. As I have scattered you and your brethren of the ten tribes all the world over, so in due time I will gather you from your several dispersions, of which your present restoration from Babylon shall be an earnest.

Ver. 7.] The daughter of Babylon is the same with Babylon (see Ps. cxxxvii. 8, and note upon Jer. iv. 31).

Ver. 8. After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you:] After I have given you the promise of restoring Jerusalem to such a glorious state (see the Chaldee explains it), I, the prophet Zerubbabel, am sent to execute God's judgments upon the Chaldeans, who spoiled you of all your wealth and ornaments.

He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye.] God is very sensible of every injury offered to his people (compare Ps. cv. 15): it is like hurting the eye, which is the most tender and sensible part of the body (see Ps. xvii. 8). And though he made the Babylonians instruments of his vengeance, yet now he will call them to account for exceeding their commission (see note upon i. 15).

Ver. 9. I will shake mine hand upon [or, over] them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants:] The words are a continuation of God's message, who proceeds to speak thus to the Jews by Zerubbabel: I will hold my rod over the Babylonians (compare 11 And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee.

Isa. xi. 15, xix. 10, and I will deliver their city into the hand of the Persians, who were formerly their servants (see note upon Isa. xxvii. 6), who shall become masters of its wealth. This threatening was fulfilled when Darius took Babylon after a siege of twelve months, beat down its walls, and put three thousand of the principal citizens to death (see Dr. Prideaux, under the fifth and sixth years of Darius).

Ver. 12. Thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me.] These words are to be understood as spoken by the prophet himself; when this judgment is executed upon the Chaldeans, it will be an undoubtedly sign and proof of the truth of my mission (compare Ezek. xxxiii. 38).

Ver. 10. Here God speaks again to his people, and saith, he will give them manifest tokens of his presence among them (see note upon ver. 5, and compare Lev. xxvi. 12, Ezek. xxxvii. 27).

Ver. 11. Many nations shall be joined to the Lord.] The church shall be enlarged by the accession of the gentiles to it; and shall receive a further increase, when, upon the conversion of the Jews, the fulness of the gentiles shall be brought into it. This promise relates chiefly to the latter times (compare viii. 21—23).

CHAPTER III.

1 And he shewed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him.

2 And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?

3 Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, and stood before the angel.

4 And he answered and spake unto those that heaven:—a text alleged, both by ancient and modern writers, to prove, that a distinction of persons in the blessed Trinity was a doctrine delivered in the Old Testament, though but imperfectly. The words may be remedied in either of these ways:—1. The Lord hath rebuked thee, or rejected thy plea, having long ago chosen Jerusalem.

Ver. 3. Joshua was clothed with filthy garments.] Denoting the sins and pollutions of the people, of whom he was the representative (see ver. 2, 4). The sins particularly taken notice of, might be their "marrying with strangers," contrary to the law (see Ezra ix. 2, 11, Neh. xiii. 24), so the Chaldee understands it.

Ver. 4. Spake unto those that stood before him.] To the inferior angels that were in his retinue (compare ver. 5, 77. 1. 8—11, and see note upon Dan. x. 10). Unto him [i.e. Joshua] he said, I will clothe thee with change of raiment. In token of my pardoning the public and national sins of the Jews, and that I will restore them to a more prosperous condition, I have commanded the angels, my attendants, to clothe thee with new and clean raiment, an emblem of purity (Rev. xiv. 8), as well as of joyfulness and prosperity (see Eccles. ix. 8, Isa. lxi. 10). The word rendered in our English "change of raiment," the LXX. translate ἄναξιον "a garment down to the foot," meaning stood before him, saying, Take away the filthy garments from him. And unto him he said, Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment.

And I said, Let them set a fair mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments. And the angel of the Lord stood by.

And the angel of the Lord protested unto Joshua, saying,

7. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; if thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge, then thou shalt also judge my house, and shalt also keep my courts, and I will give thee places to walk among these that stand by.

8. Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men wondered at: for, behold, I will bring forth my servant the BRANCH.

9. For behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be seven eyes: because so many as see shall see, and they that are named among his eyes shall go up, and they which go down shall be exalted. The word mischief, charge, is often used in the book of Numbers, to denote the several offices and duties of the priests and Levites.

Among these that stand by.) Or, "Stand before me" (see iv. 14). Hereafter I will give thee a place in heaven among these angels my attendants. The priesthood under the Old Testament, and the even-gelical office of the New, is compared to the angelical office (see Mal. ii. 7, Rev. x. 20): so they that discharge this office well, shall have an eminent degree of glory in heaven, and be made equal to the angels themselves (see Matt. xix. 28, xxiv. 47, Luke xxii. 29, 30).

Ver. 8. Hear now, O Joshua] The angel directs his speech to Joshua and his assessors, or assistants in council, of whom Zerubbabel without question was one. The rabbins call these the heads of the captivity, and the men of the great synagogue: by whom they suppose the Jewish affairs, both ecclesiastical and civil, to have been settled after the captivity, and the canon of the Old Testament to have been completed. The angel bespeaks their attention to what follows, as containing matter of great importance.

They are men wondered at:) The margin reads, "Men of wonder." The word mitophel signifies not only a wonder, but likewise a sign, or a type. Thus Isaiah's "walking naked and barefoot was for a sign and wonder [or rather, a type or example] to Egypt and Ethiopia" (Isa. xx. 3); i.e. a sign or emblem that they should be carried away captive without any covering to their nakedness; so the word is used again, Isa. viii. 18. So when Ezekiel was commanded to "dig through the wall and carry out his goods in the twilight," xii. 7, he was therein a sign [mophel], ver. 11, 12, to the Jews, and to Zedekiah Vol. III. 99 hold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day.

day.] I will proclaim a free pardon of sins by the publishing of the gospel (see Jer. xxxii. 34), or the words may relate to the pardoning the Jews upon their general conversion (compare xiii. 1, Jer. 1. 20, Mic. vii. 15, 19). The following verse favours this exposition.

Ver. 10. In that day.] At that remarkable time, when I will forgive all your iniquities, ver. 9 (see the note upon xii. 3).

CHAPTER IV.

1 And the angel that talked with me came again, and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep.

2 And said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof:

3 And two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.

4 So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my lord?

5 Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

CHAP. IV.

ARGUMENT.—Under the figure of the golden candlestick and the two olive-trees, is represented the success of Zerubbabel and Joshua, in rebuilding and finishing the temple.

Ver. 1. The last vision was so pleasing to me, that it cast me into a deep sleep (compare Jer. xxxi. 26). And from which the angel that before had talked with me (ii. 3), awaked me, to discover to me the following vision.

Ver. 2. I have looked, and beheld a candlestick all of gold, &c.] This figured the temple service, and the whole polity of the Jewish constitution, which depended upon the restoration of the temple (see the note upon ver. 14).

And his seven lamps thereon.] According to the fashion of the golden candlestick in the temple (Exod. xxv. 37). As that candlestick figuratively signified the church, whose office it was to enlighten others (see Rev. i. 20): so the seven lamps mystically represented the seven spirits of God (Rev. iv. 5), i.e. the various dispensations of his providence over it (compare ver. 10 of this chapter).

Ver. 3.] Which did in a secret unperceivable manner convey oil for supplying the lamps (see ver. 6).

Ver. 5. Knowest thou not what these be?] The words may be rendered, both here and ver. 13, "Knowest thou what these be?" (see the note upon Jer. xxxviii. 15, and Noldius's Concord. p. 259).

Ver. 6.] Zerubbabel and Joshua, with the Jews under their conduct, shall finish the temple, and reestablish the Jewish state, not by force of arms, or 10 In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig tree.

Shall ye call every man [to] his neighbour? Men shall call or discourse with their neighbours in a friendly and sociable manner, as they are sitting at ease under the shadow of their vines and fig-trees. A proverbial expression, denoting peace and plenty; compare Mic. iv. 4, where the words the promise of a universal peace (see the notes there, and upon Isa. ii. 4).

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.

7 Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headache thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.

8 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

9 The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you.

10 For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with those of human power, but by the secret assistances of my providence; just as the lamps are supplied with oil, in a secret and invisible manner (see ver. 12, 14).

Ver. 7. Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain.] "Removing mountains," and "levelling them into plains," are proverbial expressions, to denote the overcoming the greatest difficulties, and removing all obstacles that lie in our way (see Isa. xi. 4, Matt. xxi. 21): so the angels be encouraged Zerubbabel to go on with his undertaking, assuring him that nothing shall be able to withstand him.

And he shall bring forth the headstone, &c.] He shall put the top or finishing stone upon the walls of the temple, which action the standers-by shall accompany with their wishes and prayers, that God's grace and favour may protect that holy place, so happily finished, and with such joyful acclamations as they used at laying its foundations (see Ezra iii. 10, 11). The chief, or principal, stone, mentioned iii. 9, denoted the Messias, called the Branch, ver. 8, and the words before us mystically represent the same person: viz. that God shall bring forth, or bring him into the world, as the top or head-stone, the last and finishing ornament and perfection (expressed by Grace, grace, i.e. the chief grace) of the church, God's spiritual house (Eph. ii. 21). To this sense the Chaldee paraphrase expounds the words, "His Messias shall come forth, who was named from all eternity, and shall obtain the empire of all the kingdoms of the earth:" and St. Jerome tells us upon the place, that the ancient Jews explained it so.

Ver. 9.] He shall have the happiness of seeing the great work which he had begun, finished and brought to perfection (Ezra iii. 10, vi. 15). See Zech. ii. 9.
seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth.

Ver. 11. Then answered I, and said unto him, The verb anath is not only used of answering to a question, but likewise signifies to begin or continue to discourse (see Job iii. 2), and so the word answer is used, Matt. xi. 25.

Ver. 12. What be these two olive branches? Young olives (see ver. 3).

Which through the two golden pipes, &c. There were two greater pipes in the candlestick through which the oil was conveyed into the five lesser (see ver. 3).

Ver. 14. These are the two anointed ones, that stand by [or, before] the Lord! These signify the kingdom and the priesthood, as they are exercised at present by Zerubbabel and Joshua (and belong to their respective families), who having finished the temple, and restored the public worship of God, will constantly attend upon his service, and take care that it be duly performed there. The candlestick represented the Jewish church and temple (ver. 2), and these two, Zerubbabel and Joshua, supply the place of the two olive-trees, that fed it with oil and kept it bright and burning. To stand before the Lord for so the words should be rendered, as they are vi. 5) and to minister to him, are the same (see Deut. x. 8, 1 Kings xvii. 1).
and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name; and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof.

5 ¶ Then the angel that talked with me went forth, and said unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and see what is this that goeth forth.

6 And I said, What is it? And he said, This is an ephah that goeth forth. He said moreover, This is their resemblance through all the earth.

7 And, behold, there was lifted up a talent of lead: and this is a woman that sitteth in the midst of the ephah.

(see Lev. xiv. 45). The oracle at Delphi denounced a like punishment against perjury, as it is recorded by Herodotus, lib. iii.

—καταπατησεν, τινὰ πέπεσεν
Σωφρόνησεν λοις γυναι καὶ εὐνοοῦσεν.

"The curse shall swiftly enter, and shall bring
The man himself, and all his house to ruin."

Ver. 5. Then the angel that talked with me [see iv. 1, vocal forth]. Or, "went on." The verb yatast signifies to go, to go on, or forward: so it is used 2 Chron. xxi. 19, Jer. xxv. 32, and so it may signify at the end of this verse, and in the next, where it occurs again.

Ver. 6. This is an ephah. Dr. Wells observes, that this vessel or barrel was made in the shape of an ephah: yet it was of a much bigger size, large enough to contain a woman in it; which was the reason Zechariah did not know what it was. An ephah contained about the quantity of our bushel, and being the measure of dry things, denotes the Jews' unjust dealings in buying and selling (see Amos viii. 5).

This is their resemblance through all the earth. Or, "through all the land." By this you may make an estimate of their unjust dealings all the land over (compare ver. 3, 4). The LXX. give a very easy sense of the words: "This is their iniquity throughout all the land," changing only one letter in the original text, and reading onam for onam.

Ver. 7. There was lifted up a talent of lead. To denote the weight or severity of the judgments here threatened.

And this is a woman that sitteth in the midst of the ephah. What thou seest besides, is a woman in the midst of, or within, the ephah; as Noldius interprets it, Concordant. p. 83. The Hebrew reads one woman, but the adjective one is sometimes equivalent to the article an, or the, commonly placed before substantives (see Dan. viii. 3, x. 5).

Ver. 8. And he said, This is wickedness. Public states or societies are oftentimes represented by women, and as the mothers of their people or inhabitants, as we see in the ancient coins. By the same analogy corrupt societies are figuratively expressed by harlots, and women of lewd characters; such are Ahola, and Aholibah, described Ezek. xxii.; so here the corrupt state of the Jews is set forth by a wicked woman.

8 And he said, This is wickedness. And he cast it into the midst of the ephah; and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof.

9 Then lifted I up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came out two women, and the wind went in their wings: for they had wings like the wings of a stork: and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven.

10 Then tribes to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah?

11 And he said unto me, To build it an house in the land of Shinar: and it shall be established, and set there upon her own base.

And he cast it into the midst of the ephah [or, within the ephah, see ver. 7] and he cast the weight of lead on the mouth thereof. To signify that when a people have filled up the measure of their iniquity they sink under the weight of their sins, and cannot escape the judgment of God.

Ver. 9. I looked, and, behold, there came out [or appeared] two women, &c. These may probably signify the empires of Assyria and Babylon. Empires and kingdoms are commonly described as having wings to denote the swiftness of their conquests (see Deut. xxviii. 49, Jer. xlix. 22, Hos. viii. 1).

And they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven.] i. e. The Assyrians carried away captive the ten tribes, and then the Babylonians took away the remainder of the Jews, and made an entire riddance of the people of the land.

Ver. 11. Or, "To build her," i. e. the woman, "a house," &c. The design of the vision is to instruct the Jews, that as their fathers were carried into a seventy years' captivity to Babylon; so, if their posterity should not take warning by their punishment, a worse captivity should befall them, one of so long a continuance, as should make them despare of ever returning home, and resolve to settle themselves in those countries where they were dispersed. This is expressed by removing them to Babylon; which was a proverbial expression for utter ruin and desolation: just like that of sending them into Egypt, which God threatens the Jews with in the prophecies, as a judgment of which they had the most dreadful apprehension; so it became a proverbial speech, for extreme misery (see Deut. xxviii. 64, Isa. x. 24, Hos. viii. 13, ix. 3).

A learned prolato in his Vindication of the Defence of Christianity, b. i. chap. 1, sect. 4, supposes the vision to denote the translation of sin or punishment from Judea to Babylon, of which the two kingdoms of Media and Persia were the instruments; denoted by the two women who had the wings of a stork. Babylon itself being signed by the woman enclosed in an ephah, or bushel, and covered with a leaden lid, implying that it was sealed up there, and irrecoverably doomed to destruction, agreeably to the other prophecies denounced against Babylon. See Isa. xiii. 19, Jer. i. 40.)

CHAPTER VI.

1 AND I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass.

CHAPTER VI.

ARGUMENT. — The first vision in this chapter, of the four chariots drawn by several sorts of horses, denotes the succession of the four empires. The second, concerning the crowns put upon the head of Joshua, sets forth the glory of Christ the
2. In the first chariot were red horses; and in the second chariot black horses.
3. And in the third chariot white horses; and in the fourth chariot grisled and bay horses.
4. Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked with me, What are these, my lord?
5. And the angel answered and said unto me, These are the four spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth.
6. The black horses which are therein go forth into the north country; and the white go forth after them; and the grisled go forth toward the south country.
7. And the bay went forth, and sought to go that they might walk to and fro through the earth: and he said, Get you hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth.

8. Then he cried upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold, these that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit in the north country.
9. ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 10. Take of them of the captivity, even of Hel- dal, of Tobijah, and of Jeshajah, which are come from Babylon, and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah; 11. Then take silver and gold, and make crowns, and set them upon the head of Joshua the son of Josedeeh, the high priest;
12. And speak unto him, saying, Thus speak-eth

Ver. 6. The black horses—go forth into the north country.] The black horses which thou sawest in the vision belonging to the second chariot, and denoting the Persian empire, go forth to conquer the Babylonians, often expressed by the north in the prophets (see Jer. i. 14, lv. 6, vi. 1, Ezek. i. 4). The angel saith nothing of the red horses, belonging to the first chariot, because that empire was at an end. The white go forth after them.] Alexander and his armies go forth to conquer the Persians.

Ver. 7. And the bay went forth, and sought to go, &c.] Thus the power of the new Roman empire, that extended its conquests in the latter times: and these can be no other than the Goths and Vandals, whose power rose out of the ruins of the first Roman empire, and who set up the kingdom of the ten horns, mentioned Rev. xiii. 1. xvii. 3. So they walked to and fro through the earth.] They took possession of it (see Gen. xii. 17).

Ver. 8. Then cried he upon [unto] me.] These words are uttered by God, appearing out of the Shechinah (see the note upon i. 13, 20).

Behold, these that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit [or, my wrath]in the north country.] The black horses, denoting the Persian empire, that have conquered the Babylonians (see ver. 6), have appeased my wrath by executing that vengeance upon them which they deserved for their cruelty towards my people (see ver. 2). The word ruach, spirit, often signifies anger (see Judg. viii. 3, Eccles. x. 9).

Ver. 10. Take of them of the captivity.—which are come from Babylon.—Then [or, even] take [the] silver and gold, &c.] The exiles who remained in Babylonia, and who were favourable for the temple that was then in building, by sending their gifts and oblations to Jerusalem for carrying on the work, and adorning the temple after it was built. These offerings they sent by the persons here named, as they did afterward by Ezra and his companions (see Ezra vii. 16, viii. 25, 30).

Ver. 11. Then [rather, even] take [the] silver and [the] gold, &c.] There is no necessity of supposing the silver to be used in making those crowns: that is mentioned to show the liberality of the offerers, and might be laid up for the ornament or service of the temple (see Ezra. viii. 24, 30, Hag. ii. 8, 9). The use of the gold is here specified: a plate or crown of gold was an ornament placed upon the mieth the Lord of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is The Branch; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord:

13 Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both.

tre of the high priest (see Exod. xxviii. 36. xxxix. 6. Lev. viii. 9). Two such crowns of gold are ordered here to be made, and both of them to be placed upon the head of Joshua, to signify that the Messias, the branch spoken of in the next verse, of whom Joshua was a type, should be both a king and a priest, and so should have a right to wear the two crowns that belong to each of those officers.

Ver. 12. Behold the man whose name is The Branch: See, in the person of Joshua the high-priest, the type or representation of the man whose name is the Christ that shall be revealed, as the Targum paraphrases the text (see the note upon iii. 8). And he shall grow up out of his place. The Hebrew phrase eth literally signify, Shall grow up from under him; i.e. as a branch or twig grows out of the stock of a tree; so the Messias should spring from the family of David: or the expression may mean, that he shall succeed Joshua in the high-priesthood, which shall be unchangedly fixed in his person.

And he shall build the temple of the Lord: Zerubbabel was to build the material temple (see iv. 9), but the building God's spiritual temple, the church, was a work reserved for the Messias (see Matt. xvi. 18. Eph. ii. 20—22. Heb. iii. 3). This text the Chaldee paraphrase understands of the Messias, and so it was understood by the Jews in the time of our Saviour. Herod at that time had a mind to be thought the Messias: his flatterers had put this thought into his head, who from thence were called the Herodians (Matt. xxii. 16), as many of the ancient writers suppose. This put him upon rebuilding the temple, a work foretold in this place to be undertook by the Messias.

Ver. 13.] This is a plain description of Christ, who was foretold to be both a king and priest (Ps. cx. 4), who should bear the glory of a king, and with-

14 And the crowns shall be to Ithiel, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the son of Zephaniah, for a memorial in the temple of the Lord.

15 And they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the Lord, and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you. And this shall come to pass, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God.

The last verse in the chapter is one of the most memorable in the whole Scriptures. With how much dishonour were the Jews treated by Nebuchadnezzar! How few are the evidences that his prophecy was but a shadow! And yet, notwithstanding these things, he who was to be the Saviour of the world was to be born of the house of David. And did they not think it then, nor do they think it now, when we read that the Jew was to be the Saviour of the world? The prophet has declared it, and the Saviour has fulfilled it.

CHAPTER VII.

1 And it came to pass in the fourth year of king Darius, that the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chislev:

2 When they had sent unto the house of God Sherezer and Regem-melech, and their men, to pray before the Lord.

3 And to speak unto the priests which were in

Ver. 2.] The verb in the Hebrew is in the singular number, “He had sent:” but our interpreters understand it plurally, by an enallage of the number, which is frequent in the Hebrew; and the Vulgar Latine interprets it to the same sense. According to this syntax, the words might be as well translated thus, “when Sherezer and Regem-melech, and their men, had sent unto the house of God.” These, probably, were men of some note among the Jews that still continued at Babylon, who either came of their own accord, or were sent by the exiles there to the temple at Jerusalem, to offer up sacrifices at the altar, and make prayers for themselves and their friends in the temple, where the building was carrying on with good success. The temple was the only place where they could offer sacrifice, to which their solemn prayers were always joined (see 1 Sam. xiii. 12, Ezra vi. 10). Ver. 3. And to speak unto the priests which were in the house of the Lord—and to the prophets. It was the office of the priests to resolve any doubts that might arise, and the people were commanded to consult them, and to follow their determination (Deut. xvii. 9—11, Mal. ii. 7). And since the prophets Haggai and Zechariah were at this time residing at Jerusalem it was proper to inquire of them, who might probably give them an immediate answer from God himself.

Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself, as I have done these so many years? The fast of the fifth month, because in the fifth month, answering to our month of July, the city and temple were burnt by the Chaldeans (2 Kings xxv. 8); in memory of which grievous judgment, the Jews at Babylon had kept a solemn fast, from that time until now; refraining from all worldly business and pleasure, and employing themselves in the religious exercise of prayer and humiliation (see xlii. 12—14). This fast was to be continued, but it was to be proper for them still to continue this fast, when the ecclesiastical and civil state was in a great measure restored, and the judgment for which they mourned was removed.

Ver. 5. Speak unto all the people! What I am going to say shall equally concern both priests and people. When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh month. The Jews observed four solemn fasts, in relation to the calamities that attended the captivity: two of them are mentioned in this chapter, and two in the next, ver. 19. Besides the fast in the fifth month, taken notice of ver. 3, they kept another in the seventh month, answering chiefly to our September, in memory of the murder of Gedaliah, which had happened in that month (2 Kings xxv. 25); whereupon all the remainder of the Jews were dispersed into several lands, and the desolation of Judea completed (Jer. xlii. 17, 18).

Even those seventy years! Those "many years" mentioned ver. 3, which, if we reckon from the destruction of Jerusalem, in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, to the fourth year of Darius Hystaspes, are just seventy years; as hath been observed in the note upon i. 12. Did ye at all fast unto me? Did you fast upon religious motives, and for your better improvement in the duties of repentance and amendment, the only true end of fasting (compare Rom. xiv. 6).
Ver. 14. I scattered them with a whirlwind] My anger dispersed the ten tribes like a tempest, into the distant countries of Assyria, Media, &c. from whence they never returned; and the two remaining tribes into Babylon, where they lived like exiles. God's vengeance is often compared to a whirlwind; see the note upon Jer. xxiii. 19.

Thus the land was desolate.] There was an entire riddance made of the inhabitants of Judea, in the man passed through nor returned: for they laid the pleasant land desolate.

CHAPTER VIII.

ARGUMENT.—God promises the continuance of his favour to those that are returned from captivity; so that upon the removal of his judgments, they need no longer continue the fasts they had observed during the captivity; and withal promises in due time a general restoration of his people, and the enlargement of his church by the coming in of the gentiles.

Ver. 2. I was jealous for Zion with great jealousy.] Or, "I have been jealous for Zion with great zeal." (see the note upon i. 14).

And I was [or, have been] jealous for her with great fury.] I expressed my concern for her welfare, by the severe punishments I brought upon the Babylonians, their oppressors (compare Ezek. xxxvi. 5, 6).

Ver. 3.] See ii. 10. Jerusalem shall be again the seat of truth and justice, her magistrates being restored to execute their authority there; and the temple upon Mount Moriah shall be again dedicated to God's worship, and honoured with his presence (compare Isa. i. 26, Jer. xxxi. 25).

Ver. 4.] Whereas before the captivity the inhabitants were cut off in the midst of their yeares, by the sword, the famine, and the pestilence (see Jer. xiv. 12, xv. 2, Ezek. v. 19).

Ver. 5.] As in the time of perfect peace and security.

Ver. 6.] Because "The things which are impossible with men are possible with God." Luke xviii. 27.

Concerning the remnant, see the note upon Mic. iv. 7.

Ver. 7.] The words of the original may be literally translated thus, "From the rising to the going down of the sun," which signifieth, from all parts of the world (compare Ps. i. 1, cxiii. 3, Mal. i. 11). This denotes the general restoration of the Jewish nation from their several dispersions (compare ver. 12, 20, 29), an event foretold by most of the prophets of the Old Testament (see the note upon Isa. xi. 11). The west country here mentioned hath a particular relation to their present dispersion, great numbers of them being in these latter ages settled in the western parts of the world (see the note upon Isa. xxiv. 14, and upon Hos. xi. 10).

Ver. 8. They shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem.] They shall be restored to their own country, and inhabit their capital city of Jerusalem, as in old time (see the note upon Ezek. xxxviii. 25, 26).

And they shall be my people, and I will be their God.] They shall constantly serve and worship me, and I will bless and protect them (see xiii. 9).

In truth and in righteousness.] If we refer these words to God, the word righteousness is equivalent to mercy, as it is often used; and, joined with truth, implies God's faithfulness in performing his gracious promises: or the word may be understood of the people, that as God was faithful to them, so they will live in obedience to him.

Ver. 9. Let your hands be strong.] Take courage to go on with the building of the temple, from these comfortable promises which are recited in this chapter, and which ye have formerly heard from the mouth of the prophets, Haggai (i. 4) and Zechariah (iv. 9). Which were in the day, &c.] Or, Who spake in the day, &c. Which makes the sense plainer. The prophet speaks of carrying on the building, as if it were laying a new foundation (see Hag. ii. 18).

Ver. 10. For before these days there was no hire or man, nor any hire for beast: neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in because of the affliction: for I set all men every one against his neighbour.

11 But now I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the Lord of hosts.

12 For the seed shall be prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew; and I will cause to abound the remnant of this people to possess all these things.

13 And it shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing: fear not, but let your hands be strong.

14 For thus saith the Lord of hosts; As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the Lord of hosts, and I repented not:

15 So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah: fear ye not.

16 ¶ These are the things that ye shall do; Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates:

17 And let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love no false oath; for all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord.

18 ¶ And the word of the Lord of hosts came unto me, saying,

19 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; The fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shall be to the house of Judah joy and gladness, and cheerful feasts; therefore love the truth and peace.

20 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; It shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities:

21 And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also.

22 Yea, many people, and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord.

23 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take the performance of them will depend upon your observing the rules of justice and righteousness which I commanded your fathers by the prophets, as the weightier matters of the law, and now again enjoin them to you (see vii. 9, 10).

Ver. 16. Execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates.] Let those who have the public administration of justice, make it their chief intent to uphold truth and integrity, and maintain the public peace, by giving every man his due. The judges used to execute their office at the gates of the city (see Deut. xxxi. 19).

Ver. 17. And love no false oath.] See v. 3, 4.

Ver. 19. The fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the—tenth.] Besides the two fasts mentioned vii. 5, the Jews observed two others, that of the fourth month, and another to our June, wherein Jerusalem was taken (Jer. lii. 6, 7), and that of the tenth month, answering our December, when the Babylonian army began the siege of it (ibid. ver. 4). The prophet tells them in answer to the question proposed (vii. 3), that they may now disuse these fasts, and lay aside the mournful circumstances with which they were solemnized; the judgments which occasioned them being removed.

Therefore love the truth and peace.] God values an upright conversation before the exactest care of outward performances (see ver. 16, and the note upon vii. 9). These instructions prepared men's minds for receiving the gospel, whose laws chiefly recommend purity of heart and life (see Jer. xxxii. 33).

Ver. 20. There shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities—saying. Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, &c.] A prophecy of the gentiles coming into the church, the expressions alluding to the Jews going up in companies to Jerusalem at their solemn feasts (compare Isa. ii. 3, 3, Mic. iv. 1, 2)

I will go also.] So every single person shall express his willingness to go along with them.

Ver. 22.] Compare xiv. 16, Isa. lxii. 25.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The burden of the word of the Lord in [or, against] the land of Hadrach, and Damascus shall be the rest thereof: when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the Lord.

2 And Hamath also shall border thereby; Tyre, and Zidon, though it be very wise.

3 And Tyrus did build herself a strong hold, and heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets.

4 Behold, the Lord will cast her out, and he will smite her power in the sea; and she shall be devoured with fire.

5 Ashkelon shall see it, and fear; Gaza also shall see it, and be very sorrowful, and Ekron;

Ver. 2. And Hamath also shall border thereby; The sense would be plain, thus; And against Hamath also, which borders thereby; importing, that Hamath shall not escape the conqueror's forces. There were two Hamaths: here is probably meant that Hamath which was the northern border of Judea, and is spoken of in the text as a bordering city (see the note upon Amos vii. 14).

Tyrus, and Zidon, though it be very wise.] Or, “Against Tyre and Zidon,” &c. They both shall be involved in the same calamity, although the Zidonians value themselves as the first inventors of letters and sciences, and are famous for their skill in navigation.

Ver. 3. And Tyrus did build herself a strong hold; After the demolishing of Old Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, foretold by Isaiah, xxiii., and Ezekiel, xxvi.,—xxviii. New Tyre was built in an island at the distance of half a mile from the shore; so its situation was very strong, and it was fortified with a wall round it a hundred and fifty feet high (see Dr. Prideaux, in the forecated place).

And heaped up silver as the dust, &c.] By her merchandise she had gained immense riches (Ezck. xxviii. 4, 5).

Ver. 4.] The Lord will dispossess her inhabitants, and the Carthaginians shall not be able to assist her with their naval forces; but the conquerors shall subdue her fortifications, though she be surrounded with the sea; and lay her stately buildings in ashes (see Dr. Prideaux, under the fourth year of Darius).

5. Ashkelon shall see it, and fear, &c.] The cities of the Philistines, Ashkelon, Gaza, and Ekron, shall be very much terrified at the news of Tyre's being destroyed, from whence they hope for success against the enemy.

And the king shall perish from Gaza.] That city was taken by Alexander after a two months' siege: ten thousand of the inhabitants slain, and the governor Batis dragged round the city till he was dead. King is a general word for any governor, in Hebrew, as hath been before observed. Strabo, speaking of Gaza (lib. xvi.), saith, “It was formerly a city of note, but was destroyed by Alexander the Great, and remained desert or uninhabited.” And so it is called, Acts viii. 26, and is to be distinguished from Gaza the seaport, otherwise called Majumma; the old Gaza being a mile from the sea (see St. Jerome de Locis Hebr.).

Ver. 6.] By a bastard, the I.XX. and most interpreters understand foreigners, such as were not the native inhabitants of the place: and they understood...
CHAPTER IX.

for her expectation shall be ashamed; and the king shall perish from Gaza, and Ashkelon shall not be inhabited.

6 And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod, and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 And I will take away his blood out of his mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth: but he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God, and he shall be as a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite.

8 And I will encamp about mine house because of the army, because of him that passeth it either of Alexander's conquests in those parts of Palestine where the natives were destroyed, or expelled out of their habitations, and strangers placed in their room; or else of the exploits of Judas Maccabaeus against the Philistines (1 Macc. v. 63), and of Jonathan, who set fire to Azotos, and burnt and destroyed eight thousand men there (ibid. x. 84, 85).

To this sense the Chaldee paraphrase understands this text, and renders it, The family of Israel shall dwell in Ashdod, who before were in it as strange.

A collection or succession of persons is sometimes expressed in the singular number (see the note upon xi. 16.)

Ver. 7. And I will take away his blood out of his mouth.] He shall be brought down so low that he shall not be a condition to oppose his neighbours, as he did formerly; but they shall be delivered from his cruelty, just as the prey is taken out of the mouth of a wild beast, when he is just about to devour it.

But he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God.] Many of the Philistines became proselytes to the Jewish religion, after Alexander Jannaeus had subdued their principal cities, and made them part of his own dominions (see Josephus, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 23).

And he shall be as a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite.] They shall be equally capable of places of honour and trust with the Jews themselves, who shall look upon the Philistines as their fellow-citizens, just as the Israelites treated the Jebusites, the ancient inhabitants of Jerusalem (see Judg. i. 21).

Ver. 8. And I will encamp about mine house, &c.] Compare viii. 14. During these military commotions the angels, who are God's host, shall be a guard to the temple at Jerusalem (see ii. 5), and I will turn the heart of Alexander that he shall show favours towards the Jews, when he intended to humble them, and shall offer sacrifice to me in my temple. See this remarkable passage related at large out of Josephus by Dr. Prideaux, Script. Connex., under the fourth year of Darius Codomannus.

No oppressor shall pass through them any more:] Or, "Any longer," so the word should be rendered, Isa. ii. 24, Nahum i. 12 (see Noldius, p. 682). None of those that now threaten to invade or oppress them, shall prosper in their attempts against them (see note upon x. 4).

For now have I seen with mine eyes:] I am not regardless of them, but look upon their condition with an eye of pity and compassion (compare xiii. 4, Exod. ii. 25, 2 Sam. xvi. 12).

Ver. Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: From the promise contained in the foregoing verse, of God's protecting his church and temple, the prophet, in a sudden transport, takes occasion to break forth into a joyful representation of the coming of the Messiah.

Behold, thy king cometh unto thee:] He that is so often described in the prophets as the King of Israel (see Ps. ii. 7, Jer. xxiii. 5), was known by that name by, and because of him that returneth: and no oppressor shall pass through them any more: for now have I seen with mine eyes.

9 ¶ Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation: lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.

10 And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion shall be from Dan unto Beer-sheba, and he shall break the pride of Asher, and put his yoke in judgment.

11 He is just, and having salvation: \\ Or, "He is righteous, and the Saviour." He is that "righteous Branch," and "the Lord our righteousness, who shall execute judgment and justice in the earth; as he is described by Jeremiah, xxiii. 5, and the "righteousness" and "salvation," i.e. the righteous one and Saviour, promised Is. lxii. 1. The word nosha'ah, "having salvation," though it be a participial passive, is rendered a Saviour in all ancient versions, and in several instances of the same kind may be seen in Pool's Synopsis. Laws, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.] Or, "Even upon a colt," acc. the copulative particle being sometimes used by way of explanation (see note upon Is. li. 19, and Noldius's Concordance, p. 281): for it appears by the evangelists, that "our Lord rode upon a young ass, or colt, wherein never man sat" (John xii. 14, Luke xix. 39); wherein he showed his lowliness, not affecting the pomp of the world, but coming with the same primitive simplicity as the patriarchs and judges used of old (see Gen. xxii. 3, Judg. v. 10, x. 4). When horses grow common among the Jews by their traffic with Egypt (see 2 Kings x. 25, Isa. xxxvi. 1, 2), then riding upon asses was thought below the dignity of great persons. A learned prelate I have often bad occasion to mention in defence of Christianity from the ancient Prophecies, p. 165, hath fully proved, that the ancient Jews explained this prophecy of the Messias; and it is plain from the gospels, that the Jews in Christ's time understood it so. For when our Lord applied this prophecy to himself, by entering into Jerusalem upon an ass, it so affected the multitude, that they "spread their garments and palm branches in the way," as at the reception of some great prince (Matt. xxi. 8, 9); nay, his disciples took occasion from this sight to "rejoice and to praise God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works they had seen," concluding that now the kingdom of David, in the person of the Messias, would "immediately appear," Mark xii. 10, Luke xix. 37, 38.

Ver. 10. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, &c.] Psalms and the Prophets not only as the distinguishing character of Christ's church or kingdom (see note upon Isa. ii. 4), here it is joined with freedom from annoyance both from foreign and domestic enemies, as it is elsewhere (see Hos. ii. 18, Mic. v. 10, Hag. ii. 22). These prophecies, as they foretell the out ward peacefulness of Christ's church or kingdom, relate to the flourishing state of it, in the latter times of the world (see notes upon these texts). Ephraim, or the ten tribes, is mentioned as distinct from Jerusalem, or the tribe of Judah (compare ver. 13, and x. 6, 7, and see note upon viii. 13).

And his dominion shall be from sea—sea.] The words are taken from Ps. lxiii. 8, where David debe from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth.

11 As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water.

12 ¶ Turn you to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope: even to day do I declare that I will render double unto thee;

13 When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man.

14 And the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord God shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south.

15 The Lord of hosts shall defend them; and they shall devour, and subdue with sling stones; and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they shall be filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar.

16 And the Lord their God shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for they shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign upon his hand.

17 For how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! corn shall make the young men cheerful, and new wine the maidens.

Jews under the conduct of the Maccabees to destroy the forces of the Syrian kings, Antiochus Epiphanes and others, who were the successors of Alexander, the founder of the Grecian monarchy (see Dan. viii. 22, 1 Macc. i. 10).

Made thee as the sword of a mighty man.] Given success to your aims, that none should be able to withstand thee.

Ver. 14. The Lord shall be seen over them.] He shall give conspicuous tokens of his presence with them, and his preceeding over them, and directing them in all their enterprises.

And his arrow shall go forth as the lightning:] Their force shall be irresistible: the lightning is often called God's arrow (see Ps. xviii. 14, lxvii. 18, exiliv. 6).

The Lord God shall blow the trumpet.] He shall give the signal of war, and shall encourage his soldiers to the battle.

Shall go with whirlwinds] Shall dismiss his enemies, as a whirlwind tears in pieces every thing that stands in its way (see the note upon Isa. xxxi. 1).

Ver. 15. The Lord of hosts shall defend them; &c.] The hand of God shall visibly appear in protecting the Maccabees, and enabling them to conquer their enemies with as unequal a force as that of David was in respect of Goliath, when he subdued him with a sling-stone (1 Sam. xvii. 50).

And they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine, &c.] They shall feast and rejoice for their victories; they shall offer sacrifices of thanksgiving to God, sprinkle the blood upon the horns of the altar (see Lev. iv. 25), and fill the bowls with the rest of it, to be poured out at the foot of it (see xiv. 20, Deut. xii. 27). Of their abundance shall be increased as when men’s entrails are raised with wine (see Ps. lxvii. 65), and they shall be filled with the blood of their enemies, as the bowls and corners of the altar are with the blood of the sacrifices.

Ver. 16.] God shall make it known to the world how precious they are in his sight (compare Isa. lxix. 3, Mal. iii. 17), and his favour towards them shall be an encouragement to others to become pious and to the true religion.

Ver. 17.] Some begin a new chapter here, and suppose the prophet to return to what he had promised, viii. 12. The words magnify God's goodness and favour towards his people, in bestowing all sorts of plenty upon them: so that a fruitful harvest shall rejoice the hearts of the young men that bring it in, and a plentiful vintage shall make the maidens cheerful.

And raised up thy sons, O Zion, &c.] Enabled the Lord to raise up children and sons of Israel, as a sign of reformation and a violation of the horrid covenant made with idolatrous nations amongst the children (see Is. lxix. 4, 9, 16, 23).
CHAPTER X.

Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain: so the Lord shall make bright clouds, and give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field.

For the idols have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen a lie; and have told false dreams; they comfort in vain: therefore they went their way as a flock, they were troubled, because there was no shepherd.

Mine anger was kindled against the shepherds, and I punished the goats: for the Lord of hosts hath visited his flock the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle.

Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle bow, out of him every oppressor together.

And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, because the Lord is with them, and the riders on horses shall be confounded.

Jews that should return into Judæa; and therefore are called rain comforters: as such Job complained of, xvi. 2. By this means some of the people were detained at Babylon without any form of government among themselves, and were as a flock without a shepherd. Shepherds and goats, mentioned ver. 3, he explains of the great men of the Jews who stayed behind at Babylon: these he distinguishes from those that returned home, who are called God's flock, in the following words.

For [or rather, but] the Lord of hosts hath visited his flock, &c. But now God hath given his people manifest tokens of his favour and protection (see ix. 16), in prospering their arms under the conduct of Judas Maccabæus, and making them victorious over their enemies. The chief use which the Jews made of horses was in war (see Prov. xxi. 31, Isa. xxxi. 1, 2).

Out of him came forth [or, shall come forth] the corner, &c. It is owing to God's favour that they have a captain, or ruler, to support their commonwealth; such was in an eminent manner Judas Maccabæus; that they have a settled state and government, whereupon private men may rely for the security of their lives and properties: the word pitakh, translated corner, signifies likewise a prince or a leader; and so it is taken, Numb. xxiv. 17, Judg. xx. 2, 1 Sam. xiv. 38, Isa. xix. 13. The word rendered mail signifies any person on whom others have a dependence (see Isa. xxiii. 23, 36), as also the public settlement of a state (Ezra. ix. 8). Out of him every oppressor together.] As the Greek word tyrann was at first equivalent in signification to a king, but afterward degenerated into a worse denomination: so the Hebrew negeh usually signifies an oppressor, but is sometimes taken in a general sense for a prince or governor: so it probably signifies, Isa. ix. 17, where our English renders it, Make thine exactors righteousness: but the Chaldee paraphrase expresseth it by shaddùnîm, princes: the LXX translate it ἐξευδεροί, overseers; which made some of the fathers apply that text to the bishops of the Christian church. This sense of the word agrees best with the scope of this place, and the Chaldee understands it so here. Thus the word may be understood, ix. 8, so as to signify the commander or general of an army.

And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies] God shall inspire them with courage to subdue their enemies, and trample upon their carcasses (compare Ps. xviii. 42, Isa. xlii. 25). This may be understood either of the Maccabees, or of the victories which the Jews should obtain over their enemies in the latter times (see xii. 6), to which the following part of the chapter seems to relate.

3 x 2
And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and will hear them.

And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the Lord.

And I will hicc them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased.

And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and the riders on horses shall be confounded.

The riders on horses shall be confounded.] Compare xii. 4. We may expound this of the discomfiture of Antiocbus's armies by the Maccabees, whose strength lay chiefly in their horse (see Dan. xi. 40), as that text is understood by several commentators.

Ver. 6.] This promise is probably to be understood of the general restoration of the Jewish nation upon their conversion; a subject often treated of by the prophets in the Old Testament, where Judah and Israel are spoken of as equal sharers in this blessing (compare Ezek. xxxvii. 16, &c. and see the note upon Isa. xi. 11). See xiii. 9.

Ver. 7. They of Ephraim] Ephraim is equivalent here to the ten tribes, as the house of Joseph is, ver. 6 (see the note upon Hos. v. 3).

Their heart shall rejoice as through wine:] Which raises men's spirits and courage (see ix. 15).

Yea, their children shall see it, &c.] Their successes shall end in a lasting peace, for which their posterity shall have occasion to return thanks to God (see ver. 9).

Ver. 8.] I will hicc them, and gather them:] I will summon them from distant countries by a certain signal, as a shepherd calls his flock together with his whistle (compare Isa. v. 26, vii. 18), which shall assemble them together, in order to bring them back into their own country (ver. 10), for I will redeem them out of the land of their enemies. The prophets often speak of a thing future, as if it were already accomplished (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9).

And they shall increase as they have increased:] In the most florishing times, such as were the reigns of David and Solomon.

Ver. 9.] I will sow them among the people:] I will multiply them among the nations, where they are dispersed (compare Hos. ii. 23).

And they shall remember me in far countries:] 'From among all the nations where they are scattered,' as the prophets elsewhere express it (see Deut. xxxii. 1, 4, Jer. xxx. 10, 11, Ezek. xi. 16, xxvii. 25, xxxiv. 13). As men are said to forget God when they forget their duty to him, so remembering him denotes their returning to their obedience.

And they shall—turn again:] They shall return to their own country, and enjoy it, they and their posterity (see Isa. lxv. 22, Ezek. xxviii. 29, Amos ix. 14).

Ver. 10.] And I will bring them again also out of Egypt, and—Asyria:] Egypt and Assyria were two potent kingdoms which bordered upon Judea, so that by turns they were either allies to the Jews, or their conquerors: and the Jews either went thither for refuge, or were carried thither captives (see Hos. ix. 3); whereupon the prophets, when they foretell the general restoration of their nation, often express it by their returning from Egypt and Assyria (see Isa. xi. 15, 16, xix. 23—25, xxviii. 13, Hos. xi. 11). We may likewise observe, that God's bringing his people again from Egypt, was a proverbial expression, to signify any deliverance, as great or greater than that (see Ps. lxxviii. 22, Mic. vii. 15). So here the words of the following verse allude to the Israelites passing through the Red sea.

The land of Gilead and Lebanon:] Two countries remarkable for their fruitfulness (see Jer. xxii. 6, Mic. vii. 14).

And place shall not be found for them.] They shall multiply so fast, that there shall not be room enough in Judea to receive them and their families (compare Isa. xix. 20).

Ver. 11.] And he shall pass through the sea with affliction, &c.] The sense might be more properly expressed thus, 'And he (Israel) shall pass through the straits of the sea;' so the LXX. and the Vulgar Latin understand it, meaning a branch of the Red sea, "and (God) shall smite the waves of the sea," &c. The expressions allude to the miraculous passage of the Israelites over an arm of the Red sea, when God dried up the waters of that sea, or river, before them (see Exod. xiv. 21, Josh. ii. 10). And this imports, that God would do as great things for them as he did formerly for their fathers: to this sense the Chaldee expounds the words (see the note upon the foregoing verse, and compare Isa. xi. 15). If we would distinguish between the sea and the rivers, we may understand the river of Jordan, whose waters were dried up to make a passage for the Israelites into the land of promise (see Josh. iv. 23).

And the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, &c.] By Assyria and Egypt are meant in general the enemies of God and of his truth, who shall all be subdued, and broken in pieces by the kingdom of Christ, when he shall come in glory to set up his kingdom on the earth (see Dan. ii. 33, 34, Isa. lx. 12). The Assyrian is taken in this sense, Isa. xiv. 25, Mic. v. 5, and both Egypt and Assyria may probably be so understood, Isa. xix. 28 (see the notes upon those texts).

Ver. 12.] I will strengthen them in the Lord:] God shall be their strength and protection (see ver. 5).

They shall walk up and down in his name:] Or, 'Walk in his name:' i.e. their lives and actions shall be under the conduct of his laws, and he shall give them success answerable to their upright intentions.
CHAPTER XI.

1 Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars.

2 Howl, fir tree; for the cedar is fallen; because the mighty is spoiled: howl, O ye oaks of Bashan; for the forest of the vintage is come down.

3 There is a voice of the hewing of the shepherds; for their glory is spoiled: a voice of the roaring of young lions; for the pride of Jordan is spoiled.

4 Thus saith the Lord my God; Feed the flock of the slaughter.

CHAP. XI.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet, representing the person of the Messiah, declares the ungrateful requitals the Jews had made him, when he undertook the office of a shepherd, in guiding and governing them: how they rejected him, and valued him and his labours at the mean price of thirty pieces of silver. Hereupon he threatens to destroy their city and temple, and to give them up into the hands of such governors as should have no regard either for their spiritual or temporal welfare.

Ver. 1.] By Lebanon most interpreters understand the temple, whose stately buildings resemble the tall cedars of that forest. Thus the word is commonly understood, Hab. ii. 17. There is a remarkable story mentioned in the Jewish writers to this purpose: "Some time before the destruction of the temple, the doors of it opened of their own accord; a circumstance attested by Josephus (Bel. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 12). Then R. Jehanan, a disciple of R. Hillel, directing his speech to the temple, said, "I know thy destruction is at hand, according to the prophecy of Zachariah; open thy doors, O Lebanon," &c.

The words may likewise denote the destruction of Jerusalem, elsewhere called by the name of a forest: her lofty buildings resembling the stately ranks of trees in a forest (compare Jer. xxvi. 11, xxix. 7, 23, Ezek. xx. 46).

Ver. 2. Howl, fir tree; for the cedar is fallen: by the several sorts of trees are meant the several orders and degrees of men, who shall be sharers in common destruction (see Isa. ii. 13, x. 31, 33, and the notes there). The forest of the vintage] Or, "the defenced forest," as it is in the margin, according to a different reading of the Hebrew text, which gives a proper representation of Jerusalem, with the fortifications about it. If we follow the reading of the English text, the "forest of the vintage" may probably mean Carmel (see the note upon Isa. xxxvii. 24), which being placed in the north-west parts of Judea, and joined here with Bashan that lay south-east, may denote that the calamity shall be general. Bashan was famous for its stately cedars (see Isa. ii. 13).

Ver. 3. Shepherds.] By shepherds are meant the chief rulers of the Jews (see note upon x. 3).

The roaring of young lions.] So he calls the princes and governors of the Jews, because they devoured the people by their oppressions (see Zeph. iii. 3). So Achilles calls Agamemnon Δικαιωθείται Βραχυκός, "a blood-sucking king." (Hind. 1.)

Ver. 4. And, to it spoiled.] The lion may be called the pride of the forest, as being the stalest beast that rules there; as beasts that prey upon others are called "the children of pride," Job xlii. 34. Lions are styled here "the pride of Jordan," because they lay in the thickets about the banks of Jordan. The words may be rendered, "the swelling of Jordan," as they are translated, Jer. xliv. 19. At the time of the swelling, or overflowing of Jordan, the lions were raised out of their coveris, and infested the country (see note upon that text).

Ver. 4.] A learned prelate, in his Defence of Christianity from the ancient Prophecies (chap. iii. 1), observes, that the actions of the prophets are sometimes typical; i.e. they represent in themselves the persons and circumstances of others (see the note upon iii. 8). So here Zechariah was commanded by God to act the part of Christ, the "good shepherd," and to "feed the flock of the slaughter," that flock which their shepherds destroyed, instead of feeding them.

Ver. 5.] Whose rulers deal with their flock as so many butchers: and think they have a right to slay or sell them, and thank God that they have a good market; or believe that they may lawfully make merchandise of their souls for their own lucrative advantage (compare 2 Pet. ii. 3, Rev. xvi. 13).

Ver. 6.] Nor shall their condition at all grow better, saith God, for I will show no more pity for the main body of the people than their rulers do. "The inhabitants of the land" are to be distinguished from the "poor of the flock" in the following verse. As to the former, God declares by his prophet, that he will leave some of them to perish by their mutual and intestine divisions (see ver. 9), as many of the Jews did when the Roman army invaded Judea. Others of them he would deliver into the hands of Vespasian, whose predecessor the Jews had owned for their king; at the same time when they disowned their Messiahs, and disowned his right to reign over them (John xix. 13), and his army shall smite the land with utter destruction (compare Mal. iv. 6).

Ver. 7. And [or, but] I will feed the flock of slaughter, even you, O poor of the flock.] Or, "even, or especially, the poor of the flock." Zechariah, representing the person of Christ the true shepherd, saith, he entered upon his office, and undertook the care of the "sacrificed flock," chiefly out of a regard to the neck and humble among them; for to such are the benefits of the favor of Christ (see Isa. xi. 4, 13, 13, and notes upon those texts).

I took unto me two staves; the one I called Beauty, and the other I called Bands.] A staff or crook is the proper ensign of a shepherd; the shepherds of old time had two rods or staves; one turned round at top, that it might not hurt the sheep: this was for counting them, and separating the sound from the diseased (see Lev. xxvi. 22); the other had an iron hook at the end of it, to pull in the stray sheep, and hold them fast while the shepherd corrected them, the psalmist mentions both these, Ps. xxiii. 4, "Thy rod and thy staff comfort me."
two staves; the one I called Beauty, and the other I called Bands; and I fed the flock.

8 Three shepherds also I cut off in one month; and my soul loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me.

9 Then said I, I will not feed you: that that dieth, let it die; and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; and let the rest eat every one the flesh of another.

10 ¶ And I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people.

The first staff he called Beauty, or delight, as the word Naom may be rendered, i.e. his favour, gentleness, or kindness, towards his people; so the word signifies, Ps. xx. 17, and this was remarkably verified in our Saviour Christ, whose "gracious" words and beneficent works were conspicuous through the whole course of his life. The other staff he called Bands, by which is meant that "bond of the new covenant" (as the words of Ezekiel may be understood, xx. 57), whereby he intended to unite both the kingdoms of Israel and Judah under himself as their head and king (see Ezek. xxxvii. 22), and then afterward to unite the Jews and gentiles into one church, by "breaking down the partition wall that was between them" (see John x. 16, Eph. ii. 14).

Ver. 8. Three shepherds also I cut off in one month; We may probably explain these three shepherds of the chief priests, scribes, and elders, of the Jews. Christ exposed these as blind guides, and thereby lessened their authority among the people; which contributed very much to the spreading of the gospel (see John xii. 19): one month seems a proverbial expression for a short time (see Hos. v. 7).

My soul looked them, and their soul also abhorred me. Or "My soul was straitened towards them," as the Hebrew may be literally translated; i.e. I was straitened in my affections to them: so the Greek word στενοχωρίας, "to be straitened," is used, 2 Cor. vi. 12, which exactly answers the Hebrew קטרה. I was less tender towards them, than towards the "poor of the flock," because they showed themselves averse to my person and doctrine. The Hebrew word בכה, abhorred, is never met with but here: Malmonides supposes that it alludes to Chebel or, Chobelin, Bands, ver. 7, the two words differing only by a transposition of letters (Mere Novoch, lib. ii. cap. 43). Such allusions are frequent in scripture (see notes upon Is. xxiv. 17, Jer. i. 11, 12).

Ver. 9.] I found in a little time that my labour did not meet with a suitable return, a great part of my sheep proving untractable: so I resolved to be their shepherd no longer, but leave them to be consumed by the common calamities of death, famine, &c. or to be cut off by their enemies, the Romans, just as the lesser cattle are pushed and gored by the greater (see Ezek. xxxix. 21), and those that escape those calamities shall destroy one another by their civil discords (see ver. 6, and compare Is. ix. 21, xlix. 20). The word translated cut off, signifies likewise being consumed, or ready to perish (see ver. 16).

Ver. 10.] Thus the covenant which I had made with the nation of the Jews was broken, and I excluded them from having any benefit in the second covenant, that of the gospel: they were to be my people no longer (see Dan. ix. 26, Hos. i. 9, and the note upon xiii. 9 of this prophecy).

Ver. 11.] Or, "And in that day it was broken; the poor of the flock," &c. The few believing Jews that attended upon my preaching (ver. 7), were convinced that this was God's doing, and the fulfilling those judgments which he had threatened by his prophets.

Ver. 12. I said unto them. Or, "I had said unto them," i.e. before I broke my staff, called Beauty, or delight, ver. 10.

Give me my price [or, my hire]; and if not, forbear. Christ still persist in act the character of a shepherd, and, in a humble manner, demands of the Jews what price they put upon his labour. He was resolved to use no constraint, but leave it to themselves to continue or discharge him. In the same style our Lord himself speaks (John xii. 47), "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not."

So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. To show how little they cared for me or my service, they valued it but at "thirty shekels" of silver, the price of the meanest slave (see Exod. xxxix. 22).

Ver. 13. Cast it unto the potter.] God commanded the prophet in a vision, as personating Christ, to cast the money in a contemptuous manner to the potter, as a reward only suitable to his labour, and a price only fit for such wares as he sold, which were of the meanest value (see Lam. iv. 2).

And cast them to [or, for] the potter in the house of the Lord.] I cast them back into the treasury in the temple, where afterward they were laid out for the use of the potter. This whole transaction performed by Zechariah in a vision, was designed to be an exact representation of the several circumstances that attended the betraying the Messiah by Judas, the price the chief priests put upon him (to whom as the governors of the temple the money was returned), and the use to which the money was applied (see Matt. xxvii. 6, 10). This whole prophetical scene is represented in the single person of the Messiah, just as Ezekiel sustains the type or figure both of the Chaldaean army that should besiege Jerusalem, and of the Jews themselves that were besieged (Ezek. iv. 1, 12).

This is one of those prophecies, whose literal sense is fulfilled in our blessed Saviour, and cannot be applied to any other person, but in a very distant sense to any remote other. The like instances may be seen in Ps. xxii. 16, 18, xivii. 21, Hos. xi. 1. The Jews themselves have expounded this prophecy of the Messiah. Christo. Helvius, in his Elenchus Judaorum, quotes Bereithith Rabbi on Gen. xlix. as bringing in the Messiah speaking the very words of the twelfth verse here, in his own person. And Dr. Alx. against the Unitarians, 1630, cites Rabbi Menachem, applying the "selling the just for silver," mentioned here and Amos ii. 6, of the "selling the Shechemites," by which they understood the Messinas, whom they often speak of as being the true God (see the same author, p. 266).

Ver. 14.] As they refused to be united under me their head, so in breaking off my other staff, I foresawed...
Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

And the Lord said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd.

For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that the destruction of Jerusalem, the bond and cement of all their tribes, being the sent and centre both of their civil power and of the divine worship [see Ps. cxxxii. 3—5]. The consequence of that was the entire dissolution of the nation, and the dispersion and confusion of all their tribes, whose families could no longer be distinguished after the loss of their genealogies.

Ver. 15. Take unto thee yet [or, once more] the instruments of a foolish shepherd.] As Zechariah in the foregoing vision had acted the part of the true shepherd, so here he is commanded to take upon him the character and furniture of a foolish or unprofitable shepherd (see ver. 17). Fully in scripture is equivalent to wickedness; so it may mean not only unskilful, but likewise ill-designing governors, who should only intend their own advantage, and have no regard for the good of the flock, or people, committed to their charge. The instruments of such a shepherd must be suitable to his own indiscretion; viz. a scrip with holes, and a stick or crook made to push and hurt the flock, not to protect or defend them.

Ver. 16. I will raise up a shepherd in the land.] A shepherd in the singular number denotes a succession of such governors as are described in the following words: so the succession of priests is represented under the single person of Levi, Mal. ii. 5, 6. Since the Jews had rejected the true shepherd, God threatens to send, or permit, such shepherds to rule over them, as should be notorious for their negligence and avarice, their cruelty and oppression. This may be understood either of the blind guides, who conducted their consciences with avarice and tyranny, or of the false Christs and false prophets, who often misled them to their ruin [or it may be meant of the miseries which they suffered under Hadrian, and other Roman emperors, as St. Jerome interprets it]; or else it may be expounded of the latter times of the

CHAPTER XII.

The burden of the word of the Lord for Israel, saith the Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him.

2 Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of Ver. 1. The burden of the word of the Lord for Israel.] Or, "Toward Israel." The Hebrew word massa is often translated a burden; i.e. a burdensome prophecy (see ix. 1); but it likewise signifies a prophecy in general, as it does particularly in this place, also Lam. ii. 14, and Mal. i. 1, and is sometimes interpreted vision, in the Chaldee paraphrase.

Which stretcheth forth the heavens, &c.] These are mentioned as undeniable instances of God's power, and are made use of as arguments to encourage men to rely on his word for fulfilling such promises, which seem to human understanding most unlikely to be brought to pass (compare Isa. xlii 5, xlv. 24, xlv. 18, xviii. 13).

For meth the spirit of man within him.] He that creates the soul, and unites it to the body (see Num. xxvi. 22, Eccles. xii. 7, Isa. livii. 16, Heb. xii. 9).
trembling unto all the people round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it.

4 In that day, saith the Lord, I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness: and I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness.

5 And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the Lord of hosts their God.

6 ¶ In that day will I make the governors of Judah like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem.

7 The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah.

8 In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is fickle among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them.

9 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

10 And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall shall be put into such a confusion as to fall foul one upon another (see ver. 13), and not be able to distinguish between their friends and their foes; they shall be as if they were struck with blindness, just as the Syrian army was when they surrounded the door of Elisha (2 Kings vi. 18).

11 I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah. I will have an especial concern for their preservation (compare ix. 18).

Ver. 5.] The marginal reading is to be preferred, "There is strength to me, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem in the Lord of hosts our God." God doth visibly interpose for our deliverance, and thereby encourage us to rely on his protection.

Ver. 6.] The governors of Judah like an hearth of fire, &c.] They shall devour all their enemies that annoy them (see ver. 9, Obad. ver. 18, and the note upon that place).

On the right hand and on the left.] i. e. Southward and northward (see the note upon Ezek. xvi. 46, so Isa. ix. 20). The right hand and the left, is explained in the Targum by the south and the north.

Jerusalem shall be inhabited again] See xiv. 10.

Ver. 7.] This shall be the order whereby this victory shall be accomplished; the Lord shall first give success to the body of the Jewish nation that encamp in the open country, that the valor of the house of David, and of the people that defend Jerusalem from within, may not eclipse the courage of the people without the walls, and puff up one party against the other. The inhabitants of Jerusalem used to value themselves above their brethren, because their city was the place of God's residence, and the seat of the royal family; to take away all occasion of such an emulation, God will first appear in behalf of those Jews that live in the open country.

Ver. 8. He that is fickle among them at that day shall be as David.] He shall inspire those within the city with unusual courage, so that the feeblest among them shall do as great exploits as David did of old.

As the angel of the Lord before them.] Or, "At the head of them." The Messiahs, who is the principal branch of the house of David, shall lead them on, as he formerly went before the Israelites in the wilderness, and conducted them to the land of Canaan, by the name of the "angel of God's presence" (see Exod. xxiii. 20, &c., Isa. xliii. 9, and note there).

Ver. 9.] See ver. 3, 6.

Ver. 10. I will pour upon the house of David, the spirit of grace and of supplications.] I will bestow a plentiful share of grace upon the descendants of Da-look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn. 11 In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon. 12 And the land shall mourn, every family of their family, and the rest of the Jews, whereby they shall be brought to a deep humiliation for their own sins, and a true compunction of heart for the great sin of their forefathers in crucifying me their Lord and Saviour. The conversion of the Jews is compared by St. Paul to "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15, and therefore must be effected by an extraordinary and uncommon degree of grace, which shall then be given them (see Isa. liv. 13, Ezek. xxxix. 29, Joel ii. 25, and the notes upon those places): such an efficacious call as may bring them to a due sense of their own and their fathers' sins, and a hearty lamentation for them (see Jer. xxxi. 9, 1, 4, Ezek. xvi. 61, 63, xx. 43, xxxvi. 31, and notes there). "They shall look upon me whom they have pierced." The words point out the outward means whereby their conversion shall be wrought: viz. that the Lord, i.e. the Messias, "shall come" (xiv. 5): i.e. Christ shall appear in the heavens, "sitting on a bright cloud," as his coming is described, Rev. xiv. 14 (compare i. 7, Dan. vii. 13). This is probably meant by "the sign of the Son of Man in heaven," mentioned Matt. xxiv. 30, compared with Mark xiii. 26. This sight shall strike them with horror and astonishment for their sin in rejecting me their God, whom their fathers put to an ignominious death, and themselves have by their blasphemies crucified afresh. Then they shall beg pardon for their own and their fathers' sins, with the deepest signs of mourning and humiliation, expressed by a proverbial speech, as equal to the mourning of a father for an only son (compare Jer. vi. 26, Amos viii. 10). The Jews themselves have applied this text to the Messias, as may be seen in Grotius's notes upon the place, and Bishop Pearson's Exposition of the fourth article of the Creed. David did before describe his sufferings under the figure of "piercing his hands and his feet," Ps. xxii. 16, and Isaiah foretold he should be wounded for our transgressions, iii. 5. This text is at large explained and vindicated in the Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield's Defence of Christianity from the Ancient Prophecies, p. 107. Ver. 11.] Josiah was slain at, or near Megiddo (2 Kings xxi. 29): it may be the field where the battle was fought might be called Hadadrimmon. St. Jerome saith, it was a place near Jezreel, called in his time Maximianopolis. The valley or plain of Jezreel was a large plain (see Josh. xvii. 6) called the plain apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart; 13 The family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart; 14 All the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart.

of Esdraelon, Judith i. 8: it comprehended the valley of Megiddo in it. There the lamentation for Josiah began, which was continued from thence to Jerusalem, whither his body was brought to be buried, where all Judah mourned for him, and appointed an anniversary commemoration and lamentation for him (2 Chron. xxxv. 24, 25). So the mourning for Josiah became a proverb for a public and solemn lamentation. Such a national humiliation shall the Jews observe for their crucifying the Messias. Ver. 12. The land shall mourn, every family apart.] The whole land shall mourn in a most solemn manner; and every family shall sequester themselves from business and conversation for that purpose (compare vii. 9). The house of David apart, and their wives apart.] Those of the royal family who have rejected Christ shall lead the way. Even husbands and wives shall abstain from each other's company, as is usual in times of solemn humiliation (see Joel ii. 16): or, as a very learned person suggests, in solemn processions it was usual for the several orders of men to go distinctly, and likewise for the women to go in ranks by themselves; this was in all likelihood used in funeral mournings, where each tribe or order of men and women used a distinct form of lamentation. For example, the tribe of Judah lamented, "Ah, my brother!" the rest of the tribes answered, "Ah, Lord!" (see Jer. xxii. 18). This probably was done in the mourning for Josiah (see 1 Esdras i. 32), and observed in the times after the return from captivity (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 25, compared with xxxvi. 22), to which ceremony the expressions of the text allude. The family of the house of Nathan] David had a son named Nathan (2 Sam. v. 14, Luke iii. 31). This branch of the royal family seems here meant. Ver. 13. The family of Shimei apart.] Some suppose that this family was noted for breaching up persons eminent in the knowledge of the law; such as was Samuel, a noted rabbi, who lived in our Saviour's time, as St. Jerome informs us in his commentary on Isa. viii. The LXX. read the "house of Simeon;" which tribe was intermixed with that of Judah (Josh. xix. 9). Ver. 14. All the families that remain.] The prophet having mentioned the tribes and families of chiefest note in his time, comprises the rest under this general expression.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness.

CHAP. XIII.

ARGUMENT.—A general promise of pardon proclaimed to the Jews upon their conversion, and particularly of their being cleansed from idolatry, and the false pretences to prophecy, upon their belief in Christ; whose death is foretold, and the saving of a third part of that people, after a severe trial.

Ver. 1.] The "house of David," with the other "inhabitants of Jerusalem," upon their solemn humiliation, described xii. 13, 14, and "believing in him whom they had crucified and rejected," shall obtain a full and free pardon of all their sins, being admitted into the church of Christ by baptism (see Acts ii. 9, 32, xiii. 38, 39). The word fountain properly expresses the Christian baptism, which no more be remembered: and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land.

3 And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of the Lord: and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesieth.

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied: neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive:

5 But he shall say, I am no prophet, I am an husbandman; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth.

6 And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, These with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.

7 ¶ Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts: smite the shepherd, and the sheep through;" for the same verb is used in the Hebrew here, and xii. 10.

Ver. 4. The prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision.] The event proving quite otherwise than they had prophesied.

Neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive.] The prophets used to wear hairy or rough garments (see Isa. xx. 2), this they did, partly in imitation of Elijah, that was so clad (2 Kings i. 8), and partly because it was a despicable and mournful habit, and suitable to their office, which was to denounce God's judgments against pride and luxury. [John Baptist wore such a garment as was suitable to the character of a preacher of repentance.] The words import, that these prophets shall disown their former pretences, and no longer wear such a garment, as a badge of their profession.

Ver. 5.] To save themselves from punishment (ver. 3), each of them shall profess husbandry, and say that his employment from a child had been to look after cattle or till the ground, as the verb הָּלַ֖מָּנָּת may be translated of repentance.

Ver. 6.] When such a severe inquisition is made against false prophets, every one shall be ready to observe what marks or characters are printed upon the hands of such a pretender, and to ask him, How they came there! and he shall answer in his own justification, This is not the mark or character of any idol, but only a token that I am a servant belonging to such a family. It was an ancient custom for masters to set a mark upon their slaves or goods; and there was sometimes a particular character imprinted upon the worshippers of certain idols: so we read in the third book of Maccabees, that the worshippers of Bacchus had an ivy-leaf imprinted upon their bodies. Such impressions were often made upon the hands, to which that expression alludes (Rev. xiii. 16), of "receiving the mark of the beast upon the right hand." Several interpreters understand this verse of the wounds of Christ; but I conceive the following words more properly belong to that subject.

Ver. 7. Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against—my fellow.] Here begins a new prophecy, importing that the Messiah, the great shepherd, as he is described in this prophecy (xl. 4, &c., and in Isa. xi. 11, Ezek. xxxiv. 23), though with respect to his divine nature he be =equal with God the Father" (Phil. ii. 6), yet shall be delivered up to death, by God's =determinate counsel" and appointment (see Acts ii. 23, iv. 25). A sword is put for any instrument of the divine justice, as hath been observed upon xi. 17.

Smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered;] This our Lord applies to his disciples being "scattered every man to his own," upon his being apprehended and put to death (Matt. xxvi. 31, John xvi. 32).

I will turn mine hand upon the little ones.] This sentence may be translated in two contrary senses.
shall be scattered: and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones.

8 And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, that the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein.

The Hebrew phrase rendered here "turn mine hand," may signify either to punish, or to spare; in the forerm sense it is taken, Ps. lxiii. 14, in the latter, Ezek. xx. 22, where our translators render it, "I will withdraw my hand." In like manner the word signifies great as well as little, as hath been observed upon Mic. v. 2, viz. it is translated to this sense in some copies of the LXX. and so Dr. Pocock understands it here (Not. in portam Mosis, cap. 2). If we follow our English translation, the sense may be,
I will show mercy to my little flock, dispersed by the death of their Master, and will quickly show him to them alive again, to their joy and comfort. If we translate the words, "I will turn my hand upon the great ones," they denote a severe judgment against the Jewish rulers, for their sin in crucifying Christ;
agreeably to the import of the following words.

Ver. 8.] Those severe judgments which our Savior foretold should come upon them (Matt. xxiv). shall consume two parts in three of the nation, but a third part shall escape the general destruction, and be left to be dispersed over the world to preserve a posterity to future generations.

Ver. 9. I will bring the third part through the fire.
I will make them pass through the "furnace of afflic-tion" (Isa. xlviii. 10); the wicked among them shall be consumed as dross, and they that repent and believe shall be saved (see Ezek. xx. 38, and note there).

They shall call on my name, and I will hear them.
] When I have "poured upon them the spirit of grace and supplication" (xii. 10), they shall humbly implore pardon for their sins, and I will graciously hear and answer their prayers (compare x. 6, Isa. xlv. 24, Hos. ii. 21, Joel ii. 22).

I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The Lord is my God.

For their disobedience I "broke my covenant with them" (xii. 10), and they were no longer my people; but upon their repentance and conversion, "they shall be as though I had not cast them off" (x. 6), and I will renew my covenant relation with them (compare viii. 8, Lev. xxvi. 12, Jer. xxx. 22, Ezek. xi. 20, xxxvi. 24, xxxvii. 27).

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.

2 For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses railed, and the women ravished;
and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3 Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight citizens from being cut off by the enemy.
There were forty thousand of the inhabitants suffered to go whither they would," saith Josephus, De Bell.
Jud. lib. vii. cap. 15.

Ver. 3. Then or, afterward shall the Lord go forth to fight, &c.] In aftertimes God shall discomfit the posterity of these nations, viz. the Latin idolaters, who probably will be joined in alliance with the Mahometans (see xii. 2, 3), and will go forth against them or as visible a manner as he appeared in behalf of Israel, when he overthrew the Egyptians in the Red sea, or when the ark of God's presence led their armies in the land of Canaan (Josh. vi. 6). It is no unusual thing for the holy writers to speak of two events together which happen at a great distance from each other; so we read, 1 Cor. xv. 23, "Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

Ver. 4. His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives.] The glory of the Lord, i. e. the Shechinah, or symbol of God's presence, when it departed from the city and temple, settled itself upon the mount of Olives (Ezek. xi. 23), so, when God shall return to Jerusalem, and make it the seat of his presence again, it shall return by the same way it departed (see Ezek. xiii. 2). We may add; that when our Lord ascended from the mount of Olives, the angels told his disciples "he should come again in like manner:" i. e. in a visible and glorious appearance at the same place, Acts i. 11, 12.

CHAPTER XIV.

ARGUMENT.—The beginning of the chapter is a continuation of the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans; then follows the Jews' final victory over their enemies in the latter times. The prophecy concludes with a description of the glorious state of Jerusalem which should follow.

Ver. 1.] A day remarkable for the execution of his judgments upon Jerusalem, and her inhabitants (compare Joel ii. 31), when their riches shall become a prey to the conquerors.

Ver. 2.] I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle. [The Roman" ..." says the most eminent writers, that this battle took place in the time of the Emperor Titus, in the year 70 after Christ.

The city shall be taken, &c.] The Roman army shall exercise those acts of lust and violence which are too frequent among conquerors (see Isa. xiii. 13, Amos vii. 17).

Half of the city shall go forth into captivity.] It is said, xiii. 8, that "a third part of the land shall be left therein," which is very well consistent with "half the city's going into captivity."

The residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.] God shall preserve the other half of the 805

And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal: yes, ye shall flee, like as ye fled before from before the earthquake: in the days of Uzziah king of Judah: and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be clear nor dark:

But it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light.

And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be.

And, the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one.

And all the land shall be turned as a plain from a day which God alone knows; unlike to our days; dark at the beginning and clear in the end, when the light is not expected.

The mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof—and there shall be a very great valley: By an earthquake, such as was in the time of king Uzziah (see Amos i. 1), the middle of mount Olivet shall cleave asunder, and sink into a deep valley, so as to leave the two points or tops of the hill, north and south, still standing. Mount Olivet had three tops, or eminences, one on the north point, another on the south, and the third in the middle, from whence Christ ascended, and where Christians in aftertimes erected a cross in memory of his ascension there (see Maudrell's Travels, p. 103).

Upon the valley, the mountains shall be filled up; for the valley of the mountains shall thence, or touch, even to Azal: it shall even be filled up, as it was filled by the earthquake in the days of Uzziah. Josephus writes (Antiq. lib. ix. cap. 11), "That upon the earthquake, the mountain before Jerusalem, i.e. mount Olivet, cleaved on the west side, and then removed for about half a mile towards the east part of the hill, and there stopped." Azal is probably a name by which part of the hill was called.

The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints [or holy ones] with thee. Or, "with him," as the Chaldee and LXX. read. The words are a description of Christ's coming to judgment, attended with "all the holy angels," as the writers of the New Testament express it, Matt. xxv. 27, xxvii. 31, Mark viii. 38. The word kedoshim, translated saints, elsewhere signifies angels (see Deut. xxxi. 2), so the word saint is used in the New Testament, i Thess. iii. 13, and St. Jude, ver. 14, quoting the prophecy of Ezech, saith, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints," or holy ones; a place exactly parallel with that of the text. The name Jehovith, Lord, is often applied to the Messiah by the prophets (see note upon Isa. vii. 14, Hosea i. 7, and compare xii. 8, 10 of this prophecy). The time here specified may probably be the season when the Jews shall "look upon, or behold, him whom they have pierced," xii. 10.

It shall not be clear in some places, and dark in other parts of the world: i. e. there shall not be a perfect clearance of day and night as there is now.

At the consummation of all things, a time predetermined by God, but known to no creature (Matt. xxiv. 36), there shall not be any vicissitude of day and night, but one uninterrupted day, without any evening or twilight (compare Isa. ix. 19, 20, Rev. xxi. 23, xxii. 5).

These two verses may be expounded with respect to the day of judgment, when the "mount of Olives shall be for some time not altogether prosperous, nor yet quite desperate. The great crisis of their affairs shall be in come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light.

Ver. 8. Living waters shall go out from Jerusalem: The supplies of grace are often represented in scripture by rivers and streams of water, which both cleanse and make fruitful the ground through which they pass (see Ezek. xlvii. i, Joel iii. 18).

Half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: The same Hebrew phrase is translated, the east sea, and the utmost sea, Joel ii. 20. The first of these denotes the sea or lake of Solom, being towards the east country (Ezek. xlvii. 8), the latter signifies the Mediterranean, or western sea (see Deut. xi. 24). The expression imports, that the whole land shall have a plentiful share of these blessings, which are here described under the metaphor of "living waters."

In summer and in winter shall it be. They shall be the same in all seasons of the year; neither failing in summer nor overflowing in winter.

Ver. 9. Upon the conversion of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles, the name of God shall not be given to any idol, idolatry being utterly abhorred (xiii. 2), and God shall be glorified "with one mind and one mouth" all the world over (compare Mic. v. 12, 14, Zeph. iii. 9, Rev. xi. 15). The stone which represents Christ's kingdom, shall then "become a mountain, and fill the whole earth," Dan. ii. 35.

Ver. 10. All the land shall be turned as a plain from Gebah to Rimmon south of Jerusalem: The mountains about Jerusalem (see Ps. cxxxv. 2) shall be levelled, perhaps by the earthquake before mentioned, from Gebah northward to Rimmon southward of Jerusalem. The expressions may signify, that all impediments shall be removed that oppose the advancement of Christ's kingdom (compare iv. 7, and Isa. xli. 4).

It shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place. The mountains that obstructed the prospect of Jerusalem being removed, the city shall be seen by passengers afar off, like "the city set on a hill," to which the church is compared, Matt. v. 14, and it shall be inhabited as formerly (see xii. 6).

From Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, [even] to the corner gate. "Benjamin's gate" was on the north side of the city, the tribe of Benjamin lying northward in respect of Jerusalem. The prophet foretells that the city shall be inhabited from Benjamin's gate northward, to the first or old gate, southward, mentioned Neh. iii. 6, xiii. 39, and still farther on to the corner gate, situate on the southwest part of the city (see Dr. Lightfoot's Dissertation on Judges, xvi. 30).

From the tower of Hananeel unto the king's wine presses. The "tower of Hananeel" was on the south
CHAPTER XIV.

Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem; and it shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place, from Benjamin’s gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananel unto the king’s winepresses.

11 And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited.

12 ¶ And this shall be the plague whereby the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour.

14 And Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem; and the wealth of all the heathen round about part of Jerusalem, as the same writer observes, and "the king’s wine-press" on the north part (compare this verse with Jer. xxxii. 28, 30).

Ver. 11. There shall be no more utter destruction! The city shall never be utterly destroyed, as it was by the Chaldeans and Romans (compare Jer. xxxi. 40). The latter part of the sentence may be translated, "there shall be no more curse." In the new state of things here foretold, the curse which sin brought into the world shall be removed. The same words are repeated by St. John, Rev. xxi. 3; and seem to be taken from this place.

But Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited. A promise often repeated in the prophets (see Jer. xxii. 6, and the note there).

Ver. 12.] Those that die not in the battle, nor fall by the hand of their brethren (see ver. 13), shall be destroyed by famine or consumption.

Ver. 13.] Or, "A great discomfiture," as the word is translated, 1 Sam. xiv. 20. The LXX. render it an exastey: such a terror or confusion shall seize them, as shall take away the use of their reason (see xii. 4); or there shall be misunderstandings among them, so that they shall fall foul one upon another, as the army of the Philistines and Moabites did, 1 Sam. xiv. 20, 2 Chron. xx. 23 (compare Ezek. xxxviii. 21). The prophet goes back to give an account how God would discomfit those that come against Jerusalem (ver. 3).

Ver. 14. Judah also shall fight at [or rather for] Jerusalem; the Lord shall save the tents of Judah first (xii. 7), and then they shall join their forces against the common enemy, when he comes against Jerusalem (see xii. 7).

The wealth of one common destruction. The wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, &c. As they came with an intent to make a prey of Jerusalem, so the wealth which they brought with them shall become a spoil to the Jews (compare Ezek. xxxviii. 12, xxxix. 10).

Ver. 15. This is to be joined to the twelfth verse, the thirteenth and fourteenth being joined in a parenthesis. Both man and beast in that army shall be consumed in one common destruction.

Ver. 16. Every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem Those that were not in the army that marched against Jerusalem. The words may be translated, "Every one that is left from among all the nations," &c. and then they may be understood of the Jews that remained behind, and shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance.

15 And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

16 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.

17 And it shall be, that whomsoever shall not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.

18 And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

19 This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and they did not go to Judah to fight for Jerusalem. The Jewish Commentators follow this sense.

Shall even go up from year to year to worship the king, &c.] i.e. They shall join the solemn acts of Christian worship. The prophets often describe these things from the gospel by the usages of their own times (compare ver. 20, 21 of this chapter, and vili. 21, 22; see likewise Isa. lx. 7, 9, lxvi. 23, with the notes upon those places). The "feast of tabernacles," being observed in remembrance of God’s conducting and preserving the Jews in the wilderness for forty years, was observed with extraordinary expressions of rejoicing (compare Hos. xii. 9). The Jews have a tradition, that the defeat of Gog and Magog, which seems to be the same discomfiture which is here described, shall fall out upon the feast of tabernacles; or, as others say, that the "seven months" cleansing of the land (Ezek. xxxix. 12), shall be finished at that time.

Ver. 17. Even upon them shall be no rain.] For want of which they shall suffer a famine.

Ver. 18.] Though the fruitfulness of Egypt, especially the upper part of it (see Herodotus, lib. iii. cap. 10), depends not upon rain (compare Dout. xi. 10, 11); yet if the Jews that dwell there, or the rest of the inhabitants, do not join in the solemn acts of Christian worship (see ver. 10), they shall suffer the same plague of famine with which others are threatened, i.e. the "Nile shall not overflow," as the Tar-gum explains it; from whence a famine will ensue. The words may be translated more exactly to the Hebrew thus; "If the family of Egypt go not up, shall there not be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up?" The particle se usually is often taken interrogatively, as Nolius observes, p. 342. The word family is equivalent to kingdom (see the note upon Jer. i. 15).

[That have no rain.] The upper parts of Egypt, beyond Thebes, have no rain: beside the testimony of Herodotus, referred to in the last note, Seneca affirms the same (Nat. Quaest. lib. iv. cap. 2); "In ea parte quae in Aethiopiam vergit, aut nulli imbrices sunt, aut rari." Our learned countryman, Mr. Graves, in his Pyriformiographia, sect. 2, tells us, "That while he lived at Alexandria, a great deal of rain fell there in the months of December and January; but in the upper part of Egypt, about Syene, and the cataracts of the Nile, the inhabitants affirmed that they seldom had any rain." the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

20 ¶ In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, HOLINESS unto the LORD; and the pots in the Lord’s house shall be like the bowls before the altar.

Ver. 20. In that day shall there be upon the bells [or bridles] of the horses, HOLINESS unto the Lord:] A very learned person supposes, that this and the following verse imply in them the promise of a universal peace, a blessing often spoken of in the prophets, as concomitant of the flourishing state of Christ’s kingdom. Taking this to be the general import of the place, the first part of the verse implies, that the bridles, or trappings, of the horses, as the Chaldee explains the word metstitloth, i.e. the necessary furniture of war, shall no more be applied to its proper use, but shall be looked upon as sacred, and laid up in the armory of God’s house for a memorial of the good success he had given his people against their enemies (see 2 Chron. xxiii. 9).

The pots in the Lord’s house shall be like the bowls before the altar.] In pursuance of this interpretation, by the word srioth, pots, we are to understand helmets, called so because of their shape, being made like a pot. These, saith the text, shall be like the bowls, or vials, before the altar; no more to be profaned in war or bloodshed. In the Hebrew, words made up of letters of the same origin, have often an affinity of sense. So sarah, a word near akin to srioth, signifies a coat of mail: and the words sheviah and sherion are used in the same sense.

Ver. 21. Every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness] Even every private helmet in Judah and in Jerusalem, shall be as useless to the purposes they were formerly employed in, as the most sacred things in the temple.

All they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and see thee therein.] The helmets shall arise to such a number, that if every one that sacrificeth were to see thee separately, they would suffice for pots for every one’s use. If this interpretation be not accepted, we may suppose the words set forth the abundant measure of grace and holiness which shall then be bestowed upon all believers, they being all made “priests unto God” (see Isa. lxix. 6, Rev. v. 10, xx. 6); set apart to attend upon God’s service, as the priests were under the law, whose office it was to see thee, or boil, the sacrifices (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 13).

There shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord] If we understand the former words of a universal peace, the sense of these will be, that no stranger, or unbelieving enemy, shall give any annoyance to the servants or worship of God (see Joel iii. 17). The Christian church is often called the house or “temple of God” in the New Testament (see Eph. ii. 20, &c., 1 Tim. iii. 15, Heb. iii. 6, 1 Pet. iv. 19). If we follow the common interpretation, the words import, that no hypocrite or unclean person shall have any share in the society of the faithful (see Rev. xxi. 27, xxii. 15). The Chaldee and Vulgar Latin translate the words, “There shall be no more any merchant in the house of the Lord of hosts.” There shall be such plenty of all provisions at home that there will be no need of being supplied by any traffickers from abroad. Taking the words in this sense, they are equivalent to those descriptions of plenty foretold in the days of the Messias, Joel iii. 18, Amos ix. 13.

of

THE PROPHET MALACHI.

PREFACE.

The prophet Malachi was, in all likelihood, contemporary with Nehemiah. His prophecy supposes the temple to be built, and the worship of God settled there; but blames the priests and Levites for not attending upon the public worship (i. 10), and the people for offering the laman and the blind (ibid. ver. 7, 8), and “robbing God of his tithes and offerings” (iii. 10), which agrees very well with the abuses we read of, Neh. x. 33, 39, xiii. 10—12, as his reproving them for “marrying strange wives” (ii. 11), exactly answers Neh. x. 30, xiii. 23, &c.

Bishop Lloyd dates this prophecy something later than Nehemiah’s time, about three hundred and ninety-seven years before Christ; at which time, according to his computation, the first seven of Daniel’s weeks, or forty-nine years, were expired: which time, as his lordship explains the words, was allotted for “sealing up the vision and prophecy” (Dan. ix. 24); i.e. for completing the canon of the Old Testament. The words of Malachi, iv. 4, 5, import, that after him the Jews were not to expect a succession of prophets: whereupon he exhorts them carefully to observe the law of Moses, and to look for no other prophet till Elias, the forerunner of the Messias, should come.
CHAPTER I.

The burden of the word of the Lord to Israel by Malachi.

1 I have loved you, saith the Lord. Yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: yet I loved Jacob,

2 And I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritages waste for the dragons of the wilderness.

3 Whereas Edom said, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border of wickedness, and, The people against whom the Lord hath indignation for ever.

CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—God reproves the Jews for their ingratitude, and blames both priest and people for their irreverent and careless performance of the public worship.

Ver. 1.] The word burden is sometimes equivalent to prophecy, and in this sense it is taken here, and is so interpreted in the Syriac version (see note upon Zech. xii. 1). Israel stands here for Judah, as it does ver. 5, ii. 11, Mic. i. 14, iii. 1, 8, 9, that being the only remainder of the Jewish nation which enjoyed any of the blessings promised to their fathers.

Ver. 2. I have loved you.] I have chosen you for my peculiar people, out of pure love and kindness, without any antecedent merits on your side (see Deut. v. 5, s. 15).

Ibid. and ver. 3. Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: yet I loved Jacob, and I hated Esau.] I have all along shown a particular kindness to Jacob and his family, above that of Esau, though they were both the sons of Isaac: and have lately given a signal proof of it in that I have restored you to your country again, after your captivity; whereas I have scattered the Edomites, and dispossessed them of Mount Seir, their ancient inheritance (Deut. ii. 9), by the Nabataeans to which they shall never be restored again (compare Jer. lixiv. 18, Ezek. xxxv. 7, 9). Hating is sometimes used comparatively for a less degree of love (see Gen. xxix. 31, Luke xiv. 26).

St. Paul alleges this text, Rom. ix. 13, to prove that God might justly reject the Jews for their rejecting the gospel, notwithstanding his promises made to Abraham's seed; since he had from the beginning freely bestowed particular favours upon one branch of his posterity, from which others were excluded.

For the dragons of the wilderness.] The word tanin, or tamnith, signifies any large creature of the creeping kind, whether by land or sea (see note upon Mic. i. 8). Here it is taken for a great serpent, such as are commonly found in deserts and desolate places (compare Ps. lixiv. 19, Isa. xiii. 22, Jer. ix. 11, lii. 37).

Ver. 4. We are impoverished [or destroyed, compare Jer. v. 17, but we will return] They hoped to be restored to their own country again, as the Jews had been. They shall build, but I will throw down.] Or, "If they shall build, yet I will throw down" (see Noldius, Concord, p. 90). They shall endeavor in their attempts to recover their own country, and shall be finally subdued by Hycanus, and the name of the Edomite utterly extinguished (see Dr. Prideaux, ad an. A. C. 129).

They shall call them, The border of wickedness, &c.] They shall be spoken of as a remarkable example of God's severe judgments upon a sinful people. The word border is equivalent to country here, and in the following verse: so it is used, Jer. xxxi. 17, Ezek. xi. 10, Amos vi. 2.

Ver. 5.] Though you ungratefully forget God's former mercies, he will give you fresh instances of his favor towards you, so that ye shall be forced to acknowledge that he continues to make his name and power illustrious in your preservation.

Ver. 6. A son honoureth his father, &c.] Those degrees of respect that are due to human authority, are in a more eminent manner to be paid to the supreme Lord of all: so the priests who are dedicated to my service in a peculiar manner, behave themselves very unprofitably, in that disrespect which they show to my name and worship (see the following verse).

Ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name?] Or, yet ye say: they impudently persist in justifying themselves (compare ii. 14, 17, iii. 7, 8, 13).

Ver. 7. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar—the table of the Lord] The words altar and table denote the same thing (compare Ezek. xli. 22). What was consumed upon the altar was God's portion, and is called the "bread of God," Lev. xxvi. 6, and the "food of the Lord," iii. 11, 16, as our translation renders it, but it is in the Hebrew, "the bread of the Lord." So by "polluted bread" is meant maimed and blenished sacrifices, as it is particularly expressed, ver. 8.

Is that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible.] By your actions you declare how little value you have for the worship of God, since you care not in how slight and contemptuous a manner it is performed.

Ver. 8. If ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil?] The beasts to be offered in sacrifice were required to be perfect and without blemish (Lev. xxii. 21, 22).

Offer it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee.] It argues a great contempt of Almighty God, when men are less careful in maintaining the decencies of his worship, than they are in giving proper respects to their superiors.

Ver. 9.] This irreverent performance of God's worship is a national sin, for which we may expect some public judgment. It is the priests' office to intercede with God, to be merciful to his people (see Joel ii. 17): and you are more especially obliged to not evil? offer it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the Lord of hosts. 9 And now, I pray you, beseech God that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been by your means: will he regard your persons? saith the Lord of hosts. 10 Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. 11 For from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts. 12 ¶ But ye have profaned it, in that ye say, The table of the Lord is polluted; and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible. 13 Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! and ye have snuffed at it, saith the Lord of hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this of your hand, saith the Lord. 14 But cursed be the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: for I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

Ver. 11. In every place incense shall be offered to my name, and a pure offering:] The prophet describes the Christian sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiving, by the outward rites of the Jewish worship (see note on Zech. xiv. 10). Incense was looked upon as a figure or emblem of prayer by the Jews themselves (see Ps. cxlii. 2, Luke i. 10). This spiritual service, the prophet saith, shall be offered up "in every place," whereas the Jewish worship was confined to the temple. The words of Christ are a commentary on this text, John iv. 21, 23, "The hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father: but the true worshippers shall worship him in spirit and in truth." Where the spirit is opposed to the carnal ordinances of the Jewish service, such as meats and drinks and bloody sacrifices; and truth is used by way of distinction from the same external rituals, which were only "shadows of things to come." The Hebrew word mincha, offering, is commonly translated by our interpreters meat-offering, but should rather be rendered bread-offering; it being that offering of fine flour which always accompanied the other sacrifices (see Lev. i. 1, ix. 17). It seems to signify the daily sacrifice, by a synecdoche, in the thirteenth verse of this chapter, and ii. 12, 13, as it does I Kings xviii. 29, 36. Mr. Mede thinks the word is used here to denote the sacrament of the Lord's supper, which may be properly called a commemorative sacrifice (see his discourse of the Christian Sacrifice). Ver. 12.] But ye have profaned mine altar, and in your careless performance of my service there, you do as good as say, there is no difference between what is offered upon it, and other common meats: thus you render my sacrifices contemptible in the sight of the people. The word with fruit, is applied to sacrifice, see Isa. lvi. 19, where the "fruit of the lips" is explained of the "sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving," Heb. xiii. 15. The oculo, his meat, may be understood either of that part of the sacrifice which was immediately offered upon the altar, and is called the food of the Lord (see the note upon ver. 7), or else of the remainder of the sacrifice which God allotted to the priest, and the children of Levitical families, which those that made the offering, but was still esteemed a hallowed thing, as having been consecrated to God (see Numb. xviii. 9, 10, Lev. xix. 8).

Ver. 13. Ye said also,—what a weariness is it?] Ye have complained of the constant attendance upon my altar, as a wearisome employment, as if ye were over-burdened with the care of purifying yourselves, and the nice inspection of the sacrifices brought thither; so ye have by your outward gestures expressed your contempt of my service. Ye brought that which was torn.] See ver. 8.
Ye brought an offering:] See note upon ver. 11. Should I accept this of your hand?] God hath declared in Lev. xxii. 30, that he will not accept a sacrifice any way blenished or imperfect.

Ver. 14. But cursed be the deceiver, which—sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing:] The former reproofs related only to the priests; here the prophet reproves the people, that would offer to deceive almighty God by putting him off with the worst they had. Dr. Pocock thinks the words are to be understood of such offerings as of their own accord they vowed to God, which were to be males (Lev. xxii. 19): and if they would not perform their vows, in such a manner as God directed, it were better they did not vow at all (see Deut. xxiii. 21).

It was in this respect that Abel's sacrifice was preferred before Cain's, that he offered of the best of his substance. Thus much is implied in the words of St. Paul, Heb. xi. 4, where the apostle saith, "Abel offered minchah, a sacrifice better" in its kind than Cain.

For I am a great King,—and my name is [or, shall be] dreadful among the heathen.] As God is the "great King over all the earth," and will be acknowledged as such among the gentiles under the gospel (ver. 11); so men's religious services ought to be performed with a reverence suitable to the greatness of his majesty.
CHAPTER II.

1 And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart.

3 Behold, I will corrupt your seed, and spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts; and one shall take you away with it.

4 And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the Lord of hosts.

5 My covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

6 The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity.

7 For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts.

8 But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law: ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the Lord of hosts.

9 Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law.

10 Have we not all one father? hath not one security, as it often does: i. e. a secure possession of the priesthood, without any disturbance or interruption, expressed by an "everlasting priesthood" in the following words. In which sense the phrase is used, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, xxxv. 26.

For the fear wherewith he feared me] As a reward of his fear and reverence towards me, of which the holy writings give us two remarkable instances; the zeal of the Levites against the worshippers of the golden calf (Exod. xxxvii. 26, 29), and that zealous act of Phinehas, mentioned Numb. xxv. (compare Deut. xxxiii. 8, 9.)

Ver. 6. He walked with me in peace and equity, &c.] He directed all his actions by the rule of my laws (compare Gen. x. 22, xi. 9), and he discharged his duty with fidelity, and without any disturbance or offence, and was a means of "converting sinners from the error of their ways."

Ver. 7. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge.] As it is the priests' duty to understand the meaning of the law, so the people ought to resort to them for instruction in any difficulty that arises concerning the sense of it (see Lev. x. 11, Deut. xxii. 9, 10). For this reason the Levites had thirty-eight cities allotted to them among the several tribes, that the people might more easily consult them upon every occasion (see Numb. xxxv. 7).

He is the messenger of the Lord of hosts.] God has appointed the priests his ordinary messengers, to declare his will unto the people, as the prophets are his extraordinary ambassadors. The word messenger, in the usual sense of it, is equivalent to prophet (see Isa. xliii. 19, xlv. 36, Hag. i. 13), it signifies the same with an interpreter of the divine will, Job xxxiii. 33.

Ver. 8. Ye have caused many to stumble at the law:] You have either perverted the sense of the law, or encouraged others to break it by your ill example (see ver. 12, and compare Rom. xiv. 21).

Ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi.] By your evil practices you have broken that covenant whereby I placed you in a near attendance to myself (see ver. 4, and compare Neh. xiii. 29).

Ver. 9. But have been partial in the law.] Or, "Accepted persons in the law," as the Hebrew literally signifies: i. e. have wrested the sense of the law, in favour of particular persons, to excuse or alleviate their breaches of it.

Ver. 10. Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us?] Here a new section begins, where-MALACHI.

God created us; why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers?

11 When Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange god.

12 The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this, the master and the scholar, out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and him that offereth an offering unto the Lord of hosts.

13 And this have ye done again, covering the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that he regardeth not in the prophet severely reproves the people's sin of "marrying strange wives," which grew much in practice in Ezra and Nehemiah's time, who express a great detestation of it (Ezra ix. 1, Neh. xiii. 20).

14 "Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.

16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away: for one coveteth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: another crime added to the former; viz. to show how much greater affection they had for strangers, they divorced themselves from their Jewish wives (see the following verse).

Covering the altar of the Lord with tears.] This injurious treatment of your wives has made them fill the courts of the temple, even as far as the altar itself, with their lamentations, and importing heaven for relief against your oppressions: so that God will no more accept the sacrifices there offered by those that show so little regard for common justice and human happiness.

Ver. 14. Yet ye say, Wherefore?] Ye impudently persist in justifying yourselves (see i. 6).

Because the Lord hath been witness betwixt thee and the wife of thy youth.] The wife whom you now divorce, was one whom you made choice of when you were in the prime of your age, and you promised to live with her in true love and affection: but now you cast her off without any regard to that solemn contract and covenant between you, of which you called God to be a witness (compare Prov. ii. 17).

Ver. 15. And did not he make one?] Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one?] That he might seek a godly seed.] Among various interpretations of the words, this seems most probable, That the prophet puts the Jews in mind of the first institution of marriage in Paradise (as Christ did afterward upon a like occasion, Matt. xix. 5) and tells them, God made but one man at first, and made the woman out of him, when he could have created more women if he had pleased; to instruct men that this was the true pattern of marriage, ordained for true love and undivided affection, and best serving the chief ends of matrimony, viz. the religious education of children; whereas in polygamy the children are brought up with more or less care, in proportion to the affection men bear to their wives.

Take heed to your spirit.] Do not give way to an inordinate and irregular passion.

Ver. 16. For the Lord—saith that he hateth putting away.] He allowed the Jews the liberty of divorce only for the "hardness of their hearts" (Matt. xix. 5), not that it was a thing pleasing to him. Some render the words, "He that hate (her), let him put her away," i.e. rather than use her ill. But the former sense is more agreeable to the scope of the place.

For one coveteth violence with his garment.] Or, "And when one puts violence upon his garment," or, "covers his garment with violence," as Dr. Pocock translates it; who have given the clearest sense of this phrase, and shown out of several eastern writers, that we may properly call a wife the name of a garment: the expression of Moses, Deut. xxii. 30, agreeing with this way of speaking. According to
CHAPTER III.

1. Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts.

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—This and the next chapter, which are not divided in some translations, contain a prophecy of the coming of the Messiah, and his forerunner John Baptist, under the name of Elias: and the terrible judgments which shall come upon the Jews for their rejecting the gospel.

Ver. 1. I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.] To silence the cavils of unbelievers, mentioned in the last verse of the foregoing chapter, the prophet here foretells the coming of the Messias, who should set all things right; and of his forerunner, who should prepare men for his reception. Whosoever compares this verse with Isa. xii. 2, &c., may easily discern that they both speak of the same event. The messenger, whose office it is to "prepare the way before the Lord," who is said here to be "coming suddenly" after this his forerunner, is described in Isaiah as "preparing the way of the Lord," who is spoken of as coming, and his glory just ready to be revealed (ver. 5, 9). This proves that this prophecy is justly applied by all the evangelists to John Baptist, who is described under the person of Elias, in the following chapter, whom all the Jews, both ancient and modern, expected should come as a forerunner of the Messias (see the note there). The messenger, or prophet (see the note upon ii. 7), here foretold to be the Lord's harbinger, was to be as much inferior to the Lord himself, as servants are to a great person, of whose arrival they give notice. This John Baptist often confessed (Matt. iii. 11, John i. 26, iii. 29), and so much appears by the following words. And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in:] The person whose coming is so solemnly proclaimed, is first described by the name of the Lord; Adon in the Hebrew, the same whom David called his Lord (Ps. cx. 1), and who is Lord of the temple, where he will make his appearance. He is further described as the "messenger," or "angel of the covenant;" the same who is called the "angel of God's presence," Isa. xiii. 9, the angel that delivered the law upon mount Sinai, as St. him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

belong to the next chapter, where an answer is given to the objection proposed, ver. 2, 3, 5, 18.

Wherein have we wearied him? See i. 6.

When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good, &c.] A repetition of the old objection against providence, taken from the prosperity of the wicked, which implied, as they thought, either that their works were pleasing to God, or else that he disregarded human affairs, and would never call men to account for their actions.

2. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's sope:

3. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may Stephen speaks, expressing the sense of the Jews of his time (Acts vii. 38), and is appointed to be the Mediator of the new covenant, which the prophets foretold should take place under the Messias (Isa. xxv. 7, iv. 3, Jer. xxxi. 31). Another character given of him is, that he is the person "ye delight in," whose coming is so much desired, the time of it being the subject of your search and inquiry, and the expectation of it your comfort and delight. This great person, saith the prophet, shall "come to his temple," which ye have despised and profaned (i. 7, &c.), and make the "glory of the latter house greater than of the former," Hag. ii. 9 (see the note there). He shall choose this place to publish his doctrine, and do several of his miracles (see Matt. xxi. 12, 14, Luke xix. 47, xxi. 38, John xviii. 10, 11, 15, 16).

Ver. 2. But who may abide the day of his coming?] The coming of Christ here, and in several other places, comprehends all the effects and consequences of his coming; and denotes not only a time of mercy to those that embrace the gospel, but likewise a time of judgment upon the disobedient. In the same manner, John Baptist describes the coming of Christ (Matt. iii. 7, 12), "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come! His fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." To the same purpose are the words of St. Paul (Rom. i. 18). "The wrath of God is revealed" by the gospel "against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men."

The day of God's judgment, whether general or particular, is here described to be so terrible, that if he should be "extreme to mark what is done amiss," not only the wicked, but even the righteous themselves, could not stand or abide so severe a trial. The words do probably point out the destruction of the Jewish nation by the Romans, upon their crucifying the Messias, and rejecting his gospel; when those words of Christ were fulfilled (Luke xix. 37). "Those mine enemies that would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me."

For he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's sope:] The divine judgments are often called a fiery trial, such as separates the pure metal from the dross, purifies the former, and consumes the latter (see Isa. i. 25, iv. 2, Zech. xiii. 9). The word borith is translated.
offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.
4 Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years.
5 And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.
6 For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

soap here, and Jer. ii. 22. St. Jerome informs us, it was an herb the fullers used to take spots out of clothes.

Ver. 3.] He shall perform the office of a refiner and purifier; and whereas the miscarriages of the sons of Levi have been very great (particularly those which are alighted on in the foregoing chapters), the Messiah, when he comes, will reform these abuses, and purify the worship of God from such corruptions. The sense of the verse, as applied to the Christian church is, that all Christians, being made "a holy priesthood," shall offer up with pure hearts and minds "spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God" (1 Pet. ii. 5). And as all that profess the religion of Christ are commanded to "be holy in all manner of conversation" (ibid. i. 15), so a blameless behaviour is more strictly required in the Christian priesthood.

Ver. 4. Thou shalt the offering—be pleasant unto the Lord.] The prophet describes the Christian worship by an expression taken from the Jewish service, being what they were acquainted with (see i. 11). As in the days of old.] As in the days of David and Solomon, before idolatry prevailed, and withdrew a great part of the people from God's worship. The reign of David and Solomon was a proverbial speech for happy days (see 2 Chron. xxx. 26).

Ver. 5. I will come near—to judgment.] In answer to their demand, "Where is the God of judgment?" (ii. 17). God tells them, he will hasten the time of judgment, and it shall come speedily upon those sins that are epidemic among them; and if they repent not upon the preaching of the gospel, he will proceed to the utter excision of the nation.

I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, &c.] God will be both the witnes and the judge, he will convict them of their guilt, as having been present when they committed these sins, though they were acted never so secretly: and then he will condemn them, and punish them accordingly (see iv. 1). The sins here mentioned, seem to have been commonly practised in Malachi's time. Diviners, dreamers, and such as consulted oracles at the idols' temples, are reproved, Zech. x. 2, as are the false pretenders to prophecy, Neh. vi. 12—14. False swearing and oppression are complained of, Zech. v. 4, Neh. v. 3, &c. Their marrying strange women, and putting away their former wives to make room for them, was no better than adultery (see Mal. ii. 11, 14, compared with Neh. xii. 23, 29), and a breach of that solemn oath with which they had bound themselves, Neh. x. 29, 30.

The same sins were as frequently committed from the time of our Saviour's appearance till the destruction of Jerusalem. No nation was more given to charms, divinations, and fortune-telling, than the Jews about that time, as Dr. Lightfoot shows out of their own authors, upon Matt. xxiv. 21. Adulteries were then so common, that the Sanhedrim ordained that the trial of an adulteress, prescribed Numb. v. should be no longer put in practice, as the same author observes out of the Talmud, vol. ii. of his Works, p. 1080, 1111. Josephus informs us, that magicians swarmed in Judea under the government of Felix, and that a sort of secret doctrine (see Ant. lib. xvi. 2, 6, 7, 11): where was Theudas, the Egyptian sorcerer, the impostor under Festus, and others, foretold by the name of "false Christ" and "false prophets" (Matt. xxiv. 24).

Ver. 6. For I am the Lord, I change not.] Or, "Because I am the Lord, I change not," &c. Because I am the "same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," as my name Jehovah import, and am true to my former promises (see Exod. vi. 3, 4, 6), therefore you still continue a people, and are not consumed, as your iniquities deserve. And I will still preserve a remnant of you, to make good to them the promises I made to your fathers (see Rom. xi. 29).

Ver. 7. Return unto me, and I will return unto you.] I am ready to be reconciled to you upon your repentance (see Zech. i. 3).

Ver. 8. Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me.] One might reasonably think such a presumption could not enter into any man's thoughts, as to rob God of those things which are dedicated to his service; when he considers that he hath received all things from him, and therefore ought in gratitude to set apart some share of his substance for the maintaining his worship, and the public exercises of religion. Yet ye have been guilty of this sin, which heathens have dreaded to commit, as being apprehensive of the divine vengeance which commonly follows it (see note upon Dan. v. 5).

Ver. 8. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.] Because they pleaded ignorance of this sin charged upon them, God instructs them wherein their guilt lay: viz. in detaining their tithes, the first-fruits of their ground and cattle, and other offerings, expressly set apart for God's use in the law of Moses, and which they had lately entered into a solemn engagement to observe (see Neh. x. 32, &c.).

Ver. 9. The scarcity you complain of, ver. 11, is a just punishment on you, for detaining the tithes and offerings appropriated to God's service.

Ver. 10. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house.] Make good your solemn engagement (Neh. x. 32, &c.), of bringing in all the tithes of your increase into the storehouses appointed for that purpose (see Neh. xii. 44, xiii. 5, 12), that there may be a sufficient provision for the meat-offerings, sacrifices, and other religious services to be performed in my temple (see Neh. x. 33), and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.
11 And I will remake the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.
12 And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts.
13 ¶ Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord. Yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee?
14 Ye have said, It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?

for the maintenance of the priests and Levites who attend there, that they may not be tempted to forsake my service (see Neh. xiii. 10).
And prove me now hereafter—[If I will not open the windows of heaven, &c.] You complain of dearth and scarcity (see the following verse), but I would you have this experiment, and see whether your plenty will not be in proportion to the free will wherewith you bring in your tithes and offerings (see 2 Cron. xxxi. 10). To “open the windows of heaven” expresses God’s showering down plenty (see 2 Kings vii. 22), as the “shutting up heaven” denotes scarcity (Deut. xi. 17, Hag. i. 10).
That there shall not be room enough Or, “Till there be enough;” or, Till you shall say there is enough, as Noldus translates the phrase, in his Concordance, p. 673.

Ver. 11.] Whereas you complain of great dearth ( see Neh. v. 2), which I sent as a punishment of your sacrilege (ver. 9 of this chapter), I will promi-sse upon your amendment no more to destroy the fruits of the earth by locusts, and such like devouring insects (compare Amos iv. 9), neither shall your fruit-trees be blasted with blighting winds, and cast their fruit before the time.

Ver. 12. Your country shall be again known by the name of the “pleasant land,” as it was formerly called (see note upon Dan. viii. 9).

Ver. 13. Your words have been stout] Impudent, or blasphemous; void of all reverence and duty.
What have we spoken so much against thee? They impudently denied the charge (see ver. 8), therefore the prophet renews it against them in the following words.

Ver. 14. Ye have said, It is vain to serve God:] The prosperity of the wicked made them conclude, that it was no purpose to govern their lives by the laws of God, or to humble themselves for their offences against him (see Ps. lxiii. 13).

Ver. 15. And now we call the proud happy:] This makes us, say they, think and call those men happiest who live in open defiance to God and his laws (compare iv. 1, Ps. x. 4).

They that work wickedness are set up:] The Hebrew reads, “are built;” which word sometimes signifies the advancing men and their families to riches and honour (see Prov. xiv. 1, xxiv. 3).

They that tempt God are even delivered:] They that are resolved to try God’s patience by their provocations (see Ps. cv. 9), are delivered out of those dangers and calamities wherein better men are involved.

Ver. 16. Then they that feared the Lord spake often to one another:] Or, “Spake to one another;” the word often is not in the Hebrew. By their pious discourses they confirmed each other in goodness, and armed themselves against the impressions such wicked suggestions might make upon their minds.
The Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

17 Then they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

18 Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not.
CHAPTER IV.

Argument.—The prophet foretells the general destruction of the Jewish nation, for rejecting the Messiah; he comforts the well-disposed among them, and exhorts them to prepare themselves for his coming, by a strict observance of the law of Moses in the mean time; since no prophet was hereafter expected till the great one, who is to be Christ's forerunner.

Ver. 1. The day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

Ver. 2. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.

Ver. 3. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.

Ver. 4. | Remember ye the law of Moses—in Horeb, &c.] Ye are not to expect any succession of prophets for the time to come, till the forerunner of the Messias appears: so your chief care must be to attend upon the instructions Moses has given to all Israel in his law, the most solemn part of which was delivered to him in an audible manner upon mount Horeb (Exod. xix. 9, Deut. iv. 10). This your lawgiver plainly speaks of the Messias, and instructs you to expect his coming, and to obey his commands (Deut. xviii. 15). It was the sense of ancient Jews that the gift of prophecy was sealed up with Malachi: the son of Sirach, having before mentioned Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, speaks of the twelve minor prophets, as completing that part of the Old Testament canon, Eccles. xix. 10, and the latter Jews agree with him in this sentiment, as appears by the authorities cited in the Right Reverend the Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield's Defence of Christianity, p. 83.

Ver. 5. I will send you Elijah the prophet. The same person who is called the forerunner of the Messias, iii. 1. It was the unanimous sense of the Jews that "Elias should first come and restore all things" (Mark ix. 12, John i. 21). This they understood of the coming of Elias in person, as appears from Eccles. xiii. 10, where the author, speaking of the true Elias, saith, "Who was ordained (or, written of) for reproves in aftertimes, or, for appointed times [sic sensum], to pacify the wrath of the Lord, before it break out into fury, and to turn the heart of the father to the son (alluding to this text), and to restore the tribes of Jacob," answering to the words of St. Mark. The LXX. following the received tradition among the Jews, add here the Tishbite, by way of explanation. [It is in this sense that John Baptist denies himself to be Elias, John i. 21.] You, the Jews to this day earnestly pray for 'the coming of Elias,' upon the supposition, that the Messias must immediately follow his appearing. This form of prayer they received from their ancestors, as it is recorded in their liturgies (see the Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, ibid. p. 67): which shows that the ancient Jews understood the words of Malachi here, and iii. 1. of the coming of the Messias.

Our Saviour hath interpreted this Elias to be John Baptist, Matt. xi. 14, xvii. 12, 13, who is called by...
6 And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the name of Elias, because “he came in the spirit and power of Elias” (Luke i. 17); he resembled him in his office of reproving the Jews, and exhorting them to repentance; just as the Messiah is called by the name of David in the prophets, because all the promises made to David were to be fulfilled in him (see note upon Isa. iii. 5).

Before the coming of the great and dreadful day] Compare ver. 1, iii. 3; Joel ii. 31, and the notes upon those texts. The words import the utter destruction of the Jewish nation (see the following verse), but they may properly be applied to the general dissolution of all things; a way of speaking usual among the prophets (see note upon Isa. xiii. 10).

Ver. 6. He shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children.) It will be his office to put an end to those religious differences (such was that of the Pharisees and the Sadducees), which divided the nearest relations from each other, and to make them all join in the duties of repentance and reformation, and thereby prepare themselves for the reception of the Messiah (see Matt. iii. 7). This was the design of his mission, though his preaching did not always meet with success, no more than the true Elias had in the time of Ahab.

This seems the most probable explication of the words, taking them in that sense wherein our translation and the LXX. understand them, which is followed by St. Luke, i. 17. But a more easy sense may be given of them, if we translate the Hebrew preposition al, not to, but with; in which sense it is often used (see Noldius, p. 695). Then the sentence will run thus, “He shall turn the heart of the fathers with the children, and the heart of the children with their fathers:” i.e. his preaching shall produce a general reformation in the minds and manners of all sorts of persons (see Matt. iii. 5, xxi. 32). Dr. Hammond and Lud. De Dieu are of opinion, that the preposition ex in St. Luke, may be understood in the same sense.

Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.] The words might be better translated, “Lest I come and smite the land (of Judea) with utter destruction.” So the word cherem is translated by our interpreters, Numb. xxi. 2; Deut. vii. 2, xiii. 15; Josh. vi. 21; Zech. xiv. 11. The utter destruction of the Jewish nation and country is here threatened, upon their rejecting the preaching of John Baptist, and refusing to hearken to his testimony concerning the Messiah, that should come after him.

A

UPON

THE BOOK OF WISDOM.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,

THOMAS,

BY DIVINE PROVIDENCE,

LORD ARCHBISHOP OF YORK;

PRIEATE OF ENGLAND, AND METROPOLITAN; AND ONE OF HIS MAJESTY’S MOST HONOURABLE PRIVY COUNCIL.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

To accept the following sheets, which are formed upon the plan of Bishop Patrick and Mr. Lowth, as an Appendix to, and continuation of, their useful design. I am far from thinking that I am engaged in a work equal to the nature of their subjects, nor can I flatter myself with any hopes that this performance, with its many defects, will meet with the like favourable acceptance.

I was encouraged to pursue this design, from the many excellent things which are spoken of the Book of Wisdom by the fathers, and most early writers; and as our church has given a sort of sanction to its usefulness by allowing it, in conformity to ancient custom, to be read in her public service, I hope this consideration will justify the present attempt, and apologize in some measure for my presumption in offering to your Grace an Apocryphal book, and placing it under the protection of your great name; especially as I consider the uncanonical books upon the footing only of such primitive ecclesiastical writings as many prelates, of the first eminence in the public of letters, have not thought it beneath them to employ their learned labours about.

Was I permitted to observe the common practice in addresses of this kind, and to speak in the language of modern complaisance, the world might expect that I should dwell upon all those great qualities in which your Grace excels; but I shall only beg leave to observe, that your rising merit early drew the eyes of a very discerning and learned prelate (Bishop Fleetwood) upon you, and when, through age and infirmities, he was at length hindered from labouring in the word and doctrine, like David stricken in years, he transferred his charge upon no less able a successor, and the same great accomplishments reviving in your Grace, made the loss less sensible and regretted; and equally endeared you to the same learned society, and to that illustrious name in particular, which now fills the highest station in law with the most consummate abilities. And, as if a double portion of the spirit of that Elijah rested upon you, in you we admire the same justness of sentiments, clearness of expression, beauty of language, and well-conducted zeal; in you we trace his affectionate manner, sweet elocution, just action, and those other moving graces of the preacher, which command the passions, and charm the attention, so that “being dead he yet speaketh.”

Nor are you, my Lord, less distinguished by an affable and obliging temper, which shines forth, and is displayed, in that easiness of access, and condescending goodness, which endear you to the love and esteem of all, and must render you particularly amiable to that province, over which, by the designation of Providence, you preside with so general an applause.

As the great qualities at length conducted you so deservedly to the episcopate, so your speedy advancement, as it were from glory to glory, to the present high station which you fill, is an instance of your superior merit, and consummate modesty: both of which illustriously stand confessed, as you neither asked or solicited this eminence; it rather sought you out, and seemed to court you, so that I might justly draw the parallel between you and some celebrated names of antiquity, whose ambition was retirement, and their preferment a sort of violence. What the historian says of that great general, Epaminondas, is truly applicable to your Grace, “That he never made any interest for preferment, but was courted to accept it, and often forced into it; and he always discharged his trust in such a manner as to do greater honour to his station than he received from it.”

* Recusanti onmis imperia ingesta sunt, honoresque sua gestit, ut ornamentum non acciperet, sed dare ipsi dignitati videtur. Justin. lib. vi. cap. 8.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

I could enlarge, with equal pleasure and truth, upon so copious and inviting an occasion, as to say more would, I fear, give offence to your Grace, and to say less, would have been the highest injustice in me; nor should an eloquence less than your own attempt to display your character.

That your Grace may long preside over the church, under the happy conduct and blessing of that wisdom, in whose right hand is length of days, is the sincere prayer of,

My Lord,
Your Grace's most obedient and dutiful servant,

RICHARD ARNOLD.

THE AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

There have been so many excellent commentaries published upon the Holy Scriptures, and every one of the sacred books have been illustrated by the labours of so many learned and judicious persons, that it may be presumed nothing has escaped their inquiry, or seems necessary now to be added to their discoveries: but the Apocryphal books, though they be placed next to the canonical ones in the same common volume, and have some of them been esteemed, even by many protestant writers, as second only to them for the usefulness of the matter and variety of instructions contained in them, have hitherto received, though they confessedly stand in great need of light and illustration, very little help and advantage of that nature. The following Commentary, therefore, upon the Book of Wisdom, which the ancients had in so great esteem, and our church has thought not unworthy to be read in her public service, will, I flatter myself, be the more favourably received, and appear the more necessary, as there is no comment upon this, or, indeed, any of the Apocryphal writings extant, that I know of, in our language, and such as have wrote upon it in other languages, being generally popish expositors, have perverted many passages to countenance their favourite opinions, which I have occasionally taken notice of in the course of this work, to prevent any iniquity from such an abuse.

That there are some exceptable places in the book itself, I do not deny, and what book merely human is entirely without them? nor, because I have undertaken the illustration of it, shall I be so disingenuous as to patronise, or even palliate, its errors, much less cry it up as all perfection: and, therefore, as I shall neither with the Romanists pretend that it is canonical, and to be put upon the same level with the inspired writings, against which opinions there are insurmountable difficulties, both internal and external, so neither can I persuade myself, with too many protestants, to decry it as useless and of no authority, for no other reason, probably, but because the church of Rome has paid too great a deference to this, and other writings confessedly apocryphal, which I cannot think are all of them of equal value, but that the didactical books, as they are called, viz, Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus, claim abundantly the preference, as in fact they are universally well spoken of and esteemed, and I believe have as many admirers as they have readers, and may therefore, I hope, without any imputation or reflection, be as laudably commented upon as any of the primitive ecclesiastical writings.

The Book of Wisdom, in particular, to which the following sheets only relate, especially that part of it which refers to God's dealing with the Egyptians, is an epitome of the history of Exodus; it abounds with useful sentiments and instructive morals; we see in it repeated proofs of God's patience and long-suffering towards sinners, of his mercy and loving-kindness to his faithful servants, especially in their distresses, and many lively instances of his justice upon obstinate and irreclaimable transgressors: such are the following memorable events recorded in it:—'The establishment of the kingdom of death upon the earth through the sin of our first parents; the destruction of the old world by the deluge for its wickedness, after the repeated warnings at least of the judicious manner in which Noah's family were alone preserved from perishing by the waters; the fire which came down from heaven upon the unrighteous cities, and the whole kingdom of Egypt, punished at different times by ten terrible plagues. In what manner wisdom conducted the patriarchs, and other holy souls, the friends and favourites of God in their several ages, inviting them to the most laudable actions, and, as a reward of their labours, reaching forth to them a glorious kingdom, and a beautiful crown from the Lord's hand; how by it Moses obtained a good report, became the servant of God, and commissioned by him to dispense his mercies and judgments; the great operation of it for the Israelites, to again to overthrow Pharaoh and his army; the former sustained miraculously with manna for forty years, and drinking of the brook which flowed from the hard rock, and the Egyptians perishing through the calamity of their river stained with foul blood; the former covered with a cloud from the searing of the mid-day sun, and conducted by night with a light of fire, and the latter perishing by a continued darkness, whose horror was increased by the glare of spectres and apparitions; an army of horns marching before the people of God, to drive the Canaanites from their possessions, and the Egyptians destroyed by as dreadful a persecution of locusts; the clouds, at several times, converted into a shower of hailstones to overthrow the wicked, and at other times, the elements suspending their known qualities in favour of God's chosen.' Such important facts recorded in this book, manifesting God's displeasure against sin, and his acceptance and reward of obedience, show the great nature and power of it; and the more reason approved of by the church, and appointed to be read in it, for instruction and edification. And hence we may presume Dr. Raynolds, who wrote so learnedly against the authority of the Apocryphal books, was induced to speak so favourably of this and Ecclesiasticus, calling them, 'Valde honesti utiles et omnibus inrationibus, preferendos (which is the language also of St. Austin, De Prædest. Sanct. Lib. i.) proximumque ilis locum debere post scripturam sacram' (Prel. 7. 74).

The original text of this book is in Greek, nor are there reasons sufficient to induce us to conclude, that it was ever extant in Hebrew: but though the author wrote Greek well and was acquainted with approved writings, both of philosophers and poets, in that language, yet in all the editions which I have carefully consulted and compared, there seem to be many unsound and suspicious passages. Junius has the like observation upon all the Apocryphal books: 'Per- multae sunt eiusmodum editionum variæ, distorsiones, Depravat. Depravat ante? ino profligati, seque in contextu Graeco atque in translationibus, quas quidem locos parte ex canonico scriptorum scripturae auterit, partim ex lpsiorum auctoritatem, aut aliorum com ipsis comparatione, parteque ex judicio necesse fiunt emendanda' (Prel. ad Lib. Apoc.). From him, there-before, I promised myself no little assistance; but neither Junius, nor the many commentators I have occasionally met with, give this with that degree of acuteness which I have expected in the most difficult passages. And though they could not but perceive, and ofen do acknowledge, the Greek text to be corrupt, yet they content themselves with giving a general guess at the author’s meaning, without strictly and minutely examining the original, whether it would warrant and justly such a sense, or might be, by some happy conjecture, altered to afford a better. There is, indeed, thus much to be said in the behalf of some of them, that being Romanist commentators, the very text itself was sacred to them; but why the few protestant expositors, whom we find among the sacred critics, should be generally so sparing of their learned labours, as to attempt scarce a single emendation, when the badness of the original text in so many places called for their assistance, can be resolved into no truer cause than what is mentioned before, viz.
that the Apocryphal books having been too much tottled by the Romanists, and even made a part of the canon, and many of their erroneous tenets pretended to be warranted, from thence these have been as remarkably regardless of them, and through an over cautious delicacy have gone into the other extreme; which probably may be the reason, joined to the scarcity of useful notes and observations upon the Apocryphal books, that the learned Poole has taken the rather, of the useful parts of the latter, way of reasoning against the general usefulness of a thing, from a particular abuse of it, is allowed on all hands to be illogical and inconclusive, there is the less occasion to enlarge on this head.
As there are many passages which to me seem faulty in the original, and have hitherto passed unattered, and even unattempted, I have endeavoured to restore these by the most easy and natural helps; sometimes by a different point only, sometimes by the change of a few letters; mistakes, which might arise probably at first from the carelessness of transcribers, or the likeness and affinity of sound; but have been cautious of indulging too much liberty and wantonness this way; and when any criticism is attempted, and an emendation of the original text offered, which I was induced to, either by the sense of the context, or the badness of the present construction, or the authority of the ancient versions, which I have consulted. I have always supported such an alteration with reason at least, and have not omitted any favourable criticism dogmatically, but submitted it, with great deference, to superior judgment, being ready to retract any mistake, and to acknowledge my obligation for any friendly information. Nor have I boldly attempted any transposition, however inclined or induced to it, by the confusion and perplexity of some passages in their present state, such as ch. i. 16, xii. 27, not having authority from manuscripts, or the ancient versions:
for though a conjecture of a transposition may be sometimes admitted in books which are confessedly wrote in prose, yet, as some learned men have been of opinion (see Grabe’s Proleg. tom. iL cap. 1, 2, Calmet’s Diction, in voce Wisdom), that this book, and that of Ecclesiasticus, were originally wrote in metre, and there may, perhaps, seem some com-tenance for it from the many poetical terms here used, and from their being wrote stichwise in the Alexandrian manuscripts, in the same manner as the book of Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiasticus, First Corinthus, are, to which some of the old Latin translations, and Dr. Grabe, in his late edition, probably for the same reason, have joined them; I was, on this account, less disposed to indulge any conjectural transposition, as, in metrical books, mistakes of that nature could not so easily happen; though nothing certain can be built upon this, even though we should suppose, that this book was written by a Punic, and trans-wrote in Hebrew. Thus much I can assert, with great truth and sincerity, that as it was my design to make the work useful in all possible particulars, I have purposely confined myself to explain, as indeed all expositors should, the most difficult passages, nor have I designedly left any one difficulty which respects either the sense, or the reading of the original text itself, unattempted at least. And this I have done by minutely examining the Greek text, collating the several editions and their various readings, consulting the oriental versions, and the several ancient English translations, comparing the author’s account with the scripture history, and collecting what was parallel, or would give an additional light, from Josephus, Philo, Spencer, Selden, &c., and to these helps I have occasionally added some material notes and observations of those celebrated commentators, Mssieurs of Port-royal, and Calmet; the former give us the sentiments of the fathers, and their exposition and reflections upon particular important points; and the latter, in the explanatory way, exceeds all the commentators that went before, and almost supersedes the use of any other. Such as would see a short marginal paraphrase upon this book, will probably find satisfaction from a small one in 12mo, published in 1706. And that the following sheets may be of some use to readers, I have likewise studied plainness and clearness, and inserted in their proper places many moral reflections, such as arose naturally from the subject, which, as they tend to discourage vice, and show the fallacy of libertinie or epicurean principles, so they serve likewise to enlighten the work, and are a sort of relief and entertainment after a dry criticism.

The English translation of the Apocryphal books, which the church now uses, is that which was made by the command of king James I.; but though seven very considerable persons were employed in the work, yet it is surprising to observe in how many places it is faulty and imperfect. In that of the book of Wisdom, the language is not only bad, but the sense often obscure and intricate: and though some allowance may be made upon account of the faultiness of the original text, which might in particular passages occasion the obscurity of our version, yet often, where the original is pure, clear, and intelligible, the critics have failed, both in the force and beauty of it, but have unaccountably mistaken the sense; and where the Greek happens to be equivocal, and will admit of different meanings, have frequently taken the worst, and most foreign to the context. The translation of the first part is much the best executed, but the last three chapters betray great negligence, and seem to come from a hasty, I had almost said an unskilful, hand. In all such faulty instances I have helped our version, and given the true rendering; nor is the number of emendations attempted in the Greek text less considerable: how far I have succeeded in the critical part is submitted to the judgment of the learned, but hope it will meet with more coudant, being the first essay. If what I now offer to the public shall be favourably received, I shall be induced to publish, in due time, the like commetary upon the book of Ecclesiasticus, which is already in some forwardness.

That nothing might be wanting that could give any insight into the book itself, or contribute to the discovexy of its author, I have prefixed two Disseratations of Calmet’s, which I purposely translated from the French, as they are drawn up with great judgment, and will be found very useful for the better understanding this writer; one upon the book itself, the
